I am slightly surprised that the honourable senator would raise the question now, because he is anticipating events that are to come, but that is his privilege, as it is my responsibility to give him the answer.

Senator Frith: You are anticipating. You are saying that they won't move.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, since I have been accused of anticipating events, what was the Leader of the Government in the Senate doing just now when he said that we all knew what the ultimate outcome would be and that there was no point in even considering a free conference? Is that not anticipating?

Senator Frith: He said that the conference would be of no avail, because they have already made up their minds that they will not talk.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am a member of the government.

Senator Stewart: Your minds are closed.

Senator Murray: I support Bill C-22. I trust that is obvious. I support it, quite apart from the fact that it is a correct constitutional position. I support the bill enthusiastically.

I agree with those people who say that it is very important to research and development, job creation and health care in this country.

Senator Frith: Put it in the bill. That is all we are asking.

Senator Murray: I support the bill enthusiastically.

Senator Frith: Put your support in the bill.

Senator Murray: I am saying to honourable senators that one would have to be deaf, dumb and blind not to have observed in the past six months that minds are made up on this matter.

Senator Frith: Yours are.

Senator Murray: In my humble submission, the only question before honourable senators—and it will be before senators in due course, perhaps in a week or two—is the constitutional one. It is whether senators are going to assert their undoubted constitutional right to defeat legislation coming from the elected chamber.

Senator Frith: Deaf, dumb, blind and stubborn!

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I should like to say, as quietly as I can, that the reason the Leader of the Government is able to say so certainly that any free conference will be useless is because his government has taken that attitude on every piece of legislation. It has refused to discuss amendments or any changes, including any to the Meech Lake accord. That is the attitude that comes across every time he stands up in this house.

Senator Murray: We accepted amendments on Bill C-22.

Senator Stanbury: Every time he stands up in this house it is to say that there will be no amendment to anything.

What concerns me is that Mr. Andre says that he is offended by the principle that the Senate should carry out its constitutional responsibilities. I tell you, and I hope you will convey to him, that I am offended, as a senator, that any minister of the Crown, living and working under the Constitution of Canada, should indicate that he believes that the Senate should not act in accordance with its constitutional responsibility.

Senator Frith: He is offended by it.

Senator Murray: It is the view of Mr. Andre, as it is my view, as it is the view of, I think, most people who think about these matters in this country, that it is inappropriate in 1987 for this appointed body to exercise to the full the constitutional rights which I grant you are there in the Constitution—

Senator Stanbury: An amendment—that is not exercising to the full—

Senator Murray: —to defeat or amend substantially government legislation. It is inaccurate, as my honourable friend will acknowledge if he thinks about it for a moment, to say that we have refused to accept amendments. We accepted one on Bill C-22 from the Senate. The two transport bills, Bills C-18 and C-19, were amended. In my time in the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce undertakings were certainly given by the government as to changes in policy and legislation. This kind of thing has gone on all the time. It is in that kind of constructive atmosphere that the Senate is at its best and that is when the system works at its best. The system is at its worst in a climate of confrontation between the two houses—a confrontation in which the Senate can only lose. If it does not lose in the relationship with the House of Commons, it will certainly lose in the court of public opinion.

Senator Frith: Constructive suggestions are exactly what we are making.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs last night and this morning on television and on previous occasions, as well as the Leader of the Government in the Senate this afternoon, stated that the government met with the multinational pharmaceutical companies, made a deal with them, and came up with some compromises—namely, Bill C-22.

I should like the Leader of the Government in the Senate to tell us why this government is proposing legislation to please the already rich multinational pharmaceutical companies and is abandoning its responsibilities to look after the welfare of consumers, especially those disadvantaged Canadian patients who do not have drug insurance plans.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think my friend has stumbled upon notes of a previous question that he asked and which was answered in this place.

Senator Haidasz: I would very much appreciate it if the Leader of the Government would answer my question this afternoon.

Senator LeBlanc: Arrogant!

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I am reluctant in a way to become involved in this, and yet I cannot resist speaking on what I think is a rather historic occasion. We heard the Leader of the Government in the Senate indicating that there is really no legislative role for this body to play.

Senator Murray: That is not what I said at all.

Senator Buckwold: That is exactly what he said. He has said that we can go through the motions; we can do the studies; we can make our suggestions, but whatever the government says is right. That is what we have heard today.

Senator Murray: No, no.

Senator Buckwold: I have to wonder whether there is any real reason for our studying this bill at all. Indeed, that may be the attitude that is taken in terms of the Meech Lake Accord, which I will deal with in my question. We now have Senator Murray not only in his capacity as the Leader of the Government in the Senate announcing our constitutional demise but, also as an architect of the Meech Lake Accord, he is perpetuating this type of role for the Senate.

Has the Leader of the Government in the Senate used his influence with the government to try to change the opinion of Mr. Andre who, from the very beginning, has been absolutely negative? My colleagues will remember Mr. Andre standing outside the committee room and saying that the committee was "Liberal, late and lazy." He had been talking about the triple-E Senate when he made his comment about the triple-L committee. That is the kind of attitude we have met.

As a member of that committee and of the Special Committee on Bill C-22, I have been and am one who has been emotionally involved in this whole deal and have sincerely tried to improve the legislation by making it workable. The goal of the committee has not been to reject the bill. At the request of the government, I think a compromise has come forward in terms of agreeing to the principle of the bill. I am coming to the point of asking the Leader of the Government to state his position.

The government is getting its ten years' exclusivity with respect to drug patents. That is the principle of the bill—it may be too much, but that is there and that is what the government wanted. The government wanted drug prices to be controlled; we said, "Make it more effective," and our amendments do that. The government wanted increased research and development; we said, "Put it in the bill and make sure it takes place." We have backed the government in every way. It could be argued that we should not have eliminated the retroactivity aspect, but we did that because retroactivity is not normally the way in which we carry out legislation in this country.

• (1510)

Having said that, I ask the Leader of the Government: Is there no role for the Senate in improving outstandingly bad, egregious legislation that is revolting to the majority of Canadians? Is that not the purpose of this body? Can we not, when we become so aroused at the enormity of the crime committed by the government in this bill, try to make it workable and acceptable? Is there not a responsibility on the part of the Leader of the Government in the Senate to convince his colleagues that this should be acceptable to them? Is he correct in saying that the Senate is taking advantage of its constitutional position to embarrass the government when the Senate is really doing everything it can, under the amendments that have been brought forward, to support the government and to make the bill more workable?

I would appreciate a response from the Leader of the Government—a man whom we all respect, but one who has really worried me very much about why we are here at all. Why do we keep coming, leaving our families, if it is all to no avail? There is really some sacrifice in doing that despite the fact that the public thinks we are well paid. Surely there must be a role for the Senate when legislation which cries out for improvement comes to this body. But we are told that we just do not have the right to make any changes.

Senator Frith: We are being told to accept the bill or reject it, nothing in between.

Senator Buckwold: Surely in the mind of the Leader of the Government in the Senate there must be more we can do to let this institution play its rightful role and to make it more meaningful to the people of Canada. Otherwise, why would we have moved into the Meech Lake agreement? It does nothing to change the constitutional responsibilities of the Senate. It transfers the power of appointment to the provinces in such a way that, in the opinion of most of us, this chamber will be placed in a locked-in position and will be even more difficult to control in years to come.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, with great respect, Senator Buckwold is debating the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. He is putting forward its recommendations in the best possible light and according to his own interpretation of them. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has already responded on behalf of the government to that report. We will have the debate on that report on Tuesday.

If the honourable senator reads carefully what I have said today he will see that I have referred not once but several times to the important, useful role the Senate has played in modern times through its committees, through the technique of pre-study, and through other means, to make significant improvements to public policy and to bring about significant changes in legislation, all without provoking confrontation with the other place.

On the matter of Bill C-22, I make the point again that it had a long, long ride in the House of Commons. Notice of our intention was given in 1984 or very early in 1985. The bill had a very long ride in the Senate. I think that if the honourable senator will reflect he will agree that the duly elected government of the country is within its rights in asking that the matter be disposed of one way or another in this place as soon as possible.

Again, I am getting somewhat ahead of myself. The report will be debated here on Tuesday. I have no doubt as to its fate in this place—why should I? I know where honourable senators stand on the matter. I have no doubt as to its fate in the other place either. The minister who speaks for the government—which does have a majority in the other place—has stated the position of the government. In due course it appears that we will have the bill back before us and that honourable senators will have to decide. They know what their responsibility is and they will exercise it according to their own lights, as I will according to mine.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I have been trying to think of a point of order on which I could rise to make a couple of remarks. Senators will excuse me if I cannot quite put my finger on the particular one I had in mind.

Last November the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce fully expected the referral of Bill C-22 to that committee. We were curious to know why this was not done, and I suppose that we became suspicious as to why it was being held up despite the informal conversations taking place between the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition. I suppose it is possible that some of these matters might have been resolved with some degree of compromise, and that compromise would have had to influence not just the government but the various parties involved—

Senator Stewart: What parties?

Senator MacDonald: The four major players.

Senator Stewart: Do they include the Americans?

Senator MacDonald: I am talking about the pharmaceutical manufacturers, the fine chemical manufacturers, and so on. Let us say that a compromise might have been possible, I do not know that, but the fact is that it took until April for the Liberal senators to decide to refer this matter not to the Banking Committee but to a special committee. Apart from what was done in the other place to examine this bill, that committee, under Senator Bonnell, travelled the length and breadth of this land, spent a certain amount of money, and brought in a report which was duly considered, after which a message was sent to the House of Commons. Most of the recommendations of that committee were rejected.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator MacEachen, in this chamber on September 3, recommended, in an effort to achieve some kind of compromise or further accommodation, that since the special committee on Bill C-22 was no longer in existence the bill ought to be referred to the Banking Committee. The members of that committee did not ever know what was expected of us. We did not know whether we were to be negotiators or diplomats. We played what really turned out to be a quixotic role in a totally quixotic operation.

Senator Frith: Who did?

Senator MacDonald: The members of the Senate Banking Committee, and we were used.

Senator Frith: Speak for yourself!

Senator MacDonald: We were all used.

Senator Stewart: By whom?

Senator MacDonald: We were used by the motion that gave to us some form of stalling device, when we knew that at that stage of the game it would be the interpretation of the Liberal senators of that committee as to what were the principles of the bill and what were not. That interpretation was left to the chairman and members. They decided. As a matter of fact, I was amazed how little input the Liberal senators had on that committee. That committee report was almost totally dictated by the chairman.

● (1520)

An Hon. Senator: What?

Senator MacDonald: It was a quixotic attempt to come up with some form of compromise, which was totally opposed to the evidence given by the minister ad nauseam—

Senator Frith: Not true.

Senator MacDonald: —and the letters from the four major players who could have been part of that compromise.

Senator Frith: His evidence was a bit nauseating, I agree. Perhaps I should have had a good patented drug to take care of it.

Senator MacDonald: “Wearying” is the only word that can now be ascribed to the performance that we are going through. Let the eleventh hour come. Let this burden come off our backs.

---

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

HEATHER ROBERTSON

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, perhaps I might distract your attention from Question Period. I would like to direct the attention of this assembly to the presence in the gallery of a distinguished Canadian writer, Heather Robertson, now of Toronto but, if I may say so, originally and always from Winnipeg and the west.

As honourable senators are aware, Heather Robertson has had a long and distinguished career in journalism, having written for a number of newspapers and for most of the country's leading periodicals. Moreover, she is the author of a series of notable and best-selling non-fiction novels including Reservations are for Indians, Grass Roots, Salt of the Earth, A Gentleman's Adventurer and I Fought Riel. Ms. Robertson also edited some years ago a book called A Terrible Beauty: The Art of Canada at War.

Some honourable senators will know that recently Ms. Robertson has been engaged in the writing of an extended trilogy centred largely on Canadian politics and society during the life and career of Mackenzie King. I understand that the concluding volume of the trilogy is now in process, and it may well be that Ms. Robertson's presence here today is part of her ongoing research on the denizens of Ottawa. Even if that makes some honourable senators cautious, I know that they will nonetheless welcome Ms. Robertson warmly to our deliberations.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

PERSONS AWARD

INCLUSION OF CEREMONY IN DEBATES OF THE SENATE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, before we reach Orders of the Day, may I rise on a point of orderly procedure, particularly in reference to our written record, which is a very important part of our procedure?

Yesterday afternoon the session closed with a gracious invitation by the Deputy Leader of the Government for all honourable senators to attend the Persons Award ceremony in this chamber. Many of us were here and saw the granddaughter of Nellie McClung, as master of ceremonies, and our own Speaker perform with his usual grace and aplomb on that very historic and agreeable occasion. It was the first time that the ceremony had been held in the Senate chamber, and it may be the last for a long time.

Had I not been so absorbed with what was going on today I would have noticed that in today's Hansard there is no record of that procedure. I think that we must find in this electronic age some way to overcome that omission of yesterday. Perhaps the Senate people were not here at 5:00 o'clock, but in this electronic age surely it is possible to capture the exact and precise wording, because I believe we were actually televised. I was here. I have not yet had any fan mail about that event, but perhaps the postal service has not yet been fully restored.

I suggest that we find a way to record in our documents that very important occasion when five of the great ladies of this country were honoured by the government, by the Senate and by the country.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Maybe you have just done so!

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Stollery).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have received information from Senator Stollery's office that he does not propose to speak on this order. If no other senator wishes to speak—and I am not aware of any—then it would be appropriate for Senator Bélisle to close the debate on second reading.

Since Senator Bélisle is not in the chamber today I will move the adjournment of the debate in my name, making it clear that I do not intend to speak to it. That will give any other honourable senator who wishes to speak at least until Tuesday; and if at that time no honourable senator is prepared to speak, I believe that we should give Senator Bélisle the opportunity to close the debate.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands in name of Senator Frith.

● (1520)

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard moved the second reading of Bill C-55, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased today to speak in favour of the adoption of Bill C-55. It has been described as a controversial bill. I think that, first and foremost, it is a measure which will signal the beginning of the implementation of a new refugee status determination process in Canada.

The new process will guarantee that the case of people seeking to gain entry into Canada as refugees will be dealt with fairly and quickly. It will also replace the current system which is both outdated and altogether unable to cope with the ever increasing number of claims, particularly the great number of false claims.

We are considering today a bill which will simplify the refugee status determination process and which will protect the system against abuse and make it accessible only to genuine refugees. In my judgment, it is with pride and confidence that we must support this bill and deal with it without delay.

Since it was first introduced in May, it has been the subject of debates, and the bill has been improved and amended. The government has listened carefully to the concerns of Members of Parliament and the public in general. Petitions were sent, public meetings were held and Members of Parliament carefully scrutinized every clause of the bill. The government has welcomed this vigorous scrutiny. The result has been a stronger bill that will guarantee the integrity of the refugee determination process.

In other words, the bill is now more specific in clarifying its intent. It is also more effective in affirming its safeguards for refugees and it is stronger in its commitment to the genuine refugee.

For years, abuse of the process has proliferated with impunity, so that the present process was gradually submerged under a steadily increasing number of claims. Immigration officials, private citizens, groups concerned about the critical situation of genuine refugees, and the government all agreed that the process was in a deplorable state and that certain measures had to be taken. The government responded by drafting this bill and asking us to give the matter serious consideration, so that the question could be resolved once and for all.

By doing so, honourable senators, the government has given us a chance to remedy this untenable situation and get rid of the abuse, and thus reaffirm Canada's long-standing commitment to refugees the world over.

I think we should not overlook the fact that the main purpose of this bill is to safeguard and reaffirm Canada's traditional humanitarian attitude to refugees. It is a tradition of which we are proud, for three reasons.

First of all, in 1987, Canada will resettle 12,000 refugees. Since 1945, we have resettled a total of 500,000.

In addition, we provide over $115 million a year in federal funds for the successful resettlement here in Canada of federally sponsored refugees and for the training of those refugees sponsored by private groups in the community. We give $16 million a year in food aid for refugees in camps abroad.

Our financial contributions to international relief agencies including the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commission for Refugees are the fifth highest of all nations.

Our total financial contributions to international relief on a per capita basis are second only in the world to the United States.

Finally, Canada protects genuine refugees who seek admission to this country. Dear colleagues, we now have the opportunity to establish a new refugee determination process which will allow us both to maintain this tradition and to protect ourselves against abuses.

Bill C-55 provides for the creation of an independent Immigration and Refugee Board as well as a Convention Refugee Determination Division, whose only function will be to process refugee claims. The first Chairman of the Commission will be Mr. Gordon Fairweather. In my opinion and in that of many others, this is an enlightened appointment.

Mr. Fairweather is a well-known New Brunswicker of unparalleled commitment and compassion for the politically oppressed and persecuted.

[Senator Simard.]

His integrity, his indisputable honesty and courage should be a source of inspiration for all Canadians.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Simard: These qualities should also convince Canadians that when the government promises a refugee determination system and personnel of exceptional quality and calibre, it delivers.

Under the new refugee determination system entrusted to Mr. Fairweather, everyone, and I emphasize the word "everyone", who claims refugee status on his arrival in Canada will have to follow very specific steps.

First, the claimant will be questioned by a panel made up of a member of the Refugee Division and an immigration adjudicator. Claimants who have a credible basis for their claim will be referred to the Convention Refugee Determination Division for a hearing. On the other hand, claimants who do not have a credible basis for their claim, who have already obtained refugee status in another country or who have had the opportunity to present a credible claim elsewhere, will be refused admission to Canada and will have to make an immigration application from outside the country.

Indeed, dear colleagues, each of these stages includes a great many details which have been arrived at over the past five months. I suggest that the resulting legislation will solve the current situation and serve as a guarantee for the future of Canadians and refugees.

The changes which have been made to Bill C-55 have reinforced it.

For instance, the bill states clearly that the facts presented to the two-member panel, in support of the claim, are not limited in any way and that each claimant has the right to testify on his own behalf.

The bill explains what the expression "in transit" means and indicates clearly that people "in transit" are not affected by the safe third country provisions.

It defines also what a safe third country is, meaning a country which will not turn back refugees, as provided for under the Geneva Convention.

The presence of a representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at the enquiry and hearing stages is now authorized, with the claimant's consent.

Whenever the federal government will have to provide the services of a counsel, the bill states now that he will have to be a lawyer.

Moreover, the amendments provide for other safeguards against those who would cheat the new refugee status determination process, but whose application does not deserve consideration.

Honourable senators, these amendments will reconcile these new legislative provisions of Bill C-71 while ensuring that war criminals will be treated in the same way as claimants who prove to be security threats. Moreover, the persons suspected of being war criminals will not be authorized to use that process, so that they cannot delay their deportation or court proceedings.

Finally, some of the amendments were made in order that people who are denied entry are not sent back to a country where they would actually be endangered.

During the drafting of the legislation and various amendments, the government has always paid special attention to maintaining the rights of genuine refugees. Therefore, those provisions never will be a threat to a claimant, whether his claim is justified or not. However, the legislation will make it possible to root out false claims.

In my view, we must tackle the problems of refugee status claims. As you and most Canadians will admit, the situation is critical.

During this year alone, we can expect to receive in Canada some 30,000 claims for refugee status.

The vast majority of those 30,000 will be spurious claims. The fact is that 70 per cent of claimants are not considered to be genuine refugees. And among the others, a large number already enjoy protection elsewhere or have already had an opportunity to ask for the protection of another country.

Honourable senators, we cannot let those abuses go unchecked. Clearly, we have an obligation to provide Canadians with a Refugee Act that is both fair and just, without neglecting our obligations to the oppressed.

Canadians are a compassionate people. Exactly 12 months ago, we received the Nansen Award in recognition of our continuing help to refugees from all over the world. We can be proud of the reception we have always extended to refugees. In fact, many of us are refugees or descendants of refugees.

However, we must ensure that our laws and procedures are respected. At the present time, our refugee status determination process is completely disorganized and unscrupulous individuals are arrogantly breaking our laws.

In conclusion, honourable senators, that bill allows us to fulfil our obligations under the United Nations Convention, to respect the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and to preserve our humanitarian tradition. It also provides for a procedure that will allow for a much easier acceptance of genuine refugees.

Canada needs such legislation. The sooner the legislation is passed, the sooner we will have at our disposal a process to help those who really need assistance. Thank you.

On motion of Senator Frith for Senator Grafstein, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 27, 1987, at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 27, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

CLERK'S ACCOUNTS

STATEMENT TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk of the Senate has laid on the Table a detailed statement of his receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year 1986-87.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved:

That the Clerk's Accounts be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to.

SUPREME COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-53, to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, October 29, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement.

[English]

THE SENATE

TEMPUS FUGIT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I was a little delayed entering the chamber, but I do not think I was as delayed as the clock indicates. It is still on daylight saving time, which should be drawn to the attention of someone.

Senator Doody: We should have stopped the clock an hour ago!

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): It looks pretty good to me!

The Hon. the Speaker: We are on fast track!

Senator Marshall: That is Newfoundland time.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to inform the Senate that Senator Murray is detained elsewhere on public business today and will not be able to join us.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Motion and Message relating to certain amendments to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto), presented in the Senate on 21st October, 1987—(Honourable Senator Sinclair).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to raise a point of order on this item, which is not intended to delay the proceedings this afternoon. I have raised similar points of order on other occasions, namely, that the evidence which bears upon this motion is not completely available. The evidence from the committee hearings of September 30 and October 1, which includes the appearance before the committee of the PMAC, has not been made available. I understand that it will be ready tomorrow, and it might be a good idea to wait until we have that evidence before we proceed with this item.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was assured that these reports and the translation thereof were being dealt with expeditiously and that we would have them in ample time. Obviously, there has been another delay. I would like to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that I have requested that the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration call as witnesses the people responsible for translation in the Department of the Secretary of State and the people responsible for the printing of these documents so that they can give the committee an explanation of why these delays keep recurring, despite the assurances that they are being corrected.

I am really at a loss to give the chamber an explanation of these delays, because this is not really my responsibility. However, the government's business is directly affected by it, so, although I do not have the responsibility, I have to carry the can for it. Therefore, I ask the Senate management to look into this matter with a view to trying to correct this situation.

This is not a serious delay at this point, since we have seen this bill delayed several times up to now, so I do not think this extra day's delay will be catastrophic. However, in the interests of the proper procedure of business in this place, I honestly feel that the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration should apply itself to finding a solution to this recurring problem.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in case there is a can that Senator Doody is carrying, I would like to take the opportunity to lift that can from his shoulders—or wherever else it might be attached—because we certainly do not blame him. We have raised this question before. We know he has taken this problem seriously and has tried to solve it, as evidenced by his intervention today.

However, I think in this case it is worthwhile underlining that it is more than a formal protest, because, as honourable senators will recall, the report of the committee proposes certain amendments that are all based on evidence given by either the government or the PMAC. In effect, the committee is simply asking that the assurances with regard to research, et cetera, given by the PMAC be included in the legislation. There are other amendments, but that is the one that relates to the PMAC. That is why in this case the delay is more important than it otherwise might be, although I think even if that were not the case the formal objection would still stand on its own merits.

Therefore, although we do not blame Senator Doody for this delay, I emphasize that the early availability of the transcript of the proceedings does have a little more importance in this case than it might otherwise have.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I moved the adjournment on this order last day because Senator Bélisle, who is the sponsor of this bill, had asked that the matter be dealt with and sent to committee.

Senator Stollery, in whose name the order had been adjourned, sent word that he did not intend to speak on the matter. I knew that Senator Bélisle was ready to close the debate, but since he was not present last day I simply took the adjournment in order to give him an opportunity to do so.

• (1410)

Unless another senator would like to speak before Senator Bélisle closes the debate, I would like to say this: Certain of my colleagues do not agree with the principle of this bill. Therefore, I expect that the vote to send the bill to committee will be on division.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Bélisle speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, I would like to thank the Deputy Leader of the Opposition for adjourning this debate. I would also like to thank my honourable colleagues for having taken part in the debate on Bill S-7, an act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.

I believe that enough has been said in this chamber, and other information will be made available in committee. Both the legal counsel of the Senate and the parliamentary library will be invited to come to the committee meetings. We expect that legal counsel for Opus Dei and the Right Reverend Gregory Haddock and others will answer all questions to the satisfaction of the committee members.

Having said that, I recommend that honourable senators give this bill second reading and that they refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for further scrutiny.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bélisle, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM ENTITLED "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—PUBLIC RESPONSE TO PETITION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, October 22, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the response of Canadians to a petition mailed out, calling upon Parliament to urge the government to act on the motion dealing with production of the NFB film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss".

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate the response of Canadians to a petition which calls upon Parliament to urge the government to act on the motion dealing with the production of the National Film Board film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss." I should like to put on the record the petition itself, which reads as follows:

WHEREAS the National Film Board of Canada, a body created and financed by an Act of Parliament and presently responsible to the Minister of Communications, has caused to be made and distributed in Canada and abroad a film entitled "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", and

WHEREAS a Committee of Your House found this film to be full of historical errors, to be a highly dramatized and one-sided account of the life and exploits of Air Marshal William Avery Bishop, VC, DSO and Bar, MC, DFC and, by the use of questionable film techniques, to give a false and misleading authority to rumour and unpublished speculation, and

WHEREAS the film has done grievous damage to the reputation of Air Marshal Bishop, caused grief to the surviving members of his family, and demeaned Canada as a nation and the sacrifice and heroism of Canadian Veterans everywhere.

WHEREFORE the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Government that the Minister of Communications instruct the National Film Board

1. To add after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. To take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

Honourable senators are aware that the same petition was contained in the motion that I put and was also contained in the motion Senator Molson put when the Senate originally debated this matter.

The immediate response to my petition, honourable senators, was relatively modest at first, but snowballed as time went on and after the postal strike was over.

There are many executive members or officials with signing authority in various associations and groups who have represented to me 49,650 names, but as honourable senators are aware, a proper petition must have the name, address and signature of the petitioner. There are 12,617 individuals who signed the petition as at October 22; the names are rolling in at the rate of several hundred daily. Interesting letters or notes have been included. Honourable senators should keep in mind that this subject is still of interest many years after Billy Bishop set his records.

As an example, let me read a portion of one letter I received. It states:

My father flew with the Royal Flying Corps until very badly injured in the crash of an aircraft. Is it possible that he and others may also be defamed by an agency of the Canadian government?

Another gentleman wrote:

The young people of Canada should be given facts, not fiction and fantasy, in relation to the past.

Respecting the youth of Canada, honourable senators, last Tuesday I spoke at the Terry Fox Centre and referred, as I have done each year, to Canada and the wars it has gone through. This year I used as my theme the Billy Bishop story. Many of those young people realize what the Senate is doing and what is going on across the country as far as Billy Bishop is concerned. I was amazed at their knowledge of the issue.

I have another letter from Flight Lieutenant E.W. Desbarats of Georgeville, Quebec, who served in France with the Royal Naval Air Service in 1917. This is one of the extracts, which states:

● (1420)

The worst of it is that the film is unquestionably accepted as a true documentary.

How about this comment from William M. McGill of Victoria, who states:

I consider the NFB's film . . . is a disgraceful attempt to manipulate 70-year old history.

He added:

I apologize for my very poor script . . . I am three weeks short of my 97th birthday.

Honourable senators, if Canadian citizens and veterans at that age are still interested and demanding that we take action, it tells a story.

Before I conclude, I want to read portions of a letter that tell a tale about Bishop's air mechanic, referred to in the film as Walter Bourne. This letter was written to a friend in Thunder Bay, Wesley Rogers, in 1952—35 years ago. It was written on exercise papers and was quite a lengthy letter. Strangely enough, a letter written in 1952 surfaced just about a month ago. You will be surprised that the writer's real name was not Walter Bourne, it was Freddie Bourne. That tells something about the story and about the factual items in it. Freddie Bourne says:

He is the mightiest Pilot living today. There has been no one to touch his score not even in the last war . . . In 1930 I received a 72 worded telegram from him as he was in England. He wanted me to go and see him . . . He thought the world of me and would never leave for a scrap if I was not there to see him off. I was the only one to service his engine, and no one was allowed to touch his guns, only me . . . He wanted me to go out to Canada with him and service his (Tiger) Moth . . .

Honourable senators, I repeat, that is Freddie Bourne, Bishop's air mechanic. There obviously was a strong bond between them. This is the same air mechanic that the film's producer uses to suggest that Bishop was dishonest in reporting claims of victories.

Honourable senators, I will have a further update on the situation tomorrow. Therefore, I adjourn the debate in my name.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 28, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

MEMBERS OF SENATE OF ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF PAKISTAN

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like to draw your attention to the presence in our gallery of a delegation of members of the Senate of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT PROPOSALS

REFERRED TO LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move that the document entitled "Proposals to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors and to deal with other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Statutes of Canada", tabled in the Senate on June 30, 1987, Sessional Paper No. 332-486, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: "Non-controversial and uncomplicated"—famous last words!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BANKING

ACQUISITION OF BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—AVOIDANCE OF INCOME TAX ON DEPOSIT INSURANCE PAYMENT

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last November the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee considered legislation arising out of problems experienced by the Bank of British Columbia and the acquisition of that bank by the Hongkong and Shanghai subsidiary registered here in Canada. At that time we were told that a number of groups had evidenced interest in the acquisition of the Bank of British Columbia, and that these were given consideration by the management of that bank and by government officials.

My question is this: Arising out of the information made available by the report of the Auditor-General, was the fact that the government was prepared to assist in laundering the $200 million through the Bahamas made available to all participants who were involved in the acquisition?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there is a rather colourful assertion in that question that I do not accept as stated.

Senator Frith: I found it very restrained.

Senator Perrault: Under the circumstances, very restrained.

Senator Sinclair: Were the participants told that government officials would so structure the matter that the $200 million would not attract tax in Canada?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, questions on this matter have been replied to as recently as yesterday in the House of Commons by the minister responsible, Mr. Hockin. As the honourable senator has noted, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce had an opportunity to question ministers and other witnesses at the time the legislation was going through the house. If there are further enquiries that they wish to address to the minister or the government on that matter, they are free to do so.

However, I do not think much purpose is served by asking highly coloured and argumentative questions on a piecemeal basis during the Question Period of the Senate.

Senator Frith: He was only asking for a fact.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, does the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have to assume that any payments made by this government are in some way structured so as not to attract tax? Is that an assumption we should make?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator, who is chairman of that committee, has had an opportunity to ask questions of the minister and has that same opportunity now and will have in the future. The honourable senator is not seeking information today. What he is seeking to do is to place his own highly coloured and prejudiced version and interpretation of events on the record.

Senator Perrault: That is an unfair comment.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I am not seeking to place an interpretation on the record. I am trying to find out if every interested group, when they applied to be taken into consideration by the government and by the bank, had been furnished with the same type of information with regard to the actions the government was prepared to take to assist them.

Senator Perrault: Yes or no.

Senator Frith: And if you do not know, will you find out?

Senator Murray: There are a great many assumptions in all three questions that have been put by the honourable senator. I do not accept those assumptions.

I will see if there is further information that can be brought to the attention of the Senate on this matter. Again, I remind the honourable senator that this was thoroughly canvassed in the House of Commons yesterday. Questions were replied to by the minister responsible, Mr. Hockin.

Senator Frith: And therefore should not be raised here?

Senator Sinclair: I am concerned about the testimony before the committee of this house, not what goes on somewhere else. I can assure the honourable senator that I have no recollection whatsoever of that information being available to our committee.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Is the Leader of the Government telling us now that he assumes that senators have been apprised of what went on in the other place and therefore, if an answer has been given there either today or some other day, he does not have any obligation to obtain answers for questions that are raised in this house?

Senator Murray: Not at all, honourable senators. Perhaps there are some honourable senators who have not read yesterday's House of Commons Hansard because they are waiting for an executive summary. I was simply drawing the attention of those honourable senators to the questions put and the answers given yesterday on this matter.

If the honourable senator wants further information, I can undertake to obtain it from the minister responsible.

RESPONSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT LEADER TO PROVIDE ANSWERS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I believe it is a very important question of privilege.

It is wrong for the Leader of the Government to abdicate his responsibility to answer legitimate questions that have been put to him, on the assumption that someone in the other place asked about it at some other time. Honourable senators, we should know from the Leader of the Government whether or not he intends to come into this chamber to accept questions and give answers or take notice and give an undertaking to seek replies to questions that are put. This has been the practice established long before I came here. Even Senator Flynn did that!

● (1410)

An Hon. Senator: And what about you?

Senator Olson: I did that, too.

It seems to me that there has been a serious deterioration in the office of the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he is now telling us that he is not even going to bother taking notice of questions in order to seek replies, and that we should look at House of Commons Debates to find the answers to our questions because they were asked in the other place.

Senator Guay: He does not even read House of Commons Debates!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate seemed to—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Are you rising on the question of privilege?

Senator Frith: No, I am asking a supplementary question to that asked by Senator Sinclair.

Senator Flynn: Senator Frith does not think that Senator Olson has raised a valid question of privilege?

Senator Frith: The Leader of the Government in the Senate, in replying to an earlier question, showed some diffidence or reluctance to obtain information.

Senator Murray: How?

Senator Frith: The leader said that there were some assumptions he did not agree with.

Can the leader tell us what the objectionable assumptions were so that the question—which asked for information—can be framed in such a way that it will not include offensive assumptions?

Senator Guay: He does not know!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend has only to read in tomorrow's Hansard the questions that were asked and the premises and assumptions contained therein to see why I was reluctant to reply on the spot today.

Senator Frith: I get the picture! No answer. No information.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CONCERNS OF MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT—GOVERNMENT LEADER'S POSITION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, the national dialogue on the subject of free trade with the United States has started. I was in British Columbia last weekend and noticed that the proponents of free trade are being heard, as are the opponents.

In a further quest for information, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not the following statements are well based. The first statement reads as follows:

Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism, we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

A further statement that has been made is:

It's silly. Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course. But our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

Another statement is:

Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again . . . Canada must increase its share of total world trade, which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades.

And the final statement is:

Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

May I ask the Leader of the Government for his views on each of the concerns raised in those statements, representing, as they do, the fears of some Canadians? I want the leader to be as forthright as he thinks he must be in the circumstances.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I am not quite sure what the practice is in this chamber, but having spent 22 years in the other place, I know that when a member quotes from a document the source of the quotation must be given. I wonder if that practice applies in the Senate.

Senator Perrault: I certainly do not object to that. The honourable senator has acquired a vast knowledge of the practices of the other place in his ceaseless quest for democracy. These statements are contained in Maclean's magazine, and have been quoted beyond their original publication in Maclean's magazine.

Senator Muir: I just wondered which one it was, that's all.

Senator Perrault: It is page 16 for June 30, 1983. Let me read the first quote again. It states:

Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism, we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

That was a statement by the Honourable Joe Clark.

Let me quote the second one. It states:

It's silly.—

Senator Walker: Who said that?

Senator Perrault:

Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course. But our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

That was the Honourable David Crombie.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator Muir: What are the dates?

Senator Perrault: Listen to this one; listen closely.

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator Perrault: It states:

Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

That was a statement from Michael Wilson, quoted in Maclean's magazine on June 30, 1983.

Senator Frith: Whatever happened to good, old Mike?

Senator Perrault: My friends, the pièce de resistance:

Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade, which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades.

That was the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear! He knew something in those days, too!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the one thing that I can say—

Senator Perrault: Where do you stand?

Senator Muir: Yes or no?

Senator Murray:—for my friend, Senator Perrault, is that he has been right from the start. I know that he signed with enthusiasm the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, under Senator van Rогgen's chairmanship, that pointed out all of the advantages for Canada in a free trade arrangement with the United States.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: I congratulate him on that.

Senator Frith: Now, there is a good answer! That is coming to grips with the question.

Senator Perrault: I was an ex officio member of the committee when I was the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I suggest to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that, using precisely the same standard of judgment, you are also a signatory to the Senate committee on drug costs and prices because you are also an ex officio member of that committee.

Senator Frith: Yes; hear, hear!

Senator Murray: No, it is a special committee.

Senator Perrault: You have an ex officio position on all of the committees.

Senator Flynn: No, no. That is unfair. You have a position on it.

Senator Argue: Do not tell Brian that.

Senator Perrault: Putting that aside—

Senator Flynn: You might as well!

Senator Perrault:—what are the leader's deeply held convictions on free trade in view of these statements made by members of the Privy Council who presently direct the affairs of the Government of Canada? Certainly, it suggests that this is the greatest conversion since Paul was converted on the road to Damascus.

Senator Argue: He has no convictions—deeply held or otherwise.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator van Roggen:—in view of the fact that the Leader of the Government in the Senate was kind enough to refer to my committee's report, I thought that for the record I might note that while I appreciate the nice things that he said about me and my committee on more than one occasion and the work that we have done, that particular report—and I do not say this to condemn the present agreement out of hand—said that agriculture should not be included. That particular report did not suggest for a minute that we deal with the continental energy policy.

Senator Flynn: If you want to debate that—

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: You have your opinion. Order!

Senator Frith: He brought it up.

Senator van Roggen: That report did not suggest that we have free trade in services. The—

Senator Frith: He raised it; not us.

Senator van Roggen: The Leader of the Government raised it.

Senator Flynn: Order!

An Hon. Senator: He is the defence counsel today.

• (1420)

Senator Flynn: This is not the occasion to make a speech.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I challenge any senator to point to an occasion when I have made a speech when posing a question. I have never done it. I do not look like Senator Argue; I do not act like Senator van Roggen; and I do not act like Senator Perrault. I would like Senator van Roggen to debate the issue, but not at this point.

Senator Perrault: The report was different from the agreement.

Senator Frith: Unfortunately, he does not need your approval.

Senator van Roggen: If Senator Flynn had not prolonged this debate this particular matter would have been over. I hope that Senator Flynn would credit me with the wit not to have turned that all into a long-winded question. I thought I would save the time of the chamber by simply responding to the remarks of the Leader of the Government, and those are the three points I wanted to make.

Senator Flynn: Oh, oh!

Senator van Roggen: I will do it all over again as a quote, if you like.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I recall the three volumes of that report. I was a member of the committee for, at least, the preparation of the third volume, and I well recall that the report of the committee did not recommend that agriculture be included, because they did not think it was possible to strike an agreement on agriculture. That is why. They threw up their hands at the impossibility of it all.

Senator Argue: And you sold out agriculture.

Senator Murray: I hope that my friends would agree—

Senator Argue: The domestic market for wheat is the American market now.

Senator Flynn: Why don't you make a speech?

Senator Murray: As I was saying, I hope that my friends would agree, as I think people in the agricultural, the energy and in the service sectors agree, that the inclusion of those sectors in the Free Trade Agreement has been a real plus for Canada.

Senator Argue: The farmers do not agree with that.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, since we have been tossing quotations across the floor, some of them of quite an ancient vintage today, let me draw to Senator van Roggen's attention, as well as to Senator Perrault's, some of the things that have been said by people in British Columbia about this Free Trade Agreement.

On energy, for example, which was one of the matters brought up a moment ago by Senator van Roggen, we have Mr. Mike Phelps, Executive Vice President of Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd., saying:

We've been fighting for many months to reduce U.S. regulatory barriers against Canadian gas exports and this should help increase Canada's and British Columbia's gas exports.

Mr. Bob Lamond, President of Czar Resources Ltd. in British Columbia, believes that it will make it easier for long-range planning, and I quote him as follows:

Investor confidence in the Canadian energy industry was destroyed by the NEP and we are now seeing it being rebuilt.

Senator Frith: Why don't you call a point of order?

Senator Perrault: Point of order!

Senator Murray: Finally, I draw to my friend's attention the statement by Mr. Bob Kadlec, the President of Inland National Gas Co. Ltd.

Senator Perrault: I rise on a point of order. I hope the Leader of the Government is hearing properly. I enter no objection to the process of reading these quotations, unattributed as far as written sources are concerned, because I also entered some quotations.

My point is that here we had leaders of the government condemning in the most formidable terms any aspect of free trade, and now the position has totally changed. That was the nature of my comment. I have not commented on the Free Trade Agreement as such. I think that it may not be beyond salvation in terms of an arrangement of some kind.

What led to the massive change in view on the part of the government? Why is the Prime Minister, who in 1983 said that this deal was no good, it would not work, and that we should move to world trade rather than continentalism, now changing his view? Mr. Wilson's view has changed. This is the nature of my question. We are not debating free trade here. I will contribute to that debate when the time comes.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is something to look forward to.

I did want to bring to the attention of honourable senators the statement by Mr. Kadlec, the President of Inland National Gas Co. Ltd., who said:

I think it has to be positive for the resource industries in general and anything that's positive for resources is positive for British Columbia . . . Inland is getting into the production side of the business so it's definitely positive for Inland.

Senator Perrault: Does the Leader of the Government have no ideas of his own? He does nothing but quote other people.

Senator Frith: Let us have your own personal natural gas!

Senator Roblin: How dare you make us laugh like that!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, virtually every study that has been done, whether by the Donald Macdonald Royal Commission, the C.D. Howe Institute or for the Economic Council of Canada, points out that there would be important increases in income, output, employment and living standards in every region of this country under free trade with the United States. It was on that basis that on September 25, 1985, the Right Honourable the Prime Minister announced in the other place that this government would attempt to negotiate a free trade agreement with the United States, within certain parameters which he stated in the House of Commons at that time.

With regard to world trade, I could point out what I believe must be obvious to my honourable friends, that if Canada can compete effectively with the United States and in the United States market, it will be a great help in terms of our becoming world competitive, which is the ambition and the policy of this government.

Senator Argue: The U.S. has a dying economy. The government has hooked on to a dying economy.

Senator Murray: Senator Argue the other day reminded us that a trade agreement with the United States, in his view, would be a loser whereas a trade agreement with the Soviet Union would be a winner. There is Senator Argue's economic and trade policy on the record for the second time, and I am glad he has given me this opportunity to draw attention to it.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, without making a speech, I think I could be allowed to reply to that wild assertion. The Soviet Union, on balance, in terms of percentages, is probably the best customer we have. I think that if the government—

Senator Doody: Is this a question?

Senator Argue: —put a little initiative into the effort—

Senator Doody: Question!

Senator Argue: —our sales to the Soviet Union could be expanded. I believe that, and the farmers are going to need it—

Senator Murray: You put that proposal forward as an alternative to the agreement with the United States!

Senator Argue: —since the government has handed over to the United States the domestic wheat market and has destroyed the two-price system. That is what follows from the Free Trade Agreement.

On my own outlook as to markets, I say this: I think the country was going in the right direction when it set up and supported Expo '86. I think we would be far better working up trade agreements—

Senator Walker: Question!

Senator Argue: —and trade expansion—

Senator Walker: Question!

Senator Argue: —in the strong, growing economies of the Pacific Rim instead of tying ourselves to a nation that used to be a creditor nation, has now become a debtor nation, has increased its national debt three times over in the last eight years—

Senator Doody: Question!

Senator Argue: —and, in the opinion of all experts, that weak economy is the main reason for the collapse of financial markets all over the world. This government has tied Canada to a dying economy.

THE ENVIRONMENT

REPORT OF NATIONAL TASK FORCE ON ENVIRONMENT AND ECONOMY—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I was fortunate to be present at the United Nations General Assembly this week when the Prime Minister of Norway, Mrs. Gro Brundtland, presented to that assembly the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development. Many world leaders responded, among them the Honourable Thomas McMillan, Canadian Minister of the Environment, who gave a forceful, practical and eloquent address.

Senator Buckwold: Naturally!

Senator Spivak: My question relates to the Government of Canada's timetable in response to the recommendations of the Brundtland report, as outlined in a recent report of the Canadian National Task Force on Environment and Economy, which was formed as a direct follow-up to the visit to Canada, in May 1986, of the World Commission on Environment and Development.

● (1430)

Specifically, I would like to know what action has been or will be taken on recommendation 2.1 of the task force report, which asks that First Ministers assume leadership and demonstrate commitment to economy integration by directing that cabinet documents and major government economic development documents demonstrate that they are economically and environmentally sound and, therefore, sustainable; also that environment-economy integration be discussed at First Ministers' conferences. Further, I would like to know what action has been taken on recommendation 3.2, which requests the formation of a national round table on environment and economy, with a chairperson to be appointed by and to report to the Prime Minister.

Senator Frith: Aren't we polite!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will undertake to obtain from my colleagues a prepared reply to that question and bring it in as soon as possible.

STATISTICS CANADA

RESTORATION OF FUNDING FOR CENSUS PUBLIC-USE SAMPLE TAPE—EFFECT ON CANADIAN STUDENTS OF NECESSITY TO USE U.S. DATA

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I hope that the Leader of the Government and others have had an opportunity to read the article in the "Report on Business" which appeared in the Globe and Mail on Monday and which praised Dr. Ivan Fellegi, the Chief Statistician of Canada, for his work in harmonizing our trade statistics with those of the United States.

I hope that the article has been read and noted, with its praise for Statistics Canada and the previous DBS, because, as honourable senators will recall, this government attempted first to cancel the 1986 census, and then, when it was restored, demanded that Statistics Canada reduce its budget to the equivalent amount of the census.

The consequence of this is that students in Canadian universities are unable to have access to recent census data, and many students are being forced to use U.S. data, because Statistics Canada is not producing a public-use sample tape of the 1986 census.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether the government is planning to restore sufficient funding to Statistics Canada so that a public-use sample tape can be produced for the use of researchers and students in Canadian universities this year.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will have to consider the honourable senator's question in more detail and ask the appropriate minister to prepare a reply for her.

Senator Marsden: I thank the Leader of the Government, because the government has received representations on this question for at least six months from universities and researchers across the country. When looking at the answer to that question, perhaps the Leader of the Government will also give us the views of the government on the influence on Canadian students of being tested on and forced to use American data, rather than Canadian data, in studying our economy and our society.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM—REQUEST FOR CONCLUSIONS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, at the risk of being accused of anticipation, may I ask the Leader of the Government if he will ask his colleague, the Secretary of State of Canada, to prepare a report for him on the conclusions of the National Forum on Post-Secondary Education now in progress?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will be glad to do that.

FINANCE

SALE OF SHARES OF BRITISH PETROLEUM—REPORTED REQUEST OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government could find out whether the Minister of Finance actually made representations to the British Chancellor of the Exchequer with respect to the sale of the shares of British Petroleum. It has been reported that there was a conversation in which the Canadian government requested that the sale of shares be not proceeded with at this time because of the market situation. I wonder whether or not that is correct. It is just a factual question.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, that report is substantially correct.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—R&D COMMITMENT OF PHARMACEUTICAL COMPANIES—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, a short while ago, in response to Senator Sinclair, the Leader of the Government suggested that it would be useful to read comments by ministers in the other place. I would now like to do that. There was a letter published this morning in the Globe and Mail over the signature of the Honourable Harvie Andre, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in which he elaborates on the tremendous amount of research and development that will be done if Bill C-22 should pass. In it he states:

Under Bill C-22, the pharmaceutical industry is committed to increasing the percentage of its revenues invested in research and development to 10 per cent by 1995.

Could the Leader of the Government tell us under what clause of Bill C-22 that commitment is given?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: Come on!

Senator Murray: —the honourable senator knows the answer to that question as well as I do.

Senator Flynn: Be serious!

Senator Murray: That commitment is not contained in the legislation, and for very good reason.

Senator Flynn: You have known that for a long time!

Senator Frith: He is quoting the minister. Are you saying, Jacques, that you cannot quote him seriously?

Senator Flynn: It is silly!

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, to the Leader of the Government I would simply say—

Senator Flynn: The bill has been before us for months!

Senator McElman: —is this not misleading to the public, that a minister—

Senator Flynn: You are being misleading!

Senator Denis: Cut it down!

Senator Flynn: Shut up yourself!

Senator McElman: I take it that this is an example of the courtesy the honourable senator was speaking of a little while ago!

Senator Flynn: I was replying to Senator Denis. He told me to shut up, and I said, "Shut up yourself!"

Senator McElman: And I said that is an example of the courtesy you were speaking of a little while ago.

Senator Flynn: I wanted to hear what you had to say.

Senator McElman: Good.

Would the Leader of the Government not agree with me that—I am sure that it is not intentional—this quotation, which is a direct letter from Harvie Andre, the minister, says, "Under Bill C-22, . . ." Those words can have only one interpretation, that Bill C-22 requires—

Senator Perrault: It is a provision of the bill.

[Senator McElman.]

Senator McElman: —that there is a commitment by the industry. Would the Leader of the Government perhaps consider asking his colleague to correct his public statement so it will not be misleading to the public at large?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, for all those who are interested in the subject, it is well known that the minister and the government have, again, for very good reason, resisted attempts by my friends opposite to have these commitments written into the legislation. When my colleague, Mr. Andre, says, "Under Bill C-22," he is referring to the fact, which is also very well known by honourable senators and all those interested in the subject, that the industry has made certain very definite commitments about research and development expenditures, conditional upon having the régime provided for with the passage of Bill C-22. So in that sense "Under Bill C-22" or with passage of Bill C-22—

Senator Frith: It says, "Under".

Senator Murray: —we will have these R&D expenditures in this field. I think there would be no doubt in the mind of anybody who has been following this issue as to what the minister meant in his short letter to the Globe and Mail.

Senator Frith: No doubt at all! I'll say there isn't!

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I take it, then, that the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate is not prepared to take this matter up with his colleague?

Senator Perrault: He is afraid to!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as always, I am prepared to convey my honourable friend's representations to Mr. Andre, and I shall do so.

NEW BRUNSWICK

CONGRATULATIONS TO HON. ALDÉA LANDRY ON CABINET APPOINTMENT

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have just one further question. Is the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate aware that the new Premier of New Brunswick, the Honourable Frank McKenna, yesterday, made much more pleasant the leader's future discussions on inter-governmental affairs with the appointment of the Honourable Aldéa Landry as minister?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I thank my honourable friend for the opportunity of congratulating both Premier McKenna and his new ministers on their accession to office yesterday and to express the hope and the expectation that the relations between that government and the Government of Canada will be productive, useful, constructive and in the interests of New Brunswick and of Canada.

● (1440)

It so happens that I know my new vis-à-vis in New Brunswick personally, and have known her for some years. I have great respect for her competence and experience and look forward to working with her.

THE SENATE

ROLE OF SENATOR FLYNN IN QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As we have all noticed, our good friend, Senator Flynn, is always interrupting, and on any subject. I would like to know if Senator Flynn does that on the instructions of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: It is a question to the leader!

Senator Flynn: No, I rise on a question of privilege. It is the same type of privilege as was raised by Senator Olson. I do not follow instructions from Senator Murray in this respect. However, I must say to Senator Denis that instead of complaining of my interruption he should sometimes intervene, especially with regard to Bill C-22. He has been asked by all of his friends in the Quebec legislature to say something about that bill, but he has kept quiet and numbed.

Senator Denis: That is another proof that he is still interrupting.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps I could ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Since Senator Flynn has made it very clear on a point of privilege that he does not accept instructions from you, leading to the behaviour referred to, can we assume that he is then going against your instructions?

Senator Flynn: Let me say—

Senator Denis: You keep on interrupting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order, order!

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—COMMITMENTS OF PHARMACEUTICAL COMPANIES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I do not know on whose instructions Senator Flynn is wearing a red tie, or what the implications are of that! However, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would do us the courtesy of expounding upon those very good reasons why the government did not include in Bill C-22 the commitments of the already profitable multinational pharmaceutical companies.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The honourable senator was a member of the committee—or, at any rate, attended the committee hearings—and heard the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs elaborate on those reasons.

As to the invitation that he has extended to me to do so, I will consider doing that at the appropriate time; that is to say, when the matter is before us for debate.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate let us know whether those undertakings by the pharmaceutical companies were oral or in writing? If they were in writing, would he please table them in this chamber?

An Hon. Senator: In invisible ink!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in many cases the commitments have been made in the form of announcements by the various drug companies. Also, if I am not mistaken, various witnesses from the industry have reaffirmed or reiterated those commitments before the House of Commons committee and before the Special Senate Committee. Therefore, they are very definitely on the public record.

Senator Gigantès: Do you and your government, then, consider them to be binding? Perhaps I could have an answer from the Leader of the Government as to whether he considers those undertakings to be binding.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not prepared—as my honourable friend appears to be—to question the good faith of people in the industry, who have given me and the government no reason to question their good faith.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, there have been other promises by various people in the past who did not keep them. These people were industrialists, among other things.

Senator Guay: And governments.

Senator Gigantès: Yes, and governments, if you like. What happens if these promises are not kept? This is what we would like to know.

Senator Murray: There is a provision to review the bill in four years, as the honourable senator knows. In any event, these are matters that will be before us for debate this very day, if I am not mistaken, when the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce is presented. My honourable friend can express his reservations, make his representations, and ask his questions at that time.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—EFFECT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF BI-NATIONAL TRIBUNAL—ADJUDICATION OF APPLICATION OF CANADIAN LAW

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question raised in the Senate by Senator MacEachen on October 14, 1987, regarding the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement—Dispute-Settlement Mechanism. I can ask that that answer be printed in the usual fashion or I can read it now, if the honourable senator so wishes.

Senator MacEachen: Having it printed is acceptable.

(The answer follows:)

The new dispute settlement procedure is unique in establishing a mechanism that will:

- replace judicial review in both countries
- have representation from both countries
- operate according to strict deadlines
- review the case on the basis of the law of the country in whose jurisdiction the Anti-dumping/Counter-vailing Duty (AD/CVD) proceeding was launched
- apply the standard of judicial review of the country in whose jurisdiction the AD/CVD proceeding was launched
- provide a final decision which will either end the proceeding or require action, not inconsistent with its decision, by the administrative body, whose determination is the subject of review.

The intention is to replace existing judicial review in both countries with a new bi-national dispute settlement mechanism, not to eliminate judicial review.

SUPREME COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill C-53, to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I hope to be reasonably brief in speaking to Bill C-53, which is a bill to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other acts in consequence thereof. Honourable senators, I am sure, will have read the House of Commons Debates where a considerable amount of time was taken up with tributes to the court and to the contribution it has made, not just in constitutional matters but in other matters.

I think it suffices in this place to say that all honourable senators are aware of the outstanding contributions of the men and women who serve on the highest court in our land, and who render outstanding judgments. In my opinion our Supreme Court compares well with any Supreme Court in any country.

Senator Frith: It is only recently that you could say “women” in the plural.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, only recently, but I am now proud to say there are two women on the Supreme Court bench.

The purpose of this bill, while simply stated, is of considerable importance to the administration of justice in our country. That purpose is to make amendments to the procedures for appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada in order to ensure that the court retains its capacity to deal efficiently with, and to respond in a timely fashion to, questions of fundamental national importance.

The dramatic increase in recent years in the demands on the court's time, and in particular the increase in appeals as a result of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, serves to highlight the fact that the court's time is a limited resource. A summary review of the national newspapers on any given day illustrates the fundamental and important questions that the court is continually being called upon to decide. The changes proposed in this bill are necessary if the court is to continue to deal efficiently with its ever-increasing workload. Without changes of this nature the court may well be in danger of becoming inaccessible for consideration of some of the important legal and constitutional questions of our time.

Honourable senators, I propose to deal with Bill C-53 by simply outlining the five basic amendments which are contained in the bill. First, the bill provides that applications for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, in both civil and criminal matters, may be determined by the court solely on the written submissions of the parties, if it is clear from the written submissions that an oral hearing is not warranted. This amendment is designed to allow the court to decide applications for leave, without oral hearings, in those cases where it is clear from the written submissions that leave to appeal should be granted, and in those cases where it is also clear from the written submissions that leave ought not to be granted.

● (1450)

Honourable senators, there are many applications which come before the Supreme Court of Canada on the question asked by the presiding judge, “Is there anything further to be added to the written submission?”, and counsel has on many occasions said, “Nothing further.” The court felt that it was unnecessary to bring counsel some considerable distance in some cases to add nothing further to the written submission.

Second, in order to allow the Supreme Court to better control its own process, the bill provides that the court may deliver judgments either in open court or by depositing them with the registrar. This amendment will give to the court the same discretion to deliver judgment by deposit that the provincial courts of appeal already enjoy.

The question of convening a full court and pronouncing judgment is becoming somewhat outdated and time consuming.

Third, this bill will extend to the Supreme Court the legislative authority to assign counsel to unrepresented accused. Under the amendment, the litigating attorney general will assume the cost if legal aid is not granted. Further, counsel's fee will be subject to the scrutiny of the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Honourable senators, there are an increasing number of instances where accused persons are appearing without counsel. In fact, the court has placed the onus of explaining the accused's position on some crown attorneys. It has been felt by the court that in many of these instances that is not how justice ought to appear. This is a right that is currently given to provincial courts of appeal under the Criminal Code of Canada. The provincial attorney general must bear the cost of an appeal, subject to review of the bill.

Fourth, the bill provides that an appellant who is in custody and is represented by counsel will not be entitled, as a right, to be present at an appeal or any preliminary or incidental proceedings. Provision is made for the rules of the court to allow attendance by inmates, and for the court, or a judge thereof, to grant leave to attend.

Honourable senators, at present the provisions make it absolutely necessary for an accused person to be present. In a civil matter a litigating person may not be able to afford to attend the proceedings and follow his lawyer to the capital city to hear his matter argued. The same would now apply in criminal cases. It is expected that if it were not difficult or dangerous, for security reasons, to get an accused person there an accused person would attend. However, it is not necessary to bring a very dangerous inmate, for example, from as far away as British Columbia at great expense to taxpayers.

Finally, in order to remedy current difficulties with the time periods for bringing appeals, the bill proposes amendments that will provide more reasonable and practicable time limits for bringing appeals and applications for leave to appeal.

Honourable senators, these amendments are motivated by a concern about the dramatic increase in recent years in the demands on the court's time. The amendments proposed in this bill are designed to provide the court with the tools necessary to manage its heavy workload. At the same time, the amendments speak to concerns of fairness, security, and the need for a more workable appeal process.

In short, honourable senators, these changes are necessary to ensure the continued and efficient operation of the Supreme Court and, hence, are of the highest priority to the administration of justice in this country. I, therefore, urge all honourable senators to give support to this measure.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, for the second reading of the Bill C-55, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Grafstein).

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, Bill C-55 is the government's proposal to reform and modernize the processing of refugees in this country by establishing a new and fairer refugee status-determination system.

At the outset, honourable senators, it might be useful, as a question of public policy, to differentiate between our immigration process and our refugee process. One can trace the separation between these two elements of our public policy to the liberalization of our foreign policy shortly after World War II, as Canada moved from isolationism to an activist, internationalist stance. As our foreign policy became more liberal, more activist, more internationalist, so our refugee policy emerged as a separate and distinct element in our overall public immigration policy.

Professors David DeWitt and John Kirton, in their book, an interesting analysis of our foreign policy, entitled Canada As A Principal Power, concluded:

The evolution of Canada's position on refugees has been both dramatic and ad hoc.

Prior to World War II we simply did not have a refugee policy. For example, between 1923 and 1947 less than 24 people of Chinese origin were admitted to Canada—less than one person of Chinese origin a year in that period. In the aftermath of World War II the King government reluctantly began to differentiate between refugees and the traditional, restrictive, narrow cast of our immigration policy. Changing public attitudes following World War II, both within and without Parliament, led to separate, special criteria evolving for displaced persons—the so-called refugees of the day—and refugees. In 1947 Prime Minister King reluctantly announced a shift in public policy on this question.

However, it was the Senate that played a crucial role in the evolution of a radical change in that policy. The separation of the criteria between immigrants and the special case refugees can be traced to the Standing Senate Committee on Immigration and Labour in 1946. Under the inspiration of the late and great Senator Arthur Roebuck, in a critical Senate report tabled over 40 years ago, that Senate committee's recommendations and findings led to a clear differentiation between the status and the treatment of refugees and immigrants.

Louis St. Laurent and Lester Pearson wanted Canada to play a much more activist foreign policy role by developing a new world order with a crucial role for new multilateral institutions. They wanted Canada to be a middle power; they wanted Canada to be a quiet broker. They wanted multilateral organizations to play a much larger role. Within those multilateral organizations Canada could have greater leverage. It was this new approach to foreign policy that pushed and compelled Canada's domestic policy attitudes towards refugees to evolve into a more liberal attitude. Canada's support for multilateral institutions, such as the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Association and the International Refugee Organization, which were predecessors of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, caused Canada to take a more liberal attitude towards refugees. But our policies and practices were rooted in King's restrictive approach, which did not welcome refugees who came directly to our shores; rather, the King shift meant a different system under which Canada's immigration officers would go to areas or adjacent countries where there were expected or real refugee problems, and then, in those places, select Canada's refugees, thereby bypassing refugee candidates based on age, infirmities, handicaps, or even political ideology. The tradition of restrictive practices by Canada's highly bureaucratic methodology was slowly wiped away and worn down by Canada's positive foreign policy, led by successive Prime Ministers, from St. Laurent to Pearson to Diefenbaker to Trudeau and Clark.

● (1500)

In Canada's collective desire to establish a new liberal order, we slowly caused our bureaucrats' and our internal attitudes regarding refugees to change so that today Canada's refugee policy is indeed part and parcel of our foreign policy; today we have a more liberal, internationalist, activist foreign policy. That is paralleled by our high support for multilateral arrangements to coordinate our public policy responsibilities. In other words, as we push for multilateral obligations we increase our humane attitude towards refugees, yet our activist foreign policy was always constrained by the belief that we had a redneck domestic political attitude towards refugees. Unfortunately, honourable senators, that remains the case to this day.

Although special immigration arrangements were made for refugees after World War II, Canada's way of dealing with special surges of refugees was not to have a special category for refugees but merely to relax immigration standards by order in council, by political decision. That was coupled with Canada's historic selective process, which could only be overcome during times of crisis. In other words, we selected the best refugee candidates abroad, until an emergency arose which attracted public attention. Canada did not encourage refugees to come to its shores.

The Hungarian revolution of 1956 was the first major post-war example of that. Our desire to select refugee candidates abroad was overcome by events at home. Within months, because of public opinion, order in council criteria were relaxed, and over 35,000 refugees arrived in Canada in a short period of time. Our foreign policy voice begat responsibility for those unfortunate victims who suffered from obvious repression in their homeland. But our harsh, so-called, domestic environment continued to constrain our attitudes towards refugees—irrespective of the source of those refugees.

The next refugee surge came in 1968-69 with the Czechoslovakian crisis. Once again, the Senate Committee on Manpower and Immigration led the way towards reform. Its findings led to the establishment of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. That Senate committee pointed out the flaws in the white paper of the day on immigration policy. It pointed out the lack of specific provisions for accepting refugees. In 1968-69 Canada had not yet acceded to the UN Convention on Protocol and Refugees. It was Canada's active role in foreign policy, Canada's active role through NATO in its multilateral response to the Czech crisis, where Canada played a crucial role within NATO, that led to Canada applying its full participation and undertaking its full responsibility by assisting sister European countries that had been safe havens, places of first asylum, for those refugees. Again, our foreign policy transformed our domestic practice, and cabinet directed Canada's immigration officers to relax procedures.

[Senator Grafstein.]

In 1968 the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, announced that Canada would take all Czech refugees who wished to come to Canada. That was the first example of an open-door policy on refugees, but it was less generous than it appeared. Indeed, there was little risk of domestic backlash, because there was wide public acceptance of the Czech crisis, and Canada's humane instincts were led by strong leadership on the question. There was little risk of aggravation of a backlash, because the vast majority of Czechs were technically skilled or professionals. However, it was the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the now Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, the Honourable Allan MacEachen, who first provided an activist refugee policy to seek out positively those refugees, not only to seek them out but to provide resettlement assistance upon their arrival in Canada. We made the landing easy. It was during that period that our refugee policy evolved into a much more modern context.

In 1972 Canada was confronted by the Ugandan-Asian refugee crisis when there were Asians living in Uganda who, because of the actions of Idi Amin, were given an immediate expulsion order. Canada, again, showed public leadership and led public opinion; over 7,000 Asians were accepted by Canada as refugees, more than by all other countries except Great Britain. Again, Canada did that by relaxing its immigration procedures and by Canada's forceful public leadership. By that leadership we reduced the domestic backlash, notwithstanding the sub-texture of the time, that these were Asians, perhaps there was an ethnic problem, perhaps there was a colour problem. Because of Canada's strong leadership it overcame those internal voices.

In 1972-73 the Chilean military coup led to more modern difficulties associated with refugee surges. Then Canada lagged behind in its public responsibility and its stated foreign policy, unlike its stance in previous refugee crises. Only after lengthy pressure from the public, from church groups and other public-minded citizens, did Canada move for on-site inspections, and set up personnel in adjacent Central American and South American countries in order to assist the Chilean refugee process.

Between 1974 and 1978 Canada was criticized, and properly criticized, for its slow, laggard approach to inhumane practices, as were clearly articulated by the UN High Commissioner for Refugees. Public support for a more restricted response was evident, and may have caused the government to refuse to lead because of so-called domestic concerns. Chilean refugees, perhaps, had some ideological problems, we were told. Perhaps they did not believe in some of the principles that Canadians believed in; perhaps they had a different set of problems. Again, it was that subliminal, subjective argument that caused the government to stem the flow of refugees rather than to open the doors.

In 1975 the new Immigration Act codified, for the first time within Canada's domestic legislation, its international commitment to assist and protect refugees. It was now well over 20 years since the Convention was passed in 1951 protecting refugees.

Our institutional reorganization within our bureaucracy combined with the then Bill C-24 to make refugees and immigration streams separate streams, separate processes, and a separate calculus within our overall immigration policy. The 1978 act did not only codify our humane refugee policy but introduced for the first time a refugee quota allotment as part of our overall immigration quota policy, and allowed for the first time a designated class whereby refugee groups could be designated as refugees so that we could accelerate the process, when required.

In 1978 we were confronted by the Vietnamese boat people, the Indo-Chinese refugee surge. Here, government practices and policies were inconsistent. Concerned by the overwhelming surge, concerned by the fact that we might be overrun by the Indo-Chinese, the government, in establishing limits, increased the levels, yet established caps, and opened the door by an indirect method. It said to the Canadian public, "If the Canadian public will match, by sponsoring refugees privately, there will be a separate quota above and beyond the government's own quota." The government did this, because it feared the backlash, and this was one way to diminish that backlash. But here, the Canadian public surprised the politicians and led the way. Private groups came forward and far exceeded the government's expectation by the vast numbers of private sponsorships that were made available to help these poor, unfortunate refugees. Canada had matured. Canada's politicians' concern about backlash was more media speculation than a reality. Canadians wanted to help. So, honourable senators, what two lessons can we learn from this cursory, abbreviated, stilted history of our refugee policy?

● (1510)

First, when the government takes the lead in public opinion, the so-called redneck, domestic backlash is reduced or becomes non-existent. Second, Canadians are much more humane and much more desirous of doing good than our politicians give them credit for, which, honourable senators, brings me to Bill C-55 itself.

All parties, all sides, all special interests, all vested interests and the Canadian public all agree that we need a reformed, modern, fair refugee status determination system. As senators, I believe that we must ensure that the processes in Bill C-55 meet our international obligations, our constitutional obligations under the Charter, and our obligations under the Convention and protocol respecting refugees to which Canada is a signatory. Hence, when we turn to Bill C-55 we see some apparent problems. I say "apparent problems," honourable senators, because it is important that we get evidence on this bill from many independent bodies in order to determine fairly if these apparent problems are real problems, because the bill is a complex bill, and there are some dramatic changes in public policy.

The questions that I might raise as apparent problems are these: First, is the new regulatory model which has been created in Bill C-55 more politicized, less judicial, and, ultimately, less fair? Will it put greater pressure on the political system, as opposed to sustaining and maintaining an independent refugee process? Is it, indeed, a reform or a reaction?

Second, by establishing a new screening mechanism and a new refugee board, are we improving the process? Will more genuine refugees be granted fair and expeditious access, or will there be barriers to genuine refugee claimants? For the first time, honourable senators, we will be sending away genuine refugees for only one reason: because they came from a safe country.

Third, does Bill C-55 truly provide an appeal for refugee claims, or is the appeal in the legislation so narrowly cast as either to be unfair or ineffective? We have to look at that question carefully.

Fourth, are the eligibility criteria and the procedures related thereto reasonable in the circumstances, having in mind all of the evidence that we have heard on Bill C-84 respecting the difficult problems that refugees are confronted with when they seek to escape oppression? Is the right to counsel a façade because of the time constraints in that process? We should look at that.

Fifth, if we return genuine refugee claimants to so-called "safe countries" from whence they came to Canada, can we be satisfied that we have fulfilled our humanitarian and international obligations of asylum and protection of refugees?

I will give you an example: An Iranian escapes from the oppression in Iran today—which we all accept—and goes to Turkey, by whatever means; then finds his way to West Germany, a safe country, and then, ultimately, after spending some time there, he comes to Canada. Under this bill, that Iranian would be returned to West Germany, who, in turn, based on their practices, would return him to Turkey, and Turkey, in turn, would return him to Iran. Do we have—I ask this as a question; I do not have the answer—a constitutional or international obligation to protect genuine refugees who come directly to our shores even if that refugee came from a safe country? Do we have to look into the safe country itself to see what practices that country has?

Sixth, are the safeguards for refugees under the bill as we have it better than the original safeguards for return, which appear to have evaporated from Bill C-55 before it reached this house?

Seventh, has the government sought to mitigate the problem of refugees at the source by entering into regional, multilateral, or bilateral agreements with safe countries to anticipate, coordinate and share refugee surges? This whole approach, which I believe was taken up by Mr. McLean when he was the Minister of State for Immigration, appeared in earlier drafts of the government's proposals, and they appear to have been dropped in this proposal. Could the government tell us why? Is there a better way of coordinating a solution to this genuine problem between safe countries?

Eighth, under the new mechanism in Bill C-55, are we developing a fair system, if there is no overall continuum in the initial screening process? In other words, is it possible, under the new screening process, that we would end up with a more capricious, inconsistent and arbitrary set of decisions, because there is no one person or body to provide an overall mechanism to ensure judicial consistency in all cases?

Finally, honourable senators, do we not really solve the refugee problems, which will occur and recur around the world, by giving much more leadership in our foreign policy, and ensuring that as a pillar of our foreign policy we have an activist approach towards democratic development and a respect for human rights in countries which may be the source of refugee flows in the future? Is that not really the underlying root cause of refugee problems now and in the future?

Honourable senators, these and other questions will have to be addressed as we examine this bill. Our refugee policy is part and parcel of our foreign policy. It is putting our actions at home in line with our words abroad.

Some wise man once said that a country's refugee policy is a barometer of that country's definition of justice. Thus, we should examine the bill with great care and ensure, as the Senate has in the past, that we will not be pushed by public hysteria; that we will not be pushed by emotionalism; that we will examine the bill in the calm, deliberate committee process in order to determine if the minister's words are matched in the legislation so that we can end up with a fairer and sounder refugee system which sends a signal to Canada and to the world that we are prepared to accept our public responsibilities at home in the same way as we voice our concerns abroad.

Honourable senators, do Canadians wish the government to do the least or to do the best? To do the minimum or the maximum?

In the 1951 Convention dealing with the refugee problem at the United Nations, the conference concluded on this note:

The Conference expresses the hope that the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees will have value as an example exceeding its contractual scope and that all nations will be guided by it in granting so far as possible to persons in their territory as refugees and who would not be covered by the terms of the Convention, the treatment for which it provides.

In other words, we were asked, and we agreed, to go beyond the letter of the law. We said we would match the spirit of the law. I ask the Senate to do no less in regard to this bill.

● (1520)

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Would Senator Grafstein permit a question?

I congratulate him on his excellent exposition of the problems facing us, but yesterday evening at the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs he indicated that when this bill is referred to that committee, there should be a dividing of the examinations of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. I did not quite understand his explanation as it was given then. Perhaps he could give those reasons again, because it seems to me that both bills are interrelated.

[Senator Grafstein.]

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, I can speak only for myself, since this will certainly be a matter for the committee to determine. If you are asking for my own personal view on this, I would be glad to give it. However, I do not want to be premature and, in effect, lead the committee on this question. It will be up to the committee, which will be seized of Bills C-84 and Bill C-55, to make this determination.

My initial response is that I think Bill C-84 has some very difficult and intrinsic but patent problems. They are legal, narrow and quite clear. The evidence to date presented in that committee seems to be overwhelmingly that there is a need for modification.

In terms of Bill C-55, we have had the same thrust of public opinion, but the nature of the complaints are different. They do not like the public policy, and I think the bills are different in that sense.

I think it would be appropriate to conclude our evidence on Bill C-84, make our recommendations with respect to that bill, and then follow that with a study of Bill C-55 as the next stage. That is my own personal view. As I have indicated to the chairman of the committee, that is for the committee to decide as a matter of practice.

On motion of Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Motion and Message relating to certain amendments to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto), which was presented on October 21, 1987.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, on Wednesday last I had the honour to present—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: What is the honourable senator moving? What is the question?

Senator Sinclair: As I understand it from the order paper, it is consideration of the nineteenth report. It is the third order.

Senator Flynn: Is it only consideration, or adoption?

Senator Sinclair: At some time I will make a motion, but at the present time I am dealing with the order. In due course I will assist the honourable senator.

May I begin, again, by saying that on Wednesday last I had the honour to present to the Senate the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. That report was pursuant to a reference made to the committee by the Senate requiring the committee to deal with two things, the message from the House of Commons dealing with Bill C-22 and the motion of Senator Murray in relationship to the Senate's amendments to Bill C-22.

Honourable senators, Bill C-22 is merely the optimizing, after many years, of discussions that have gone on in this country concerning questions of patents for pharmaceuticals. Patents for pharmaceuticals are a special class, and are recognized as such, and they have been recognized as such in many countries. You may wonder why some people say that they are no different from anything else. Of course they are. Patents on pharmaceuticals are different because they are vital to the continued well-being and life of the people of this country. Everybody in Canada is involved in pharmaceutical patents, one way or another, and that is why they have always been treated in a very different way.

That is why we in the Senate had to look at this bill with the great care that this issue deserves. I am happy to say that the committee approached its problem with care. It was suggested at times that we should hurry and take shortcuts, but I do not think we did. I think we considered the bill carefully in all its aspects.

Bill C-22 addresses four principles: one, increased intellectual property protection; two, increased research and development in Canada and the resultant creation of jobs; three, improvement of the health care of Canadians; and, four, the protection of consumers from higher drug prices. Those are the principles the government said it was addressing in Bill C-22.

When Bill C-22 was discussed in the House of Commons, they discussed, for instance, the protection of intellectual property in this way: They said, "We are going to increase the protection of intellectual property by extending the period of exclusivity. We are going to say not that you cannot get a compulsory licence, but we are not going to allow you to use that compulsory licence to import and sell in Canada or to manufacture in Canada a drug for which a patent is outstanding for a period of years." They chose a period of ten years for importation and seven years for manufacture. However, they allow compulsory licences to continue to be issued.

The Senate considered the situation regarding the protection of intellectual property. Surely, none of us would denigrate the fact that intellectual property has to be considered, and some concern has to be exercised in relationship to it in the overall context of how it fits in the world. In its consideration the Senate said, "No, we do not believe that intellectual property protection can only be looked after by extending a period of exclusivity to ten years for importation and seven years for manufacture. We, the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22—not the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce—think that intellectual property in pharmaceuticals can be protected by a significantly lower period of exclusivity, namely, four years, but that the 4 per cent royalty should be enhanced. Intellectual property should receive more recognition by enhancing the royalty." The Senate amendments suggested a period of four years of exclusivity, and an increase in the royalty from 4 per cent to 14 per cent.

The second principle that the bill addresses relates to the promotion of R&D, that is, an increase in research and development with the consequent jobs. In the text of Bill C-22 you do not find much mention about research and development.

● (1530)

We find that under the old régime, which has been in effect since the 1969 amendments that removed exclusivity, drug companies were spending a little under 5 per cent of their sales on research in Canada. That was done both before and after 1969, so there was a period in which research was conducted, even though there was no guarantee of exclusivity. That is understandable, because a patent is a wasting asset, and a pharmaceutical patent, of course, is also a wasting asset. Some other person can come along and through different formulations change therapeutic values or therapeutic results. Anybody in business, therefore, recognizing that he has a wasting asset, does something to protect it. The way to protect it is to get into research and develop something that is better, new or different. So, the pharmaceutical industry patentholders said, "We would like to have a significant period of exclusivity. What we will do for you is this: We will increase the amount of money we spend on research. We have been spending a little less than 5 per cent, and we will undertake by 1996 to spend 10 per cent of sales on research. We, the industry, say that that is a quid pro quo. You give us ten years of exclusivity and we will give you, in ten years, 10 per cent of our sales dedicated to clinical and basic research in the pharmaceutical and medical industries of Canada."

The Special Senate Committee on Bill C-22 did not take the same approach. The amendments said, "We are going to set up a royalty fund. From this royalty fund people in research can secure or draw down moneys that will be spent on research." That was the provision contained in the amendments of the Senate.

The next of the principles was to improve the health care of Canadians. Nobody has ever suggested that pharmaceutical patentholders have denied Canadians the advantages of new drugs just because they did not have a right of exclusivity with regard to their patents. None of the evidence that we saw—and there was a great deal of it—indicated that. However, the government said, "We believe that with the period of exclusivity, pharmaceutical patentholders, by putting more money into research, will find drugs that will alleviate some of the health problems that are bothering Canadians." That may prove to be the case.

The Senate amendments did not deal with it in that way. They maintained that health care of Canadians is best looked after by keeping the costs related to it under control. What the Senate had in mind was this: We will get the best health care by keeping the costs down, thus helping government drug plans, insurance companies and individuals, because they will have to pay less, will spend more, and will look after their health in that way.

Bill C-22 addressed the fine chemical industry, but did so in a strange way. The fine chemical industry of Canada has made the point time without number that nowhere in the world is there a strong pharmaceutical industry, in an innovative or clinical sense, that does not have a strong fine chemical industry. When this matter was first dealt with in 1986, the projected bill, which was never introduced, indicated that the government would provide a big window of opportunity to the fine chemical industry of Canada. The government said this: "If you are a fine chemical manufacturer and you produce source ingredients for drugs, we will only extend exclusivity beyond two years, if the patentholder will source the drugs in Canada." "Oh," said the pharmaceutical industry, "that is terrible. We are vertically integrated. We have transfer pricing. We have advantages. We make our drugs in India or in Bulgaria or in the United States. We can transfer price and we can take advantage of scale and everything else, so please don't do that. Change it." The government did change it, and along came Bill C-22 late last year. What did it do for the fine chemical industry? It did not put any onus upon the patentholder, it put an onus upon the generic industry. It reversed the onus. Through it the government said, "We will give you exclusivity for ten years. If, however, the generics can prove that they can source in Canada, that exclusivity will cover seven instead of ten years." That constitutes quite a marked change between the bill as it was first proposed and the bill as it was introduced in the House of Commons.

In the sketching of this background senators can see that there is a marked differentiation between the approach of the government and the approach of the Senate, the latter of which, in large measure, reflected the findings of the Eastman Royal Commission. That commission said two things: "We believe, based on the evidence we have heard"—and they heard a great deal of it, too—"that a period of four years of exclusivity will enable a patentholder to establish his innovative drug in the market." Evidence before that royal commission proved that on average R&D would be recovered by a pharmaceutical patentholder in approximately two and a half years. I admit that that is an average, and that obviously some people will not recover their R&D costs in two and a half years. The Commissioner of Patents in Canada came to the conclusion that a reasonable charge for a licence to produce a drug to compete with a patentholder was 4 per cent. I will not say he was wrong, but a lot of people thought he was, and the Special Committee of the Senate felt that some upping of the royalty rate was justified.

• (1540)

In any event, there are these two juxtapositions. Why do we have these juxtapositions? The Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee was fortunate in having synthesized a very great deal of testimony: testimony before commissions, testimony before committees of the House of Commons, arguments in the House of Commons, testimony before the Special Committee of the Senate, and so on. From that synthesis it was obvious that there was a great juxtaposition of understanding and positions.

Atlantic Canada spoke with one voice. The four provinces said, "Bill C-22, as passed by the House of Commons, is bad legislation. Get rid of it." That came from Atlantic Canada, without a dissenting voice. Ontario said—as did Manitoba,

British Columbia and the Territories—"This is bad legislation. Bill C-22 is wrong. Change it. Get rid of it."

On the other side, there was Quebec and also two western provinces, namely, Saskatchewan and Alberta. But the large majority of provincial governments in this country were against the bill.

In favour of the bill were the universities, the pharmacology and medical research people. Why were they in favour of it? Because they thought they were going to get some money. All of us know that there are two groups of people who can spend any given amount of money: engineers and researchers. Once you say, "Here is some money," they say, "Give it to us; we can spend it"—and they always say they will spend it wisely. Perhaps they will. I happen to believe that research is a good thing, a necessary thing, and should be encouraged; but I also believe that it has to be controlled.

In any event, along came organized labour, in general—not completely—and they said, "We don't like this bill. Change it. Get rid of it. We are afraid of these pharmaceutical companies. We are afraid they will take advantage of us with prices." That is what they said; that was their evidence.

Coalitions of the elderly and the poor also said, "This is bad legislation. There is no assurance in this legislation to protect us from these pharmaceutical companies. We want protection. We are afraid. We are left to the mercy of multinational corporations." Multinational corporations are no different from national corporations, and by calling them "multinational" means only that some of the profits leave our country—that's all. But their dedication is no different from the dedication of the national companies—and that is to make money and to stay in business. That is what they are there for.

In any event, this juxtaposition was there. The large majority of people who appeared before the committee represented the large majority of Canadians who were against the bill. But the knowledgeable pharmaceutical people said, "We like it, because it is going to assist research. We think that you should pass this kind of legislation. We think, also, that you have to have some certainty." For that reason those people were in favour of a longer period of certainty once a patent was issued.

The committee was asked to see if there was some way to work out reasonable accommodation between those juxtapositions, as they applied to the government bill and the Senate bill: "See if you can come up with a reasonable accommodation, a reasonable compromise." So the committee turned its mind to that task, and there came before it such witnesses as the generic drug people. The committee put to them the question, "Are you prepared to compromise?" They, of course, had said, "There should not be any period of exclusivity. However, we would go along with the Eastman report." We said, "No, we want something else; give us something else." So they said, "Very well, we will offer four years' exclusivity and then sourcing within Canada, and seven years' exclusivity for importation." In other words, they moved the ten years back to seven and the seven years back to four. That was their suggestion.

[Senator Sinclair.]

We asked the Consumers Association of Canada, "Are you prepared to advance some compromise, some accommodation, between these two positions?" They said, "Well, yes, we understand your task, we understand the problem, we understand that some give, some accommodation, would be a reasonable thing; so, we would suggest a shorter period than ten years, but a greater period than the four years put forward by the Senate." They also said, "We would be prepared to consider some additional royalty charge," but they said, "We feel it is essential to put in the bill a sunset clause rather than a review clause."

As honourable senators know, there are review periods set forth in Bill C-22. One is that there will be a cabinet review after four years and a parliamentary review after nine years. The Consumers Association said, "Uh, uh, don't have it as a review, have it as a sunset. Have the legislation come to an end. Make it start again." That is quite a definitive thing. That was their view, anyhow.

The Canadian Cancer Society also believed that it was essential to have a review changed to a sunset clause. It felt that if it were a sunset clause it would give some protection. They did not think that a review clause would do that.

● (1550)

The PMAC, which represents the patent drug industry, said, "No, we are not prepared to compromise." When the PMAC was asked whether it would advance a compromise as an alternative to losing the bill altogether, their position was that they would not answer the question. It is in the evidence. The minister came along and he said that he would not compromise the principles of the bill, and that he would not deal with the period of exclusivity other than in terms of a ten-year period.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May I interrupt the honourable senator?

Senator Sinclair: Certainly.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on behalf of the Senate and the Internal Economy Committee, the Speaker of the Senate has agreed to a request by Her Excellency the Governor General to have the Order of Canada ceremony take place in the Senate chamber. Repairs at Rideau Hall preclude her from holding the proceedings for the next one, two or three occasions this year there. The event will take place at 6 o'clock this evening.

In any event, the result of our agreeing to that request is that Senator Doody and I were informed by Black Rod that to hold the Order of Canada proceedings here will require the removal of some seats as well as other temporary arrangements. Black Rod indicated that he could have the Senate chamber ready for these proceedings if he could begin at 4 o'clock. Obviously, Senator Doody and I made no firm commitment on behalf of the Senate, but we did state that we would try to make it possible for Black Rod to implement the necessary preparations that go with agreeing to the request of Her Excellency.

I mention this to the Senate now. If Senator Sinclair wishes to adjourn his debate and continue tomorrow, fine. If he wishes to continue now, I shall not press him. I can understand that we all want to do our business.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, this creates a problem for me. I am leaving tomorrow to meet a commitment in Halifax. I also have a commitment to the Senate to complete my comments on my inquiry about the Billy Bishop controversy. I shall need five minutes at most, and I would like to complete my remarks. I do not think we should interfere with the business of the chamber.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I am quite prepared to stand down and adjourn the debate. When the Senate has agreed to a request to make the chamber available, and our leaders have had discussions to that effect, I think it would be rude, if nothing else, if we do not accede to that request. I would be very happy to stand down and start again tomorrow, whenever it is appropriate.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it seems to me that permission through the Speaker and the Internal Economy Committee has indeed been given for the Order of Canada ceremony to take place in this chamber this evening. However, I would hesitate to give the appearance that the government feels that this legislation is sufficiently unimportant to be delayed for another day, another week, another year, or, more accurately, another six months. I realize that we face an exceptional set of circumstances, but I would like to have some reasonable assurance that we will deal with this matter expeditiously tomorrow.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I shall carry on and try to take the Senate through the events, as I have been doing. I am not a fast speaker, as you know, so I may be a little while.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, it seems to me that we should get some indication from the opposition as to when it foresees that this debate will be concluded. I am supposed to speak. I do not know whether the Leader of the Opposition intends to speak, but I know that we did not proceed with the debate yesterday to accommodate him, because he was not ready. I would like to know if it is the intention of the opposition to terminate this debate tomorrow and to dispose of the bill one way or another. It seems to me that we should get an assurance or, at least, an indication of what will happen, or perhaps the situation is to remain the same as it has been for the past seven months.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, if because I drew the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Order of Canada ceremony is taking place here this evening and related it to the length of our sitting today means that I am to give some undertaking as to when the debate on Bill C-22 will finish, I can see no such connection, and I withdraw my comments. If the impression is that the opposition is asking that the debate stop now so that the debate can be delayed, which is not the case, then we can forget it. We can go on. I hope that all senators who wish to speak on the debate will be given an opportunity to speak, and I can tell you that we will not be searching for senators to speak, and that there will be no filibuster.

Senator Flynn: Huh!

Senator Frith: I am trying to answer Senator Flynn's question, and all I get is a senatorial snort!

Senator Flynn: If only you could come across with some frankness, for once!

Senator Frith: Forget the whole thing!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I hope I did not give the impression that I was trying to place some limitations, restrictions or conditions on giving permission for the Senate to vacate the chamber for the ceremony. That was not my intention at all. I simply felt that it would be inappropriate to leave this afternoon without going on record as saying that the government feels that this legislation is important, and that it should be dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

Senator Frith: I do not quarrel with that at all.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, what am I to do now? Am I to continue?

Senator Doody: I think you have done it.

Senator Flynn: On division!

Senator Doody: With regard to Senator Marshall's request, I have no objection to his taking up five or six minutes, if it is all right with the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, there is a motion on the floor by the Honourable Senator Sinclair that the debate be adjourned in his name. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: On division!

On motion of Senator Sinclair, debate adjourned, on division.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM ENTITLED "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—PUBLIC
RESPONSE TO PETITION—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the response of Canadians to a petition mailed out, calling upon Parliament to urge the government to act on the motion dealing with the production of the NFB film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss".—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, as I indicated, I shall be brief. I want to speak again today on the matter of the National Film Board production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". I indicated yesterday in the chamber the number of replies I had received to my petition of late August. There were 12,617 actual signatures from individuals who urged me very strongly to carry on with my examination of this situation. That was as of October 22.

• (1600)

I also indicated that I had signatures from various veterans associations across the country which totalled 49,650, and although I did not count them today, I think that figure is now well over 50,000.

Therefore, as of October 27, the count is now 13,342 signatures, which is an increase of 725.

Today I want to tell you something of the technical considerations of the film's implicit conclusion that instead of carrying out his dawn raid behind enemy lines on June 2, 1917, Billy Bishop landed his aircraft, shot holes in it, and then returned to his home airfield to claim victory over three enemy fighters. I want to examine that possibility, and the reason I want to examine it is because it begs questions. In pursuit of that examination I want to refer to a letter from Mr. R.W. Bradford, the Associate Director of the National Aviation Museum, dated October 15, 1987. Mr. Bradford represents also the National Museums of Canada and the National Museum of Science and Technology. He says, and I quote:

My main concern is regarding the film's suggestion that Billy Bishop landed his Nieuport 17, removed the Lewis machine gun mounted on the upper wing and fired a number of rounds into the tail assembly of his aircraft . . . I would like to comment on three things:

- 1) technicalities of landing this type of aircraft and taking off again without assistance;
- 2) the damage suffered by the aircraft as reported by his Flight Commander; and
- 3) the question of the missing gun.

On the first point . . . we have flown our Nieuport 17 . . . in Canada over a period of 15 years. The aircraft has an original 110/120 H.P. rotary engine . . . and has no braking system . . . Bishop or any other competent pilot could land the Nieuport 17 on reasonable ground conditions and very quickly bring it to a halt simply by depressing the "blip" switch on the control column (which cuts the electrical circuit to the spark plugs . . . while keeping the control column fully back . . . which causes the tail skid . . . to be held on the ground . . .

Honourable senators, this is technical detail, but it explains a great deal, and shoots holes in the evidence of the producer of the film. Mr. Bradford continues:

Now, let's look at the real problem . . . the characteristics of all early rotary engines,—they have a high idling speed . . . They simply do not "tick over" . . . in fact . . . they idle at about 45% full engine speed (500 r.p.m. as against 1150 r.p.m. for take-off . . . this compared with the average modern light aircraft . . . idling speed of 600-650 r.p.m. against approx. 2700 r.p.m. at full take-off power!) . . . if the pilot of a rotary engined fighter lands and there is no one to assist . . . Does he:

[Senator Frith.]

a) shut down the engine . . . and hope that he can start it . . .

—again—

he must bear in mind that if it should start again, there would be a sudden surge of 45% full power while he frantically tries to run around the wing tip and get into the cockpit before the machine jumps makeshift wheel chocks . . . and gets away or flips over on its nose;

b) does he leave the engine running and . . . get out of the aircraft and hope that . . . the aircraft does not roll ahead and probably stand on its nose breaking the propeller. (Remember . . . there is a good chance that the tail will rise and a nose-over or runaway aircraft in rough ground is quite likely.) The whole idea . . . is, to me, ridiculous.

. . . it was not uncommon for pilots to land an aircraft on suitable ground during WWI, particularly, if they wanted to land near an enemy aircraft they had forced down . . .

There is no question that Hollywood stunt pilots would find a way to do it alone . . . but we are talking about the reality of uncertain terrain in war time conditions.

On the second point, the damage to Billy Bishop's aircraft was . . . 17 bullet holes, trailing edge of lower plane shot away in two bays . . . The fabric just ahead of the trailing edge undoubtedly began to shred after a concentrated burst and, subsequently, began to peel back to the trailing edge of the wing.

There have been suggestions by people who lack knowledge about such things that if the aircraft had been shot up to that extent in the morning, then it could not have been flown by Bishop later that day. This is a totally false statement. Had our own Nieuport 17 suffered such damage, we could have it in the air again within a few hours . . . The technique we would use would be the same as in WWI. The mechanics of the time were used to this kind of problem . . .

On the third point, I am intrigued by the suggestion that any pilot would fire a machine gun into . . . a WWI aircraft before flying it again . . . can you imagine anyone doing that? The chance of severing some vital member is quite real. If he did that, his next take-off would be his last. On the question of the missing Lewis machine gun, there are several possibilities. The Lewis machine gun . . . can be swung down into a muzzle-high position . . . by the simple action of pulling a cable release . . . and pulling the butt downward to put it in a position for the removal of the empty cartridge drum and replacing it with a full drum . . . the gun may have jammed in that position interfering with his vision and . . . being in a useless position causing nothing but aerodynamic drag. It would be a simple matter to loosen the thumb screw on the main clamp, unscrew the Bowden cable and throw the gun overboard . . .

That is the evidence of Mr. Robert Bradford in a letter to me dated October 15, 1987. It certainly puts 17 holes or more into the evidence of Mr. Paul Cowan, the producer of the film, and I think that should be on the record, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 29, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

PRIVATE BILL

COOPERANTS, MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY—FIRST READING

Hon. Michel Cogger presented Bill S-14, to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the Province of Quebec.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time, honourable senators?

On motion of Senator Cogger, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, November 3, 1987.

[English]

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SIXTH, SEVENTH AND EIGHTH REPORTS OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDICES

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Nurgitz, joint chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, I have the honour to present the committee's Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Reports.

I ask that these reports be printed as appendices to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and that they form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of Sixth Report, see Appendix "A", p. 2105. For text of Seventh Report, see Appendix "B", p. 2109. For text of Eighth Report, see Appendix "C", p. 2115.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these reports be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Cogger, for Senator Nurgitz, reports placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

FORUM IN SASKATOON, OCTOBER 25-28, 1987—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, November 3, 1987 I shall call the attention of the Senate to the forum on post-secondary education held in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, from October 25 to October 28, 1987.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 3, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in view of the fact that we have been stressing the importance of dealing with Bill C-22, and following discussion with our friends across the way agreement has been reached on trying to move this item forward as quickly as we can. I ask leave to have Order No. 3 dealt with as the first Order of the Day so that the Senate can deal with it as the first item.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS ADOPTED

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 3:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Motion and Message relating to certain amendments to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto), presented in the Senate on 21st October, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Sinclair).

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, when this order was adjourned yesterday I had been talking about the work of the committee in attempting to evolve a compromise from the evidence of witnesses and from material that we had been working with. I had dealt with the question of the length of time of exclusivity, and you will recall that while the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Drug Manufacturers' Association and the Fine Chemical Manufacturers' Association all had some suggestions with respect to compromise, the patent holders, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association of Canada as they are known, and the minister felt that they would have to hold to the position which they had taken, namely, with ten years' exclusivity against others being given a licence to manufacture and sell generic drugs.

The next issue that the committee looked at was promotion of research and development. With respect to this subject, the Consumers' Association emphasized that the pharmaceutical industry—in other words, the patent holders—believed that they were committed to significantly increasing the amount spent on research, and yesterday I indicated that that would be from 5 to 10 per cent of sales over the period until 1996. The Consumers' Association of Canada said that since the pharmaceutical industry was committed there was no reason why that commitment should not be put in legislative form. In other words, a guarantee by statute. As all of us know, commitments given in good faith are sometimes not honoured, for whatever reasons. So where there is a legislative requirement, coupled with a sanction, the chances of commitments being lived up to are very much greater.

● (1410)

The Consumers' Association even went so far as to say that they believed there should be an absolute sunset clause. I discussed sunset clauses yesterday. The Consumers' Association felt that the undertaking to have a review by cabinet after four years was too wishy-washy and too indefinite for them to support.

The CDMA, who are the generic drug manufacturers, said that they have no particular compromises to advance with regard to R&D. They do not have to. If we accept their position and support generic drugs, R&D will automatically follow at an enhanced pace. Looking at the studies made by the OECD and other organizations, they have proved that when there was a vibrant fine chemical and generic organization, much research was done.

The PMAC, the pharmaceutical companies, said that they had looked at the bill and after four years—they were not too precise about the meaning of the word "after", but on questioning said "in" four years—they expected cabinet to look at how they had acted as an industry. If they had not done the things they said they were going to do as an industry, they thought they could look forward to very "unfavourable" results. On this point the minister took the same position.

With regard to consumer protection, the Consumers' Association, again looking to see if there was a compromise here, made two suggestions. They felt that it was absolutely essential that some action be taken in this regard. They were rather draconian in their suggestion, I must say. They said that if there was a finding that a company was charging an excessive price for a drug, they should lose their exclusivity for all drugs. That was only a suggestion.

The Consumers' Association did not have a suggestion with regard to entry pricing, but they were concerned about it. They said that the statute was not definitive on price increases.

The PMAC said:

In the future, annual price increases will be limited to the Consumer Price Index and new product prices will be regulated to assure that they are not excessive in relation to the established prices of competing products.

That is a very definitive statement made by the patent holders' association in their appearance before the Banking Committee.

With regard to entry pricing, the minister said that in his opinion the statute as it was drawn provided for the Drug Prices Review Board to look at prices of new drugs. Of course, he did recognize that that was after the fact; sometime after the drug was being sold in Canada.

Of all the things that bothered the members of the committee and myself, one was the way the minister waffled when it came to the question of dealing with increases in patent drug prices. I will develop that later, because I think it is critical. But instead of the CPI—I will leave this one thought with you—controlling increases in patented drug prices in the future, in the words of the minister, was "only going to be a target."

Senator Frith: Only going to be a what?

Senator Sinclair: A target, and we all know how many times people miss targets.

Senator Doody: Indeed they do.

Senator Sinclair: The members of the committee were impressed with the representatives of the fine chemical producers. It is not only the patented drug people who have Ph.Ds and people with scientific backgrounds working for them, the fine chemical people also do. The representatives of the fine chemical producers who appeared before the committee were learned and impressive. They suggested a compromise in respect of manufacturing the fine ingredients in Canada, which, as honourable senators know, under Bill C-22 as passed by the House of Commons, gives exclusivity for seven years to the patent holder to bring it in from wherever. But there was a window of opportunity there of three years, ten years to seven years. They suggested that that was not enough, that it should be a window of opportunity of five years—in other words, that the measures of exclusivity would move not as they would under Bill C-22 as passed by the House to ten years and seven years but to seven years and five years.

As you can see, honourable senators, we were not making very much gain in coming up with a compromise. Certainly, the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board was looked upon by the minister as being fundamental; ten years for importation exclusivity for patented drugs was looked upon by the minister as being fundamental, as was the seven years in regard to exclusivity to patent holders in regard to freedom from competition from generics that were sourced in Canada.

The minister said that he could not, and would not, recommend to his colleagues that the fundamental principles of Bill C-22 be altered.

The members of the committee, faced with that, turned their minds to another approach, an approach of leaving the fundamentals there, but seeing whether there was flexibility in other areas that would, in part, allay the fears of the people who had expressed them with sincerity in the many submissions made to the Special Committee of the Senate on the Subject Matter of Bill C-22 and to the committee of the other place. It was the view of the committee that some reasonable compromise in these non-fundamentals was not only possible but was absolutely essential. The first of those that I will turn to is the question of drug prices.

● (1420)

Obviously, when a new drug comes on the market and you have a patent and you are exclusive, you are in a monopoly position. I am sure that all of you who have wished at times to be in a monopoly position, when you were in business, and found out that you were not, recognized the restraints that were on you when you were not in a monopoly position.

Nevertheless, here are monopolists who have been granted a monopoly by this government. They say to themselves, "Now, what can I charge for this?" I can tell you what they will charge. All the traffic can bear. That is the standard for every monopolist.

But the minister says, "Do not worry. If you look at the bill, the Drug Prices Review Board has a right to look at those prices and come to a conclusion that they might be excessive. And if the review board comes to a conclusion that that entry price is excessive, they can take action. I say that it is implicit in the bill that entry prices are within the ambit of control of the Drug Prices Review Board." The committee says, "Fine, Mr. Minister. If it is implicit, as you say, then in order to allay fears let us make it explicit." We have turned our mind to taking what was implicit and making it into something explicit.

Why were we so concerned about making it explicit that the Drug Prices Review Board had the mandate and the power to deal with entry prices? Because, obviously, if you can have an entry price that is high, then you do not have to worry about any restriction on increases for a considerable period of time. In other words, if I come in high enough, I do not have to increase for a number of years, and I can say, "Look at me. I am a patent holder of "X" drug, and I have not increased my prices in five years. I am a good boy; I am helping everyone." But I am sitting on a gold stool all of the time.

An Hon. Senator: Explain!

Senator Sinclair: The honourable senator asks me to explain "sitting on a gold stool." He has done it, so I do not have to explain it again.

So, in the committee we decided to look at various ways that we could deal with entry pricing. We came to the conclusion that because of constitutional law we were dealing with a delicate area and great care had to be exercised. The minister highlighted that when he said, "I don't think you can give authority to a review board to fix prices." Obviously, we know that price reviews, price-fixing, is a matter within provincial jurisdiction. However, you can deal with this in a different way by coupling what you are doing to something that is within your jurisdiction. In other words, deal with something that is clearly within federal jurisdiction, namely, patents.

[Senator Sinclair.]

The committee decided that they would accept the opinion of the Department of Justice. It was decided that to deal with this we would tie entry pricing to patent exclusivity and the exemptions from the impact within Canada of the compulsory licence. That is precisely what our amendments do in regard to this issue.

With these amendments we have met the constitutional challenge. We have assisted the minister by giving him a bill that would let him have explicit authority to allow his creature, this review board, to do explicitly what he had only given it implicitly.

We next turned our attention to the point of increases in drug prices during the period of exclusivity. Although I could recite many quotations, perhaps it is appropriate at this time to quote to you, honourable senators, two statements made by the honourable minister. On August 21, 1987, at page 8277 of the House of Commons Debates, he stated:

This package, Bill C-22, provides consumer protection . . . It provides that drugs will not increase more than the cost of living.

Later on the same day, at page 8282 of the House of Commons Debates, he said:

Under our scheme the Drug Prices Review Board will be examining those drugs . . .

That is, the patent drugs—

. . . and keeping the price increases of them at less than the cost of living.

He made further similar statements, but when he appeared before the committee he said, "Well, really, what I had in mind was not that I was going to deal with patent drugs individually, I was going to deal with averages." He went out of his way, by looking at what had happened over the last number of years, to say, "If my legislation were in effect, the people of Canada would have saved some hundreds of millions of dollars," and he quoted a figure. We decided to consider how he arrived at that figure. Would you be surprised if I told you that that figure was not based on patent drugs? That figure was based on prescribed drugs, both single source and multi-source. Obviously, honourable senators, with generic drugs, over time, selling at 50 per cent of the value of the price of patent drugs he was going to come out with a lower figure.

I am not saying that the minister—and I am not going to say "deliberately"—tried to mislead us with that statistical work. I will say that whoever was giving him information did not explain it to him very well.

● (1430)

The committee strongly believes that the patentee's prices must not be allowed to increase faster than the increase in the consumer price index. To have that happen and to codify what the minister has told the House of Commons requires amendment, and that is what we have done in the amendments dealing with increased drug prices. With those amendments, price increases of patent drugs cannot increase more than—they can increase less than but not more than—the consumer price index. But we were not quite as draconian in the sanctions we proposed as was the Consumers' Association. If there was a complaint and a finding that a patent drug had gone above the CPI in its increase, we said, "Okay, give the board authority to take away the exclusivity in respect of that drug or another drug with respect to which exclusivity was operating." Honourable senators, surely nothing could be more reasonable than that.

Now we come to research and development. It is difficult for me to say that a fine company like Squibb or Upjohn would not carry out what it said it was going to do, and I am not saying that. However, the basic commitments for R&D expenditures, the basic commitments that are so important to the pharmaceutical industries of Quebec and Ontario, are not commitments made company by company. They are commitments made by an association without assets. The only assets it has are furniture and a heavy purse with which to conduct lobbies, as we have seen.

Certainly, the Senate is interested in supporting moneys being spent to enhance high tech research and to make sure that jobs in these areas are available. Certainly, if we are to give exclusivity for ten years, and have done that by getting a quid pro quo—the 10 per cent of sales committed to clinical and basic research in Canada—that is an indication of interest. What we are suggesting here is to make certain that nobody is caught by surprise. The minister has suggested, "Leave it loose; leave it to cabinet to decide whether it wants to accept something." We say, "No. Jobs in Quebec, Ontario and other places are too important to be left to cabinet discretion when it is possible to put it into a statute."

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Sinclair: That is what we are saying here: "Strengthen this, Mr. Minister. We accept what you say, but strengthen it by making it legislative."

Let me again quote the minister on this issue. He said:

Under our proposal we have a commitment . . . for 10 per cent of sales to go into research and development, which is the international norm for this industry.

That was said on August 21, 1987, and appears in the House of Commons Debates at pages 8280 and 8281. At another time in the House of Commons what did the minister say, dealing with R&D? He said—and watch this:

The commitment is worded so that 10 per cent of sales will be invested in research and development.

Honourable senators, yesterday reference was made to a letter of the minister in which he referred to the commitment in Bill C-22 on R&D. Honourable senators, there are no commitments in Bill C-22 as passed by the House of Commons dealing with R&D—not one commitment. The only thing that is there is a review after four years by cabinet and after nine years by Parliament.

So our committee turned its mind to this problem to see whether there was any reason why those kinds of commitments could not be put into legislative form, because we anticipated from some remarks made by the minister that he might feel that if a patent was conditional upon spending on research it would possibly abridge the Paris Convention dealing with intellectual property.

So we considered that, and, taking our cue from the minister in the way he handled prices, we decided that we could apply the same technique with regard to R&D—that is, by not making R&D related to the granting of a patent but by making the commitment of R&D relative to the exclusivity, relative to the restriction on the compulsory licensee; and that is what we have done.

The minister said to the committee, "You know, I do not like arithmetical tests. I like judgmental tests." The trouble with that is that 10 per cent of sales results in a number. The minister does not seem to remember that 10 per cent of X gives you a number. He also said, "You know, I want this committee to understand how fair I am, and how much I am concerned about fairness, and I would hate, with the numerical test, to have some poor company whose sales had fallen off to lose something, to lose some of its rights that it got for exclusivity, because it did not carry out its commitment of 10 per cent." What the minister forgot was that if sales went down because the company got into some kind of trouble, then so would its commitment go down. That is one of the advantages of having the kind of formula we have put in statutory form.

● (1440)

I now wish to deal with one other matter, and it is sometimes referred to as "retroactivity." One of the great things about being in the Senate is that you learn things. I have learned that since the days when I practised law there has evolved a distinction between "retroactive" statutes and "retrospective" statutes. So, I looked up the great book on drafting which, I am happy to say, was authored by an old friend of mine, Elmer Driedger, when he was with the Department of Justice. I found something in there that gives me a great deal of comfort, and I would like to read it:

Retrospective laws are no doubt prima facie of questionable policy and contrary to the general principle that legislation by which the conduct of mankind is to be regulated ought, when introduced for the first time, to deal with future acts and ought not to change the character of past transactions carried on upon the faith of the then existing law.

Why prima facie? Because every once in a while a statute gives somebody something without taking anything away. In those kinds of cases retrospective legislation is fine. But to tell you how careful you have to be the minister said, "I have an opinion from the Department of Justice that Bill C-22 is not retroactive." Of course, it is not. What it is is retrospective with respect to the dates upon which exclusivity is being made retroactive to a date set out in the statute. The statute itself is not retroactive, but the effect of the retrospective application is to affect rights retroactively. Certainly, nothing can be more unfair, particularly when you take away a right granted under the law and give it to a competitor, as does this bill, without compensation.

Now, if honourable senators do not think that there was a right of action, or the abridgement of a right, let me draw your attention to the fact that the bill specifically bars you from getting damages when your right is taken away and given to your competitor without compensation. Proposed subsection 41.26(4) reads:

No action or proceedings for any compensation or damages lies against Her Majesty in right of Canada as a result of the application of subsection 41.11(1) or 41.14(1) to a licence referred to in that subsection.

In other words, even though you have a compulsory licence, even though you have an application for notice of compliance, even though you are in the process, even though you are selling the drug, even though it is being sold in pharmacies in Oakville, in Ottawa, in Goobies, Newfoundland, and in Whonnock, British Columbia, even though it is being sold everywhere—you get nothing back. Nor can you sue the province.

Senator Frith: And you have to take it off the shelf.

Senator Sinclair: Yes, you have to take it off the shelf. I do not know what you do with it when you take it off the shelf. Maybe you send it to Pakistan.

Let me give another example. It can be found in clause 32 of the bill. It is a rather remarkable thing. By this clause a particular drug has been singled out for special statutory provisions. When we went into the matter we found a unique situation had developed with regard to a drug that was developed and formulated in Japan. The drug was brought into Canada to treat hypertension. It was found that by changing the formulations and doing other clinical work, largely in Montreal, the drug could be applied effectively against angina. Is this not a very wonderful thing? Everybody said, "Yes, and we will put something special in the bill to take care of it. But because it will affect existing rights we had better be careful that we do not get sued." So, they put in the same kind of provision which statutorily bars actions against the Crown. What did the minister have to say about that? Honourable senators, he shocked us all, even his colleagues, when he said that it is there because they did not want anybody to make the mistake of suing the government and spending money. That is why it is there, just to help everybody out.

Honourable senators, there is no justification, as the Honourable Sinclair Stevens once said, for ever passing a law that takes away rights without compensation. That minister said, "This government will not change the rules in the middle of the game. That is one of our tenets." The minister responsible for this bill, the Honourable Harvie Andre, says that this is life. It is like a change in the Income Tax Act in the sense that notice is given, and once notice is given the particular date becomes operative. The minister went on to say that these people knew way back in June 1986 that the government was going to change the law, that the government had a proposed bill, and these people should have governed themselves accordingly. He said that it is part of our law that once notice is given we can take away rights. However, we pointed out to the minister that under our parliamentary procedure for such action to apply it requires a notice of ways and means motion, introduced in Parliament, to effectively fix the date. Upon asking whether he had introduced a ways and means motion in regard to the retrospective application of this bill, he said no.

Senator Flynn: Lord, have mercy!

Senator Sinclair: As we said in our report, the fact that rights are being taken away from Canadians, that rights are being trampled upon, that rights are being extinguished without compensation, cannot be ignored. It must not be ignored. Accordingly, we are recommending amendments to take care of the matter so that exclusivity will only apply to NOCs coming into effect after the bill is enacted, and so that the retrospective application and the retroactive effect will be eliminated. That is what we have provided. Perhaps, before I leave retroactivity, I can give you a further quote from the minister. This comment was made to the legislative committee, and appears in issue number 16 at pages 85 and 86. There, the minister said:

● (1450)

This bill does not affect any of the drugs currently on the market, so there will be no price consequences of this bill on anything currently on the market.

Honourable senators, that is not so. Mr. Andre was missing the point.

There is one further drafting matter that we dealt with in the report, so I will not spend a great deal of time on it. There was a difference between the English and the French text, which always bothers senators; that kind of thing always bothers people who are careful and precise. However, we have overcome that drafting error by making a small amendment.

I would like to go to one other matter. I have dealt with the message; I have dealt with the principles; I have dealt with the attempt of the committee to come to a compromise on exclusivity and on doing away with the structure of the board, which were matters that were recommended by the Senate Special Committee in its report and adopted by the Senate. Honourable senators, we dropped that amendment and adopted the principles of the bill, as I have said, and strengthened it, as the Senate is required to do when it looks at legislation.

The motion of the Honourable Senator Murray was also referred to the committee. That bothered me, and I wondered what that motion really amounted to. In essence, the honourable senator's motion said that when the House of Commons speaks, the Senate must be silent. That is the essence of that motion.

Honourable senators, I say to you that there is nothing in the constitutional law in support of that allegation; nothing. Therefore, the amendments proposed by the Senate, following upon the recommendations of the Special Committee, were certainly within the ambit of the Senate, certainly within its jurisdiction, and certainly supported by the constitutional authority that exists on behalf of this body, the Senate of Canada.

In any event, in a desperate attempt to, again, find a reasonable, common ground, as we were instructed to do by the Senate, the committee did find, I submit, a reasonable compromise; a reasonable accommodation by accepting the basic principles of the bill and strengthening it by codifying the price implicitness of entry drugs, the absolute of the consumer price index on price increases on patent drugs; by codifying what the patent holders had said they believed the bill to do and what the minister said the bill did. By codifying and legislating equally with regard to the very critical issue of research and development, we coupled that with the patent law and assured the people of Quebec that with these amendments they could look forward to jobs and look forward to a strengthened pharmaceutical industry in their province, and in Ontario. That is what we did.

Honourable senators, in closing, let me quote to you something that may assist us all in deciding what the phrase "end of the day" really means, since that phrase has been bandied about a great deal. Here I am quoting from Sir John A. Macdonald, someone whose reputation is known to us all; someone who is, perhaps, the greatest Conservative that this country has ever had. In referring to the Senate Sir John A. Macdonald summed it up so well when he said:

It is only valuable as being a regulating body, calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch, and preventing any hasty or ill-considered legislation which may come from that body, but it will never set itself against the deliberate and understood wishes of the people.

Honourable senators, the understood wishes of the people are easy to determine in this case. They are in the evidence that was synthesized for us. There is no mandate given to pass this bill.

I therefore move, honourable senators, that the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, containing several recommendations and two messages, be now adopted.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I thought that the Leader of the Opposition would state the position of the Liberal majority here in the Senate. I suppose it is implicit in his silence that Senator Sinclair has said all that can be said. Of course, it is very difficult to have the Leader of the Opposition pronounce on anything in a straight and clear fashion. When he decides that he will not speak, he does not whatever happens, and we can only assume that he is taking a given position.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, in that case I will express my point of view and, I hope, that of honourable senators sitting near me.

I listened with interest to the long and laborious speech by Senator Sinclair in which he commented on the report of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I noticed that his copy of the report had a red cover, very appropriate in the circumstances, because when he spoke on behalf of the committee, he was speaking exclusively for the Liberal majority on the committee. He did not bother to mention that, in every respect, the positions expressed in this report were exclusively those of the Liberal majority.

And now for my second preliminary comment. To hear Senator Sinclair, one would think we were at the second reading stage or were considering a bill after preliminary consideration in committee, not a bill that had been discussed for quite some time in this chamber.

Senator Sinclair made no mention of the fact that the bill had been considered in this chamber since April 8, which means for seven months. He mentioned only implicitly, a favourite phrase of his, that the bill had been examined previously by another committee. His report was the second report on the same subject, something that never happened before in the Senate.

However, I will get back to that later, and now I would like to start by looking at the recommendations in Senator Sinclair's report.

Implicitly, I know he likes that word, Senator Sinclair's report constitutes an about-face, compared with the report by the special committee. The report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Subject Matter of Bill C-22 asked for a four-year period of exclusivity, without controls, without a review board. In fact, it was the camouflaged status quo recommended in the first report. The House of Commons said no. Senator Sinclair's committee—I think we can say it is his committee, because after seeing him chair the committee, one realized it was his committee and not anybody else's, and that he would not tolerate any interruptions or digressions that he considered to be entirely beside the point. In his report, the concept changes. The recommendation is for a period of exclusivity of ten years, with monitoring. The bill is given a new effective date. The report accepts the review board but restricts its discretionary powers. It is a whole new approach. The Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has defined a whole new policy in its report.

Now let us see what it all boils down to. As far as the question of retroactivity was concerned, the senator was almost ecstatic about the effects of retroactivity. Many of our statutes—and not just tax laws—have effective dates that predate the date of proclamation. That is nothing new. The senator wanted this to be legitimate only in the case of a Motion of Ways and Means. However, the difference between tabling a Motion of Ways and Means and a bill is practically nil.

• (1500)

Then the senator was upset because the bill provided there could be no recourse against the consequences of the bill's coming into force on the agreed date. Doesn't the senator realize that on the proclamation date, when the bill becomes law, the consequences will be similar for all those who are engaged in research? The senator did not even think about amending the law to repeal this provision concerning possible recourse. The coming into force of a law at any time can affect—and in this case will affect—the rights in much the same way as certain rights may be affected as of the date provided in the legislation. The senator made a mountain of a molehill. He might again quote Mr. Driedger. I would suggest he read not only the quotation but the rest of the book as well. This might stir his memory of his student days and his first years as a lawyer, and he will gain better understanding of what it is all about when he refers to the effects of retroactivity.

The second amendment proposed is important and has to do with fixing drug prices, and the senator has made a number of comments on the constitutionality of this provision. One can rest assured that the bill as drafted provides a link between fixing the price and maintaining the ten-year exclusivity. All the amendments do is limit the discretion of the review board and may quite simply scare off corporate investors. Without the proposed amendments, the bill empowers the board to suspend the patent. But here the amendment forces the review board to do just that regardless of the extent, if you will, of the offence or of the company's failure to comply with review board instructions. They want the board to be forced to remove exclusivity. It is bad legislation which does not leave any discretion at all. Indeed it is the same flaw in cases where the patent has to be suspended because a company is deemed to have failed to make the promised investments. Let us suppose a company has promised to invest $1 million and, according to the review board, it has invested only $950,000, for good reasons. The board, in keeping with the recommendations of Senator Sinclair—because in fact he is the one who made all these recommendations, and I hope he will be given copyrights with respect to this report—has to cancel the patent in such a case. There is no excuse possible. The review board has to suspend the patent.

You are taking away this discretion from the board and forcing it to make an irreversible ruling. The patent is suspended.

In passing, as concerns investments, the major argument raised by Senator Sinclair was that the commitments had been made by an association without any assets. Perhaps he was misinformed, but according to my own information, the commitments were made by the pharmaceutical companies involved. It is on the basis of the specific commitments of each company that the government will review this legislation in four years, and perhaps even before that. Senator Sinclair will probably say that the government is not to be trusted even if his own party is in power by then!

In any case, I shall now conclude my comments on the proposals contained in the report. I think that I have said enough to show that they are neither realistic nor practical.

I now come to the fact that we have been debating this issue for seven months. No one is questioning the powers of the

[Senator Flynn.]

Senate to reject any piece of legislation except in constitutional matters.

However, everything resides in the way that we use these powers. We can do so in a spirit of cooperation. This is ordinarily what happens. Indeed, when the Committee on Transport and Communications examined Bills C-18 and C-15 last summer and wanted to propose some amendments, it discussed the situation with the minister involved. An agreement was made, and the amendments were submitted to the House of Commons and accepted. There was no confrontation. However, in this case, the Senate, or rather the Liberal majority in the Senate, has tried to use its powers in a spirit of confrontation. Even if you do not want to admit it, it still remains that the majority used its powers in a spirit of confrontation and partisanship.

First, there was the refusal to have a pre-study of this bill. Then, there was the creation of a special committee entrusted to known adversaries of the bill, such as Senator Bonnell. We all know what happened. The committee travelled throughout Canada, not to hear the views of the public, but to mobilize the opposition. For instance, the committee heard representatives of the Consumers' Association about ten times, which was redundant. What the committee wanted to hear was that people were afraid of the period of exclusivity as this might result in increased prices for new drugs.

It was not difficult to raise such fears. Once more, as I have already said, if you ask someone if he wants to pay more for his drugs, he will certainly say no. If you ask instead whether he is willing to pay a bit more for better drugs, he will naturally say yes.

• (1510)

The committee came back and what did it recommend? It was against the bill. As I remember, Senator Bonnell, Senator Thériault and Senator Buckwold would not accept any compromise. They were against that bill. In such circumstances, we would have expected the committee to tell us to vote against it.

Instead, with an obvious lack of courage, they moved amendments aimed at preserving the status quo. As you know, actually drugs enjoy exclusive rights for approximately four years without this legislation. So, they suggested that this bill should provide for exclusive rights over a four year period. In such circumstances, there is no need for a review board or for any control. The bottom line is that what has been proposed amounted to the status quo.

When these amendments were rejected by the House of Commons, what could the majority do to save face? This question was referred to Senator Sinclair's committee which should have studied this bill in the first place. I thought Senator Sinclair would be more objective than Senator Bonnell.

He may be at first glance, but not really. There still was a confrontation with the government, but not openly this time, as they avoided taking a direct position against the Bill. They are trying to hamper the government and this is the whole purpose of the report from the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. This way, if a minister rejects the amendments and if the bill dies on the Order Paper, they will be able to say that they are not to blame. They pull the lion's tail saying: I am not the one who pulls it, it is the lion. It is as simple as that.

This is the historical background of Bill C-22 to date. I do not know when we will see the end of this. I hope it will come soon because I suggest that the way the majority proceeded has destroyed the atmosphere in this house. I hope we will come back to the old days when there was more openness in the Senate.

The background of Bill C-22 illustrates the longest filibuster I have ever seen in my 30 years in Parliament. I believe it can even be safely said that the last comparable one goes back to Confederation time. It is a record of time spent to actively debate a bill in this house.

Second, we have also been breaking new grounds by referring a bill to two committees in a row, first the special committee and then our Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Third, it is the less straightforward, I would even say the most hypocritical filibuster I have ever seen because its purpose was to reject the bill. Through their proposals, both committees were simply trying to avoid taking a resolute position against that bill. They did not have the courage of their convictions.

There was another move to exclude senators from Quebec from the process, except Senator Gigantès in the special committee.

During consideration in special committee, senators from Quebec did not take any position, except Senator Gigantès. Senator Gigantès, incidentally, was very cautious. At one time, he wrote to tell us that he would rather see Bill C-22 passed in its initial form than defeated. I do not know where things stand at present, but at any rate that is what he told us. Then, it was an extremely costly filibuster, a waste of time and money. The second committee told us nothing the first committee did not already know. The first committee spent upwards of $300,000. I do not know how much the second committee has cost, but that is beside the point. In any case, it was a waste of time and money.

I would add, it was a pretentious and an ostentatious filibuster. Imagine trying to have the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce establish a different policy on such a complex matter! Senator Sinclair talked about a compromise. The compromise already was there between the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Drug Manufacturers Association.

● (1520)

That compromise was based on the investment commitments made by the various corporations. The compromise the committee was supposed to look for was not the one between the positions of the opposition in the Senate and the government. What was needed was a compromise between the parties to the compromise, that is the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Drug Manufacturers Association.

But Senator Sinclair was aware the minister would not accept any changes. He was aware the manufacturers would not want any changes. At that point, there was no possible compromise. This is what strengthens my point—the committee carried on with the confrontation initiated when the special committee was established and that has been going on ever since. That could be the subject matter of a novel. I could retrace all that transpired, since it is forgotten.

The other day, I was having a second look at the Debates of the Senate from early September, when we were recalled. There was some talk of referring the House of Commons' message to the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I remember the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition at that point, when he expressed his sincere wish for a compromise, for a solution to that problem. Since then, we have seen this cat and mouse game.

Finally, we had the report last week. It is now being discussed. Apparently, we are going to reach a decision. There will remain another chapter, perhaps two. We may possibly have a third committee, I do not know. In any event, on that matter, the confrontation up till now is not in line with the Senate's role.

If actually the bill is as bad as some senators would have it, the Liberal opposition merely had to defeat it.

I see Senator Buckwold saying yes. I think he would have voted it down. He disagrees with the way his party has been acting on this matter. He does not believe there was a genuine quest for a compromise. He and I quite agree on that point. Unfortunately, Senator Buckwold's and Senator Thériault's views were not followed in the circumstances.

However that may be, honourable senators, the message will be sent to the House of Commons. I do not see how the government could accept these amendments which are hypocritically destroying the bill.

We are not dealing here with a major question of principle, but with a very pragmatic one. That a Senate committee should try to define a different policy on the basis of the argument raised by Senator Sinclair, I feel, is to act irresponsibly. I, for one, wish this debate would end as soon as possible. I suppose we will have to be satisfied with the committee report message as drafted being sent to the House of Commons. It will be turned down. As soon as we get the reply from the House of Commons, I hope we will put an end to this disgrace.

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to Honourable Senator Flynn? I wish simply to know how to assess responsibilities as to the delays in the passing of this bill.

Is it not true that at third reading stage, we received Bill C-22 at the very end of June and that not only were we unable to go on holidays, but had to work also during July and August? Normally, we should have been on holidays. Therefore, we could have adjourned in September or October, so that the Liberal opposition would have delayed by two months and not by seven months, as you said, the passing of this bill.

I should like, therefore, to check the sequence of events so that everyone may assume his or her own responsibilities. If this great bill was to create so many jobs, and if it has cost so much both in time and money, why did the Conservative Party not introduce it in 1984, 1985 or 1986? Why introduce it only at the end of June 1987?

We are therefore willing to admit our responsibility for the months of September and October. But since 1984, it is the responsibility of the Conservative Party. I should like to know why Senator Flynn suggested that we had delayed the passing of this bill for a full seven months.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, Senator Murray provided us at one point with the history of this bill. I refer Senator Denis to these data which distinctly shows all the time which the other place has devoted to this bill.

Senator Denis should remember that this bill was introduced in 1986. It was introduced again, I think, when the new session began in the fall of 1986.

Senator Sinclair: Not so!

• (1530)

[English]

No, it was not tabled in 1986.

Senator Flynn: In the house. That is what I was saying.

[Translation]

Senator Denis: I want to know when it was tabled here after third reading in the House of Commons.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I am getting there.

Senator Denis: After the White Paper or the Green Paper!

Senator Flynn: Senator Denis, you should not be upset. What I am deeply interested in is to know your position on this bill. I asked you again yesterday, but we still do not know.

Appointments to the Special Committee on the subject-matter of this bill were made on April 8.

Senator Denis: In other words, the White Paper.

Senator Flynn: We got the bill in June.

Senator Denis: At the end of June.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but the committee was already appointed and operating. The committee submitted a report at the end of June, with recommendations that went beyond the competence of the Senate. The Senate re-examined the bill. We came back in August. Finally, a report was sent to the House of Commons. When we came back at the beginning of September, we received the message from the House of Commons.

The message was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce at the beginning of September. We thought the committee could finish its work in a few weeks. The committee's report was tabled last week and the Senate was not ready to consider it. If this bill wasn't examined in the Senate for seven months, I can't count. The Senate was not sitting but the committee took its own sweet time to do what it had to do. It did not work very hard and it travelled a lot.

[Senator Denis.]

In the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, we went back to square one. Again, if Senator Denis would care to look at the proceedings of the committee's activities, he will agree this is the longest it has ever taken a bill to be passed by the Senate.

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, I may remind you that Senator Denis told the truth!

Senator Flynn: Who?

Senator Denis: Senator Denis told the truth when he said that the bill did not get here until the end of June. We worked during summer recess, but we could have waited until September.

In fact, we had two months to consider this bad bill you refused to improve. We made suggestions. We tried to reach a compromise but you wouldn't cooperate. So it's your baby now, and you will be responsible for the consequences.

Senator Flynn: In any event, if Senator Denis had bothered to work on the committees that were asked to consider this bill, he would be a lot better informed. He would know a lot more about the subject, and he would know what he was talking about.

Senator Denis: They already had Senator Flynn. They didn't need me!

[English]

Senator MacEachen: Question!

Senator Doody: Question!

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Sinclair speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion.

Senator Sinclair: —I am sorry I did not bring to the attention of honourable senators the fact that the report is the report of Liberal senators. I thank Senator Flynn for bringing that to my attention. I apologize. It was there in the report.

Honourable senators, I listened to Senator Flynn and I thought that in light of his experience and knowledge I would have found a sense of accommodation and recognition of a job done here to bring about some kind of reasonable compromise.

Senator Flynn: Sorry.

Senator Sinclair: I am sorry that he did not so do.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and report adopted, on division.

SUPREME COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for the second reading of the Bill C-53, An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Nurgitz reviewed the provisions of this bill. It makes some fundamental changes in the proceedings for appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada. Senator Nurgitz outlined them all. I and my colleagues certainly support the bill, but there are questions that should be considered in committee.

We certainly would not want to support anything that would undermine the importance of the court, or which would jeopardize the laws of fundamental justice, nor would, of course, the Minister of Justice or the court itself. I think the committee should have someone appear before it from the government to give assurances, in general, that there are no such interferences with the laws of fundamental justice, one of the most important of which is the resort to the court as a final court of appeal.

As Senator Nurgitz has stated, oral judgments are not necessary in provincial courts of appeal and, therefore, the argument is that they should not be necessary at the level of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Senator Doody: Oral judgments are not worth the paper they are written on.

Senator Frith: You will bring that up in committee, no doubt.

Senator Doody: I will.

Senator Frith: In any event, no one quarrels with the vital national role which the Supreme Court of Canada has traditionally played. So I do not consider the fact that provincial courts of appeal are not required to pronounce in court their judgments to be a reason for the Supreme Court of Canada not to do so. There are other reasons which we will hear about in committee.

Is there any unintentional diminution of the role of the Supreme Court, and does the fact that the court does not have to give its reasons and pronounce its judgments orally in any undesirable way reduce the important visibility of the Supreme Court of Canada? The Supreme Court of Canada recently—and by that I mean within the last ten years—has attracted the same attention to its judgments as has traditionally the Supreme Court of the United States. My experience has been that for some period of time—at least since I became a lawyer in 1949, which is 38 years—the judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada for many years were largely of interest to lawyers whereas judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States always received wide publicity. I think it is desirable that such publicity be attracted by judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada, because it frequently deals with matters not just of arcane law but with law of important social, economic and, sometimes, cultural dimension.

I also want to consider some of the more detailed aspects of the bill such as the fact that, as I understand it, appeal as of right is maintained on questions of habeas corpus. I think that most desirable, but I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill in enough detail to assure myself that that is so. I believe it is somewhere in those clauses between 11 and 14.

• (1540)

Honourable senators, I want to make just one other reference for the sake of our record, and that is to the August 1987 report of the Canadian Bar Association on the Supreme Court of Canada. The CBA endorsed the provisions of Bill C-53 abolishing certain as-of-right appeals. The CBA viewed “with the utmost concern” the caseload of the court and the length of time required to render judgments. The report noted that the number of judgments rendered annually by the Supreme Court of Canada has decreased significantly, falling from 138 in 1979 to 81 in 1986. Someone checked with the registrar of the court as to the increased number of appeals brought in because of the Charter. The information I received was that the number of appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada has not increased but that the complexity of the cases has. That, therefore, deals with the second branch of the CBA’s position; namely, that the caseload of the court and the more complicated appeals brought to it have resulted in an understandable delay in the length of time required to render a judgment.

The CBA would have gone further than Bill C-53 with respect to leave to appeal. It would have abolished appeals as of right in all civil cases and in all criminal cases, including the denial of habeas corpus. It also would have ended the power of provincial courts of appeal to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, and would have provided that reference cases—that is, cases wherein governments refer a point to the Supreme Court of Canada—also be heard only with leave.

Honourable senators, those are some of the questions that I hope will be examined in committee. Other questions of principle may be raised, but at second reading there is no doubt that we support this bill. Because I know that the Supreme Court itself supports the bill, I am sure that questions I have raised and questions raised by other honourable senators in the course of committee hearings will be answered to our satisfaction. I certainly hope so.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Nurgitz, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, for the second reading of the Bill C-55, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I rise to take part in the debate on Bill C-55, and I wish to express a few of my concerns about this legislation. Before doing so, however, I would like to congratulate Senator Grafstein on the brilliant speech he gave yesterday. He went into the historical background of the Immigration Act and how the policy on immigration and that on refugees has evolved through the past 40 years.

One of the first disappointments I might express about this bill is the lack of any reference to the social significance of sponsored immigration. That reference had been promised to me by Senator Barootes in the course of a debate that took place in March of 1986. At that time we were discussing a bill on refugees, which, incidentally, was also known as Bill C-55. In the course of that debate I said to Senator Barootes that I would like to have reference on a future occasion to the contribution made to our society by sponsored immigration. In the eyes of many people, sponsored immigration is considered not to be as beneficial to Canadian society as immigration through the point system.

In addition to that, I also mention that when in opposition, the Conservatives supported an amendment made by Andrew Brewin, the late member from Greenwood, in the course of debate in 1977 when the Immigration Act, 1976 was proclaimed. The nature of that amendment lies in the fact that Mr. Brewin wanted to expand on the preamble of the act. The preamble read that immigration to Canada should reflect the federal and bilingual nature of Canadian society. Mr. Brewin suggested that the preamble should be amended to read that immigration to Canada should reflect the federal bilingual and multicultural nature of the people of Canada. Honourable senators, that amendment was defeated, although it was supported by the Conservative opposition of that time. Many members of Parliament took part in that debate, and the Conservative members really condemned the then government for not having included in the preamble of the Immigration Act, 1976 a reference to multiculturalism.

I made these views known to Senator Barootes, after which he wrote a letter to the Minister of State responsible for Immigration. This is the way he expressed his views to the minister, the Honourable Walter McLean, P.C. His letter states:

Dear Walter:

I have the honour of sponsoring Bill C-55 through the Senate.

Second reading occurred on Wednesday, March 5, 1986 and the Bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, which Senator Arthur Tremblay chairs, where it should be considered next week. Some pre-study of the Bill was undertaken by that committee on December 3, 1985.

In speaking on Bill C-55 in the Senate, Senator Peter Bosa brought up two areas of concern and asked that I bring them to your attention; not as amendments to Bill C-55 but for consideration in the major rewrite of the Immigration Act contemplated for later this year in response to the Plaut Report and the report of the Legislative Committee of the House of Commons.

These are well expressed in the Debates of the Senate for Wednesday, March 5, 1986, which I enclose for your easy reference.

His first and major concern has, as you know, been voiced before by several groups. It involves the inclusion of "multiculturalism" as an objective of Canadian Immigration Policy in addition to the two aspects of "federalism and bilingualism".

The second concern was in the area of any possible distinction between sponsored immigrants and "landed" immigrants in relationship to the value of their contribution to our country. I am sure that no implied, intended or indirect distinction or discrimination is made between any such categories of immigrants by the government of Canada, either in the Act or in our attitudes, but Senator Bosa suggests a study of the class of sponsored immigrants be undertaken to dispel any mistaken notion, as well as any implied discrimination as to the contribution made between immigrants with various levels of monetary means.

I am pleased to pass this information along to you in the important considerations which you must give to the major revision of the Immigration Act, 1976.

With kindest personal regards,

Yours most sincerely,
E.W. Barootes
Senator

● (1550)

The minister's reply to that letter, dated March 19, 1986, reads as follows:

Dear Senator Barootes:

I am writing in reply to your letter of March 6, concerning Senator Bosa's views regarding immigration and the lack of a reference in the Immigration Act to the multiculturalism and heritage of this country.

While I believe it is not appropriate, and indeed, too late in the day to use the amending process for Bill C-55 to take Senator Bosa's views into account, I do not have any difficulty with the principle. Section 27 of the Constitution makes reference to the multicultural heritage of Canadians and I would think we could find some kind of language to reflect this in the Immigration Act.

I will be pleased to give this issue full consideration in the amending process that deals with the broader reform of the refugee determination system which we hope to introduce in late spring.

That letter was written in 1986. It continues:

As to sponsored immigration, I do not think anything as elaborate as a study is necessary. I will, however, see if our public affairs group can make recommendations on ways and means to enhance the perception of sponsored immigration.

It is signed "Yours sincerely" by Walter F. McLean.

Honourable senators, those were promises that were made during the debate in March 1986, and I am very disappointed that they are not included, as promised, in Bill C-55. That is the bill to which the Honourable Walter McLean referred when he said that in a future bill that amendment would be included.

I ask honourable senators opposite how much credence we can give when a minister of the Crown makes a promise in writing, and it is in the records of the Senate, and the promise is not kept? I repeat that I am very disappointed that it is not included in this bill, and when this matter is referred to committee I intend to propose an amendment.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, there is, however, one area of agreement in Bill C-55. Everyone—government, churches, the Bar, refugee organizations—agrees that this country is long overdue for an overhaul of our refugee determination system. We all recognize that the current system has become a back door for people seeking to avoid normal immigration procedures. We are aware that the anomalies and delays of the present cumbersome system hurt genuine refugees, and we looked forward to the introduction of Bill C-55 which we hoped was going to bring in a streamlined, yet flexible, and compassionate system for quickly identifying genuine refugees and deterring abusers.

Unfortunately, I am disappointed, if not outraged—as are virtually all informed commentators on the matter—by Bill C-55. Instead of streamlining we have complexity. Instead of focusing on identifying genuine refugees and letting them stay in Canada we have a bill which does everything it can to try to get other countries to take responsibility for them. Instead of a fair process we have a system that greatly restricts the right to appeal adverse decisions. Instead of relief that the government has finally acted we feel consternation that it has acted in this fashion.

Honourable senators, in a bill as lengthy and as complex as C-55, I cannot begin to address all aspects of its subject matter. I will, however, touch on those aspects of the bill which are most troublesome. Foremost among those aspects are procedures that occur at the screening stage. Screening takes place before any case can be considered in full by the new refugee board, and is clearly designed to keep as many people as possible from proceeding further through the system. No one objects to weeding out invalid claims quickly—indeed, we insist on it—but this system is designed to weed out genuine refugees and to send them back to the country from which they came, if that country is on a certain list.

Honourable senators, from where does that list come? It comes from cabinet, which, as we are all aware, means that it is initially drawn up by departmental officials in the Department of Employment and Immigration. For years experts have been saying that we needed to keep more distance between immigration and refugee matters, that we needed more expertise in the refugee process. So I ask, honourable senators, why is not the new expert refugee board the one to make this list—if, indeed, we need a list at all?

There is only one criterion for a country to be put on this list: Does it comply with article 33 of the convention relating to the status of refugees? Article 33, granted, is a most important one in the convention and protects refugees from being sent to the country where they fear prosecution. But we have no assurances of what will happen to those people we send back to countries on the list. Will they be admitted to the country? Will they be put in camps? Will they be kept in detention? Will they be allowed to make a refugee claim in that country? Most serious of all, will they be sent from that country to yet another country which may not be on Canada's list? We will not know.

We would, at least, have had some reassurance on this point had the bill introduced in this chamber been the same as the one originally tabled in the other place. Before being changed in committee the bill provided that a claimant had to be allowed to return to the "safe country," as it was then called, or have a right to have his or her claim determined there. Both of those minimal protections have now gone. To my mind it is ominous that the words "safe country" no longer appear in Bill C-55.

If claimants managed to pass the hurdle I have just described, and cannot be returned anywhere else, their claims are then examined to see if they have any credible basis, although that term, in my opinion, is somewhat vague. If the decision-makers rule against a claimant at this point, the person will be sent back to the very country from which he or she claims to fear persecution. Honourable senators, is the government so sure that no mistakes can be made that it is still willing to take that risk? Of course, the people whose claims are not valid will not suffer from being returned. But what about those who do have valid claims, but who, for one reason or another, are rejected at this stage? Yes, they can apply for judicial review of the decision, but they must await the decision from their home country. Success in court will be cold comfort to those suffering persecution because they were returned.

This aspect of the screening process is directly contrary to the conclusions of the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner for Refugees, of which Canada is an active member—namely, that claimants be permitted to await the decision on their appeals inside the country.

Because of the speed of the screening process few claimants may be able to have counsel of their choice. Duty counsel will be provided by the government in those cases, but those lawyers may not be sufficiently independent and may not have time to establish a relationship of trust with the claimant.

For those who make it through the screening and who receive a negative decision the right of appeal is limited, indeed. Appeal to the Federal Court will be "with leave" only, which traditionally has been given in a very small number of cases. Although the word "appeal" is used in connection with refugee division decisions, the grounds for appeal are the same as those for judicial review. There is, therefore, no true appeal, and the merits of the case will not normally be considered. Neither is there any central administrative review of either screening or refugee decisions; so it is predictable that decisions will be inconsistent from one panel to the next, and most mistakes will remain uncorrected.

Honourable senators, I hope that I have been able to alert you to some of the problems associated with this bill. I urge you to give it particular scrutiny both here and when it goes to committee.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak to the bill, I will move the adoption of the motion for second reading on behalf of Senator Simard. If any honourable senator wishes to speak to the bill, or wishes to stand it, I will resume my seat.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am not sure that no one else wishes to speak to it. Shall we suggest that by Tuesday or, at the latest, Wednesday of next week we make it clear that we wish the bill to go to committee, unless someone else wishes to speak on it? Of course, those wishing to speak on the bill can always do so at third reading, or they can attend the committee hearings to express their views.

● (1600)

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-22

CONSIDERATION OF THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE—ORDER WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Third Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, tabled in the Senate on 23rd June, 1987.—
(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have no objection to this order being withdrawn. I kept it on the order paper to measure the time from the third report to the end.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the order be withdrawn?

[Senator Bosa.]

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order withdrawn.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 27, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

He said: Honourable senators, I shall be brief. You have been here a long time, and I shall adjourn this debate in my own name.

On a question of privilege, I would like to say to Senator Flynn that I have never kept my views on Bill C-22 secret from anybody. They are known. I am against that bill. If I misled him into thinking that I might not be against that bill, I apologize. I must be failing in my trade as a communicator.

Honourable senators, the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States is truly something that will determine the future of this country and the nature of its institutions. Some of us believe that. I think it involves deep divisions among Canadians, and there are three divisions. First, there are those who believe that we should have absolutely nothing to do with the Americans. They are the NDP, and they do not believe in free enterprise or free trade at all. On the other hand, there are those—and it does not include all Tories—who believe that free enterprise, and only free enterprise, is good, people who, like Milton Friedman, say, and I quote from his book Capitalism and Freedom:

In . . . a free economy . . . there is one and only one social responsibility of business—to use its resources and engage in activities designed to increase its profits.

That is the only responsibility. Not all Tories believe that. Then there is a third group, the Liberals, who believe in a mixture of government action and free enterprise. We do not believe that the profit motive is evil. We believe that it is a useful instrument to harness, and we certainly do not believe that it is God.

I really do believe that we are heading towards a confrontation, a three-way confrontation among these disparate views of the Canadian economy.

Before I come to the specifics of the bill, which I shall do on another occasion, I would like to mention the fact that in recent days in a newspaper in Quebec they mention the views of Lester C. Thurow, a prominent economist of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who said that Canada should not worry about its economic independence, that it does not have any to start with, because there is no such thing as a Canadian economy, that we live in a global economy. The strange thing is that one of the closest associates of Lester Thurow, one with whom he has written a brilliant book called Economics Explained, Robert L. Heilbroner, the celebrated author of a history of economics called The Worldly Philosopher, a His- tory of Economic Thought, said in the New York Times Magazine of August 15, 1982, that he foresees wrenching change as a pre-condition for repairing the economy not only of the United States but of other industrialized countries. He said:

This is the abandonment of the idea of a unified world market as the global basis for accumulation, and its replacement with a system of regional blocs, each securing a reasonably protected market for its favoured producers, and regulating its intercourse with other large blocs.

The reason for this change again lies in the power of modern technology to outflank and bypass established centers of production . . . The pressures of international competition are largely determined by the technology of transportation and information and communication. As long as these pressures were bearable, a worldwide free market could be held up as the ideal by which the greatest welfare could be achieved for all. In fact, that was not the way the free market worked, so far as the underdeveloped countries were concerned, but unquestionably free trade and the associated free market in currencies served the interests of the industrial countries very well.

Today, though, things have changed. Cities that were Kiplingque tourist attractions a decade or two ago are now centres of low-wage, high-technology manufacture and assembly. The jobs of German, French, British and American workers are being performed by Taiwanese, South Koreans, Thais—perhaps soon by Chinese. This is all very well for the consumer, but it is not so well for the producer. A successful social structure of accumulation must ultimately support its producers over its consumers, and that includes its working force as well as its capitalists. I believe that the flag of free trade will be hauled down in the coming restructuring of things, as the flag of laissez-faire was hauled down in the last restructuring.

This is not just the thinking of one economist. If we look at the evolution of what we call protectionist tendencies in the American Congress we shall recognize these strains, the strains of Heilbroner thinking, in the speeches of powerful legislators in the United States, all based on the idea that you cannot abandon your producers, you cannot, for the sake of an economic theory called “free trade,” if you have any other avenue, abandon your steel workers, your other workers, if for no other reason than they will vote you out of office the next time.

● (1610)

It so happens that the United States is one of the few countries in the world that can have this dream of self-sufficiency. With Canadian resources the United States can pretty well do without the rest of the world, if it wants to. It would cause serious adjustments, but, as Heilbroner says, it could go into a mode where, as a trading bloc, it would deal through managed trade, bloc to bloc. There would no longer be a free world market, but a managed market in which giant partners—the European Economic Community, the Soviet Bloc, and the United States with Canada—would be negotiating with one another certain exchanges that they found necessary.

Honourable senators, if we go into a free trade deal with the United States, this is what is facing us. It may be unavoidable. This is what makes it extremely important for us to have a good deal. In interventions to come I shall discuss the character of the deal we have signed, as we know it from the documents we have, and in particular the dispute-settlement mechanism. However, I would like to assure my fellow senators that I will not engage in the practice that I have seen, and which I am sure you do not approve of, of imputing wicked motives to others along the lines of: “If you oppose this, you are against the west,” or “If you oppose that, you are against Quebec,” or “If it is good for Ontario, it must be bad for Quebec,” and vice versa. In an issue that is as truly important for our future, for our independence, and for our governments, I do not think we have the right to think in those terms.

I accept that the government of this day believes that it is doing what is good for Canada. I do not intend to dispute that, or dispute their motive. I will try to prove that this belief is wrong, but not that they are wicked. Further, I will not say in this chamber that any of the members of the government—and certainly not the Leader of the Government in the Senate—has anything but the good of Canada at heart.

I feel, however, that they are taking the wrong avenue to reach their goal, which is the good of Canada, and I will try and so prove to you, honourable senators, because this is really a turning point in our history such as has come before. In the past there have been crises on this very same issue. One such crisis led to the creation of this country. Lord Elgin signed a free trade agreement, and when it went wrong Canada was born. This time, if we sign the Free Trade Agreement that is reflected in the document given to us by the government, Canada will not be born; it will be dead.

Honourable senators, I will adjourn this debate in my own name, with the permission of the Senate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Gigantès, seconded by the Honourable Senator De Bané, that further debate on this inquiry be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of personal privilege—

Senator Frith: There is no point of impersonal privilege; there is simply a point of privilege.

Senator Gigantès: Very well. I feel a little impersonal, because I have so many names. My name is pronounced in different ways in different languages. In Greek it is “Tsighantes”; in French it is “Gigantès”, and in English it is “Gigantès”. I would be most grateful to my colleagues in the Senate when they address me in English, or refer to me in English—whether to insult, compliment or to dismiss, I do not care—that they say “Gigantès”, and “Gigantès” in French, and not the sort of mixture between the two. It grates, and I am sure that you will oblige me.

Senator Frith: That is pretty personal, I agree with you.

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 3, 1987, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 2090)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SIXTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, October 29, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT
(Report No. 40 - Indian Act)

In accordance with its permanent reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, your Joint Committee draws the attention of both Houses to the proclamations listed in Appendix A to this report. In the judgement of the Committee, the issue of these proclamations is not authorized by the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. 1-6.

Subsection 77(1) of the Indian Act prescribes the qualifications required of Indian band members to vote for the election of a band chief or band councillors:

"77. (1) A member of a band who has attained the age of eighteen years and is ordinarily resident on the reserve is qualified to vote for a person nominated to be chief of the band and, where the reserve for voting purposes consists of one section, to vote for persons nominated as councillors."<sup>(1)</sup>

A number of Indian bands have expressed the desire to permit any band member who has reached the age of 18 to vote in band council elections irrespective of whether or not the member is "ordinarily resident on the reserve". To give effect to these requests, the Government resorted to the authority delegated by subsection 4(2) of the Act. Subsection 4(2), as amended by S.C. 1985, c. 27, provides that:

"(2) The Governor in Council may by proclamation declare that this Act or any portion thereof, except sections 5 to 14.3 or sections 37 to 41, shall not apply to

(a) any Indians or any group or band of Indians, or

(b) any reserve or any surrendered lands or any part thereof, and may by proclamation revoke any such declaration."

The purpose of the proclamations reported upon is to suspend the application of the words "and is ordinarily resident on the reserve" which appear in subsection 77(1) of the Act.

In an earlier report, your Committee recorded its view that subsection 4(2) of the Indian Act does not give the Governor in Council the authority to amend the Act but that it "was meant to be used in order to declare substantive parts of the Indian Act not to apply to Indians or in respect of certain reserves".<sup>(2)</sup> The conceptual distinction between a delegated power to amend the Act and a power to suspend the application of certain portions of the Act is central to the Committee's opinion on the validity of the proclamations under report. In this regard, we refer to the testimony given before the Sub-committee on Indian Self-Government by two officers of the Department of Justice. In reply to a question concerning section 12 of the Indian Act, Mr. Ian Binnie, Associate Deputy Minister of Justice, explained that:

"... if you pick and choose among the provisions of a statute, particularly the subsections of a section, you distort the meaning. Although you say that Section 12 applies except for this little subsection, the problem is that perhaps Parliament intended Section 12 to be read as a whole, and you are not really exempting anyone so much as you are changing what Parliament intended as a package. Therefore you should either suspend the whole of section 12 or you should leave it intact.

The problem is, does Section 4(2) contemplate an amendment of what Parliament has determined by exempting altogether or does it contemplate changing the meaning by picking and choosing within a section what will apply and what will not apply? The problem is to determine whether Parliament really intended when it gave the Governor in Council authority under Section 4(2) that he would go through the statute and pick out this section and that subsection and thereby change the whole impact of the sections."<sup>(3)</sup>

In relation to subsection 4(2) of the Act, Mr. Fred Caron, a legal officer of the Department, stated that:

"It has not been used very often to my knowledge. (...) I think the limitation we would see to it is that, while you may be able to lift a whole section from application to a band, we would perhaps draw the line at lifting words out of a section and inadvertently amend the act. I think what Section 4(2) is saying is that you can remove a part of the act and say it does not apply any more, and so then you go back to what would apply if you did not have that section. But if you start lifting words out of it, you in fact are perhaps amending the act, and that is really a function of Parliament."<sup>(4)</sup>

The Committee fully agrees that a distinction must be made between amending the Act and suspending the application of a portion of the Act. To properly characterize the proclamations under report in terms of this distinction, it is necessary to ascertain the exact scope of the power to suspend the application of a portion of the Act. Are the words "and is ordinarily resident on the reserve" a portion of the Indian Act the application of which may be suspended by the Governor in Council?

Prior to 1951, the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1927, c. 98, provided that:

"3. The Governor in Council may, by proclamation, from time to time, exempt from the operation of this Part, or from the operation of any one or more of the sections of this Part, Indians or non-treaty Indians, or any of them, or any band or irregular band of them, or the reserves or special reserves, or Indian lands, or any portions of them, in any province or in the territories, or in any of them; and may again, by proclamation, from time to time, remove such exemption."

This section expressly limited the Governor in Council's authority to the suspension of "one or more sections of the Act". In 1951, Bill No. 79 was passed by Parliament and became chapter 29 of the 1951 Statutes of Canada (S.C. 1951, c. 29). The 1951 statute revised the previous legislation applicable to Indians. In that revision, section 3 of the earlier statute became subsection 4(2) of the Indian Act but it now referred to the suspension of a "portion" of the Act rather than "one or more sections of the Act".

As to the effect of the new wording, your Committee refers to paragraph 36(f) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. I-23:

"36. Where an enactment (in this section called the "former enactment") is repealed and another enactment (in this section called the "new enactment") is substituted therefor,

...

(f) except to the extent that the provisions of the new enactment are not in substance the same as those of the former enactment, the new enactment shall not be held to operate as new law, but shall be construed and have effect as a consolidation and as declaratory of the law as contained in the former enactment;"

Insofar as subsection 4(2) of the Indian Act is "in substance the same" as section 3 of the previous legislation, paragraph 36(f) requires it to be construed as a consolidation of the earlier provision. If subsection 4(2) is to be construed as a consolidation of the previous enactment, recourse may be had to that enactment to determine the meaning and intent of this subsection. On this basis, your Committee concludes that the word "portion" in subsection 4(2) refers to "one or more sections of the Act" (see Appendix B).

Your Committee is satisfied that the Indian Act does not authorize the Governor in Council to suspend the application of anything less than one or more sections of the Act and that in purporting to suspend the application of a few words within a subsection of the Act, the Governor in Council is in fact amending the Indian Act.

Even if the word "portion" did not have the meaning arrived at on the basis of the Interpretation Act, your Committee would conclude that the Governor in Council has no authority to suspend the application of the words "and is ordinarily resident on the reserve" in subsection 77(1). In our view, subsection 4(2) of the Act may only be used to suspend the application of a portion of the Act that deals with a specific subject-matter. If part of an enactment is interrelated with others in such a way that the suspension of its application would bring a result which could not have been intended by Parliament, the suspension is invalid.<sup>(5)</sup> In enacting subsection 77(1) of the Act, Parliament prescribed the eligibility criteria to be met by Indians voting for the election of a band chief and, in certain circumstances, for the election of band councillors. The subject-matter of this particular enactment is the prescription of voting qualifications. The result of the proclamations and their purpose is not to declare that Indians do not have to meet voting qualifications, but rather, to modify the qualifications prescribed by Parliament. Whereas subsection 77(1) previously required Indians to be at least 18 years of age and to be resident on the reserve, it would now require only one of these two requirements to be met. Here, the Governor in Council has not suspended the application of a portion of the Act but amended that which Parliament itself had provided.

Your Committee wishes to emphasize that the making of these proclamations raises an important point of principle. The issue is not whether voters in Indian band elections should or should not be ordinarily resident on the reserve in order to be eligible to vote. We readily agree that if the members of a band wish to allow non-resident members to vote, they should be able to do so. As far as the Committee is concerned, the issue is that the Government has sought to achieve this result by means that are not authorized by law. The proclamations under report are best characterized as amending the Indian Act without parliamentary sanction. The use which the Government has made of the authority delegated by the Act challenges the exclusive constitutional right of Parliament to make our laws. It matters not that in this instance, the statutory authority was misused to achieve a desirable result. If the rule of law means anything, it is that the pursuit of a lawful end will not support or excuse the use of unlawful means. As the Chairmen of your Committee wrote to the responsible Minister in reply to the assertion that the Government had done "all that is possible to ensure that its actions are within statutory authority":

"The Government could and should have sought legislation authorizing it to suspend, at the request of an Indian band, the requirement that an elector reside on the reserve. Instead, the Executive chose to rely on a use of subsection 4(2) that was never contemplated by Parliament and that infringes the sovereignty of Parliament".

Your Committee was informed by the Minister that his officials were studying possible amendments to the Indian Act in order to provide clear authority for the issue of proclamations such as those under report. Your Committee recommends the adoption of this legislation to the Houses. Your Committee also recommends that the legislation provide for the retroactive validation of the proclamations reported upon.

Your Committee informs the Senate that it has requested the government to table a comprehensive response to this report in the House of Commons pursuant to the Standing Orders of that House.

---

APPENDIX A

The proclamations registered as SOR/82-882, SOR/83-317 to SOR/83-322, SOR/83-559, SOR/83-772 to SOR/83-775, SOR/84-135, SOR/84-313, SOR/84-851, SOR/85-153, SOR/85-346, SOR/86-126 and SOR/86-925, each under the title: 'Proclaiming Certain Indian Bands Exempt from Portions of the Act'.

---

APPENDIX 'B'

1. The parliamentary record confirms that subsection 4(2) of the Act did not, and was not intended to, effect any change in the substance of the earlier provision but merely carried it over in the new Statute. Testifying before the Special Committee on the Indian Act appointed to consider Bill No. 79, An Act respecting Indians, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration pointed out that:

"This section has been in the Act since 1874. There has never been any complaint against it before that I know of from any band council, but since bill 267 was prepared they have suddenly become fearful of the results - although they had been living under the same conditions all these years and none of them had ever felt any adverse effect by the Governor in Council having these powers under 4(2)."<sup>(6)</sup>

At another time, the Minister remarked:

"In time we are going to increase the stature of the band council and the Indian, and increase his control over his affairs. This is not going to take anything away from him. In any event, we can only take away the sections of the Act." (emphasis added) <sup>(7)</sup>

At the report stage of the Bill, the Minister reiterated that:

"This section has been in the act since 1880 (sic), and, as the hon. member for Lethbridge has said, it did not cause concern to the Indians until the past few months when the matter was raised by some hon. members opposite. (...) If you did not have a section of this kind you would not be able to relieve the Indians from some of the restrictions unless the act was brought back to the house and it was done by way of amendments so that a particular section would not apply to a particular band. This is a salutary provision in the interest of the Indian and will be used for that purpose." (emphasis added) <sup>(8)</sup>

2. In determining whether a significant or substantial change has been made to an enactment, one may have recourse to the parliamentary proceedings (see Beswick v. Beswick, [1968] A.C. 58). As noted under paragraph 1., the parliamentary proceedings on subsection 4(2) of the Indian Act indicate that this provision was intended as a straight consolidation of the earlier enactment. A consolidating enactment may be construed on the basis of the previous enactment (see I.R.C. v Hinchy, [1960] A.C. 748).

NOTES

(1) This provision was amended by S.C. 1985, c. 27. The Act previously required a band member to have attained the age of 21.

(2) Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, Fifteenth Report (No. 19), First Session, Thirty-Second Parliament.

(3) Sub-committee on Indian Self-Government, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, Issue No. 5, First Session, Thirty-Second Parliament.

(4) Ibid.

(5) The Committee's position on this point draws largely upon the reasoning of Mr. Justice Martland in the reference Re Proclamation of Section 16 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1968-69, [1970] S.C.R. 777.

(6) Special Committee appointed to consider Bill No. 79 - An Act respecting Indians, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, Issue No. 1, Fourth Session, Twenty-first Parliament.

(7) Ibid.

(8) House of Commons, Hansard, Fourth Session, Twenty-first Parliament, p. 3062.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Joint Chairman

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 2090)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SEVENTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, October 29, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

SEVENTH REPORT
(Report No. 41 - Various)

Pursuant to the general Order of Reference approved by the Senate on November 27, 1986 and by the House of Commons on December 17, 1986, and its permanent reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, the Joint Committee draws the attention of the Houses to the following matters:

A. SOR/80-510, Ontario Rutabaga Service Charge (Interprovincial and Export) Regulations

1. By subsection 4(1) of these regulations, the Ontario Rutabaga Producers' Marketing Board (the Board) authorized itself to fix, from time to time, the service charges payable to the Board by Ontario producers of rutabagas marketed in interprovincial and export trade. In this case, the Ontario Rutabaga Order (SOR/80-74, as amended) required the Board to exercise the powers delegated under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. A-7, by order or regulation. In subsection 4(1) of the regulations, the Board purported to give itself the authority to establish service charges administratively, rather than by order or regulation, and the Committee took the position that the regulations were invalid. This conclusion was communicated to the federal Department of Agriculture in November of 1980 and in a letter dated September 3, 1981, the Department's Designated Instruments Officer advised the Committee that the Legal Services Section of the Department agreed with your Committee's conclusion. There followed repeated assurances over the years that the Ontario Rutabaga Producers' Marketing Board had been informed of the situation and was proceeding with the enactment of valid regulations.

2. In the summer of 1985, the Ontario Rutabaga Order was revoked by the Governor in Council following the dissolution of the provincial marketing board. Ontario Regulation 650/84 charged the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board with the administration of the affairs of the local Board pending its formal dissolution. An inquiry was made as to how that agency proposed to deal with the illegal collection of service charges under the Ontario Rutabaga Service Charge (Interprovincial and Export) Regulations. In October of 1986, your Committee was informed that no remedial action was contemplated. The validation of these illegal charges by means of legislation was termed "impractical". On the other hand, it was said that to refund the service charges to those who had paid them would not be an "acceptable solution" to the extent that the amounts owing were likely to be small and those who paid them unknown. That reply also stated that "the Regulations were thought to be valid by the Board and the Department of Justice at the time they were established in 1980".

3. On this last point, your Committee emphasizes that objection was taken to the regulations in November of 1980 and that both the Ontario Rutabaga Producers' Marketing Board and the responsible federal Department had long been aware of their illegality. The history of this case illustrates the difficulties your Committee often encounters in securing a prompt and efficacious resolution of its objections to a particular instrument. In this instance, the dissolution of the local marketing board responsible for making the objectionable instrument means that your Committee can do little else but record its view that the federal Department responsible for administering the Agricultural Products Marketing Act ought to have taken earlier and more forceful action to ensure that the charges imposed on Ontario producers were lawfully prescribed.

B. SOR/84-572, Labour Adjustments Benefits Designation Order, amendment
SOR/85-785, Labour Adjustment Benefits Regional Designation Order, No. 1
SOR/86-215, Labour Adjustment Benefits Regional Designation Order, No. 2
SOR/86-588, Labour Adjustment Benefits Regional Designation Order, No. 3

1. The Labour Adjustments Benefits Act, S.C. 1980-81-82-83, c. 89, which came into force on May 1, 1982, provides benefits to older employees who are laid-off from industries designated by the Government pursuant to section 3 of the Act. Industries may be designated either generally or on a regional basis. The Act provides that an order designating an industry expires after a prescribed period of time but also empowers the Governor in Council to extend the period of validity of a designation order by means of continuation orders which themselves have a fixed period of validity. A number of designation orders and continuation orders have been made to date by the Governor in Council. In some instances, the Governor in Council, either following the expiration of the period for which a designation order and subsequent continuation orders could remain in force, or in lieu of a continuation order, has made orders re-designating previously designated industries with a view to extending the eligibility period of laid-off employees in those industries. Each of the instruments reported upon effected the re-designation of one or more industries and, for the reasons that follow, the Committee entertains serious doubts as to their validity.

2. Your Committee refers to sections 3 and 4 of the Labour Adjustments Benefits Act:

"3.(1) For the purposes of this Act, the Governor in Council may, by order, designate any industry either generally or with respect to any region of Canada.

(2) An industry may be designated generally pursuant to subsection (1) if the Governor in Council is satisfied that

(a) the industry in Canada generally is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature by reason of import competition or by reason of industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada to encourage such restructuring; and

(b) the economic adjustment referred to in paragraph (a) is resulting in a significant loss of employment in the industry in Canada generally.

(3) An industry may be designated with respect to any region of Canada pursuant to subsection (1) if the Governor in Council is satisfied that

(a) the industry in that region is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature; and

(b) the economic adjustment referred to in paragraph (a) is resulting in a severe economic disruption in that region and in a significant loss of employment in the industry in that region.

(4) An order under subsection (1) that designates an industry generally is in force for such period, not exceeding three years from the date the order is made, as is specified in the order unless, before the expiry of the period so specified, the Governor in Council makes a continuation order continuing the order in force for such period, not exceeding three years, as is specified in the continuation order.

(5) No more than one continuation order may be made under subsection (4) in respect of any one order under subsection (1).

(6) An order under subsection (1) that designates an industry with respect to a region in Canada is in force for one year from the date the order is made unless, before the expiry of that one year, the Governor in Council makes a continuation order continuing the order in force for such period, not exceeding six months, as is specified in the continuation order.

(7) Where the Governor in Council has made a continuation order under subsection (6) continuing an order in force, he may, before the expiry of the period for which the order is so continued, make one further continuation order continuing the order in force for such further period, not exceeding six months, as is specified in the further continuation order.

(8) The revocation or expiration of an order under this section does not affect the entitlement, after the revocation or expiration, of any person laid off while the order was in force to make an application under section 10 or 12 in relation to the order or to receive labour adjustment benefits by virtue of the order.

4.(1) Subject to subsection (2), the Governor in Council may, in any order under section 3, declare

(a) that the designation of the industry in the order is retroactive in effect and applies as of such day, before the date of the order, as is specified in the order; and

(b) that this Act applies in respect of lay-offs from a Canadian establishment in the industry designated in the order occurring on or after the day specified pursuant to paragraph (a).

(2) The Governor in Council may not specify pursuant to paragraph (1) (a) a day that is more than forty-eight months before the day this section comes into force."

These enactments may be summarized as follows: an order designating an industry generally is in force for a maximum of three years after it is made (ss. 3(4)) while an order designating an industry regionally is in force for a maximum of one year after it is made (ss. 3(6)). Either type of designation order may be made to apply retroactively (ss. 4(1)) but in no case may an order be made retroactive to a date prior to May 1, 1978 (ss. 4(2)). Prior to its expiration, a general designation order may be continued in force for a further maximum period of three years (ss. 3(4)) but only one such continuation order can be made (ss. 3(5)). As for a regional designation order, the Governor in Council may continue it in force for a maximum of six months (ss. 3(6)) and may issue a further continuation order for a further maximum period of six months (ss. 3(7)). The result of these provisions is that the maximum duration of a general designation order is six years after the original designation while the maximum duration of a regional designation order is two years after the original designation is made.

3. In light of these statutory provisions, your Committee believes that the Labour Adjustments Benefits Act does not authorize the Governor in Council to designate an industry, generally or regionally, more than once. Section 3 of the Act places strict and express limits on the duration of a designation and of any continuation of that designation. An interpretation of the Act according to which the Governor in Council may effect repeated designations of the same industry would render these limitations entirely meaningless. The provisions of sections 3 and 4 must be seen to express Parliament's intention that designations remain in force for a limited time. If the Act is interpreted so as to give the Governor in Council the authority to re-designate previously designated industries at will, the limits placed by Parliament on the total duration of a designation may effectively be circumvented. A general designation order, for example, is valid for a maximum of three years after it is made and may be continued in force for a maximum of three years. The Act expressly prohibits the making of more than one such continuation order. This prohibition is nugatory if the Governor in Council, following the expiration of the maximum period of validity of the designation, may simply re-designate the same industry. Your Committee considers that an interpretation which leads to such results is to be avoided. The provisions of sections 3 and 4 indicate that the powers of designation conferred on the Governor in Council may only be exercised once in respect of any given industry.

4. This interpretation, in the Committee's view, is compatible with the general scheme of the legislation and the economic circumstances prevailing at the time of its adoption. The purpose of the Act is to allow the payment of labour adjustment benefits to older workers laid off from a designated industry as a result of that industry undergoing "significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature". The legislation was not intended to provide assistance on a permanent basis in respect of industries in which the employment situation is chronically poor.

The Department of Labour has argued that a distinction can be made between a continuation order, to which the time limits prescribed in the Act would apply, and an order re-designating an industry. It was submitted that:

"... before continuation orders may be made under subsection 3(6) and subsection 3(7), the designation criteria provided for in subsection 3(2) need not be considered by the Governor in Council. A new designation order, on the other hand, is more stringent and the Governor in Council is forced to reconsider all circumstances and to be satisfied that the criteria in subsection 3(2) have been met before the order can be made."

The Committee does accept this alleged distinction. A continuation order is in the nature of an amendment to the original designation order and the making of the continuation order is thus subject to the same conditions as the making of the original designation order. For example, when making a regional designation order, the Governor in Council must be satisfied that the industry identified in the order is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature and that this is resulting in a severe economic disruption in the region and loss of employment in the industry. If it is decided to continue the order in force, the Committee considers that the same criteria must be taken into account before making the continuation order. It is only common sense that the Government would not continue to provide benefits to laid-off workers in an industry that has ceased to meet the relevant statutory criteria.

The Labour Adjustments Benefits Act was enacted at a time when the employment situation in many Canadian industries was critical because of the economic recession. To assist the reorganization of these industries, Parliament authorized the Government to provide exceptional assistance to those affected by the reduction of the labour force due to the restructuring of those industries. These measures were never intended to become permanent. Rather than enact a series of individual Bills providing for temporary assistance to named industries, Parliament enacted the Labour Adjustments Benefits Act. This Act was meant to have temporary application to those industries designated by the Governor in Council. By temporary application, your Committee understands that once an industry has been designated and labour adjustment benefits have been paid to workers pursuant to that designation, the Act ceases to apply in respect of that particular industry.

5. For these reasons, your Committee concludes that the instruments reported upon, to the extent they purport to re-designate previously designated industries, are not authorized by the Act and that the payments made in consequence of these re-designations were made without parliamentary sanction.

C. C.R.C., c. 330, Labour Mobility and Assessment Incentives Regulations

1. The Labour Mobility and Assessment Incentives Regulations were enacted in 1972. The regulations prescribe the conditions under which payments may be made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration for the purposes of the Labour Mobility and Assessment Incentives Program. This Program has been in operation for more than 20 years and substantial amounts of money are appropriated each year for its continued operation. The conditions under which this Program operates should, in your Committee's view, be the subject of direct parliamentary enactment rather than be prescribed in regulations made under the authority of Votes in successive appropriation acts.

2. The Joint Committee has long been critical of the use of Votes or items in the estimates to confer legislative powers and has called for an end to the practice. Successive Speakers of the House of Commons have also made it clear that the appropriation process should not be resorted to in order to by-pass the normal legislative process and should be restricted to the authorization of expenditures required to operate programs which are otherwise authorized by legislation. On June 12, 1981, the Speaker recalled earlier rulings to the effect that:

"... the Appropriation Act is not the place to seek authority to do something such as to establish a program. Rather, the Appropriation Act should only seek authority to spend the money for a program that has been previously authorized by a statute."

The Speaker further mentioned that:

"By definition, the estimates seek spending authority alone; they are not intended to ask for substantial authority, such as to pass regulations."

The 1982 Report of the Canadian Bar Association Committee on the Reform of Parliament commented as follows on the use of so-called dollar items in the Estimates:

"This procedure has been used not only to bypass the regular legislative process in the manner just suggested; but even to establish new programs. By including dollar items that describe new programs in the estimates, the government is able to secure parliamentary approval for them by the back door instead of by the usual method of presenting legislation for debate and approval in the House and Committee. This is because once the House has approved the estimates, they become the detailed content of the annual appropriation act, which is then passed by the House. From that point on, the programs carry the sanction of the appropriation act as their legislative authorization without the debate that would take place if the programs were brought forward as distinct bills requiring three readings and committee study."

While these comments were directed to the use of dollar items, they apply equally to any item of the estimates that provides for the introduction or continued existence of a program for which there is no parliamentary sanction elsewhere than in appropriation acts or in the estimates on which these are based.

3. In a letter of June 13, 1985, the Chairmen asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration if he would consider the introduction of legislation to govern the Labour Mobility and Assessment Incentives Program. In a reply dated July 30, 1986, the Minister indicated that:

"The Labour Mobility and Assessment Incentives Regulations do no more than set out the conditions pursuant to which payments to provinces, employers and workers under the program may be made. Essentially, they set out the administrative conditions for the expenditure of funds for a purpose authorized by Parliament. The regulations are not substantive legislation in the sense that they go beyond the stated purpose for which the monies are voted by Parliament and should not be seen as subverting Parliament's control of the public purse."

Your Committee points out that it does not allege that the regulations under report go beyond the enabling authority set out in the relevant appropriation acts and associated estimates. Nor has the Committee suggested they involve a subversion of Parliament's control of the public purse. What is involved is the right of Parliament to approve, through regular legislation, the principle of the Labour Mobility and Assessment Incentives Program and the conditions in accordance with which expenditures may be made to achieve the objects of the Program. Your Committee does not believe that the supply process is adequate to express Parliament's intention with respect to a program of this kind.

4. This view extends to other programs of a permanent nature whose existence relies entirely on supply measures. The Labour Mobility and Incentives Assessment Program is simply drawn to the attention of the Houses as illustrating our concern that the supply process and appropriation acts should not be used to circumvent or avoid the normal legislative processes of Parliament. Economic or social programs that are intended to be permanent should be established and governed by statute, and not by subordinate legislation authorized by Votes in appropriation acts or items in the estimates.

D. Various Regulations made under the Fisheries Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. F-14

1. The Fisheries Act authorizes the Governor in Council to prescribe close times for the purpose of managing and conserving the fishery. The Act defines the expression "close time" as meaning "a specified period during which fish to which it applies, may not be fished". The power to prescribe close times is regularly exercised in ways and for purposes which, in the opinion of your Committee, are not authorized by the Act and amount to an unusual exercise of the authority delegated by Parliament. This occurs in so many of the regulations made under the Act that the Committee thinks it preferable to report its objections in general terms rather than list each and every regulatory provision which this report concerns.

2. Many regulations made under the Act will, in respect of particular species of fish, prescribe a close time in the following fashion: "from January 1 to December 31" (For one example, see the Atlantic Fishery Regulations, SOR/86-21, as amended, section 77 and Schedule XXII). To prescribe a period from January 1 to December 31 is to make the prohibition against fishing for the relevant species indefinite and such a prescription does not conform to the statutory definition of "close time" which calls for the establishment of a specified period during which fish may not be fished. Insofar as the regulation-making powers conferred by the Act are otherwise wide enough for the Governor in Council to prohibit fishing for a particular species of fish, it may be thought to be of no consequence whether this is done directly or through the establishment of a close time "from January 1 to December 31". The explanation lies in paragraph 34(m) of the Act. This provision empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations:

"(m) authorizing a person engaged or employed in the administration or enforcement of this Act to vary any close time or fishing quota that has been fixed by the regulations."

If a regulation is made to prohibit fishing for a particular species of fish, and it is subsequently decided to relax or modify the prohibition, the Governor in Council is required to make a further amending regulation, with all the formalities attendant thereto. A regulation prohibiting fishing could not authorize a fishery officer to subsequently remove the prohibition or grant exemptions from the prohibition. Such a regulation would be illegal in that it would subdelegate to someone other than the Governor in Council the authority to enact the prohibition and to modify the same. A fishery officer may, however, be legally authorized to vary a prescribed close time. In enacting prohibitions against fishing under the guise of prescribing close times, the Governor in Council is effectively delegating to fishery officers a power which may not otherwise be lawfully delegated. Your Committee considers that this use of subordinate legislative powers is a misuse of power.

3. Regulations made under the Act will also frequently prescribe what your Committee has come to term "token close times". In those instances, the specified period during which fishing is not permitted is expressed to be "from December 30 to December 31" or for some similarly symbolic period (For one example, see the Foreign Vessel Fishery Regulations, C.R.C. c. 815, as amended, Schedule X). The prescription of token close times, when coupled with a delegation of the authority to vary close times, is designed to empower fishery officers to subsequently establish an appropriate close time if it becomes necessary.

It is clear that the prescription of token close times is not a meaningful exercise of the authority to specify periods during which fish may not be fished. The very nature of a token close time discloses that the species of fish to which it relates is not, at the time the power is exercised, in need of protection. The real purpose of such a prescription is to delegate to fishery officers the authority to establish close times under the guise of varying the token close time. This authority belongs under the Act to the Governor in Council and it may not be subdelegated to others. The prescription of token close times for the sole purpose of evading that restriction strikes your Committee as an abuse of the powers conferred by the Act.

4. A third and somewhat more complex example of the use of close times to subdelegate to fishery officers regulatory powers which Parliament delegated to the Governor in Council is also found in a number of regulations (For one example, see the British Columbia Fishery (General) Regulations, SOR/84-248, as amended, section 9 and Schedule II). The Fisheries Act authorizes the Governor in Council to make regulations "respecting the use of fishing gear and equipment", and the prescription of close times has also been found convenient to transfer that authority to the hands of fishery officers.

Typically, a regulation made for that purpose will contain a general provision prohibiting fishing with a type of gear described in a schedule during the close time set out in the same schedule. The schedule will list a number of items each of which describes a separate type of gear used to fish for the relevant species of fish so that eventually all types of gear are enumerated in the schedule. The schedule will also set out separate close times "from January 1 to December 31" in respect of each item describing a type of gear. On its face, this kind of provision prohibits fishing for the relevant species with any type of gear at any time. But fishery officers can then vary the close time set out in any particular item of the schedule so that the type of gear associated with the "varied" close time can lawfully be used. The object of this kind of provision is to permit fishery officers to regulate the use of fishing gear and to decide when each type of gear may be used in a particular fishery. Here again, the authority to prescribe close times is used primarily to subdelegate to fishery officers a power which Parliament required to be exercised by the Governor in Council.

5. Provisions of the kind described above abound in regulations made under the Fisheries Act. Their purpose, in each case, is to transfer to fishery officers regulatory powers which are exercisable by the Governor in Council, and your Committee considers the use of these techniques is unlawful and constitutes an unusual use of the powers conferred by the Fisheries Act. Your Committee has on numerous occasions called for a complete revision of this Act. As stated by the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in the House of Commons on March 6, 1985:

"The Fisheries Act is a venerable document. It was passed in 1867. Amendments were made in the 1970s to permit protection and management of fish habitat. Apart from that, little changed in the Act for 117 years. Not surprisingly, as time has gone by, parts of the Act have become almost obsolete. New needs, new issues and new implications for management have arisen that could not have been foreseen in 1867, or even 1967."

The inadequacy of the present statutory framework in terms of contemporary management of our fishery resources is a matter of public knowledge. The practices described in this report are but an illustration of this. Faced with a statute that does not meet modern management requirements, the Executive sees itself forced to resort to regulatory techniques of doubtful validity in order to meet those needs. While it recognizes those difficulties, your Committee does not consider they excuse the persistent and deliberate misuse of the regulation-making powers conferred by Parliament. If the Fisheries Act has ceased to be an adequate instrument to regulate our fishery resources, it is the responsibility of the Executive to propose the necessary amendments to Parliament.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Joint Chairman

---

APPENDIX "C"

(See p. 2090)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

EIGHTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, October 29, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT
(Report No. 42 - Crop Insurance)

1. Pursuant to its permanent order of reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, the Joint Committee draws the attention of the Houses to the amendment to the Crop Insurance Regulations (C.R.C., c. 445) registered as SOR/85-455.

2. The Crop Insurance Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-36, authorizes the federal government to provide financial assistance to provincially administered crop insurance plans that conform with the provisions of the Act. The crop insurance shared-cost program has been in place since 1959 and crop insurance plans have been established in all ten provinces. The crop insurance legislation of three provinces, Alberta, Quebec and Saskatchewan, allows producers of honey to insure their production against losses. On May 16, 1985, the Governor in Council passed an amendment to the Crop Insurance Regulations declaring honey to be a crop for the purposes of the federal legislation. This amendment made it possible for federal contributions to be paid to the provincial insurance plans.

3. Contributions or loans from the federal government may only be made in respect of "crops" as defined in the federal legislation. Section 2 of the Crop Insurance Act defines a "crop" to mean "an agricultural crop declared by the regulations to be a crop for the purposes of this Act". This definition confers on the Governor in Council the authority to determine, by regulation, which "crops" insured under a provincial plan are eligible for federal contributions or loans under the Crop Insurance Act. This authority of the Governor in Council, however, is not entirely discretionary. Only those products that are agricultural crops may be designated for the purposes of the Act.

4. It is a well established rule of statutory interpretation that words used in an Act of Parliament must be given their ordinary grammatical meaning unless the context in which they are used requires otherwise. The ordinary grammatical meaning of a word is its "proper and most known signification"; where a word has more than one ordinary meaning, the "most common and well-established" meaning of the word is to be preferred. As explained by one authority:

"Compilers of dictionaries usually place first in the list of meanings of a word the meaning most commonly used. This meaning is variously called the ordinary, common, popular or primary meaning".<sup>(1)</sup>

Your Committee is satisfied that the primary or most common meaning of the word "crop" does not include agricultural commodities such as honey. The word "crop", as it is used in the Crop Insurance Act, refers to the cultivated produce of the land such as cereals, vegetables and fruits. Usual dictionary definitions confirm that while the word crop can sometimes be used to describe the yield of any natural product, the primary or first-listed meaning of the word is restricted to those products that grow from the soil.<sup>(2)</sup>

5. Your Committee's position is supported by the parliamentary record. The Crop Insurance Act was first enacted as chapter 42 of the 1959 Statutes of Canada. This Act was introduced in the House of Commons as Bill C-66 on the basis of a resolution previously adopted by that House. The debates on the resolution and the bill leave no doubt that the purpose of the Act was to provide for the making of contributions and loans with respect to the insurance of crops that are the produce of the soil.

Furthermore, this intent was expressly confirmed by the responsible minister in the House. During the debate on Second Reading of Bill C-66, the Minister of Agriculture, in reply to a question by a member as to the scope of the bill, said:

"I think it is understood by probably every other member of the house that the crop insurance bill is designed to apply to crops that are grown from the ground. [...] This is a crop insurance scheme. In other words, it insures crops which grow from the ground -whether it is barley or any other types of crop of the kind- but does not insure what are ordinarily classed together as livestock and chattels."<sup>(3)</sup>

In Committee of the Whole, the suggestion was again made by the same member that the bill would permit the designation of any agricultural product as a crop and could even "go so far as to cover the products of bees in the production of honey". The Minister of Agriculture replied that:

"Every other member of the house, I am certain, and every farmer in the country knows and has known that crop insurance was intended for crops which are grown, not for livestock and things of that kind". (4)

6. The meaning assigned by the Committee to the word "crop" is also consistent with the remaining provisions of the Crop Insurance Act and, in particular, with section 8 of the Act which provides for extended insurance coverage. The provisions respecting extended coverage were introduced in the House of Commons by Bill C-208 and enacted as chapter 37 of the 1966-67 Statutes of Canada. On the Second Reading of Bill C-208, the then Minister of Agriculture explained those provisions as follows:

"Under the existing legislation the coverage is limited to crops. Thus what might loosely be called production units such as apple trees or stands of perennial forage crops cannot by themselves be covered. [...] For this extended coverage, as it is called, the amendments authorize the making of contributions by the federal government equivalent to those made for crops per se." (5)

The intent of the amending legislation was to extend insurance coverage to the means of production of those crops which could already be insured under the Act. The losses that may be so insured are those resulting from the destruction of stands of fruit trees, or perennial plants other than trees, as well as those arising when the seeding or planting of a crop is prevented by agricultural hazards.

It is clear that the provisions for extended coverage apply solely to the means of production of "crops" that grow from the soil. Your Committee considers that section 8 of the Act supports its understanding of the meaning of the word "crop" as it appears in the Crop Insurance Act.

7. Having regard to the legislation as a whole, your Committee is satisfied that the meaning of the word "crop", as it is used in the Crop Insurance Act, does not include honey and, consequently, that the Governor in Council had no legislative authority to make the amendment reported upon. The legislative history of the Act confirms your Committee in this view. If honey is to be an insurable crop for the purposes of the federal legislation, Parliament should be asked to adopt the necessary amendments to the Crop Insurance Act. Until such time, the government has no legal authority to make contributions or loans to provincial crop insurance plans in respect of an agricultural commodity like honey.

8. Your Committee informs the Senate that it has requested the government to table a comprehensive response to this report in the House of Commons pursuant to the Standing Orders of that House.

NOTES

- (1) E.A. Driedger, The Construction of Statutes (1974), p. 6.
- (2) See the definitions of "crop" in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary; the Oxford English Dictionary; Black's Law Dictionary; the Canadian Law Dictionary; the Houghton Mifflin Canadian Dictionary of the English Language; Funk & Wagnalls' Standard Encyclopedic Dictionary; Funk & Wagnalls' New Standard Dictionary; and the Random House Dictionary of the English Language. See also the definitions of "récolte" in the Dictionnaire de la langue française Littré; the Larousse de la langue française Lexis; the Grand Larousse de la langue française; and the Grand Robert de la langue française. In all of these definitions, the first-listed or primary meaning of the words "crop" and "récolte" excludes agricultural products such as honey. Only in Webster's Third New International Dictionary is the primary meaning of crop given as "a plant or animal or plant or animal product that can be grown and harvested extensively for profit or subsistence". In all other dictionaries, this meaning is listed as a secondary meaning of the word "crop".
- (3) House of Commons Debates, July 7, 1959, p. 5625.
- (4) House of Commons Debates, July 7, 1959, p. 5629.
- (5) House of Commons Debates, July 7, 1966, pp. 7335-7336.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Joint Chairman

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 3, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

THE LATE HON. RENÉ LÉVESQUE

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, the people of Quebec mourn the loss of one of its greatest political figures, if not the greatest, considering the quality and the strength of the ties that René Lévesque established, over the years, with the Quebec community.

Those ties began to develop in very special circumstances, through a unique TV show. As was said time and again, Point de mire probably launched Mr. Lévesque's true career. It did, indeed, because of the special type of relationship he established as a mentor and communicator with his huge audience. He discussed the most difficult and complex issues such as international relations which were unfamiliar to his audience and he was able to make those issues easy to understand for the general public. The talent of the "master", if I may use that word, his talent for simple and accurate explanations helped his listeners grasp issues that may have seemed too complex for them.

Was it because of his charisma that René Lévesque was always able to communicate with the crowds? If so, it was a very special type of charisma which found its roots not in his rhetorical talents but mainly in the authenticity and sincerity of his discourse. His charisma also stemmed from a vision which translated into feelings and emotions as well as into ideas and beliefs.

I think that the strength of the ties between René Lévesque and the Quebec community were due to that special charisma. He became not only its champion but also the living symbol of the reality and spirit of the Quebec society.

Whatever may be our background or our purpose, we Quebecers more or less identified with what René Lévesque stood for.

Everyone of us has changed to a certain extent under his influence. For instance, when I was a teenager, in the 1930s, we French Canadians used to suffer from an inferiority complex. Everyone was talking about it. All our problems were attributable to that complex. That is never mentioned anymore.

Of course, he was not the only architect of such a change. We had the quiet Revolution to which Mr. Lesage, Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, Mr. Lapalme and many others also made a major contribution as well as Daniel Johnson and Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Jean Marchand or Gérard Pelletier, each of them in his own sphere. But René Lévesque had a special talent for translating every event into a unique language, with a commitment which conveyed the true meaning of events and projects, which transcended them in a way, while mobilizing people's enthusiasm.

A few minutes hardly suffice to summarize the career of a man like René Lévesque, who made such a lasting impression in his time, not only on the people of his own generation but also on a younger generation that did not experience our beginnings but nevertheless was able to draw a parallel between his hopes and their own aspirations.

Beyond the laborious struggle, the specific paths he chose to tread and the ups and downs of an exceptional and extraordinary career, that is what I want to remember about René Lévesque today. That is what I think most people remember, and since yesterday this has been the common line that runs through the stories of the man in the street and prominent members of our community.

In concluding, I would like to read a short extract from his book "Memoirs", taken from page 493 and dated September 2, 1986. It starts with a quotation from Julien Green:

"The mind flies but words must walk". It is midnight.

The mind falters and words no longer come easily. I have hardly any paper left and no time to spare. Only enough for the words "The End".

Did those few lines point to a certain weariness which would be quite normal, to use one of Lévesque's favorite expressions, for someone who after a long and laborious task now finally has a chance to, as it were, heave a sigh of relief? Was it perhaps a premonition that the real end was indeed approaching? We shall never know. Of course, science tells us that some day we will all have to die. Even with the firm belief that another life awaits us on the other side, the passage from this life to the next is not easy for the person who goes through this experience, and it is a shattering experience for those around him.

In any event, as Claude Ryan said last night on Radio-Canada: "Despite our differences, we have all lost a part of ourselves", and we share the grief of his wife and children at this sudden and tragic loss.

On behalf of all my colleagues on this side of the chamber, I wish to offer them our sincere condolences and our feelings of deepest sympathy.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it would not be appropriate for the passing of René Lévesque to escape the notice of both sides of the chamber.

Mr. Trudeau, if I translate him correctly, referred to Mr. Lévesque as an aspect of the soul, or spirit, of Quebec. My own view is that as a politician or as a public figure he contributed significantly to Canada during his period as a member of Mr. Lesage's cabinet. I say that because I first became aware of Mr. Lévesque as a politician during the time I was on the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and because of the work he did as a minister in Mr. Lesage's cabinet, particularly with regard to the nationalization of the hydro companies. He, in effect, founded Quebec Hydro as a publicly owned service, which is something that we in many other parts of the country have taken for granted for decades. From what I was able to learn that enterprise was totally dominated by English speakers. The language of work and the language of service was English. The work Mr. Lévesque did for the French language was explained in Book II B of the commission's report. Mr. Lévesque's efforts and those of his cabinet colleagues gave a genuine push to the developments that resulted in the establishment of our two official languages, the passage of the Official Languages Act, and our progress as a genuinely bilingual nation.

When Mr. Lévesque became a declared separatist I parted company with him politically, because he was promoting fundamental change in the structure of Canada, change that would be contrary to what many hoped Canada would become as a whole, and change that would alter totally the role Quebec would play in the Canadian federation. There was never any doubt in my mind, and I do not say so only retrospectively, that he believed that Quebec and Canada would be better off were Quebec to separate. I did not agree with him, but I do not think he was fraudulent about it. I do not think he used this issue to promote his personal stardom or to satisfy his own ego. He believed it. I thought he was wrong.

● (1410)

Honourable senators, René Lévesque's only real defeat politically was his defeat in the referendum when most Quebecers said no to separation. He was a passionate, sincere politician. I wish he had used all his passion and all his sincerity—indeed, all of his admitted talents as a politician, in the best sense of the word—for different purposes. Nevertheless, he left a very important mark on Canadian politics. Indeed, he left an important mark on the lives of all Canadians, especially those of us in the public sphere. I know that those for whom he did represent an aspect of the Quebec spirit, or the Quebec soul, to quote Mr. Trudeau again, will miss him, as, of course, will his legions of personal friends and his family. To them we express our condolences.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, I would like to add my comments to what was said by Senator Frith and Senator Tremblay.

The sudden, premature death of René Lévesque aroused feelings of shock and profound sadness throughout Quebec and perhaps in Canada as well.

[Senator Frith.]

After the tragic news of his death, the media, political, social and religious leaders, the financial community, ethnic groups, union leaders and the arts community were unanimous in expressing their fondness and respect for this exceptional leader. René Lévesque will be responsible for a unique chapter in the history of Quebec and Canada.

He started his political career in 1960 as a minister in the Lesage government. He founded the Souveraineté-Association movement, became leader of the Parti Québécois and subsequently was Premier of Quebec from 1976 to 1985. René Lévesque was truly the soul and conscience of Quebec for a quarter of a century.

He was stubborn in the pursuit of a demanding and clear cut ideal. He was a gifted communicator, as Senator Tremblay pointed out. With a profound respect for democratic principles, Lévesque managed to restore the self-confidence, faith and optimism of Quebecers, of that distinct society that to him had always existed.

Although opinions differed on his view of Canadian federalism, Lévesque provided a positive response to the fundamental aspirations of the people of his country, giving them the political maturity to play their distinctive role as part of this country.

With a passion that was unique, he inspired people with a desire for excellence and action, for challenge and risk. However, reason and good judgment kept him from exploiting his tremendous popularity which could otherwise have led to intolerant and excessive fanaticism.

It is with feelings of sincerity and profound admiration that I invite my fellow senators to join us in extending our sincere and respectful condolences to his wife, children and family. Thank you.

[English]

PRIVATE BILL

YELLOWKNIFE ELECTRIC LTD.—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-10, to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, and acquainting the Senate that they had passed the bill without amendment.

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT ACT CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-46, to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, November 5, 1987.

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to advise you that Senator Murray is detained elsewhere today.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is there any question that you would like us to ask you?

● (1420)

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, for the second reading of the Bill C-55, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I moved the adjournment of the debate on this order last week, explaining at the time that I was doing so because someone else might want to speak to it. It is not my intention to do so. I think the bill should go to committee.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in that event, on behalf of Senator Simard I ask for second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

PRIVATE BILL

COOPERANTS, MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Michel Cogger moved the second reading of Bill S-14, to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the Province of Quebec.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the house. I would just like to make a few comments to give you some background about the corporation, the petitioner, indicating its history and the reasons why it wishes to be exempted from federal jurisdiction and to continue as a corporation under the laws of the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society, is the result of the amalgamation on December 31, 1981, of Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Company, under the jurisdiction of Quebec laws, and of The Artisans, Life Insurance Co-operative Society, under the jurisdiction of the laws of Canada. Previously, Cooperants, under the jurisdiction of Quebec laws, had decided to continue its operations under the provisions of Section 4.5 of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act by letters patent issued on October 23, 1981. On the other hand, The Artisans, Life Insurance Co-operative Society, had been originally incorporated by special legislation in 1917, but it had in fact existed since 1876.

Cooperants had been incorporated by a special act of the legislature of the province of Quebec in 1962 under the name of Assurances U.C.C., Mutual Company, and this name was changed by order in council on April 17, 1973, to Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Company. Assurances U.C.C., Mutual Company, was itself the result of the amalgamation of Mutual Life of U.C.C. and Mutual General Insurance Society of U.C.C. As the names indicate, these two companies were related to the Union catholique des cultivateurs, which has since become the Union des producteurs agricoles or U.P.A.

The major reason which led Cooperants to incorporate under the laws of Canada in 1981 in order to amalgamate with The Artisans was the size of the assets of The Artisans and an anticipation that it would be easier for The Artisans, with a federal charter, than for Cooperants, with a provincial charter, to expand to other Canadian provinces. However, it so happened that the projected expansion to Canadian provinces other than Quebec did not occur and that, essentially, Cooperants has remained a provincial company with operations mostly in the province of Quebec.

Contrary to many mutual insurance companies, Cooperants is a company whose members are militant and are present in nearly all regions of Quebec. It is still closely associated with the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec through the fact that their respective local jurisdictions are the same. On the other hand the local jurisdictions which existed within the old Cooperants Company will still exist in the new Cooperants Company.

The same company, the petitioner, also has a general insurance branch, namely Cooperants, General Insurance Company, also a provincially chartered company.

Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Company seeks to maintain its operations under the laws of the Province of Quebec in view of the fact that most of its operations are in Quebec, that its organization has it firmly anchored in that province, and that it no longer expects to have the same expansion opportunities in the other provinces of Canada, except through a different company with a different name as well. In fact, Cooperants wants to go back to its origins as a provincially chartered company of Quebec.

There is no need to stress as well the obvious advantages offered, for the time being at least, by the Quebec Insurance Act, except perhaps the possibility of opening a wholly owned branch which will enable it to compete on an equal footing with its main Quebec competitors, such as L'Industrielle-Alliance, Compagnie d'Assurance-vie and La Laurentienne Compagnie Mutuelle d'Assurance-vie, both with wholly owned branches for expansion and diversification purposes.

I might point out that the Cooperants consolidated assets as of December 31, 1986 were in excess of $1 billion.

Finally, honourable senators, I would simply add that the bill has the endorsement of the Superintendent of Insurance, both in Quebec and in Ottawa. In addition, as I am speaking to you in any case, notices having been duly filed there does not seem to be any objection to this change.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

[English]

ILLITERACY IN CANADA

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn calling the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, I apologize for the fact that this order has been standing in my name for some time. With the amount of business going on in the Senate it is sometimes difficult to find an opportunity to speak.

However, in the course of this debate on illiteracy in Canada we have certainly had a most interesting and worthwhile discussion. It is no exaggeration to say that the subject of illiteracy has certainly attracted the attention of the media more than ever during the last few months. I suppose what captures our attention are the staggering figures involved. Four million adult Canadians are unable to read or write at a level which enables them to function adequately in our society.

[Senator Cogger]

What is of great concern, of course, is the evidence of the economic and social costs of illiteracy.

● (1430)

This problem of illiteracy is really rather shocking. In our society only about 70 per cent of our young people graduate from high school. Even among those who graduate a significant number have difficulty reading and writing at a level that would enable them to function in today's society. We now know, too, that 70 per cent of the functionally illiterate were born Canadian. It is not an imported problem. The level of unemployment among the illiterate population is estimated to exceed 60 per cent, which certainly is a very clear measure of human suffering.

It hurts us to hear these statistics. We might consequently interpret this information to mean that the incidence of illiteracy is growing. I believe, honourable senators, that this is not the case. Illiteracy was as prevalent yesterday as it is today, but it is just more visible primarily because it is running out of places to hide.

I have endeavoured to find statistics on illiteracy from other countries. They are difficult to find, although I did find a few, and they may be of interest to honourable senators. None of the figures is too recent, and I assume that the rate of illiteracy has dropped in the countries I am quoting, although even that assumption may not be a proper one.

In 1946 the rate of illiteracy in France was 3.6 per cent, and in the same year the rate of illiteracy in Belgium was 3.3 per cent. In 1970 the rate of illiteracy in Hungary was 2.0 per cent, and in Poland it was 2.2 per cent. Our record compared to those countries I have quoted is not very good.

Prior to this age of computers and technology, poor literacy skills were not a major barrier to survival. Occupations in domestic, agriculture, fishing and woodwork, to name a few, were always available as a means to earning a living. Prior to our more sophisticated age of complicated written instructions on food, medicine or poisonous products, written street directions and written job or social assistance applications, people with poor literacy skills could get by more adequately.

But now the information age is here. Technology is here. The goods and the services that we produce must compete in a global market. Keeping informed of new developments and new technologies is a key to survival in this marketplace. Certainly, we must move information quickly and clearly, and we already have the means: writing, reading and technology. If we as a society did not have those skills, our economic survival would be doomed. Likewise, members within our society without these skills are threatened; in fact, they are at risk. They are vulnerable, often helpless, and we have generally protected many of them in the workplace and in our social structures. This protection is costly. Some of that cost is measurable; some of that cost is difficult to measure.

We can measure income support payments. We might also guess at the costs of other supports for our illiterate citizens. For example, how many of the people lining up for soup kitchens and living on our streets are there because they cannot read or write enough to gain economic independence? How many of the 60 per cent of our federal prison inmates who are functionally illiterate are there out of sheer frustration at being unable to function within the rules that they cannot comprehend?

Business and industry, too, have just begun to realize that illiteracy is costly. Because of technological change many employers are finding it necessary to send their employees on courses to learn how to handle the new machines and the new procedures. I find it amusing in a way, but they are shocked to find out that a high proportion of their employees, often as high as 30 per cent, are illiterate. I say I find it amusing because I do not know where these people have been over the last 20 years. Not only must these employers rethink their training strategies for these employees, they must face the nagging questions: How can it be that this problem has not surfaced before? What has been going on? The answers are not reassuring. Illiteracy has been hiding in the workplace, and some of the costs of that cover up are low productivity, inferior product quality, absenteeism, also many health and safety problems which lead to higher insurance costs. Medical and workers' compensation payments can be related directly to employees' inability to comprehend health safety instructions.

Many of these costs to society in general and to industry in particular have been measured in the United States. In the United States they have estimated that illiteracy costs the economy $20 billion (U.S.) annually. We have not measured our costs yet, but they are probably as high in proportion to our economy. Some estimate that the Canadian figure is approximately $2 billion.

The time has obviously come to solve this major national problem. The future of our economy demands it. A democratic society dictates that we return these lost adults to their rightful place as participants in the development of our future. Finally, compassion tells us that we must welcome these people back inside our system.

Illiteracy is everyone's problem. It cannot be solved overnight or by the actions of one single organization. No one government or level of government has the resources to eliminate the problem. We will have to rely on the goodwill and cooperation of numerous individuals and groups in our society.

I believe that there is little need to create more private or semi-private bureaucracies. We have an impressive number of groups and organizations with demonstrated skills and abilities in this area. Perhaps we should pool our resources and support them.

Laubach Canada, the major volunteer illiteracy network, for example, has developed a very successful formula. Government should take heed of this experience and their contribution prior to contemplating alternative approaches.

They have learned that confidentiality is the key to developing a tutor-pupil relationship. They have sensed how frightened, guilty or ashamed people feel about their illiteracy "secret." Offering to share this secret is a phenomenal privilege, bringing with it the responsibility of unquestioned confidentiality.

Their approach is also based on the knowledge that people who carry illiteracy into adulthood often have some very poor evaluations of themselves. In order for literacy training to even begin, these self-defeating attitudes must be dealt with delicately. Hence, the Laubach insistence on a one tutor-one pupil approach, or "each one teach one." That is the second major reason for their success. It is clear that the voluntary approach must remain sacrosanct. Government strategy should build upon that foundation.

Government has a major role to play in the coordination of literacy efforts. Improved coordination will not only catalyse the exchange of information and sharing of resources, it will also bridge the gap between government and community-based literacy endeavours.

I believe that government has the leading role in searching for and developing new initiatives to meet particular needs as they are identified. A good example of a creative and successful literacy program designed for a particular group is "The Sentence To Read" project in Kentucky. The project was specifically designed to develop literacy for youth in trouble. There are many good examples in Canada which need funding and coordination.

Provincial governments must and, in fact, do have administrative structures already in place through which they can assume these roles of leadership. What is needed is the commitment and more resources. All levels of government can help in providing these resources.

Unfortunately, honourable senators, these efforts will be required for decades to come unless we can turn off the tap that produces the problem. Canadians brag about having in Canada one of the best public school education systems, and we spend billions of dollars every year to maintain that system. A question to be asked surely must be: Why are we still producing graduates who are not capable of reading and writing at an acceptable level? In Canada, by law, students have to be in school until the age of 16. Yet, even after those required years in a learning environment many still come out functionally illiterate. This, I believe, is the most discouraging aspect of the illiteracy problem.

In a recent article for Southam News Frank Smith talks about the failure of formal education. He states that schools are not good places for learning. Most learning, he claims, is done outside schools. I agree with Mr. Smith, that oftentimes schools do not take into account all of the learning that is happening outside the school system. Inside the classroom everything is structured. Drills are designed the same way for everyone, and students almost have to forget what they have learned at home or in their environment.

I had the privilege while Minister of Social Reform in New Brunswick to criss-cross the province while holding public hearings on educational reform. I met with parents, teachers, school board officials, students, employers, and ordinary interested citizens. Everywhere I went the turnout was excellent and the interest was evident.

We heard it again and again: The educational system can and must do more. Participants felt that the public school education system had drifted too far away from the basics. Schools are no longer the centres of excellence where one was challenged, where one received the germ which provided the desire to discover and continue learning. I concluded that schools had become too much like factories, where students are often looked upon as "just passing through." So many students at community colleges and universities have told me that we need to emphasize communication skills much more.

● (1440)

New Brunswick, like most other provinces, has undertaken the task of reforming its educational system. Students will be expected to take an extended compulsory core program, and more emphasis will be placed on communication skills and basic mathematics. If children must stay in school until the age of 16—and I doubt there is anyone here who would argue that point—is it too much to expect them to at least be literate when they leave school—whether they drop out or whether they graduate? I think not. Unless we demand this from our education systems our illiteracy problem will continue to grow faster than remedial systems can mend the damage.

I believe that for us to consider that we can always correct or improve or teach people is "spinning our wheels" when there is an obvious area of neglect. Surely, we can do better in the school system than we are doing now.

It would be encouraging if parents made reading part of family activities and if they set good examples for their children. Unfortunately, many parents do not and cannot; many do not and will not. Fortunately, we have parents who can, who will and who do. I believe that recognizing realities of home life in Canada, the curriculum in every provincial jurisdiction should have as a primary goal "literate students"—literate students in a practical way—some will say "functionally literate." With the huge sums being spent on education surely we can expect and demand that this happen.

It would be nice if we could depend on all parents to help, but we certainly cannot. Rather than take the chance on parental help, basic literacy may have to become a primary responsibility of our public school system. Another generation may be more responsive, but my experience—and the experience of many of the senators in this chamber—is that the response is not there at the present time.

The cost in human suffering and the cost in economic terms is too great to leave literate skills to chance. It is not easy in times where everything happens at the touch of a button. Many Canadians have come to think that books have gone the way of the dinosaurs. In an age where the next generation of televisions will be three dimensional we sometimes wonder where books will fit in for most people.

The facts are all around us. Universities and colleges continue to complain that students from high schools are not always ready for advanced studies.

[Senator Robertson.]

I know that many of you have read a lot of information in the papers recently, but I want to point out to honourable senators that the recognition of the illiterate high school drop-out or the high school graduate is not just something that happened in 1987. I have here a copy of a press clipping dated February 17, 1985, from the Winnipeg Free Press. It states:

About one in every five Manitobans does not read or write well enough to function properly in business and social life.

In one Winnipeg vocational high school alone, 25 students have no reading or writing skills beyond Grade 2.

I have another quote which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on May 31, 1985. It states:

Almost one-third of Ontario's working francophones are functional illiterates, according to a study released Thursday.

It goes on. It becomes quite depressing.

The next quote appeared on October 16, 1986. It states:

An agency of the United Nations says it believes more than a quarter of Nova Scotia's population is illiterate—meaning some 150,000 of our people cannot read or write—

The next article appeared in the Toronto Star on October 6, 1986. It states:

Incredible as it seems, 42 per cent of first-year students at McMaster University in Hamilton have flunked a new mandatory literacy test.

That is quite an indictment of the school system.

There is another article under the heading "University grammar test results dismal," which appeared on October 10, 1986, from Niagara Falls, Ontario. It states:

Almost 40 per cent of students who took a writing assessment at Brock University have been "strongly recommended" for remedial work on their grammar.

In an article which appeared on September 7, 1985, in the Toronto Globe and Mail under the heading of "Literacy of college students found declining," it states:

At Centennial College in Scarborough, about 40 per cent of students are reading at or below the Grade 9 level;

At Toronto's Seneca College, about 25 per cent of students are also reading at or below the Grade 9 level;

At Sheridan College in Oakville, between 30 and 40 per cent of the student population reads at mid-Grade 10 levels;—

It goes on and on. You have read the headlines. Too many of us have closed our eyes to this, expecting that at some time the public school system will wake up.

I have an article from Chatelaine magazine of April 1987. I am sure that you will remember this one. It states:

"I couldn't read until I was 35." Like a few million other Canadians, I went through school without becoming literate.—

It is a sad indictment of our school system in Canada.

Approximately 30 per cent of our students do not finish high school, and of that group a large percentage is known to be functionally illiterate. The public education system is therefore not meeting the needs of numerous young Canadians who will continue to add to the adult population illiteracy list. We cannot continue to address this disastrous issue by looking at it only as an adult problem. If the public school system had been doing their job properly, we would have an adult illiteracy problem that would be significantly less.

I agree with my colleagues that illiteracy is our country's national shame. We have now at least recognized the extent and the seriousness of the problem, but I believe that we have to get on with addressing the solutions to the problem. My personal view is that the problem has to be addressed at its roots—that is, at the public school system. I am convinced that we can do a better job and that with time we can eliminate illiteracy or at least reduce it to a level acceptable to a civilized and developed country such as Canada.

We have little to say about the education curriculum at the provincial level, but surely there must be a way to get our message to the provinces so that they know that, generally speaking, the job that they are doing is not satisfactory.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is Senator Fairbairn's inquiry. As she is not here today, I will take the adjournment, on the understanding that if anyone else wishes to speak I will be glad to yield to them, because I do not wish to speak on it myself.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL POLICY—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Spivak calling the attention of the Senate to the question of a national policy on child care.—(Honourable Senator Frith.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak on Order No. 19, dealing with a national policy on child care. This is Senator Spivak's inquiry. If some other honourable senator wishes to speak on it she might know about it, in which case they might prepare to do so; otherwise, Senator Spivak might wish to close the debate.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I have nothing further to add to the subject since I spoke on it some time ago. However, the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology still has before it a study of the special committee on child care and has not completed it. Perhaps this could remain on the order paper, because when the Senate committee has completed its study, there may be senators who will wish to speak on this particular subject.

I do not wish to close the debate at this time. I would prefer that this inquiry remain on the order paper until the study is completed.

Senator Frith: That is reasonable, honourable senators. However, perhaps we will have it stand in Senator Spivak's name, because people who wish to intervene are more likely to speak to her than they are to me.

Order stands in name of Senator Spivak.

● (1450)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we adjourn, I remind honourable senators—if Senator Doody does not mind—that three committees will be meeting when the Senate rises. The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet in room 256-S; the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Subcommittee on Classifications and Salaries will meet in room 263-S; and the Special Senate Committee on National Defence will meet in room 356-S.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 4, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS FOR 1987
CROP YEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, it has been almost three weeks since I asked the Leader of the Government if he was ready to make an announcement with respect to the price of grain in western Canada and whether or not there was to be a deficiency payment or some other type of payment for the 1987 crop. I asked these questions before the summer adjournment, and at that time the Leader of the Government indicated that the Prime Minister and members of the government would be meeting with farmers, farm groups and provincial governments on those matters, and following those meetings an announcement would be made as to a solution. In other words, he acknowledged there was a severe problem and that the government was working on it.

It is now November 4 and the crop has long since been harvested. Farmers in the grain sector are now able to see the severe difficulty with respect to grain prices. Is the Leader of the Government now ready to make an announcement?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have nothing to announce in that respect today.

Senator Olson: In order to give comfort to the producers, could the Leader of the Government give us an indication whether or not the government has this under active consideration? Will an announcement be made this year, or will there be no indication at all?

Senator Murray: I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful to the honourable senator, but I shall make inquiries of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and report, if there is anything further to report, when appropriate.

TRANSPORT

TASK FORCE ON ALCOHOL AND DRUG USE IN RAILWAY
INDUSTRY—SCOPE OF CONFIDENTIAL SURVEY

Hon. Charles Turner: After reading the Saturday Night Magazine I understand that the Leader of the Government is the smartest Tory in Canada, so I expect many answers today.

Recently the employees of the CNR in the Great Lakes region received a letter, which stated, in part:

The consulting firm of Price Waterhouse is currently contacting some CN employees to request their participation in a confidential survey on alcohol and drug use in the railway industry.

I wish to emphasize that this survey is not sponsored by CN, and the railway will not be given any information relating to it. This survey is being conducted on behalf of the Task Force on Alcohol and Drug Use in the Railway Industry, which has been established by the Minister of Transport.

At the top of this letter the following handwriting appears:

Charlie, ask the minister (Crosbie) if this included him.
He's classed as the brains or leader.

I have a question for the Leader of the Government from the employees of the CNR. Will this survey include all officials of the CNR, especially the Honourable John Crosbie and all his officials and Department of Transport employees, as he is the one who ordered the establishment of the task force?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall seek to obtain a copy of the terms of reference of that task force and any information that is available on its methodology and bring it to the attention of the honourable senator.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LONDON, ONTARIO LAYOFFS—JOB GUARANTEES

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, when Parliament passed Bill C-18, the National Transportation Act, 1987, and Bill C-19, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, 1987, in June of 1987 it was led to believe that those bills were the greatest thing since the introduction of sliced bread and would lead to more jobs and stronger regional economies. Honourable senators, the chickens have come home to roost. We are moving jobs to other areas and are creating layoff problems in those former areas.

On Friday, October 30, 1987, at 9.20 a.m., 44 CN employees were notified of a big layoff that is to take place in London, Ontario. Area MPs were notified of the layoff on October 28, and the union was notified of the layoff on October 29. The employees were told that those jobs would be axed on February 1, 1988, and that the employees could apply for 28 jobs in Toronto and three jobs in Montreal.

Honourable senators, the following question arises: Will these jobs be guaranteed if the employees move to Toronto or Montreal?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am not sure that I caught the last part of the question, but I believe it related to job guarantees for employees who are being displaced by CN. I would have thought that those matters were covered in the various agreements between the company and the union, but, in any case, the honourable senator will know, as a former railroader, that what is at stake here is the competitiveness and the survival of a Canadian company that is engaged in a highly competitive business. The honourable senator will also know that regardless of the bills passed by Parliament some time ago relating to the National Transportation Act, the company must be on top of market conditions. It is difficult for the company, and certainly impossible for the government, to give the kinds of guarantees the honourable senator seems to seek, which is that there will never be any changes. The long-term profitability, the competitiveness and, as I said, the survival of that company is what is at stake.

LONDON, ONTARIO LAYOFFS—POSSIBLE DELAY OF IMPLEMENTATION—CONSULTATIONS WITH CITY COUNCIL AND UNION

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, I attended a meeting held at the Holiday Inn in London, Ontario, with the former President of the CNR, Dr. LeClair, the mayor, the deputy mayor and the council members of the city of London. At that time Dr. LeClair faithfully promised that no decisions to cut jobs in the London area would be made until the mayor, the deputy mayor and the members of city council were notified.

A headline in the London Free Press of Saturday, October 31, 1987, reads: "CN Rail's job cuts 'callous,' mayor says". That article states, in part:

Gosnell said the job cuts are 'callous' and it is the third time CN reneged on promises to consult with the city on any planned reductions in its London operation.

There were 87 jobs cut last year, and 400 over the past five years.

My question is: Will officials of the CNR delay the implementation of this cutback until after they meet with the members of the union and the members of council of the city of London?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will ask the minister who reports to Parliament for Canadian National, Mr. Crosbie, to furnish a reply to that question.

Senator Turner: Further, why did CNR officials not keep their promise to the City of London and the employees that they would be notified in advance of proposed cutbacks?

Senator Murray: I will refer that question to the minister as well.

LONDON, ONTARIO LAYOFFS—EFFECT ON AND POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF SUPERVISORY POSITIONS

Hon. Charles Turner: Further, do these cutbacks in the London accounting department affect any supervisory positions, and if so, how many?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): That is a question seeking statistical information and should probably be put on the order paper, but I will see if a reply can be obtained to it readily.

Senator Turner: Further, will those supervisory personnel be transferred to other terminals, and if so, where, and in what official capacity will those supervisory employees be placed?

● (1410)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the answer to that question would depend completely on the answer to the immediately preceding question.

JOB SECURITY AND RETRAINING PROGRAM—STATUS AND APPLICATION

Hon. Charles Turner: I have a further question. The government of the day, under the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin as Minister of Transport, established the job security and retraining program of $50 million. Is this program still in effect, and how and when does a laid-off or cut-off employee apply for saving benefits?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am sorry, I do not know the answer to that question, honourable senators.

LONDON, ONTARIO LAYOFFS—TORONTO COST-OF-LIVING COMPENSATION

Hon. Charles Turner: Recent statistics inform us that a person moving to the city of Toronto, Ontario, needs at least $9,000 extra pay per year just to break even with the increased cost of living in the city of Toronto. Will the government of the day fully compensate any of the laid-off 36 unionized employees who desire to move to Toronto?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think I can with some confidence answer that question in the negative.

Senator Turner: Thank you very much, sir; I will remember that in the next election.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Thank you, sir.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA TO MEMOTEC—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING—GOVERNMENT ACTION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. I ask him if he has a delayed answer for me today, or if he answered my question some time when I did not notice, because I see by my notebook that it was September 29 when I asked him whether or not Memotec Corporation had been asked to withhold an announcement of its bid for Telelobe.

The question was simple. It was: Is it true that they were asked to withhold making an announcement from January 5 to February 9, and if so, what was the reason for withholding it? That is all.

I see that they are looking puzzled about this, but there are a number of clouds—

Senator Doody: I thought I was looking learned.

Senator Olson:—hanging over what I think are some innocent people involved in all of this.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): That is the first time that you have evoked a possibility that there are innocent people involved.

Senator Olson: I am sure of that.

Senator Murray: Good!

Senator Olson: But there might be someone who is not so innocent, too. That is what we want to find out, and that is what we need some answers on.

Senator Murray: I am glad that you have changed your mind.

Senator Olson: Would the deputy leader like to deliver on his undertaking that he would give me a reply so that we can clear this matter up?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I delivered a delayed answer on Memotec to this chamber either last week or the previous week. I do not recall the exact wording of it, but I suggest that Senator Olson check back through Hansard. If the answer that was delivered was not satisfactory, I will certainly undertake to do more research on his behalf.

Senator Olson: Thank you very much.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

FIJI

CURRENT POLITICAL SITUATION—GOVERNMENT STANCE AT COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE—CONSULTATIONS WITH FIJIAN COMMUNITY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer. It is an answer to a question asked by Senator Marsden on October 1, 1987. It deals with Fiji—Current Political Situation.

[Senator Murray.]

If Senator Marsden wishes me to read it I will. Otherwise, I ask that the answer be taken as read and form part of today's proceedings.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Is it a long answer?

Senator Doody: It is almost a page.

Senator Marsden: All right.

(The answer follows:)

The Government of Canada is clearly on record as having strongly condemned the two military coups initiated by Colonel Rabuka. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Honourable Joe Clark, most recently issued a statement to this effect on October 2. On October 15, Colonel Rabuka declared Fiji a republic. On the same day the Governor-General requested that the Queen relieve him of his office as he no longer felt able to carry out fully the duties of his office. The Queen accepted his resignation on that date with "regret".

In view of the situation the leaders attending the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in Vancouver issued, as part of the final declaration, a statement on Fiji that expressed the hope that the country would return to democratic principles that respected the rights of all citizens equally. The statement also noted that because of Colonel Rabuka's actions Fiji could no longer be considered a member of the Commonwealth. Since that time, the Government of Canada has continued to view the situation in Fiji with concern. The Government of Canada is continuing to monitor developments closely and has maintained close consultation with other countries in the region. Some members of the Fijian community in Canada have expressed their concern to the Government. It is normal Canadian policy not to officially recognize new regimes or governments following extra constitutional changes in a particular country. The Government of Canada nevertheless continues to maintain diplomatic relations with Fiji and to provide consular protection to Canadian citizens who may be in Fiji.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON AGING

MEMBERS BY FEDERAL DISTRICT OR PROVINCE

Question No. 32 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

3rd September, 1987—What are the names of all Members of the National Advisory council on Aging, broken down by federal district or province?

Reply by the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

PROVINCE

YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

MEMBERS

Mr. William Smoler
406 Hoge Street
WHITEHORSE, Yukon
Y1A 1W2
Vacant

BRITISH COLUMBIA	Mrs. Patricia Moir 6 - 511 Braid Street PENTICTON, British Columbia V2A 4Y4
ALBERTA	Mrs. Thelma Scambler 9526 - 86 Street EDMONTON, Alberta T6C 3E9
SASKATCHEWAN	Miss Madge McKillop 1009 - 514 23rd Street SASKATOON, Saskatchewan S7K 0J8
MANITOBA	Vacant
ONTARIO	Mr. Joel Aldred Postal Box 122 PORT PERRY, Ontario L0B 1N0  Dr. Kappu Desai 173 Cassandra Boulevard DON MILLS, Ontario M3A 1T4  Dr. Charlotte Matthews 673 Hollywood Place SARNIA, Ontario N7V 2J3  Vacant
QUEBEC	Mr. Antonio Capobianco 6821, rue St-Denis MONTREAL (Québec) H2S 2S3  Mrs. Louise Francœur 10, rue de L'Anse BEAUMONT (Québec) G0R 1C0  Mr. Roland Gagné 11790, rue Pasteur MONTREAL (Québec) H3M 2P6  Mr. Yvon-R. Tassé 2052, rue Boisjoli SILLERY (Québec) G1T 1E1  Sister Marie Bonin 138, rue St-Pierre MONTREAL (Québec) H2Y 2L7
NEW BRUNSWICK	Mrs. Barbara Grogan Pinegrove 521 Woodstock Road FREDERICTON, New Brunswick E3B 2J2
NOVA SCOTIA	Vacant
PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND	Mr. Joseph Murphy 18 Laurie Drive PARKDALE, P.E.I. C1A 0M8

NEWFOUNDLAND

Mrs. Grace Sparkes
25 Oxen Pond Road
ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland
A1B 3J2

PRIVATE BILL

COOPERANTS, MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for the second reading of the Bill S-14, An Act to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the Province of Quebec.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if I understand well the purpose of this bill—and Senator Cogger will correct me if I am wrong when he closes the debate—essentially the problem that the bill addresses arises from the fact that insurance companies can operate under either federal or provincial law. As has happened on previous occasions, amalgamations sometimes take place between a company operating under federal law and a company operating under provincial law. The decision then has to be made as to the law under which the amalgamated company wishes to operate.

In this case the original decision was to operate under federal law. One of the reasons for that was that the companies to be amalgamated felt that there would be more opportunities for expansion of their business throughout Canada if they operated under the federal statute. Another factor was the rather impressive size of the assets and the share value of one of the companies that was being amalgamated.

Since then, the new amalgamated company has decided that it would prefer to operate under the laws of Quebec only. There are some technical advantages to its so doing, but, essentially, it has decided that it wants to restrict its operation to Quebec and, as I say, to take advantage of some additional aspects to operating under Quebec law, as outlined by Senator Cogger.

Honourable senators, if I am correct in my understanding of the situation, then, obviously, the bill should go to committee and be dealt with in the normal course. I also want to underline that the bill has the endorsement of the Superintendent of Insurance, both in Quebec and in Ottawa, and all the necessary notices have been filed without any objection being taken.

Again, if I am right in my summary, it seems to me, honourable senators, that this application should go to the committee for the usual study and report.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Cogger, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

SPEAKER OF LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before we proceed further with the Orders of the Day, I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to the Honourable David Carter, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, who has honoured us with his presence in the gallery.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—
CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, Senator Forsey expected to be here at 3 o'clock this afternoon, and I am not sure whether he is available immediately. Perhaps we could deal with the other items of business on the order paper and revert to this order. I will try to seek Senator Forsey out.

The Hon. the Speaker: Are honourable senators agreed that we proceed with the Orders of the Day until 3 o'clock, at which time we shall revert to Order No. 6?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM ENTITLED "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—PUBLIC
RESPONSE TO PETITION—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the response of Canadians to a petition mailed out, calling upon Parliament to urge the government to act on the motion dealing with the production of the NFB film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss".—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, in line with the action I have taken on the National Film Board film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", I just want to give a three or four-minute up-date on the petition and its response.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if I might intervene, I must inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Marshall speaks now, his speech will close the debate on this inquiry.

{The Hon. the Speaker.}

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I do not believe that is so. I think the honourable senator might adjourn the debate in his own name, as he has been doing for some time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I think that is correct, Mr. Speaker, because he has not finished his introduction. Therefore, he is not exercising his right of reply.

Senator Marshall: I want to assure the Speaker that this will be the second-last dissertation he will be hearing from me.

Senator Doody: No! No!

Senator Marshall: Tomorrow I shall table the petition.

To proceed with the up-date on the results of the petition on the National Film Board work entitled "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", not including today's returns, we now have 13,816 signatures over and above the 50,330 persons whose executive members have spoken for them in support of my action to have the film corrected.

I want to say a brief word about a news story that was carried in the Ottawa Citizen on Friday, October 30. In it appeared a photograph of three veterans of the Royal Flying Corps, standing in front of a painting by Robert Bradford. Incidentally, this is the same Robert Bradford I spoke of last Wednesday, October 28. In a letter, which I quoted then, he described how Bishop would not have been able to handle his aircraft unaided on the ground, after landing, to shoot holes in it, which is the NFB's outrageous suggestion in the film.

The title of Robert Bradford's painting is "Dawn Attack". It shows the moment on June 2, 1917, when an enemy aircraft that Billy Bishop was attacking had collided with a tree. I want to make a couple of significant points about that event.

First, all three of the veterans knew Billy Bishop through the years until his death in 1962. Despite the statement in the film that "everyone knew that Bishop was fraudulent," none of the three had any doubts whatsoever about Bishop's honesty.

Honourable senators, the same day the story appeared in the Citizen I received a letter from one of the RFC veterans in the picture, Banfield Taylor. I will read his letter:

The Honourable Jack Marshall

Senate of Canada

Dear Sir:

In August you sent to me a memo with reference to the production by the NFB "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss".

As a member of the RFC 1917-19 we all found this film to be full of untruths and actually disgusting.

Remember, honourable senators, that from 1917 to 1919 he served.

Owing to a fall in early August I was immobile for eight weeks. Enclosed is a copy of the petition you sent me which has been signed by some of my friends, all senior officers in the Canadian Armed Forces.

May I express my thanks and how grateful we all are for your efforts in trying to amend the injustice to the memory of a truly great pilot.

The NFB production betrays not just Billy Bishop but also Banfield Taylor and his comrades, and it simply cannot be allowed to continue in its present defamatory state.

In July a museum, the Billy Bishop Building, was opened in Owen Sound in honour of Billy Bishop. The Air Force Association just last month announced a new annual award to be presented in honour of Billy Bishop, and all of those honours are happening while a government agency continues to show its anti-Bishop film.

I mention this again, honourable senators, to indicate that each day as the weeks pass, someone refers to the Billy Bishop film and the unfair way in which it was presented.

There is no doubt, honourable senators, that next Wednesday, November 11, at school assemblies in Canada, the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" will be shown, and those assemblies will conclude—as did the Grade 9 student to whom I referred in an earlier speech—that our most honoured veteran, our most highly decorated Canadian, was a fake.

I hope that we may be able to influence those with the authority to resolve the unacceptable blight on the record of one of Canada heroes; and, as I indicated to honourable senators, tomorrow I will be tabling the petition.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

● (1430)

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—
CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 6:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, if the Committee of the Whole is prepared to proceed, before we call Senator Forsey, who appeared before us last time and who has agreed to come back because a few senators had more questions, perhaps in the general order of business I might report that the steering committee has met since the last meeting. I shall make a complete report at the next meeting of the Committee of the Whole. One of the decisions taken by the steering committee was to hear all those who had requested to appear before the Committee of the Whole, plus three other persons. We have been attempting to reach those who indicated a desire to appear before us. Today we will hear the conclusion of Senator Forsey's testimony and the testimony of the Honourable Charles Caccia, MP.

I might also report—and there will be a further report on this matter as well—that the task force of this committee has had in the past ten days two days of hearings in Whitehorse, two days of hearings in Yellowknife, and one day of hearings in Iqaluit. We had excellent attendance at the hearings. I would like to thank my colleagues who served on the task force for their very constant attention to the work of the committee. It was not an easy series of hearings as many people appeared before us, but it was a very useful series of hearings.

Senator Thériault: Mr. Chairman, how many people or organizations have asked to appear before the Committee of the Whole?

The Chairman: At the moment we have something of the order of 45 individuals or representatives of organizations who have requested to appear.

Senator Thériault: Is it the steering committee's intention to hear all those who have applied to appear before the committee?

The Chairman: The decision of the steering committee—and a list of the names of those who have requested to appear has been distributed—is to hear all those who expressed a desire to appear before us, as well as three other persons.

Senator Thériault: Mr. Chairman, you said three other persons?

The Chairman: Yes. The steering committee requested me to invite two university professors and a previous Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau. Those requests are now going forward to the individuals concerned.

Senator Doody: I might say, Mr. Chairman—and you can correct me if I am wrong—that the Committee of the Whole still has the right to suggest other names and extend other invitations if we feel that there are people who can bring us further information, another point of view, or whatever.

The Chairman: That is absolutely correct. There was no cut-off of any kind on other persons who might be interested in appearing or whom members of the committee might wish to invite to appear.

To be precise, the committee requested me to invite the following persons: The Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Professor Peter Russell, University of Toronto, and Professor Allan Cairns, University of British Columbia.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, you mentioned a decision. I suppose that is a recommendation from the steering committee to the Committee of the Whole.

The Chairman: Yes, Senator Flynn, you are correct in that regard. If the Committee of the Whole did not wish to accept that recommendation, the Committee of the Whole would certainly be within its rights to vote against such a recommendation.

However, I believe I prefaced my comments by saying that I was advising the Committee of the Whole that I would make my formal report at the next meeting of the committee.

Therefore, my comments are for information only at this point, and I will submit my formal report at the next meeting, at which time the Committee of the Whole, of course, will have the perfect right to question, change or vote against the recommendations of the steering committee if they so wish.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned last time, you had a list of senators who wished to ask questions of Dr. Forsey. Can you now tell us who is on that list?

The Chairman: As a matter of fact, Senator Frith, I was about to propose that we start afresh, because there are a number of senators who were present at that time who are not here today. However, I was about to suggest that we start with Senator Neiman, whose name was first on my list from last time. Thereafter, we will see who else wishes to question Dr. Forsey.

If that is agreeable, honourable senators, then we will ask Dr. Forsey to join us.

Senator Frith: If there are other senators present today who were on the list from last time, I presume you will be asking them to proceed since they will assume that they have held their place.

The Chairman: Yes. As a matter of fact, I tried to reach a number of those senators prior to today's meeting to determine whether or not they were prepared to proceed today. Some of them told me that their questions had already been answered during the testimony, and so on, so I thought the best thing would be to start afresh. However, I do have three names left over from last time, and those senators are here today: Honourable Senators Neiman, McElman and Marsden.

[Translation]

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, the Honourable Eugene Forsey was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Your are listening, dear Senator Forsey, you can hear me?

Dr. Forsey: Yes, very well, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: So again I welcome you. You have been kind enough to come back today to answer further questions from honourable senators. I know you have asked to leave at 3.40 p.m. at the latest, if I understood correctly, because you have another appointment.

So I would ask honourable senators to keep that time limit in mind. We greatly appreciate that you have agreed to reappear before the Senate Committee of the Whole, for the fourth time, I believe.

He shall proceed directly with the questions of honourable senators. The first name on the list is that of Senator Neiman, followed by Senator McElman.

● (1440)

[English]

The first name on my list is Senator Neiman.

Senator Neiman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The Chairman.]

Dr. Forsey, I had hoped to be able to put my question to you on the last occasion you were here because of the particular significance of that day. It happened to be the day on which there were awards being presented in this chamber during a ceremony celebrating Persons Day. That, of course, is of particular significance to all the women of Canada and, I hope, to all senators.

Dr. Forsey, I would like you to comment on your perception of the possible impact of certain provisions in the Meech Lake Accord on the interests and rights of women. I am referring in particular to paragraph 2.(1)(b), which states:

2.(1)(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

I would also like to refer you to subsection 2.(3), which states:

2.(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

I would like to hear your views on the possible impact this may have. I am sure you are aware that many women's groups have expressed their concern about these provisions.

Dr. Forsey: Yes, Senator Neiman, and I think particularly in the light of section 16 of the accord, which appears to make everything in the Constitution and in the Charter subject to this new principle of interpretation, the distinct society of Quebec, with the exception of multiculturalism and the provisions dealing with aboriginals and, by a side wind, in the section on immigration, mobility rights. Everything else appears to be subject to the principle of the distinct society.

[Translation]

An interpretation of the Constitution must be consistent with this principle.

[English]

It is clearer in the French text than in the English text, which says that the Constitution shall be interpreted in a manner "consistent" with the distinct society.

The fact that there is nothing in section 16 relating to the gender equality section of the Charter, as the joint committee has called it, is, I think, significant. There is legal opinion that has been presented to the joint committee that the section on gender equality—the rights of women, the anti-discrimination section—is still preserved. However, there is also legal opinion to the contrary.

Between these two expert legal opinions I certainly do not dare to advance any claim to judge, but it illustrates, once again, that we shall not know the answer to many of these things in the accord until we hear it from the Supreme Court of Canada. The defenders of the accord are delighted with this. They say, "Leave everything to the Supreme Court of Canada. Don't worry about anything. The Supreme Court of Canada is bound to give you a right and constructive and useful and careful and reasonable decision. Don't worry about anything." I have great confidence in the Supreme Court of Canada, but I do not think that this is really satisfactory. I think we ought to have something clearer, and not simply be told to wait until the Supreme Court of Canada gives a decision.

To the best of my belief, the women's organizations in Quebec have said they are not worried about this. That is very nice, and I must say that recent developments in Quebec with regard to the rights of women have been positive, as far as I am aware. However, this idea that you can simply trust future governments and future legislators to do what is right and reasonable and nice and decent is not good enough if you are dealing with a Constitution. If you could always trust governments and legislatures to behave properly, we should not need a Charter, and we should not need a Constitution; we would all be in heaven where these things are superfluous.

I feel uneasy about this. It is, perhaps, possible that in fact women's rights and other rights in the anti-discrimination clause of the Charter are preserved, but it is possible they are not. I am worried about it, and I do not feel happy in being told that I must wait until I do not know when, when there is a decision from the Supreme Court of Canada on these matters. It may take a very long time, and it may be a very expensive process as well.

Senator Neiman: Dr. Forsey, do you believe those same provisions might have an impact on the rights and interests of the aboriginal and native peoples of Quebec?

Dr. Forsey: I think they might, in spite of the proviso in section 16 of the accord, which seems to protect them. It is significant that two of the witnesses before the joint committee—Professor Wayne MacKay of the Dalhousie Law School and Professor William Lederman of the Queen's Law School—seemed to think that this did not provide a guarantee for the aboriginal people. I hope I am not misinterpreting what they have said, but I read it very carefully. Professor Lederman, of course, is a defender of the accord. Both professors indicated that they did not think this was a complete bar. I have the quotations from their evidence here. If necessary, I can look through my material and find those quotations, but I think I am correctly interpreting what they have said.

In effect, both of them said that there are two principles here, and the Supreme Court, if this ever comes before it, will have to decide which of them takes precedence over the other.

Senator Frith: Dr. Forsey, section 16 is the section that seems to give rise to this concern about what has been described as the Charter being "overridden" by section 2. Remembering that you think it should be made clearer, and should not be left to the courts to decide whether or not the Charter is overridden, would you support an amendment to section 16 that would read something like:

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms . . .

You could add:

. . . section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 . . .

And you might feel that that should be broader.

. . . or the distribution of powers in sections 91 and 92 of the Constitution Act 1867.

Would that make it clearer?

Dr. Forsey: If I recall exactly what you said, Senator Frith, I think so. I think these things should all be kept out from under.

Incidentally, the joint committee appeared to regard this with horror. They said that if there was going to be something provided to protect the rights of women, what about all these other rights? What about discrimination on grounds of religion, ethnic origin, language, and so forth? It was indicated that if you excepted the rights of women from the operation of the distinct society you must except all these others. The committee appeared to regard this with absolute horror, and said, "What would become of the whole thing?" My comment, as you may have noticed if you read my analysis of the joint committee's report, was, "What, indeed?" It seems to me that none of these rights should be subjected to these new principles of interpretation. The Charter should be there. It should be supreme in regard to all these things.

The Chairman: The next questioner will be Senator McElman, followed by Senator Marsden.

Senator McElman: My question follows on the discussion that has just taken place.

Dr. Forsey, you will recall during the 1981-82 period of consideration by the joint committee of the then proposals for patriation of the Constitution and its reform.

● (1450)

The government took a position on the constitutionality of what it proposed to do. At that time the Right Honourable Joe Clark, then Leader of the Opposition, took a very different position. He urged the government to submit a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, which did take place, and a ruling was given by that court which proved to be very constructive and useful at that time.

Currently, we have a situation that has created a great deal of concern among women's groups, aboriginal groups and others as to the meaning of the words "distinct society" and the effect that those words will have on the workings of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The government has said that the language in this aspect, and other aspects of the proposed accord, is purposely vague so that it can be interpreted by the courts.

The government has not been able to firmly establish what the effect of this terminology will be, although at one point it suggested, through one of its ministers, that it was simply a recognition without great effect. At the same time the Premier of Quebec, the Honourable Robert Bourassa, and Mr. Claude Morin quickly suggested that those words were going to have a tremendous effect upon interpretations that will be made by the Supreme Court of Canada.

That is a long lead-in to ask you the following: Do you not think it would be most appropriate, so that the problems in the minds of Canadians could be cleared away, that before we proceed further the government should make a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada and ask that court what the effect of that terminology will be, for example, on the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Dr. Forsey: Yes, I do think so. I think that would be most appropriate. If the Government of Canada is not prepared to do that, I would hope that a provincial government might be prepared to make a reference to its court of appeal. That was the way the problem in connection with the patriation proposals was handled. That matter went to three provincial courts of appeal. If I remember correctly, that matter went to the Quebec, Newfoundland and Manitoba courts of appeal, and then to the Supreme Court of Canada. So, even if the government here is unwilling to make the reference, I think that one might hope that some provincial government would make a reference to its court of appeal and then it might be carried on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Senator McElman: Thank you, Dr. Forsey.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator McElman. I have Senator Marsden's name, followed by Senator Marshall's name.

Senator Marsden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Forsey, Senator Neiman has asked the first question I intended to ask regarding the impact of this accord on gender equality rights in the Constitution, but may I follow with two further questions related to the process under which this debate has gone on.

I wonder if you would comment on an argument put forward by Professor Lynn Smith of the Faculty of Law of the University of British Columbia at a conference held last weekend, which seems to me to be significant to this debate. She pointed out that in this instance the burden of proof of showing that there is an error has been put not on those people who are proposing change—that is, the drafters of the Meech Lake Accord—but on women's groups or those people who testified before the joint committee. They were asked to prove that there was some error which could be described as "egregious" in order to bring about any change.

I wonder if the shifting of the burden of proof to those people who are standing for the status quo has been made before in terms of constitutional changes in this country or elsewhere, as far as you recall, and even if it has, how you would evaluate that?

Dr. Forsey: I cannot positively say that this has never been done before. It seems to me to be out of tune with anything I can recollect of previous discussions on this kind of subject. Ordinarily, the burden of proof is on the people who want to make a change.

This may reflect the fact that I was brought up as a Conservative and I may be a little prejudiced—and now I am getting very old, which makes it worse, I suppose—but I have always felt that if you are dealing with a proposal to make changes the people who want to make the changes should make the case. It is not for the people who want to keep things as they are to make the case; doubtless, they will have to argue back and forth and you will get an exchange, but the onus of proof, it seems to me, is on the people who want to make the changes.

Senator Marsden: That leads to my second question. As you know, the joint committee has recommended a permanent parliamentary committee to discuss constitutional matters that come up now on an annual basis at First Ministers' conferences.

Given the way in which the joint committee has argued this time for shifting the burden of proof to those who are questioning the change, I wonder whether you think such a committee will be helpful in the future.

I should like to raise two other examples, one of which came out of a meeting you and I attended last week at Ottawa City Hall where a member of Parliament, who had sat on the joint committee, made very incorrect statements about the history of Canada's Constitution in 1867, saying that it had been imposed by "our colonial masters." In other words, having sat on the joint committee, and as someone who speaks for the Meech Lake Accord, that member of Parliament had not bothered to inform himself of the way in which the original Constitution of the country had been drafted.

I wonder if you think that gives much hope for the possibility of help from a permanent committee?

The second example comes from a paper written by Professor Beverly Baines, Faculty of Law, Queen's University, who analyzed carefully the submissions made to the joint committee on gender and equality rights and the responses of the joint committee to these submissions. She suggests that the committee simply did not understand at all what it was that the five major women's groups which appeared before the joint committee were talking about, that even though the accord is defined in linguistic and cultural terms, the language of those five major groups was misinterpreted in some cases, and in other cases seems to have been totally ignored.

My general question is: What do you think the value of a permanent parliamentary committee would be in such cases, given the sorry history of the current joint committee?

Dr. Forsey: I think it would be useful to have one, but I am doubtful as to whether it would have a great deal of effect, notably because of the provisions of section 13 of the accord, which hit me like a bullet long after I should have wakened up to them, because it seems to me that under section 13 what you have is a statement that the deliberations of the First Ministers' conferences on constitutional matters shall include Senate reform, roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries, and "such other matters as are agreed upon."

That seems to me to mean that, in fact, nothing except Senate reform and fish can be brought up at the meetings of the First Ministers except with the unanimous consent of the premiers, and one premier can impose total silence. That seems to me to be a very serious defect in the accord which has not received as much attention as I should have expected it to.

If you have a parliamentary committee representing Parliament and the legislatures, and so forth, as suggested in the accord, it may be useful, but how far will it get? Because you can have just one eccentric, one stubborn, one selfish premier even vetoing a discussion on anything he does not like. This really scares the daylight out of me.

• (1500)

Senator Marsden: It is frightening. Assuming, though, that you are correct on that—even if you are correct and the only two subjects that can be raised are Senate reform and fisheries—if they were to proceed with the case of either Senate reform or the fisheries, do you think that a parliamentary committee holding hearings on looking into this would have any more weight than any of the other committees that have made recommendations on these issues over the years, including the Macdonald commission and the joint committee report that came down on Senate reform in January 1984, and so on? Do you think that parliamentary committee will carry any weight?

Dr. Forsey: I am doubtful about it because of the atmosphere that has surrounded this whole accord, that it is a sort of “Ark of the Covenant,” that it is sacred; that it must not be touched; that even criticism is rather nasty of people—they should be prostrating themselves before this enormous achievement and not questioning anything in it. If that kind of atmosphere survives, then how much attention will be paid by governments to even the joint parliamentary and legislative committee which is suggested? I hope that it would have some effect—I think that it would be useful; it is one of the things in the joint committee’s report that I am glad of—but, frankly, I am not very sanguine about it.

Senator Marsden: I have one last question. There are those who have argued that the joint committee’s report will be used as an interpretative document on such things as what constitute “national standards” for the federal spending power clause. Are you in agreement with that view that the joint committee report will be used as an interpretative document? If that is the case, would not reports of the various provincial legislatures on this matter also become interpretative documents?

Dr. Forsey: I think they might. I think that it is a frightful prospect, because, frankly, I think that the joint committee’s report is a bad piece of work, a shoddy piece of work. I suppose that that is disrespectful, but that is what it seems to me.

Incidentally, you mentioned the misunderstanding of the origins of the Constitution by that member of Parliament the other evening. There is much worse than that in the joint committee’s report itself where it quotes with approval—indeed, approval is putting it mildly—the preposterous rubbish that Mr. Eric Kierans produced, which was absolute nonsense from start to finish, from the first word to the last. I never saw such a complete travesty of what actually took place. Here you have a member of Parliament, a well-educated man, thinking that the British North America Act was imposed upon us by our colonial masters when, in fact, it is 99.9 per cent home-made. You have a former cabinet minister coming forward with two sets of statements which were absolute rubbish—and I am choosing my words carefully. The committee endorsed these and said that perhaps one could be forgiven for thinking that there were as many versions of the intentions of the Fathers of Confederation as there were Fathers of Confederation—on which my comment, as you may have noticed if you read what I wrote, was, “No, one could not be forgiven. The thing is preposterous.”

This ignorance in high places, this confident, bumptious ignorance in high places, is one of the most frightening features of the whole thing. Of course, I have often said that Canada is a paradise for humbugs. On no subject are the humbugs more prolific than on constitutional matters. If you have enough nerve, crust, grind and gall, you can palm yourself off on most of the people of this country as an expert on almost any subject under the sun, and more particularly on constitutional questions. No one who knows anything about it will be impressed. If I tried to palm myself off as a reincarnation of Caruso, no one who knows anything about music would be impressed; but if I had enough gall to try it, I could get away with it with an enormous number of people.

Senator Marsden: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: I have a small problem. I have two supplementary questions at the moment, and I also have four names on my list. Senator Forsey must leave us by twenty minutes to four. For the moment I will skip the supplementary questions and go directly to the questioners and ask them if they would keep in mind the clock. I have Senator Marshall next, followed by Senator Stewart.

Senator Marshall: Dr. Forsey, I have one question—and you touched on it in answer to Senator Marsden. It has to do with section 50, the roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries.

You are aware that national objectives are prominent in allocation of fish. The federal government sets a total allowable catch; the federal government manages the fish from the perspective of national objectives. Certainly, fish do not know boundaries. Since we are involved with three or four provinces, would you like to comment on the adequacy of or the reasons why the responsibilities in relation to fisheries are so prominent in the Meech Lake Accord whereas other things are not? It states: “Such other matters as are agreed upon.” Would you like to comment on that?

Dr. Forsey: I think it was, undoubtedly, put in there to please the Premier of Newfoundland. As far as I know, he is the only premier who has been raising this question. As I understand it, the people in Nova Scotia are uneasy about the possibility of any change there.

Incidentally, all he has is a guarantee that the matter will be discussed—nothing else. Presumably, it is a perpetual guarantee. He can raise the question of jurisdiction over fisheries this year, next year and the next year afterwards forever. But, that is all he has. I think that that was put in there to please him, and he apparently is satisfied with it. He is much more optimistic than I am that anything will come out of the discussions. I should think that little is likely to come out of the discussions, because the Province of Nova Scotia—and probably the other provinces particularly interested in fisheries—will be leery of this, judging by the evidence that the fisheries organizations gave before the joint committee.

Senator Marshall: During the evidence at the committee the Province of Nova Scotia indicated their concern about it from the point of view that some allocation of quotas and licensing could degenerate into interprovincial squabbles. I accept the fact that, as you say, it can be brought up, as many other things can be brought up, but I wanted to know why specifically fisheries. You gave me the answer that it was because of Newfoundland.

Dr. Forsey: I think that it was to please the Premier of Newfoundland.

The Chairman: Next is Honourable Senator Stewart, followed by Honourable Senator De Bané.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Dr. Forsey, earlier you mentioned the great reliance which will be placed upon the Supreme Court of Canada in interpreting expressions like "distinct society" if the Meech Lake Accord is approved.

In the United States, also a federal country, the argument sometimes is made that overt amendment, formal amendment, to a federal constitution is difficult, perhaps virtually impossible, where what is involved is the powers of the several states, on the one hand, and the power of the national government, on the other hand. Because overt or formal amendment is difficult, there has to be reliance on amendment by judicial interpretation and, indeed, judicial re-interpretation.

● (1510)

In the arguments and explanations put forward by the government, particularly by Senator Murray, the Mulroney government seems to be making that same argument, that is, "We will agree here on a document which allows a great latitude for interpretation—indeed, we cannot agree on a more precise document—and then we will rely on the wisdom of our judges to put the right meaning in the varying circumstances on the words we have used." Am I correct in believing that you think that this is not the right approach insofar as a federal constitution is concerned?

Dr. Forsey: Yes, I think so. This involves the whole question of these ambiguities in the accord, which I have said previously are a sort of cornucopia. I might have said that they are there by the hogshead.

Constitutions, whether they are difficult to amend or otherwise—and this one is going to be made more and more difficult to amend by this accord—will have to be interpreted by the courts. That is unavoidable; it is necessary; and it is, in some ways, desirable. But it does seem to me that if you are making a formal amendment, and that is what we are doing here—it is really a formal amendment of great significance—you want to get it as clear as possible. You do not simply want to leave it to the courts to do as they please with it. I am not a judicial activist in this way. I think judicial activism can be carried much too far. I do not think that what are, essentially, broad political decisions should be made by the judiciary. They should be made by the legislators.

[Dr. Forsey.]

I think it is the duty of the legislators to say as clearly as they can what they intend, and not simply to say to the courts, "Well, we will put something down, but it has to have a colour. That leaves you to decide whether it will be brown, white, black, pink or blue. We will be perfectly happy with whatever you do. We know that you are wise, and we know you will take account of all the various forces that are at work in society and you will produce something far better than we could think of." I do not think that is satisfactory. I think the people who draw up constitutions should say more than "We want some colour." They should say what colour they want. Then, of course, it may be for a court to say, "Well, blue is specified, but there are different shades of blue, and considering everything we think a rather pale blue is best in this case, or a royal blue in that case, or a Prussian blue in the other." I do not think they should simply be told, "You go ahead and you decide. Anything you say is all right." I do not think the situation should be wide open, and that the gates should be opened as wide as the sky and let the judges come riding by and let the legislative bodies take a back seat.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Nevertheless, Dr. Forsey, if the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord becomes the law of the land, the judges will be writing and rewriting the Constitution of Canada.

I want to ask you if, over the years, there has been any pattern insofar as the selection of judges from the various provinces are concerned. We know that there is a pattern for Quebec. How many, by convention, come from Ontario? How many, by convention, come from the four Atlantic provinces? How many, conventionally, come from the four provinces west of Ontario? I am not asking for specific data on this, but I am sure you have some idea of what the normal distribution or representation has been in the Supreme Court.

Dr. Forsey: The joint committee actually made two statements on that which were not, I think, entirely consistent. I believe I can find them here.

Senator Frith: Would you give us the page number if you find them?

Dr. Forsey: Yes. On page 10 of the report it states that, by informal allocation, there would be three to Ontario, one to British Columbia, one to the Prairie provinces, and one to Atlantic Canada. However, on page 81, it states:

... while by informal custom, there is a rough allocation (that is varied from time to time) of three judges from Ontario, two from the western provinces and one from the Atlantic provinces.

I do not know whether you have a sufficiently precise pattern to say that there is a constitutional convention, that is, a real, agreed upon constitutional convention on this subject. Apparently, the joint committee was a little uncertain about it too.

I recently saw a statement somewhere to the effect that Ontario, at the time of the appointment of Mr. Justice McIntyre, had, as it were, ceded its right pro tem to have the appointment and graciously agreed to an appointment from British Columbia. I do not mean that it did so explicitly, but I mean it did not raise any objection formally, informally, quietly, or otherwise.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): According to Senator Murray, we have here a body which is going to decide the shape of the Canadian Constitution for the future. It is clear that a majority of that body is going to come permanently from Quebec and Ontario. Do you believe, therefore, that we should, as in the United States, have a process by which justices of the constitutional court are not simply appointed by the Governor in Council but are confirmed by some body, such as the Senate? This would give some assurance to provinces such as Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and other provinces which are unlikely to be represented regularly, and even then by only one judge on this court. After all, the court is to be given the power to decide what the vague language in our Constitution means.

Dr. Forsey: It is a new idea to me. I am rather leery of the idea of confirmation by the Senate, or by the House of Commons for that matter, but this may put a new face on that. The difficulty about confirmation is that it might lead to a series of inquisitions into the lives of the nominees, and this might make it very difficult to get some very good judges.

Of course, under the arrangement in the accord they are all going to be nominated by the provinces, anyway, which throws the whole thing back. I suppose, then, the confirmation by the Government of Canada would be made subject to confirmation by the Senate or some other body.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): But the choice has to be made by the Governor in Council.

Dr. Forsey: Yes.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): And they will pick whom they wish from the list of those nominated, and we in Nova Scotia, for example, will have to live with a constitution interpreted by a body on which we may not even be represented. That certainly would not be democratic.

Dr. Forsey: Quite.

[Translation]

The Chairman: The next name on my list is Senator De Bané, followed by Senator Le Moyne.

Senator De Bané: Thank you. Dr. Forsey, we don't have enough time to discuss any details and besides, you have already done so in your answers to question put by my colleagues. I would rather ask a more general question.

If we consider the various provisions of the Meech Lake Accord, according to you, what would be the path Canada would take in future decades, considering the proposed changes? Would there be some vital changes in Canadian federalism as we have known it since 1867, or would the changes be relatively minor? Could you perhaps explain what those changes would be?

Dr. Forsey: Senator, I think there would probably be some very important extraordinary changes, if statements made by the Premier of the Province of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa and by Mr. Rémillard, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and Mr. Claude Morin and others are any indication. Mr. Bourassa referred to the greatest victory in two centuries for provincial rights and powers, and especially as far as the province of Quebec is concerned.

I think there would be some very thorough changes. For instance, according to Mr. Bourassa or Mr. Rémillard, there would be the possibility of getting involved in banking, external affairs and communications.

Senator De Bané: The issue that interests me most is, of course, the unity of this country. Considering the general philosophy of the Meech-Langevin Accord, what will become of the unity of this country in the next decades if we follow the guiding principles of the Meech Lake Accord?

Dr. Forsey: What the reaction will be? I think I already answered that question. Do you have something more specific?

Senator De Bané: I would like to know whether you think the Meech Lake Accord will strengthen the unity of this country or gradually turn it into a Confederation.

Dr. Forsey: I think the result might be to turn our federation into a Confederation in the strictly technical sense, into something far less cohesive.

Senator De Bané: Thank you, Dr. Forsey.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator De Bané. The next speaker will be Senator Le Moyne followed by Senator Fairbairn.

Senator Le Moyne: Mr. Chairman, I will state my question as briefly as possible.

Dr. Forsey, would you be so kind as to tell us what bothers you most of all in the Meech Lake Accord? Just that.

Dr. Forsey: The main issue to me is the provision about a distinct society. I say this with some hesitation, because I see several points that are both extremely important and extremely deficient. For instance, that other great new principle: linguistic duality. What does it mean for Francophones outside Quebec? I am not sure. It might mean some gains for Francophones outside Quebec, but it could also turn out to have no real impact on their situation.

On the whole, I think the main issue that worries me is the provision on Quebec's distinct society, partly because we have here something that is pretty vague. Senator Murray, Professor Beaudoin and Mr. Fortier say it does not mean much. On the other hand, Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Rémillard—personally, I do not agree with what they say. However, these are very senior and very competent politicians who have extraordinary powers in this particular area.

So that is my rather long-winded answer to your question, Senator.

Senator Le Moyne: Thank you and thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Le Moyne. Dr. Forsey, it was understood that you had to leave at 3.40 p.m. I have two more names of senators who would like to ask you some questions, but I realize the understanding was that we had to let you go.

Dr. Forsey: I think I can stay for a few more minutes, Mr. Chairman.

● (1520)

[English]

The Chairman: Honourable senators, Senator Forsey indicates that although he was due to leave at 3.40 he can stay to answer a few more questions. I have two other questioners on my list, but I must confess that I see more hands. The first on my list is Senator Fairbairn, followed by Senator Watt.

Senator Fairbairn: Dr. Forsey, I apologize if this question has been dealt with before, but I want to get it very clear in my own mind. Has the Prime Minister forfeited his position as the overall leader of the nation, the first among equals, if you will, in terms of setting the constitutional agenda? Is it your view that should this agreement go through, if a prime minister wishes to place the question of aboriginal self-government, for example, back on the constitutional agenda, that desire could be vetoed by one or more of the premiers?

Dr. Forsey: Yes, that is my view. I wondered whether I was being a little outré or extravagant in this until I happened the other day to run into a very good lawyer on the plane returning from London, Ontario. To my surprise, he agreed that this is probably what is meant. I might add that although I cannot say who he is—that would be breaking a confidence—he is not among the opponents of the accord, not to the best of my belief, at all events; he did not show any sign of that.

Senator Fairbairn: Thank you. That point is particularly important in view of the fact that the federal government has the constitutional responsibility for our First Nations. This, presumably, might mean that that federal primacy has now been interfered with.

Dr. Forsey: That is my reading of the accord.

Senator Watt: Mr. Chairman, the questions I wanted to ask Dr. Forsey have already partially been asked and the answers already partially provided. I would just like to elaborate on the question put by Senator Fairbairn, which is related to section 91, head 24, of the British North America Act. From what I gather, at this time before the Constitution is amended through the Meech Lake Accord the Government of Canada acts as trustee of the aboriginal people across the country. Tomorrow, however, we might wake up to find that that is no longer the case, that the Government of Canada will no longer have the responsibility of trusteeship with respect to the aboriginal people, and that this has become a provincial responsibility. Is that your view, Dr. Forsey?

Dr. Forsey: I believe that section 16 of the accord seems to leave intact head 24 of the act of 1867. It seems to take it out from under the operation of the two new principles of interpretation, but I am afraid I do not feel competent to answer any more fully than that. I hope that is a safeguard; I do not know.

[The Chairman.]

I have not really considered it and I have no real competence in the matter.

Senator Watt: I have one more quick question which is related to the same subject. The way I read the constitutional conference agenda item (c) it says, "such other matters as are agreed upon." That, to me, says that the Prime Minister of the country has already relinquished his responsibility as a trustee. Therefore, unanimous consent of the provinces is required.

Dr. Forsey: I think that is true with respect to any discussions in the conference. I think any premier has a veto.

● (1530)

Senator Watt: Under the heading "General" section 16 no longer applies.

Dr. Forsey: Well, it applies presumably to what the Parliament of Canada can do under head 24 of section 91. But if you are going to discuss anything further in regard to the rights of the aboriginal peoples any provincial premier can say, "No—out."

The Chairman: Senator Haidasz has appealed for one brief question, and then I have two supplementaries. Dr. Forsey, do you have any more time?

Dr. Forsey: I think I can manage another five minutes or so. I am sorry to be so sticky, but I have an appointment with a heart specialist; that's the trouble.

Senator Haidasz: Dr. Forsey, I have a simple question. In view of the overburdened Supreme Court and the slowness in getting decisions, what do you think about the possibility of having a "double-E" Supreme Court: equal—one for every province—and effective?

Dr. Forsey: Well, I think this is one of the things where you could argue theoretically, but the hard fact of the matter is that Quebec is now guaranteed three judges out of the nine, and I don't think there is any serious proposal to do anything else. I don't think that any attempt to change that would get to first base. I don't think it should, and I don't think it would. So, I think it is a purely academic question as to whether you might have something that would say everyone gets one. That, presumably, would meet Senator Stewart's difficulties, but I don't think it can be done.

The Chairman: We now have a quick supplementary from Senator Neiman.

Senator Neiman: Dr. Forsey, I am having a little problem with your comments concerning the interpretation of section 13, which amends Part VI on constitutional conferences. As I read it I cannot see where it says that it requires the unanimous consent of all of the First Ministers. The unanimous consent, as I have been able to read it, applies only to amendments to the Constitution. Am I wrong about that?

Dr. Forsey: I hope you are correct in what you say, but I am worried about this thing, because it says, "such other matters as are generally agreed upon." Now, what exactly does "generally" mean? Of course, you can then get into the question that came before the Supreme Court on the patriation reference, namely, substantial consent. Now, what does "substantial consent" mean—and they carefully avoided saying? They said, in effect, that two is not enough, but it doesn't have to be all of them, it doesn't have to be ten.

Similarly, here, what is meant by "generally agreed upon"? I don't know. It seems to me it might well be argued—and it was argued by Chief Erasmus before the joint committee, and no one contradicted him or even questioned what he said that I can recall—that it meant unanimous consent, that you can't get anything about aboriginal rights on to the agenda of the First Ministers' conference unless you have unanimous consent. I think this is one of the things that, at least, needs clearing up. It looks to me as if "generally agreed upon" means unanimous consent. It is conceivable that it doesn't. Incidentally, of course, when the Supreme Court handed down that part of the decision in the patriation case, it had no legal binding effect at all. It was merely the opinion of a number of learned people on a matter which was not within their competence.

Senator Frith: Dr. Forsey, it simply says, "agreed upon," and not "generally agreed upon."

Dr. Forsey: Doesn't it say, "generally"?

Senator Frith: It makes your position even stronger, because there is no qualification. It simply says:

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon.

I think that strengthens it.

Dr. Forsey: I think that reinforces my point. I was speaking from memory. Yes, I see it says, "... as are agreed upon." That washes out the whole question of what "generally" means, because it isn't there. It just says, "... as are agreed upon." If you have 11 people, and it is something that has to be agreed upon, then that presumably means all of the 11.

The Chairman: We have time for one final quick supplementary.

Senator McElman: Dr. Forsey, on October 23 at a state dinner in Quebec City, honouring Her Majesty, the Right Honourable Prime Minister said directly to Her Majesty:

As Your Majesty knows, we have now obtained Quebec's signature on our Constitution.

Is that accurate, or is it a misleading overstatement of the fact?

Dr. Forsey: It is not accurate at all. Nobody signed the Constitution at all. Ontario didn't sign it, Newfoundland didn't sign it, nobody signed it. There was a preliminary accord which was signed by everybody except the Premier of Quebec. But nobody signed the Constitution. Nobody does sign the Constitution.

The Chairman: We thank you, Dr. Forsey, for being prepared to return here today. We know that you now have an appointment. We thank you and will let you go.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Dr. Forsey, may we wish you good luck at your medical rendezvous. I think I can say from our observation that you appear to be in perfect health.

Honourable senators, our next witness will be the Honourable Charles Caccia.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise a question with regard to section 13 which was dealt with by Senators Fairbairn, Watt and Neiman. It seems clear that there is an obligation on the Prime Minister to call a conference with the agenda outlined there; but there is nothing in this text that prevents the Prime Minister from calling another conference on any other matter—so that the fears expressed by former Senator Forsey and by Senators Watt and Fairbairn are completely baseless. The Prime Minister can call any kind of conference on any other matter.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): That can be decided by the court.

Senator Flynn: No, not at all. Read it. It says that the Prime Minister is obliged to do that, but he is not prevented from doing anything else. It is so obvious. It would be obvious to a child, but a supposed constitutionalist like Senator Stewart should be able to read.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, for the record, on that point I think that Senator Flynn is quite right, that the Prime Minister can call it; but I think the point made by Dr. Forsey was not on the calling but on what would be on the agenda.

Senator Flynn: For this type of conference.

Senator Frith: Please let me finish. It says:

(2) The conferences convened . . .

And Senator Flynn is quite right in that it does not require the agreement of everyone to convene it. It says further:

... (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform . . .

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon.

The point being made by Dr. Forsey was not against Senator Flynn's point; he was simply saying that in order to get an item on the agenda—

Senator Flynn: Of that particular conference.

Senator Frith: —there had to be an agreement.

Senator Flynn: Of that particular conference.

Senator Frith: No.

Senator Flynn: Sure. According to a conference, he may call—

Senator Frith: It says, "conferences," plural.

Senator Flynn: Sure, but the other conferences can also be called. Come on! You read only what you like.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I note the observations of Senator Flynn and the comments made from the other side.

They will be part of the record. Perhaps when Senator Murray is before us that will be the type of question that might be clarified at that time.

Senator Flynn: Who?

The Chairman: Senator Murray, who is the architect. He possibly could help us to clear up the matter when he appears before us.

● (1540)

Senator Flynn: It is clear as far as I am concerned.

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, the Honourable Charles Caccia, PC, MP, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, if we are prepared to proceed, I would like to welcome the Honourable Charles Caccia to this Committee of the Whole hearing.

Mr. Caccia, you have provided us with a written text. It has been distributed to all the members of the committee, and you, of course, are free to follow the text or deviate from it, as you wish. I now turn the floor over to you.

Hon. Charles Caccia, P.C., M.P.: Honourable senators, it is indeed a great honour to have been invited this afternoon to have a dialogue with you on the Meech Lake Accord, a piece of legislation which, as we all know, is of the utmost importance, "utmost" because the Constitution is the frame of the house called Canada. The design of such frame, the way each component part relates to the other, and the recognition alone of component parts in the description of the house reveals how we see ourselves in such a house.

My credentials as a constitutional expert are nil. I am a consumer rather than a producer when it comes to constitutional matters, and I consider Eugene Forsey as very central to this debate, together with Pierre Elliot Trudeau. I speak as a citizen interested in the dynamics of change in Canadian society. I am very appreciative—and here I speak as an elected member of Parliament—of your invitation, not having been extended such an opportunity by the joint committee despite the fact I wrote twice to the joint committee Chair.

What I have to say is in two parts: process and substance. On process one must note that it is, to say the least, peculiar that 11 individuals should meet twice over night, agree and announce radical changes. Also peculiar is the fact that the government, immediately after, would set up a joint committee to hold public hearings in Ottawa, putting a limit of two months for the hearings; this coupled with the fact that at the beginning of the process last July the Prime Minister announced that he would not accept amendments from the committee. This announcement was reinforced by the first witness, Senator Murray. Thus, the discussion of possible amendments became pointless and the debate stultified. The joint committee heard, as you know, many witnesses, mostly organizations and specialists. The public at large across Canada did not get involved in the evolution of these constitutional changes. Hearings were held in the summer when Canada was away on holiday.

[The Chairman.]

If you ask a Canadian on a bus, train or airplane whether he or she agrees with the proposed definition of Canada, the definition drafted for them by the 11 premiers, you are likely to get a startled look except from a few well-informed individuals and activists. Canadians do not know how the definition of their own country is being changed. The process is in sharp contrast with the fine, democratic tradition rooted in consultations and meaningful hearings, which has made Canada one of the most open democracies in the world, at least until September 1984.

One of the arguments advanced by the Prime Minister is the "fragility" of the accord and that re-opening it would unravel the entire accord. If it is so "fragile," I ask: Is it really good for Canada? To add insult to injury, the process of future changes is institutionalized further into the hands of 11 premiers for years to come, with the power of veto, as you know, to any one of them who may not want a specific item placed on the agenda. What will that do, for instance, to the future of native rights or to the North? Those of you who have attended the hearings in the North have already a clear picture as to what Canadians there think of the process as well as the substance.

Discussion on process deserves attention, because never again should the same process be adopted as a model in future constitutional changes. If we are doomed by a decision that will place future initiatives in the hands of 11 premiers, the least we can do is to recommend the procedure that will open the debate to the public, with a time frame of at least one year for consultations, without political orders from above precluding reasoned and thoughtful amendments by parliamentarians, groups and individuals.

On substance it is hard to say something novel. Therefore, I will do it in a concise way, elaborating mainly on section 2(1) which, as you know, contains the definition of what Canadian society is all about. A constitution should be a forward-looking document. It should not be a document describing the past alone but, rather, a document that offers a framework for the future. Furthermore, a constitution is there to promote values. In addition to language duality there must be scope for recognition of aboriginal rights and the multicultural character of our society, for a country reaching from sea to sea in which people can move freely and have access to universal standards of social security and equality before the law. Instead, the 11 premiers engaged in a rear-view mirror description of a society as it was perhaps a long time ago with no sensitivity whatsoever to the aboriginal presence and omitting from the Canadian scene the presence of millions of men and women who may use either French or English daily, but who do not identify culturally with English or French heritage. These are Canadians in their own right, commonly referred to as members of "ethnic" groups, who want to be recognized as vibrant members of Canadian society as, in fact, they are. They are new Canadians from many continents, members of visible and invisible minorities engaged daily in the building of Canada, they are nation-builders at home and at work, and yet they are not to be found and they do not find themselves in section 2(1) of the accord.

Somehow the 11 premiers must have realized that something was missing in the definition. This explains the addition of section 16 as an afterthought, a technique which, in turn, gives reason for concern about being silent on other Charter items. I submit that section 2 is not a definition of today's Canada. It must include the aboriginal and multicultural communities as active forces participating in the shaping of Canadian society and values. For these reasons the accord is already an outdated document! If you like, it is a stillborn baby.

To sum up my definition of Canada, it seems to me:

- 1) Quebec does not need "crutches"
- 2) Other provinces, like New Brunswick, or peoples, like the Haida nation, constitute in sociological terms distinct societies;
- 3) Present politicians, like Remillard, past politicians, like Claude Morin, and future politicians could and will use the term "distinct" as a springboard for the development of the political notion of special status.

Spending powers is another area of concern. Here, what Professor Johnson said before the joint committee struck me with the same impact as what Mr. Georges Erasmus said about native rights. May I refer you here to the analysis of the report of the Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord, 1987, by Eugene Forsey, page 18:

In his (Professor Johnson's) evidence, he spoke of shared-cost programs "like medicare or hospital care", "higher education", "even the Trans-Canada Highway", programs "with the provinces administering the program in accordance with certain nationally-established standards of principles." His (Professor Johnson's) verdict was: "The Meech Lake Accord will, I am afraid, end all this; will render the Government of Canada powerless to take such initiatives in the future . . . The only requirement the opting out province would have to meet is that it carry on a program which is compatible with, which is to say capable of existing alongside the national objectives the Government of Canada was seeking to achieve by its national program . . . To tell the provinces that in the future the dissenting provinces will be paid the same as the agreeing provinces, with the minimum requirements I have mentioned . . . is surely to render a body-blow to shared cost programs . . . in the future."

● (1550)

At this point it is interesting to note that Miss Jewett asked Professor Johnson:

So your main concern would be that the variations in the programs would be such as to destroy, say, the principle of universality?

His answer was:

Destroy the principle of universality would be one illustration. Even more important, in my judgment, would be to destroy the sense of Canadians that they were entitled to the same kinds of services wherever they went in Canada.

Honourable senators, let me conclude with a definition of Canada, this time from the perspective of Georges Erasmus in the words he used on August 19 when he appeared before the joint committee. His words still clearly ring in my ears. He observed that a distinct society clause—

... perpetuates the idea of a duality in Canada, and strengthens the myth that the French and the English peoples are the foundation of Canada. It neglects the original inhabitants and distorts history.

I submit to you that a constitution must not be based on myth nor distort history. Instead, Mr. Chairman, a constitution must include all members of society, rather than putting some in and leaving some out. In Canada's case we have the most heterogeneous society in the world. Therefore, there is potential for greatness. Let us not single out one region and leave out all of the others. Let us not drift with the divisive notion that some are members of a founding group and some are not. Let us not allow the word "ethnic" to describe visible and invisible minorities while, by definition, members of majorities are not so described. In Canada either everyone is ethnic or no one is.

I believe that to achieve our potential for greatness the definition of Canada in our Constitution must be all-embracing, from the first aboriginal native to the latest arrival from Tibet. That is the new Canada which must find its place in Canada's Constitution.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Caccia. The first name on my list is Senator Bosa, who was to be followed by Senator Haidasz. However, Senator Haidasz is not presently in the chamber, and so Senator Marsden will follow Senator Bosa.

Senator Bosa: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Caccia, in reading the 1987 Constitutional Accord I see that there is a general definition in clause 16 which refers to multicultural heritage and aboriginal peoples. Perhaps I might quote that clause:

Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

This clause has had various interpretations. However, those who have been involved in the making of this accord maintain that it does not affect the rights that have already been established in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 27, when it comes to the cultural heritage of so-called ethnic peoples.

Mr. Caccia, where do you differ from this clause? In other words, what dangers do you see, or how could this clause affect what is now entrenched in the Constitution Act, 1982, or the Canada Act as it is commonly known?

Mr. Caccia: The reference in clause 16 is an afterthought; a technique that was adopted, I suppose, when it was realized that something was missing from the definition of Canada under section 2(1). The same technique was adopted with respect to the aboriginal peoples. The reason for the difference is that the definition of Canada under section 2(1) should be worded in such a way that the aboriginal peoples and the multicultural minorities are included in the main definition under section 2(1) rather than by the oblique technique of a reference to clause 16, outside section 2(1).

Senator Bosa: In effect, then, you are saying that this clause 16 is not a guarantee that the rights that have been included in the Constitution Act, 1982 will be preserved and enhanced?

Mr. Caccia: I am saying that section 2(1) is a description of a Canada that does not exist today, because it ignores the presence of the aboriginal peoples before the arrival of the white man. That is a historical fact which there was a great opportunity to address at this time.

That section also ignores the fact that by virtue of immigration over decades the composition of this nation has changed; that there are other elements which are not described in section 2(1), which is the main vehicle by which Canada is described in the Meech Lake Accord. Those elements are missing from that main description, and a reference is made to them as an afterthought in clause 16, and that is unacceptable.

Senator Bosa: Mr. Caccia, do you see any relationship in section 2 to the fact that immigration and refugee matters have been guaranteed to the Province of Quebec under section 27?

Mr. Caccia: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman and Senator Bosa, that the Government of Canada went far enough in the late 1970s with the Cullen-Couture agreement, and that there is no necessity to go beyond that. In other words, there is no need to devolve additional powers to the provinces in the field of immigration.

Second, there is one section under the heading of immigration which, in my view, could and should be contested before the courts because of the way in which it is written. That is the guaranteeing of a certain number of immigrants to one province. That would deny the immigrant the right to move anywhere in Canada. That is a right that has never been taken away from any immigrant in recent parliamentary times, and it is a right that should not be removed in the future.

Senator Bosa: Therefore, once an immigrant or a refugee has been admitted to Canada and that person, under this clause, then settles in the province of Quebec, at a future date that person could leave the province of Quebec and move to another part of Canada.

However, under this accord, a certain number of immigrants must be allocated to the province of Quebec in order to comply with this clause.

Mr. Caccia: Exactly. Because of the premise that Senator Bosa has just made that part of the immigration section in the accord could not be delivered upon, and I believe that others have already commented on that. In other words, it is unrealistic to promise to any province a certain number of immigrants if you know that once those immigrants arrive in any part of Canada they have the right to move freely to any other part of Canada.

● (1600)

The Chairman: The next person on my list is Senator Marsden, followed by Senator Haidasz.

Senator Marsden: Mr. Caccia, I want to deal with comments and quotations from the 1982 accord, which many here will remember. On that occasion there was a great gala in the National Arts Centre, and your colleague, the member of Parliament for Kicking Horse Pass, gave the definition of Canada. Canada, he said, is a land of two founding peoples, four if you count the French and English. This raised, even then, the fundamental issue which you have raised today.

I would like to ask you about the comments you made regarding process. Is it your view that the hearings in the legislatures—either the public hearings in the provinces or the discussion which will take place, the votes in the legislatures of Canada—will have any influence on the course of this debate? If it does have an influence, what kind of influence will it have, and if it does not have an influence, can you comment on that in terms of democratic process in this country?

Mr. Caccia: Two provinces have already forgone that process—Quebec and Saskatchewan. In the other provinces I hope that there will be hearings in the legislature as well as public hearings throughout the provinces.

Given enough time to explain the content of the accord—and this is a very slow educational process—my impression is that Canadians in increasing numbers will express their objection to parts of it or to all of it. It remains to be seen whether or not this will be reflected in a political vote in the respective legislatures.

I would put a lot of hope in the role that the newly elected Premier of New Brunswick could and might play in this respect, and I would put a lot of hope in any other newly elected premier who might emerge in other provinces in future elections. I am afraid, though, that those premiers who have been part of this process on two key occasions—and I am referring to the Meech Lake and the Langevin meetings—are so much part and parcel of the process that it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for them to distance themselves from the substance.

Senator Marsden: In your remarks this afternoon you have said that discussion on process deserves attention, because never again should the same process be adopted as a model in future constitutional changes. I agree with you entirely.

There are 11 premiers who have made a pact, apparently, not to talk about their views. We only know the views of the Premier of Quebec. We do not know the views of the Prime Minister of Canada. Yet, the 1987 accord itself ensures that this process will continue. You have told us that you do not think the legislatures will have much impact on that.

How will the people of Canada—the people whose interests you are expressing, women's groups and other groups—ever be able to make any impact on constitutional change in the country if this accord should go through?

[Mr. Caccia.]

Mr. Caccia: By registering sufficiently strong indignation so as to obtain a model that would be different from the one that we have seen adopted this summer, one that would give the public time to absorb the proposed changes, one that would permit a joint committee to travel extensively and listen to the opinions of people in various regions, and one that would never again start with a political statement by the Prime Minister of the day, saying that no amendments will be accepted, that precluded from the beginning an intelligent and, hopefully, non-partisan discussion of such an important and basic document as the Constitution of your country. I believe that another model is possible despite the handicaps inherent in having this type of executive approach to constitutional meetings by the 11 premiers of the day. Perhaps, then, they could emerge with a proposed document for discussion in the country, giving the public enough time, and not prejudging the process with a fight by the highest political authority in the country, as we experienced last July in Canada.

Senator Marsden: You have pointed out that the joint committee refused your request to appear before them. I think that is most unfortunate.

The women's organizations who testified before the committee were told that in defending the status quo in those sections of the Charter which deal with gender equality it was up to them to establish that the change being proposed would make any difference. In other words, reversing the usual order, the burden was put on those who were defending the status quo to show that the change was not a good one. Suppose you had found yourself in the same situation, that is, having to prove that it makes a difference, can you give us an idea of the kind of argument that you would have brought to bear?

Mr. Caccia: I do not think I would have fared better than the women's groups. I would have been in a similar situation, and I would have argued that a process of such importance should not be an adversarial one and should not be one as encountered in a tribunal or a court. By way of consensus, by way of reasoning, and by way of adopting the techniques that our native people so well know how to adopt, changes can be made in a manner where no one will feel they have lost face or dignity or authority, no matter how important the proponents may be. We have that capacity in this country and we have enough cultural experience to make it happen that way. Therefore, I would reject any notion that the onus ought to be on the proponent. I would imagine that the onus ought to be on those who appear before the established authority. After all, the established authority is there by virtue of the support of those who appear before it.

Senator Marsden: Thank you, Mr. Caccia.

The Chairman: The next speaker on my list is Senator Haidasz, followed by Senator Stollery.

Senator Haidasz: I would like to thank Mr. Charles Caccia, member of Parliament for Toronto-Davenport, for appearing before this committee of the Senate and forcefully expressing such very important views about the essence of Canada, namely, our society and the way that important, essential factor of our country, its society, is treated in the so-called Meech Lake Accord.

● (1610)

I want to thank Mr. Caccia for raising this issue and for championing this issue in both the House of Commons in the past and in the Senate this afternoon.

I should like to ask Mr. Caccia whether paragraph No. 2 of this constitutional amendment, when it talks about the fundamental characteristic of Canada, negates or, at least, clashes with the official interpretation of section 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Caccia: What I am saying is that the definition under section 21 is incomplete, and it is historically out of date, and it looks at the past rather than at the present and at the future.

Section 21 of the Constitution is the document. I appreciate the importance of any reference to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but at this point the definition of Canada in the Constitution is the main preoccupation and is where, in the end, the description of Canada will be found by those after us who will want to know what Canada is all about. Any reference to the Charter, helpful as it may be as a technique, will fall short of the basic fundamental requirement of defining all Canadians in one place, namely, in section 21 of the Constitution.

I hope I have answered your question.

Senator Haidasz: As a corollary, if passed, this constitutional amendment will impose upon the Government of Canada, as well as upon the Government of Quebec, a duty to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec, as well as its so-called fundamental characteristic as defined in paragraph 2(a).

Do you think that by the imposition of this constitutional obligation or duty there is a threat or danger in any way to the development of not only the multicultural fabric of Canada but also to paragraph 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which, in my opinion, envisages and also obligates the provinces and the Government of Canada to enhance and preserve the multicultural heritage of Canada?

Is there some danger or some threat to the development of this multicultural policy in view of the fact that it is the duty and obligation of the Government of Canada and of the Government of Quebec to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada, as defined in paragraph 2(a), and, of course, the feature or the fact, as recognized in paragraph 2(a), of a distinct society in Quebec?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, briefly, it would probably introduce an element of rigidity in the way that Quebec looks at itself and, therefore, poses, in the long term, if not a threat, a certain element of stagnation that will make it very difficult for the recognition of a heterogeneous society and, therefore, the recognition of all the cultural groups that make up a society, not just in Quebec but also outside of Quebec.

It would also be very distressing, if it were to happen, to see a picture emerging in which you would have a strong, lively and vibrant multicultural society outside of Quebec and one that cannot unfold in Quebec by virtue of the notion that will be established through the distinct society clause.

Senator Haidasz: Thank you, Mr. Caccia. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Haidasz. Next on the list is Senator Stollery, followed by Senator Stewart, Antigonish-Guysborough.

Senator Stollery: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should also like to thank Mr. Caccia for appearing before the Committee of the Whole today. I have read the report of the joint committee, and I must say that I could not believe how poor the report is. I noticed that Mr. Caccia did not appear before the joint committee, so I particularly welcome his appearance before the Committee of the Whole today.

One of the important questions many Canadians are asking is how the Meech Lake Accord, if passed, will affect the national government. Will the national government, in the opinion of Mr. Caccia, come out of this arrangement stronger, the same, or weaker?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, as other commentators have said, who are much more qualified than I am, if you put together the elements that comprise this accord—namely, the spending powers, the appointments to the Senate and the Supreme Court of Canada, the immigration portion and other components of the accord—it is inevitable that one will conclude that the national government is weakened.

I should like to add to that the fact that the promotion of the French language as proposed is no longer the responsibility of the national government or of the other provincial governments, and also the fact that the creation of additional provinces, as proposed and advanced in Canada's north, would no longer be the prerogative of Ottawa but would only be possible upon unanimous agreement on the part of ten premiers.

Senator Stollery: I know that you are from Toronto, as I am, and that that is the part of the country we know best, but I must say that very few of us taunt those from the other regions of Canada the way we are taunted.

Senator Frith: Jealousy! That's all that is.

● (1620)

Senator Stollery: I would like to ask Mr. Caccia if he thinks that if most Canadians knew that this legislation would weaken the national government—which is your opinion—would they be in favour of it. Do you think most Canadians think that the national government of this country should be weakened?

Mr. Caccia: I am told by others who have been around here, politically, longer than I have, and also from historical accounts, that, traditionally, Canadians have looked upon Ottawa with hope in the resolution of difficult political situations regionally and have, traditionally, always wanted to have a strong national government. Therefore, one has to conclude—and I belong to this school of thought—that Canadians do not like to see their national government weakened. I suspect that they would have not minded if the Meech Lake Accord had resulted in a give and take in which the provinces would have obtained certain powers, but at the same time Ottawa would also have obtained other powers. In other words, there would have been a fairly balanced result. But to see a so-called "bottom-line" result in which provinces received more than they were expecting to receive, and to realize the consequences—particularly in the Atlantic provinces and in the Prairie provinces—is not a source of reassurance for many Canadians.

[Mr. Caccia.]

I hope that I have answered the senator's question.

Senator Stollery: Thank you. Yes, you have. As I read the report I do not think that the report of the joint committee agrees with you. As I look at the names here—Gordon Robertson, a former clerk of the Privy Council; Mr. Pickersgill, a former federal cabinet minister; Mr. Kierans, a former federal cabinet minister; Mr. Fortier, whom I do not know; Mr. McWhinney, whom I think I may have met; and others, whom I will not continue to list—their views are more prominently displayed than the view that most Canadians continue to like a strong national government. They seem to disagree with that statement. Their views have predominated in the report.

I am sure that you have read the report of the joint committee. There is little reference to the fact that, for example, as we look at the fact that Quebec was left out of the constitutional arrangements of 1982 we should keep in mind that at the time there was a Separatist government in Quebec which had as its platform the establishment of an independent country.

Do you think that the report of the joint committee has been particularly balanced in regard to the Government of Canada and the view that you think many Canadians have that the Government of Canada should be a strong government?

Mr. Caccia: In reply, I have before me the analysis of the report by Eugene Forsey—whom you all know—who spoke here this afternoon, and who, as you know very well, is a person who weighs his words carefully. In his opening statement, referring to Chapter 3 of the report, Eugene Forsey says:

These contain three statements which are sheer rubbish.

I place a lot of value on any analysis made by former Senator Forsey. I do not deny the right of making an opinion to any of the people whose names were mentioned by Senator Stollery—and I suppose that in the end their opinion influenced the development of the report. The report was pre-conditioned from the beginning. It was also pre-determined by the statement made in the House of Commons by the three party leaders. Therefore, it had no latitude, no scope in terms of what it should come out with, considering also the fact that the joint committee was dominated by members of a party whose Prime Minister, as I mentioned, indicated in July that there was no scope for amendments and that no amendment would be entertained.

If you are a member of a joint committee and a member of the party of the Prime Minister of the day those are your marching orders. Nothing that the witnesses say for or against the accord will sway you unless you have an independent way of thinking. In addition to that, you all know how strong the element of party discipline prevails in our system, even in matters such as this, which affect many elections to come and which have a longer lifetime than the next year or two.

Senator Stollery: I have one final question. Here we are in the Senate. We have an obligation in this amendment process. In your opinion—and I think I am not misinterpreting it—this is a project that if Canadians realized that the central government was being weakened they would react differently. Yet, the government of the day, as you say, has its marching orders, and 11 men got together one night and seemed to have re-read the Confederation debates of 1865. What do you think we should do? As far as I understand it, we have three options: We can improve the accord in the form in which it is before us; we can come up with a different recommendation; or we can do nothing. Do you have any opinion as to what we should do about it?

Mr. Caccia: I have been around long enough on this Hill to know that you do not tell senators what to do. All I can say is that in my opinion the report of the joint committee is awful.

The Chairman: Thank you. Does that conclude your questions, Senator Stollery?

Senator Stollery: Yes; that is fine.

The Chairman: The next on my list is Senator Stewart.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Earlier this afternoon when Dr. Forsey was here I asked him a question concerning the role of the Supreme Court. I assume that you are not familiar with my question or his answer, so let me bring you up to date on that.

● (1630)

We have been told, particularly by Senator Murray, that the document known as the Meech Lake Accord is as precise as we have any right to expect it to be, that, naturally, there are terms in the accord on which people will disagree, but that there is an established method by which those disagreements will be overcome and settled, namely, judicial decision.

It is also said—I have not heard it in this chamber, but I have heard it elsewhere—that when one is dealing with a federal constitution one is not likely to get many formal amendments that change the relationship between the several states, on the one hand, and the states united, on the other hand; or the several provincial governments, on the one hand, and the national government, on the other hand. Consequently, one is obliged to rely on judicial interpretation and re-interpretation to assure that the Constitution continues to suit the changing requirements of the times. That is a view which Senator Murray seems to find appealing. That means, of course, that the Supreme Court of Canada will be shaping and changing our Constitution throughout all the foreseeable future.

In your presentation today you told us that the process engaged in at Meech Lake, and the documents that emerged therefrom, will have the effect of ignoring the presence in Canada of millions of men and women who may use, daily, either French or English but, culturally, do not identify themselves with either the English or the French heritage. "These," you say, "are Canadians in their own right, commonly referred to as members of ethnic groups, who want to be recognized as a vibrant component of Canadian society. They are new Canadians from all continents, members of visible and invisible minorities engaged daily in the building of Canada."

I have been looking at the present membership of the Supreme Court of Canada. That body consists of the Right Honourable Brian Dickson; the Honourable Jean Beetz; the Honourable Willard Estey; the Honourable Gerard LaForest; the Honourable Joseph Lamer; the Honourable Gerald Le Dain; the Honourable William McIntyre; the Honourable Bertha Wilson; and the Honourable Claire L'Heureux-Dubé. Are you satisfied that those ethnic groups to which you referred, those millions of Canadians, are adequately represented on the Supreme Court? This is important, because the Supreme Court of Canada is going to be the body which will shape and re-shape the Constitution of Canada, the Constitution under which these millions of people will be living from generation unto generation?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied, but at the same time I am not foolish enough to expect representation on the Supreme Court unless it is accompanied by skill and the proven ability to be there. As everyone who is in an affirmative action movement knows, it takes time to make progress and to get there. This is proven by the situation that despite the fact that from its inception Canada was composed of men and women in equal numbers, today there is only one woman judge on the Supreme Court.

Senator Frith: Two.

Mr. Caccia: Two, thank you. Therefore, that is an indication of a certain dynamic progress, and I would hope that in due course minorities, visible and invisible, will also find a voice on the Supreme Court by virtue of proven ability and jurisprudence skills, which will allow them to emerge in their particular discipline.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): In the United States of America, where the Supreme Court of the United States has been very active in interpreting and re-interpreting the Constitution of the United States so that it does not become obsolete or anachronistic, great care is taken in the selection of the members of the court.

Under the Meech Lake Accord, there is a special arrangement with regard to justices coming from Quebec, but insofar as the remainder are concerned, when a vacancy occurs, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, put forward names. From that point on the process will be the same as it is now, namely, that the Governor in Council will appoint. We are to have an appointed body, an appointed Supreme Court, which is going to be the supreme authority interpreting and re-interpreting the Constitution of Canada.

The body most active and powerful in determining the constitutional law of this country is to be selected by appointment.

Do you not think that, given the new work and power conferred upon the Supreme Court of Canada in 1982 and by the Meech Lake Accord, it would be appropriate that there should be some confirmation process, a process which would help assure that the members of this all-powerful body, this Constitution-reforming body, would be appropriate in every way, a process which would help assure, for example, that the several parts of the country are adequately represented, and, indeed, that all the major groups in the country are adequately represented?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, the process the senator is referring to is not a novelty south of the border. We had some evidence as to what it can do, in a very positive sense, I would say, with the candidacy of Justice Bork.

Whether we as Canadians should adopt a similar methodology I am not sufficiently qualified to say. Certainly, the senator makes an interesting point, that you would want to have on an appointed body that is not only going to make decisions on interpretation but, as he said, that would be writing the Constitution in the future, by virtue of what is being proposed in the accord, men and women who do understand the make-up of Canadian society and the values that propel this society.

One day there may be a screening of proposals by joint committees of justice of the House of Commons and the Senate. That might be a very interesting approach, but that is all I can say at the present time in commenting on Senator Stewart's thoughtful intervention.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Let me ask one final question on this point.

Given the fact that the Supreme Court in 1982, and now under the Meech Lake Accord, is being given a role which is quite different from the normal adjudication role of a final court of appeal on statutory law, the civil law and the common law, and given the fact that it now becomes a body which will informally, but effectively, change the Constitution—certainly the court in the United States has done so—are you content that we should be content to leave this paramount power in the hands of an appointed body, whose members are appointed by the Prime Minister and his colleagues, albeit after passage of the Meech Lake Accord, a body appointed from lists of nominees put forward by provincial premiers, with at least six of the nine nominated by the premiers of two of the ten provinces? Do you think, indeed, it would be legitimate to have this vast power lodged in such a body?

● (1640)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, that will teach me a lesson about writing a letter requesting to appear before the Senate.

Senator Frith: Don't spread the word!

Mr. Caccia: I am disturbed by the trend that we are witnessing—and it is not just with respect to the accord, I must admit—whereby more and more the judiciary will be making decisions which ought to be kept in the political arena. This is what the senator is evidently stressing in his question. Therefore, the answer must be that one should not be content with the present system of the appointment of judges to the Supreme Court in light of this new dynamic that is emerging. But in agreeing with him, I do not yet know, frankly, what the procedure is that we should set in place in order to screen these men and women in a manner that will be satisfactory so that, in future, their performance will reflect the true nature of Canadian society. I would certainly be glad to join Senator Stewart in any effort or initiative in which he might engage in exploring the ideas that he has put forward this afternoon.

[Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough).]

Senator Frith: Mr. Caccia, I want to ask about your concern with section 1 of the Constitution Amendment, 1987, which deals with proposed subsection 2(1). You have told us, if I understand you correctly, that you feel that that section does not reflect contemporary Canadian reality. What I want to know is this: Is it wrong, in your view, or is it just incomplete? It states:

2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a—

“a”, not “the”

—fundamental characteristic of Canada;

Do you agree that that is “a” fundamental characteristic—not “the” but “a” fundamental characteristic—of present Canadian reality?

Mr. Caccia: I must refer the senator to the amendment that I submitted jointly—

Senator Frith: I mean to ask you about that specifically, but is it part of your concern that a part of present-day Canadian reality is not correctly stated in paragraph (a), or do you think it is incomplete?

Mr. Caccia: The definition of Canada as put forward in proposed subsection 2.(1), as a whole, is unacceptable to me for the reasons that I have given. If we were to analyze bit by bit the proposed definition in the accord, we would, I suppose, engage in a very interesting exercise. Basically, however, what I am saying is that Canadian society consists of aboriginal and multicultural peoples. That notion is completely overlooked in the definition as presently put forward in proposed subsection 2.(1).

Senator Frith: I am not sure whether you are therefore saying that it is incomplete or just incorrect. It is incorrect if it means to be all-inclusive, but it is correct if it is only meant to make a statement that is partially correct. However, we will leave that.

Mr. Caccia: One should not read proposed subsection 2.(1) without also reading subsection 2.(3); namely, the reference to the distinct society. Unfortunately, I do not have the text before me. One has to read the totality of that proposed section in order to engage in a constructive discussion.

Senator Frith: Yes, I am coming to that. We do not have to go as far as subsection (3) to get to the distinct society; it appears in paragraph (1)(b), which, to read the introductory part again, reads as follows:

The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with—

“(a)” I have already read

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

As you have said, (3) then states:

The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

Do you feel that Quebec does not constitute a distinct society within Canada?

Mr. Caccia: Correct, yes; I would argue that New Brunswick could constitute a distinct society if we wished to define it along provincial lines. I could also argue that Newfoundland constitutes a distinct society if we do not wish to argue along provincial boundaries. This is a sociological rather than a political concept.

Senator Frith: From the answers you have given I get the impression that you think the definition is incomplete. If it is incomplete and, as you say, does not represent present-day Canadian reality, have you a wording that you think would reflect present-day Canadian reality? If so, would you put it on our record?

Mr. Caccia: Yes, I have such a wording, senator. It is on the record of the House of Commons, and I would be glad to put it on the record of this house at the appropriate moment. I do not have the text with me.

In reply to your earlier question on whether I would agree with paragraph 2.(1)(a) as to whether that description constitutes “a fundamental characteristic” or “the fundamental characteristic,” here I must ask myself how many fundamental characteristics a nation can have. I fear that once you have defined one fundamental characteristic there is very little room left for others. Therefore, whether the indefinite article “a” or the definite article “the” precedes “fundamental” becomes more a legalistic debate, which, to me, has very little political significance.

Once you have gone for a fundamental characteristic you have gone for virtually all fundamental characteristics, and the game is over. That is why I would urge senators to consider alternatives to paragraph 2.(1)(a). I would be glad to forward my version of that definition to the Senate through the proper channels, Mr. Chairman. There is only one basic way in which a nation can be defined. Once it is done one way, describing “a fundamental characteristic,” I doubt whether there is room for other fundamental characteristics.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I would like that definition, into which I know Mr. Caccia has put a good deal of thought, placed on the record. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Penner is associated with him and together they developed that definition. I would prefer the definition to be on the record rather than in some separate place. It would not take Mr. Caccia long to get it to us. It could then go to the Hansard reporters and be placed in the record—because I would not want to have to look through supporting papers to find the definition should I wish to refer to it again. If Mr. Caccia will do that, and if we agree that it can be inserted into the record, then I have no further questions to ask.

● (1650)

The Chairman: Is that agreeable, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Phillips: You are really saying that you do not want to read Mr. Caccia's speech.

Senator Frith: No, that is not what I am saying at all. I followed through his speech, as you did, with him. Senator Phillips appears to totally misunderstand what I am asking for. Since the chairman of the Committee of the Whole will be putting the question whether it is agreeable that the definition be included in the record, I think that Senator Phillips should understand that before he gives his consent, or refuses it on the basis that I do not want to read a particular speech, because that is not the point.

Senator Doody: I'm glad you got that cleared up!

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that we accept Senator Frith's proposal that the definition be inserted in today's proceedings as we receive it?

The definition is as follows:

2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada constitutes aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: I now call on Senator Haidasz.

Senator Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, my questions were raised by Senator Frith and I believe they have been adequately covered.

The Chairman: I call on Senator Watt.

Senator Watt: Mr. Chairman, my questions are directly related to those that I asked of Dr. Forsey. Mr. Caccia, your comments seem to imply that, in your opinion, you sincerely believe that under the Meech Lake Accord the Métis, Inuit and Indian people of this country have been forgotten; is that the case?

Mr. Caccia: Yes, it is, Mr. Chairman. I purposely read into the record the quotation from Chief Georges Erasmus when he appeared before the joint committee. He made that point so vividly and passionately, and in a manner that is so relevant to our present day history, that it becomes a compelling document, perhaps one of the most compelling documents which have been exhibited and produced this summer.

Senator Watt: So, in your opinion the process is already in place to totally assimilate the aboriginal people, including the other ethnic groups; is that your opinion?

Mr. Caccia: The process is launched, but it would not be completed if just one premier were to bring it to a grinding halt. Therefore, there is still hope; but, of course, as time progresses that hope diminishes. But certainly there are reasons to be worried about the fact that the process could be brought to an end within the prescribed time unless a newly elected premier, for the reasons I gave earlier, were to take an initiative that would bring this momentum to a grinding halt and reopen the whole question.

Senator Watt: Thank you, Mr. Caccia.

Senator Bosa: Mr. Caccia, I wish to thank you for appearing before the Senate and giving us your views on this very complicated and important document. Can you tell me if there is anything good in the accord on which we can agree? Can you give me one aspect of the accord where we would be in agreement?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, there must be something good in it, but I have had difficulty in discovering it so far.

The Chairman: Does that conclude your questioning, Senator Bosa?

Senator Bosa: Yes.

The Chairman: That concludes the questioning. Mr. Caccia, we thank you for being with us today and for sharing your views. That concludes the work of the committee for today. I expect that we shall next meet on Wednesday, November 18, depending on the sittings of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee adjourn, report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake Accord and texts subsequently agreed to were referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the Committee of the Whole be given authority to sit again on Wednesday, November 18, 1987.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 5, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM ENTITLED "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"— PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions on the matter of the National Film Board's production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss."

Before I table the documents, I want to tell you that there are 337 sheets which contain a total of 14,164 signatures of individuals from right across Canada. I also advise honourable senators that in addition there are authorized executive representatives of various organizations who spoke up on behalf of a further 57,312 members.

An example of the support from this type of organization is a telegram that I received from Colonel J.M. Lowndes of Toronto, chairman of the Corps of Commissionaires, which reads:

All 960 Governors and members of the Corps of Commissionaires from the Toronto Division wholeheartedly support your protest of the National Film Board's production of The Kid Who Couldn't Miss. The thought of having the reputation of Billy Bishop VC, one of Canada's recognized heroes, destroyed by unsubstantiated innuendo should be abhorred by Canadians in every way.

Honourable senators, I want to put on the record what the petition reads. It states:

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS the National Film Board of Canada, a body created and financed by an Act of Parliament and presently responsible to the Minister of Communications, has caused to be made and distributed in Canada and abroad a film entitled "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", and

WHEREAS a Committee of Your House found this film to be full of historical errors, to be a highly dramatized and one-sided account of the life and exploits of Air Marshal William Avery Bishop, VC, DSO and Bar, MC, DFC and, by the use of questionable film techniques, to give a false and misleading authority to rumour and unpublished speculation, and

WHEREAS the film has done grievous damage to the reputation of Air Marshal Bishop, caused grief to the surviving members of his family, and demeaned Canada as a nation and the sacrifice and heroism of Canadian Veterans everywhere.

WHEREFORE the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Government that the Minister of Communications instruct the National Film Board

1. To add after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. To take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray

DATE: November 5, 1987.

That, honourable senators, is the demand that 14,164 individuals have signalled to me to represent them in this matter. I intend to represent their view in continuing dialogue.

I pay a tribute to the members of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, who have been supportive. I have been encouraged by the response to my petition, and I will continue tabulating them as they are returned to me. I see it now as my clear duty to ensure that the feelings of those who have taken the time to write will continue to be represented. It is my intention to continue to cause the National Film Board to take action which will clear the name of Air Marshal William Avery Bishop, VC, an officer whose reputation has been tarnished without a single shred of evidence.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

REPORT OF TWENTY-EIGHTH MEETING HELD AT VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, TABLED

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, with leave, I have the honour to table the final report of the Canadian delegation to the Twenty-Eighth Annual Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group held in Vancouver from June 4 to 8, 1987.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Report tabled.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY ELEMENTS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT AND AGREED TEXTS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon elements of a Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, tabled in the Senate on October 6, 1987 (Sessional Paper No. 332-589), and texts subsequently agreed to; and

That the Committee present its report no later than March 29, 1988.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am totally in favour of this motion, but I wonder whether it is essential that it pass today. If it is, I shall sit down. If it is necessary for the organization of the committee and to see that the organization is completed at an early date to have this done today, I will not say anything, but I would have appreciated an opportunity in other circumstances to make some comments.

Senator Doody: I am sorry if I have violated a protocol. I had no intention of trying to deny anyone the right to speak on this particular subject.

Senator van Roggen, the chairman of the committee, and I have discussed the dates of meetings and the wording of the motion, and we finalized this to his satisfaction. I am under the impression that he will be holding an organization meeting some time next week, but I do not know how important the timing is in terms of the passing of this motion.

I feel reasonably certain that if Senator MacEachen wishes to stand this matter or to have me substitute a notice of motion it will not cause the committee to go off the track completely.

I can introduce this as a notice of motion rather than as a motion with leave.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I will waive my interest in making a speech on this item so that all early preparations can be made.

Senator Doody: Peace in our time!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator Balfour.]

Motion agreed to.

● (1410)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at this time I usually put the standard adjournment motion. This particular adjournment motion is not quite standard, but, with leave of the Senate, I will put it and will be most pleased to give an explanation of it if the Senate so requires.

With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, 9th November, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: As all honourable senators are undoubtedly aware, the rather contentious and well publicized Bill C-22 is being voted on this afternoon in the other place. I understand that a vote is scheduled for three o'clock.

An Hon. Senator: It is scheduled for 3.30.

Senator Doody: Is it 3.30 now? The Order Paper indicated three o'clock. I was about to say that that vote may be delayed because of the funeral in Quebec City.

In any event, we were told that the Senate would receive that message this afternoon. This bill has been dealt with at great length in the Senate. In order to give honourable senators an opportunity to move on with the debate if they so wish, or to deal with the bill, I think it would be appropriate to give every senator an opportunity to have his say. In order to do that I suggest that we come back on Monday to get on with it.

I realize that the House of Commons is scheduled to take its break next week, and that we would, obviously, have difficulty arranging Royal Assent, but I think that that should in no way slow down our deliberations on or our interest in the bill nor should it reduce our opportunities to discuss the bill. We could have two or three days' debate on this bill next week, if we have to, and could arrange Royal Assent the following week.

I should also mention that Wednesday is Remembrance Day, and I am sure that honourable senators will wish to observe Remembrance Day. So if honourable senators are agreed, we could return on Thursday and continue until we have disposed of that particular item.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I heard the same information about the other place and realized that there is a good chance we will receive that message this afternoon, if we are still sitting. However, I point out to honourable senators that according to my research this is the first time that a message has been sent back a third time. The first message accompanied the bill, the second message referred to our amendments, and now we will receive a third message. On all previous occasions there had been a conference and some resolution reached betweentimes. I also remind honourable senators that when we sent our last message to the other place, the House took almost a week before it even started to deal with it.

Because the House of Commons will not be sitting next week, I believe it would be appropriate for the Senate to take more time in considering the message.

Therefore, I move, in amendment to the motion before us now:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 17th November, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if I may, there seems to be some slight contradiction in the comments of Senator Frith. I agree that the Senate should take time to deal with the matter. Indeed, I do not think that any matter has ever taken more time to deal with than has this particular one. So it was my intention, or my hope, that we would return on Monday and devote the time that is needed to deal with the matter. Honourable senators opposite now seem to want to take a week off before they even get to it.

Senator Olson: No, that's not so.

Senator Doody: Senator Olson says, "No, that's not so." If the pretence is that we are going to take a few days off to study the bill, then I say that we must have had an awfully low retention capacity if we have not really gathered the contents of that bill by now. Everyone in this place, I submit, is totally familiar with the bill, with every facet of it, and with all of the amendments, and to deny the Senate the opportunity to deal with it starting on Monday is to deny the due process to which this bill is entitled.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I understand the strength and depth of Senator Doody's concern, but I point out to him that what we will be considering is not the bill but the message, and the Senate has not yet seen the message.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, in amendment to Senator Doody's motion it has been moved by Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Perrault:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 17th November, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the farce orchestrated by Senator Frith and authored by Senator MacEachen goes on. There is no doubt about that. It has been like this since the beginning. Last week when I referred to delays—I beg your pardon?

[English]

Senator Frith: A whole lot of personal comments!

Senator Flynn: Pardon?

Senator Frith: We are going to hear a whole lot of personal comments.

Senator Flynn: It is nothing personal. It is what you are doing in this chamber. Do you not want me to refer to what you are saying or what you are doing? What did I say that was personal?

Senator Frith: You are being personal—

Senator Flynn: Come on, speak up if you have something to say about that.

Senator Frith: The first thing you said about the motion—

Senator Flynn: I said it was—

Senator Frith: Listen. You asked the question; listen to the answer. The first thing you said about the motion, which is a motion concerning adjournment, was to name a couple of senators.

Senator Flynn: Sure, but what is personal about mentioning that you were the mover and that Senator MacEachen was the designer? What is personal about that?

Senator Frith: What has that to do with the motion?

Senator Flynn: You have become so simple-minded when we are dealing with what you are doing here. I am not being personal. I am not talking about something outside of the Senate. I am speaking of what you are saying and doing in this place and nowhere else. There is nothing personal about that.

Senator Frith: Give us a sign when you start talking about the motion so that we can pay attention.

Senator Flynn: I was about to do that when you interrupted.

[Translation]

As it happens, I said that this motion is very much in keeping with the filibuster tactics to which the Liberal opposition in this chamber has been resorting since April 8 this year.

[English]

Senator Olson: Wrong, wrong, wrong!

Senator Flynn: Another simple-minded argument—"Wrong, wrong, wrong!" What is wrong with saying that we have had this thing since April 8? Is it true or not? Is it wrong when I say we have had this since April 8?

An Hon. Senator: No.

An Hon. Senator: Yes.

Senator Olson: Carry on.

Senator Flynn: If you can't contest that, then shut up.

Senator Perrault: Don't get political.

Senator Flynn: I like that. At least there is some sense of humour somewhere, thank God.

[Translation]

I wanted to get back to what I said last week when Senator Denis contested the fact that the Senate is filibustering this bill.

Senator Denis: A point of order.

Senator Frith: Leave him alone.

Senator Flynn: No, this is not a point of order.

Senator Denis: Speak to the motion.

Senator Flynn: I am talking about the motion designed to delay—I am talking about delays; you are unable to make the connection—

Senator Guay: Go on with your comments.

Senator Flynn: Will I have to draw you a picture?

Senator Denis: You said April 8, yet we got the bill on April 30.

Senator Flynn: That is precisely the point. You say that we got the bill on April 30. If only Senator Denis could make a more intelligent contribution. I can see he is here, but if only he knew what is going on—

Senator Denis: Let the complainer have his say.

Senator Flynn: Last week's Hansard relates the ups and downs of Bill C-22 in the Senate. I urge Senator Denis to read the debates. He will see that the bill came before the Senate on April 8 through a motion to refer the subject matter to committee. In any case, everything is there in detail. But I repeat that proceedings have been delayed for over seven months. I challenge Senator Denis to put on the record any facts which contradict that.

So we cannot, according to Senator Frith who is coaching Senator Denis—because he tries to run everything—and advising him not to say a word because I am only making personal attacks, because I mention what Senator Denis does in the Senate. That is very personal.

Senator Guay: He told him to forget it.

Senator Flynn: What I am talking about is the behaviour of Senators MacEachen and Frith—and incidentally about that of Senator Denis who is trying to keep silent on this bill because he has yet to take a stand. As a result of all this we are witnessing systematic and partisan obstruction which absolutely poisons the climate in the Senate. If you enjoy it, that is your business. But I suggest there is utter lack of honesty. We can no longer work constructively, honestly, and know where we are going. It is always the same system of petty mysteries and collective hypocrisy. You are an accomplice, my dear Senator Olson, because you in the majority cannot agree among yourselves on the way to behave like people who know what honesty and collective integrity are all about.

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Flynn has made the best possible argument for taking a few more days.

[Senator Flynn.]

What we are faced with now shows the sense, the very good common sense which Senator Flynn has demonstrated over the years and which I have grown to respect, in that he demonstrates the need for taking a little bit of time. He always used to say, "Why do we have to do it today when we can do it tomorrow?" That has always been his philosophy.

Senator Flynn: "Tomorrow" and "ten days later" are not the same thing.

Senator Olson: Never mind. What we are faced with now is the House of Commons sending back Bill C-22. The bill as we amended it was not accepted by the Commons. I think everyone understands that.

Senator Doody: Come back on Monday, and we will see!

Senator Olson: Therefore, we need a conference. It is the next stage. We have not received the bill yet, though we may receive it later today. However, some months ago the House of Commons accepted a House order that they would take next week off. It is an order, and it will not be changed. Therefore, it is impossible for the House of Commons to have a conference with the Senate next week.

Senator Perrault: That's right.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we now have to have a conference to determine whether or not a reconciliation can be reached between the position taken by the other place and the position that we take, that the amendments that were offered to the other place when the bill was sent over there were sensible, legitimate amendments.

I hope that all members of this chamber see the logic and the common sense involved in the amendment that Senator Frith has made to this motion.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps we should withdraw Senator Doody's motion and sit tomorrow.

Senator Frith: The mover of the motion can ask leave to withdraw it, but you cannot do that.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt Senator Frith's motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.
And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

● (1430)

Motion in amendment of Senator Frith adopted on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	LeBlanc
Anderson	( Beauséjour )
Argue	Le Moyne
Barrow	Lewis
Bonnell	MacEachen
Bosa	Marchand
Corbin	McElman
Cottreau	Molgat
Davey	Neiman
De Bané	Olson
Denis	Perrault
Everett	Petten
Fairbairn	Robichaud
Frith	Rousseau
Gigantès	Stewart
Graham	( Antigonish-
Guay	Guysborough )
Hays	Turner
Leblanc	Watt—35.
( Saurel )

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Asselin	Macdonald
Atkins	( Cape Breton )
Balfour	Marshall
Bélisle	Muir
Bielish	Nurgitz
Cogger	Phillips
David	Robertson
Doody	Rossiter
MacDonald	Spivak
( Halifax )	Walker—18.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Macquarrie—1.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, on a question of privilege.

Four of my colleagues and I were in the reading room. There were also three Liberals, Senator Denis. We were not warned that the bells would stop ringing at a certain time. Needless to say, if I had known, I would have been here to vote against the motion.

I think I can say that Senator Doyle would have done the same, and that Senators Thériault, Haidasz and Lefebvre would have been here to vote for the amendment.

Hon. Azellus Denis: On a point of order, honourable senators. It is not true we have to stop at a certain time in order to vote.

Senator Flynn: I never said that.

Senator Denis: You are wrong—

Senator Flynn: I never said that.

Senator Denis: Go on lying, go on lying, Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: I beg your pardon! Your Honour heard what Senator Denis said. He seems to think he has a monopoly on truth. He just used a word I think he will have to withdraw unconditionally, or else I will move a motion to that effect.

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, what I said is far removed from what Senator Flynn said himself before the vote. When he says we are to be warned the bells will stop ringing, nothing could be further from the truth.

Senator Flynn: My point is that Senator Denis used the expression "lying". He said that I was lying. Your Honour, I move that this question be referred immediately to a committee on privilege unless Senator Denis withdraws his words unconditionally, here and now.

Senator Denis: It is not a lie to say it isn't true that when a vote is to be held here, we should be warned when the bells will stop ringing.

Senator Flynn: I move—

Senator Denis: The truth is that he was wrong.

Senator Flynn: I move that Senator Denis' comments be examined immediately on a question of privilege. If Senator Denis does not unconditionally retract his statement, I will move that the Senate immediately form a committee on privileges to consider his behaviour.

I will move my motion, your Honour.

Hon. Louis Robichaud: Honourable senators,—

Senator Flynn: A question of privilege is moved immediately. I cannot help it if Senator Olson is not familiar with the rules of the Senate, but the case is quite clear. It is very easy for Senator Denis to withdraw his words. If he does, I will withdraw my motion. I quote rule 33 of the rules of the Senate:

33. When a matter or question directly concerning the privileges of the Senate, or any committee thereof, or of any senator, has arisen,

Are you listening, Senator Olson—

... a motion calling upon the Senate to take action thereon may be moved without notice and, until decided, shall, unless the debate be adjourned, suspend the consideration of other motions and of the Orders of the Day.

● (1440)

[English]

Your Honour, that is quite clear, and I so move.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Flynn knows very well that he has no right to do that.

Senator Flynn: I have made the motion and I ask the Chair to put it before Senator Olson rises.

Senator Olson: On a point of order, Senator Flynn knows well from looking at the rules and those authorities who have written about procedures in Parliament that, first of all, there has to be a prima facie case of privilege established.

Senator Flynn: Sure!

Senator Olson: He has not established that. What is more, Senator Denis has already indicated that what Senator Flynn is alleging, namely, that he called him a liar, is not true. He said that something Senator Flynn said was not in compliance with the truth.

Senator Flynn: No; you do not understand—it was in French.

Senator Olson: That is the fact; so he does not have any right to make a motion to refer this as a question of privilege—it was just voted down. But this playing loose with the rules by Senator Flynn should stop. I ask him to stop.

Senator Flynn: I ask the Chair to put the motion, and then we will call the official reporter to read the words that he used. If there is no doubt about it, he only has to withdraw his remarks.

Senator Olson: No; he does not have to withdraw.

[Translation]

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, would the honourable senator be satisfied if I said that he strayed from the truth?

Senator Flynn: I agree you can say that. I am asking you to withdraw what you said. That is all I am asking you.

Senator Denis: I replace what I said by: he strayed from the truth. It is not correct to say that we are warned that the bells will stop ringing before a vote. Therefore everyone knows that it is not the truth. When it is not the truth, it is a lie.

The Hon. the Speaker: Before putting his motion, would Senator Flynn allow me to make a comment? Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Denis might say that he does not consider it to be the whole truth as he sees it? Would that be satisfactory, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: I would like him to withdraw the word "lie".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, while withdrawing the word "lie", Senator Denis, perhaps you might say that you do not consider it to be the truth as you conceive truth to be. I believe that might solve the problem.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, I am quite willing to do that to accommodate Mr. Speaker, but not Senator Flynn.

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, although I do not want to get involved in these discussions, I do want to make a point.

I was in the reading room and, although I cannot speak for the other senators that were there, I was disappointed that no one informed me that the bells would ring for five or ten minutes. As a matter of fact, I did not hear the bells ringing. I am not making any accusations. I simply want to say that had I been here I, naturally, would have voted for the amendment. I hope that the whips would take my remarks into consideration so that this will not happen again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt Senator Doody's motion, as amended?

I understand that we voted on the amendment, and that now we have to vote on the motion as amended.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no!

The Hon. the Speaker: The main motion has not been dealt with.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the main motion has been dealt with by the fact that the main motion was amended and was put to the Senate as amended. So the amended motion carried, and that takes care of the main motion. The question on the main motion should not be put again. The motion was not that the motion be amended; the motion was in amendment, so we voted on the amended motion, and that carried. We do not have to vote on it twice.

Honourable senators, although I know it is not really in order to talk about the proceedings in the House of Commons, there is something I feel I should put on the record, if possible, before the House of Commons votes on it. I want to be sure this is on the record in case a result follows from a precedent from Lord Campion, a former Clerk of the House of Commons.

The title of the book I wish to quote from is An Introduction to the Procedure of the House of Commons, and I quote from page 230, where the kind of situation we are engaged in now is discussed—that is, messages between the houses and the amending of bills.

The reference, of course, is to the House of Lords because of the fact that this is a British text. I quote as follows:

If the House agrees to the Lords Amendments, the proceedings on the Bill are complete and the Bill returns to the Lords to await the Royal Assent. If, however, it—that is, the House of Commons —has amended a Lords Amendment or disagreed to a Lords Amendment, then in respect of such Amendment

further exchanges take place between the two Houses, and this process continues until every amendment made by one House is agreed to by the other (when the Bill is ready for Royal Assent)—

I should like to highlight the next part, which states:

—or until one House insists upon its disagreement to an amendment made by the other House. In this latter case the Bill is lost for the session.

I hope that the message we receive from the other place is drafted by someone who knows about that provision.

Senator Doody: I doubt if they will get the message in time.

Senator Frith: You might tell them.

The Hon. the Speaker: Question Period!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, Senator Murray is in Nova Scotia today—

Senator Frith: Can I complete that point?

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Frith: I have another quotation.

Senator Flynn: I rise on a point of order.

Senator Frith: I refer to Erskine May, at page 586.

Senator Flynn: I rise on a point of order. Senator Frith is not speaking to any question. He can make his argument in ten days since he is in no hurry. He just asked the Senate to adjourn until November 17. He should be logical in his approach.

Senator Frith: That is fine, but do not say anything on November 17 if the bill dies, because this was drawn to your attention. You will have killed it by not doing anything about it.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, on the same point of order raised by Senator Flynn, may I say that—

Senator Flynn: We should behave like civilized people.

An Hon. Senator: Oh, be quiet!

Senator Stewart: —it would be unfortunate if the majority in the other place, either intentionally or inadvertently, killed their own bill. That is the clear implication of the quotations from Lord Campion and Erskine May.

Senator Flynn: If you want to speak to the other chamber, go ahead.

Senator Stewart: I am speaking to your point of order.

Senator Flynn: That is not a point of order at all.

Senator Perrault: We are trying to help you.

Senator Flynn: I know that!

Senator Stewart: You raised the point of order.

Senator Flynn: Not at all.

The Hon. the Speaker: Question Period!

Senator Frith: Do I understand that a ruling has been made that my colleagues in the Senate do not want me to add the reference from Erskine May, which says the same thing? The reference is found at page 586.

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator Frith: It simply says:

If, however, the Commons—

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator Frith:

—insist upon their disagreement, without offering—

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator Frith:

—alternative proposals, the bill would normally be lost.

Senator Flynn: That is unfair. That is totally irregular. That is the way in which Senator Frith always proceeds, and I object entirely to this method of flouting the rules of the Senate.

Senator Olson: Senator Flynn is always interrupting everybody.

Senator Frith: From someone so impeccably regular as Senator Flynn!

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I was starting to say, Senator Murray is in Nova Scotia today and will not be with us for Question Period.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on Senator Doody's comment, am I to understand that if a message were to be received from the House of Commons and if we were sitting, Senator Doody would be making a motion today, in the absence of Senator Murray?

Senator Doody: It would be my intention to put a motion, yes.

Senator Olson: We should get the adjournment right away.

Senator Doody: We should.

Senator Flynn: We could recall the Senate!

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT ACT CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-46, to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-46, to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act, is now before us. The bill proposes to consolidate within the Royal Canadian Mint Act and to modernize the authorities concerning all technical matters pertaining to coins. The Currency Act will continue to address matters such as what is the monetary unit of Canada, and what constitutes legal tender and the currency for the keeping of accounts or contracting in Canada. Several proposals are included in the bill to improve the financial structure for the Mint and to give it more operational flexibility while still maintaining the checks and balances appropriate to a crown corporation.

When the Mint was originally established as a crown corporation, no provision was made for share capital investment by the government. Bill C-46 authorizes the issuance of up to $40 million in share capital. The shares can only be purchased by the Minister of Supply and Services on behalf of the government and are not transferable. There is also a provision for the minister to request the Mint to redeem share capital in future, if the scope of the Mint's business changes and the level of investment proves to be excessive.

Proposed amendments to the borrowing powers in the Royal Canadian Mint Act will increase the limit to $50 million from the present $35 million. This will also allow borrowing from private sector lenders as well as from the government. However, in either case the terms and conditions will be subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance.

Several modifications are proposed that will assist the Mint in continuing its successful marketing endeavours and will provide a framework for new initiatives. In this regard, I must state that our Royal Canadian Mint derives better than 80 per cent of its revenues from outside Canada, from sales of its bullion and numismatic coinage and production services. It is a major Canadian exporter, and the proposed amendments will enhance its ability in this area.

Finally, the bill contains a few amendments of an administrative and housekeeping nature. Included is an amendment authorizing an increase in the size of the board of directors from seven to eleven members and removing the present requirement that three of the directors be public servants. This change will provide a board of directors of a size that is comparable to those of other companies of the Mint's scope and size. It will also bring a broader range of expertise to the direction of the Mint's activities, a move consistent with the Mint's growth over the years.

Honourable senators, I have before me a lot of interesting information on the Royal Canadian Mint. It tells us about the sales of gold coins in terms of the great volume and increases over the years. It indicates the number of countries for which Canada mints coins and metals. Over 60 per cent of Canada's annual gold production is refined by the Royal Canadian Mint. Many mines from foreign countries also ship their gold deposits to the Mint for refining. The Mint has also made continuous efforts to obtain more international refining business. The marked success of the gold maple leaf coin has been built partially on the reputation of the Mint as a refiner of gold. The Royal Canadian Mint refinery has serviced the Canadian gold mining industry since 1911. During the last 75 years the refinery has processed about 9,000 tonnes of gold-containing material, an average of 3.9 million troy ounces per year.

In relation to Canadian circulating coinage, the Mint has always concerned itself with the cost to the government of coinage as well as the high quality of its production. In that regard, the bill proposes certain amendments that will enable the Governor in Council to approve minor changes to the size or metal content of our coinage while retaining for Parliament the authority for changes.

The proposed changes are the result of a thorough review of the Mint's legislative environment. It recognizes the accomplishments of the Mint to date and provides a legislative mechanism for similar success in the future.

I ask all honourable senators to join in supporting the passage of Bill C-46. In so doing I am convinced that we will be taking an important step to assist our national Mint and to help ensure that it has the tools to remain successful and stay in the forefront of the world's mints.

On motion of Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Report of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord (Sessional Paper No. 332-571A).—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this order stands in my name, but I think it would be more appropriate if it were to stand in the name of Senator Tremblay who tabled the report, and who will speak to it in time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands in name of Senator Tremblay.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had hoped to present the motion to concur in the amendments made to Bill C-22 by the House of Commons today, but the message has not yet arrived. The votes will not likely take place for another 15 minutes. I suggest that we adjourn to the call of the bell and when the message arrives that we return to deal with the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Some Hon. Senators: No!

Senator Doody: In that event, with some reluctance and no bitterness I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 17, 1987, at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 17, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle, Acting Speaker, in the Chair

Prayers

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-254, to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN CERTAIN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON CERTAIN SENATE AMENDMENTS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons which reads as follows:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 18(b) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendment 13(a), (b), (c) and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and amendment 16(a) because this House believes that amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b) and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a) are in contradiction to the fundamental principles of the bill and undermine the objectives of the policy.

More specifically:

Amendments 4(b), 11 and 12 change the coming into force of the sections thereby jeopardizing all the research and development commitment of the industry, and are therefore not acceptable;

Amendments 15(b), (c) and 18(a) remove flexibility from the Patented Medicines Prices Review Board inconsistent with the design of such regulatory agencies and are therefore inconsistent and not acceptable;

Amendment 15(a) arises out of Senate amendments 13 and 14 and is therefore inappropriate;

Amendments 16(b), (c), (d) and (e) and 17(a) and (b) arise out of amendments 13, 14 and 16(a) which are proposed for further amendment by this House in this Message. Therefore the Senate amendments are inappropriate.

And that Senate amendments 13(a), (b), (c), (d) and 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) be amended to read as follows:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended,

(a) by adding, immediately after line 36 on page 13, the following:

“(1.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify.”

(b) by striking out line 45 on page 13 and substituting the following:

“tion (1) or (1.1),”

(c) by adding, immediately after line 33 on page 17, the following:

“(5.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention that is a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify.”

(d) by striking out line 42 on page 17 and substituting the following:

“accordance with subsection (5) or (5.1),”

(e) by striking out line 17 on page 20 and substituting the following:

“purpose of the report referred to in”

(f) by striking out lines 2 and 3 on page 23 and substituting the following:

“shall contain

(a) a summary of pricing trends in the pharmaceutical industry; and

(b) the name of each patentee to whom a notice under subsection 41.15(1.1) or 41.16(5.1) was sent during the year and a statement as to the status of the matter in respect of which the notice was sent.”

(g) by striking out lines 4 and 5 on page 23 and substituting the following:

“(2) The summary referred to in paragraph (1)(a) may be based on information and”.

And that Senate amendment 16(a) be amended to read as follows:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended by adding, immediately after line 17 on page 19, the following:

“(12) Where an order is made under paragraph 6(d) in respect of a medicine, the prohibitions set out in subsections 41.11(1) and 41.14(1) cease to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the date of the order.”

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, now.

I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

THAT the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 13(a), (b), (c) and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and 16(a);

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b) and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a); and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

THAT the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 13(a), (b), (c) and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and 16(a);

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b) and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a); and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I hope to be brief and non-controversial, as usual, as the circumstances warrant. I do not rise for the purpose of debating the merits of Bill C-22. Goodness knows, this has been done extensively in this chamber and in two committees of this chamber for many months. I rise for the purpose of saying a few words to the motion that I have just proposed, which is that we concur in the message we have just received from the House of Commons.

In so doing I remind honourable senators that on August 26 last—almost three months ago—at a time when the other place was discussing amendments that had been made to Bill C-22 by this chamber, the Right Honourable John Turner, Leader of the Opposition, said as follows:

Our position is quite clear on the jurisdiction of the Upper House. We want an elected Senate. We want fundamental reform, but as long as the Senate remains a nominated Chamber, as long as it remains a non-elected Chamber, no matter who appoints them—giving the Premiers the powers of appointment is no significant reform—at the end of the day the elected House of Commons must prevail. That is a clear position of the Liberal Party.

Honourable senators, I have proposed the motion to concur in the message from the House of Commons, because in my judgment we have arrived at “the end of the day,” to use Mr. Turner’s expression. The bill has been to two different Senate committees, as I have pointed out; it has been under consideration in this place and in its committees for more than six months. It is one year ago next week since the matter of Bill C-22 first arose in this chamber in the course of the oral Question Period when I had suggested a pre-study of the bill. At that time the Deputy Leader of the Opposition demurred, saying:

There are some perhaps temporary problems about the pre-study of Bill C-22.

Senator Frith: Well said, sir!

Senator Murray: In the five months that ensued the government made every reasonable effort to persuade honourable senators that a pre-study should be given to this bill. Finally, it was read the first time in this place on May 7, yet it took another three months for senators to decide on amendments to propose to the other place.

The message came back from the House of Commons, and at that time I indicated that I thought the moment had come for the Senate to decide what to do with this bill. Instead, honourable senators chose to send it to another committee of the Senate, where it remained for another two months.

Senator Frith: No, not true; we sent the message, not the bill.

Senator Murray: Following another series of amendments proposed by the Senate, the House of Commons returned a message to us the week before last only to find that the senators had decided to take a one-week recess.

Well, honourable senators, I simply want to remind you that the government and the House of Commons have been quite accommodating of the Senate and its various committees on this bill. Of the first batch of amendments that was proposed by the Senate in August the government and the House of Commons accepted one amendment, accepted the intent of but redrafted another, and amended further a Senate amendment.

In the second group of amendments in early November the government and the House of Commons again accepted one amendment; accepted the intent of but redrafted another; and amended further a Senate amendment.

As I say, I have no intention of debating the merits of Bill C-22. What this has become, as I indicated some days ago here, is clearly, in the broadest sense of the term, a constitutional issue as it relates to the relationship between the two houses of this Parliament.

I draw to your attention a statement made in the course of another debate more than a year ago by no less an authority than our colleague, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. On July 24, 1986, we were discussing a message we had received from the House of Commons with regard to Bill C-67, an act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act. On that occasion Senator Frith said the following:

Now I will come to the one reason why we should not insist upon it.

He was referring to the Senate amendment. He went on to say:

Notwithstanding that we are right and they are wrong, notwithstanding all of these reasons to insist, the fact is that we are not an elected body. It is our job—and I believe that we classically fulfilled our job in this case—to expose the weaknesses of this bill. We proposed an amendment. We drew to the attention of the people of the country and to the media the weaknesses of this bill. We passed a good amendment, an amendment that we can be proud of. If the majority of the elected representatives still give us the back of their hand, then I suppose they should get away with it. Among the many reasons why we should insist there is that one reason why we should not.

Senator Frith: You are reaching for a very high authority.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the authority is not only high and esteemed but, I trust, will be instrumental in persuading honourable senators to support the motion that I have just proposed.

It is, as I say, now a constitutional issue as to the rapport which should exist between this house and the other place.

[Senator Murray.]

After all these months it seems to me that the questions before us are two. The first question is: Shall the Senate allow this matter to come to a final vote? Shall the Senate finally indicate how it wishes to dispose of this bill? The second question is: Shall the elected chamber prevail over the will of the appointed chamber?

It seems to me, honourable senators, that those are the issues. I think there is no need for me to elaborate on them. I appeal to honourable senators to support the motion that I have just proposed and to concur in the message from our colleagues in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I do not know that I will be as brief as the Leader of the Government, but I will try.

He said that he was not going to be controversial. I guess he does not have the same impression of the meaning of that word as I do, because he certainly made statements that are controversial.

At the outset let me get away from one thing in which he seemed to take a great deal of delight, and that was quoting Senator Frith. All I have to say about that is to recall to all honourable senators what a very great Canadian said, which was, "There is nothing I have less use for than my opinion of yesterday." That is my comment on the comment of Senator Frith that was quoted by the Leader of the Government.

● (1410)

Senator Frith: And even less use for someone else's opinion of yesterday!

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, let me take a look at the timing. Senator Murray seems to think that the Senate has taken a rather long time over this issue. As I recollect its history, it has been with us for some nine years. In 1983 a white paper on the matter was issued by the government then in power. It was discussed between parliamentarians and representatives of the industry. The government decided to appoint a royal commission. The Eastman Royal Commission studied the matter and made its report. However, the present government did not like the Eastman report. Therefore, in June of 1986 it put together what it thought might be an appropriate bill. The government, however, did not proceed with that bill. The legislation was not introduced until November of 1986, and there are significant differences between the bill that was first proposed in June and the bill that eventually saw the light of day in November.

Therefore, honourable senators, this government has spent many more months dealing with this issue and changing positions than have ever been spent as a result of studies taking place in committees of the Senate and discussions in this chamber.

I am sure that all honourable senators must have the same feeling I have in hearing this message. I am not going to comment at all; I do not want to use pejorative language. All I am going to say is that the minister in the other place certainly did not help his colleagues, as far as I am concerned and as far as the people of Canada are concerned, in using some of the language that he felt was appropriate. I say that it was most inappropriate.

What does this message do? It does not deal in any way with the substance of the clear-cut issues dealt with by the Senate amendments, which were embodied in the nineteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce which was adopted by this assemblage.

What do we now have? We have one group of people who have looked at this issue taking one view and another group of people, equally having looked at this issue, taking a contrary view. In other words, honourable senators, we have an impasse. Senator Murray has said that as far as he was concerned this raises a constitutional issue. I accept that statement that such an impasse raises a constitutional issue. I think all honourable senators should thank Senator Murray for putting matters so squarely on that issue. What are we going to do to resolve this constitutional issue? In the time-honoured way, he suggested, of establishing a rapport between the two houses of Parliament.

Fortunately, honourable senators, there is a procedure that will enable that rapport to be enhanced. That procedure is a conference. Where there is an impasse constitutional convention supports the setting up of a free conference; and, honourable senators, I believe the time has come in this issue to say that in order to maintain that rapport, to apply the proper technique, to use the constitutional requirements that are there, and to meet the question asked by Senator Murray: "When shall we vote on this?", the answer is clear—after a conference.

Honourable senators, I suggest that that is the proper course to take. I suggest that a conference is necessary. I hope that all honourable senators will take this opportunity of supporting that. I suggest that we defer consideration of the motion moved by the Leader of the Government until such time as we deal with the issue of a conference.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Sinclair: I might add that a lot has been said about the time of day. I have had something to say about how that should be interpreted; but certainly, based on constitutional prerogatives, constitutional convention, constitutional matters, the time of day cannot be before a conference.

I move the adjournment of the debate in my name.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker in the Chair.

[Translation]

Hon. Pietro Rizzuto: Honourable senators, with your permission, I should like to speak before the debate is adjourned, please.

[English]

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, if, in fact, we are not adjourning the debate, then I also would like to say a word or two.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, I should like to express my views before the debate is adjourned. However, I wonder whether it should not instead be turned into an emergency debate.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, different views have been expressed. We have a motion by Senator Sinclair to adjourn the debate, but other senators would like permission to speak before the motion is put. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to allow those honourable senators to speak, or shall I put the motion to adjourn the debate?

Senator Sinclair: I would ask Your Honour to put my motion to adjourn the debate in my name.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Senator Sinclair is not closing the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Sinclair, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart, that further debate on this motion be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Sinclair, debate adjourned.

CITIZENSHIP

PETITION OF FOREIGN SERVICE COMMUNITY ASSOCIATION ON BILL C-254 TABLED

On Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I would like to have leave of the Senate to table a petition from the Foreign Service Community Association in reference to the Citizenship Act, dealing particularly with Bill C-254, with which the Senate will be dealing on Thursday. This is a highly informative and well-presented document, and I ask for leave to have it tabled.

● (1420)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, it is standard practice to read the petition if it is not too long. I am not asking that the name of the petitioners be read, but we ought to know what it is the honourable senator is tabling at this time. What is the text of the petition?

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have a 12-page document presented by these distinguished Canadians who have been most involved with problems arising from the Citizenship Act as it relates to spouses of foreign service officers. This is exemplified by the difficulties experienced at the time that two of our distinguished diplomats involved in the Iran situation were presented with the Order of Canada. Their spouses, who had served loyally on behalf of our country at that very difficult time, were excluded from the honours, because the Citizenship Act did not treat their service abroad in a Canadian embassy as contributing to their eligibility for Canadian citizenship.

I thought it would be helpful to honourable senators when dealing with Bill C-254 on Thursday to have this document available. In the other place, although it is not necessarily what the Senate should do, they not only accepted this document but printed it as part of their record. It would be presumptuous to have it printed as part of the record at first reading, so I thought I would help my colleagues by tabling this very splendid document at this time.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Macquarrie for his explanation, but I understood when he arose initially that he wished to table a petition. My question to Senator Macquarrie is: In his opinion does that document take the usual, standard form provided under our rules for petitions? I am not asking the honourable senator to make a judgment but to tell us grosso modo whether it respects the usual form for petitions presented to one of the houses of Parliament.

Senator Guay: Is it in the two official languages?

Senator Macquarrie: The question from my colleague prompts me to reply that, although I am not a lawyer, I have taken counsel and there is no order in our proceedings in reference to tabling of documents, and that the procedure in the Senate is that after the true, real and precise petitions have been presented, as my house leader did with immaculate ease a few moments ago, the best place to table documents is under the same order. That is why I am availing of this opportunity. If we had another order for tabling documents, that is where I would be tabling them.

However, I would like the Senate to have these documents. It does not reflect on me if the Senate does not want them. They are available.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I am not arguing with respect to wanting or not wanting the documents. I may be mistaken, and I stand to be corrected, but I understood that when Senator Macquarrie uttered his first words he referred to a document which he called a petition. Is it or is it not a petition? That is all I want to know.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I may be very casual in my language, but I cannot recall using the word "petition." I certainly recall using the word "document." It was the Speaker who used the word "petition."

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Document tabled.

[Translation]

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the thirteenth report of the Standing Committee on National Finance regarding Supplementary Estimate (B) tabled in Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 2174.)

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this report be taken into consideration, honourable senators?

On motion of Senator Leblanc (Saurel), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

WAR VETERANS

BENEFITS LEGISLATION—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, November 19, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the advisability that the government amend the legislation pertaining to the War Veterans Allowances Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act or introduce other equitable legislation which would result in the qualification for war veterans allowances of those members of the Canadian Forces who: i) volunteered for unrestricted active duty; ii) served for a period of no less than 365 days; iii) were assigned to service within the boundaries of Canada; and iv) are 65 years of age or over.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

SENATE TASK FORCE ON MEECH LAKE CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD AND YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That, notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Monday, 14th September, 1987, the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be empowered to present its final report to the Committee of the Whole no later than Tuesday, 8th December, 1987.

Honourable senators, we are only seeking a one-week extension. The Task Force was to present its final report on December 1, but it is seeking leave to present it no later than December 8, 1987.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three-thirty o'clock in the afternoon tomorrow, Wednesday, November 18, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to Senator Sinclair? I saw his motion on today's scroll and had no objection to it. However, the proceedings this afternoon may have raised a problem in this regard. The honourable senator moved the adjournment of the debate on Bill C-22, which I presume will resume at approximately this time tomorrow afternoon. However, I would not want the debate on Bill C-22 delayed because Senator Sinclair is chairing a committee. I would like some assurance that the debate on Bill C-22 would take precedence over the committee meeting.

● (1430)

Senator Argue: He has a good deputy chairman.

Senator Sinclair: With the consent of the house, perhaps the first order tomorrow could be the resumption of the debate that was adjourned in my name so that there will be no conflict.

Senator Phillips: That would be agreeable.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Phillips: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it further agreed that the adjourned debate on Bill C-22 will be placed on the Orders of the Day as the first item of business for tomorrow?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DIEFENBAKER CENTRE, UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

FINANCIAL CRISIS—RESPONSE OF GOVERNMENT TO REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I would like to express my appreciation to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and his cabinet for responding to the urgent needs of the Diefenbaker Centre in Saskatoon by announcing a substantial contribution, which will ensure the operation of that important institution for a period of two or three years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Buckwold: I wanted to bring some joy to the heart of the Leader of the Government and tell him that his efforts are appreciated. I must say that the announcement was greeted with a good deal more enthusiasm than many of the government announcements that come from Ottawa.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECT ON TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT—GOVERNMENT POLICY RE COMPENSATION TO FARMERS

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, on October 14 I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question on the effect of the Free Trade Agreement on the two-price system for wheat. The response by the Leader of the Government was:

Honourable senators, the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States does not provide for any change in the two-price system for wheat in this country.

On October 22, 1987, in response to a question asked by Senator Argue on the same subject Senator Murray said:

Honourable senators, the two-price system for wheat is still in place.

Senator Argue, I and others who are involved in the agricultural industry in a province that economically depends substantially on that industry are concerned, because this is a $280 million to $300 million benefit to the farmers of western Canada.

On November 7, 1987, the Globe and Mail printed an article which said, in part:

The federal Government intends to end the two-price system for wheat as part of the free-trade agreement with the United States, Grains Minister Charles Mayer says.

The higher domestic prices are worth an estimated $280-million to $300-million a year to Prairie producers.

Farmers, however, are not going to lose that income, at least not immediately. "The Government will provide compensation to producers to make up the difference," said Gordon Bacon, Special Assistant to Mr. Mayer.

The Legislative Report issued by the Saskatchewan Chamber of Commerce on November 2, 1987, read as follows:

Premier Devine confirmed, under opposition questioning, that the two-price system for wheat will be dropped under the agreement. He expected this would take place early in the ten year period in which the sections of the agreement will be phased in. The two-price system, worth about $280 million to Canadian farmers according to the Premier, gives farmers a higher price for wheat sold to millers in Canada. The Premier said, however, farmers would be fully compensated by the Federal Government for any loss of income . . .

I do not want to leave the impression that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has given us misleading information. My question is this: What is the policy of the government? It has been indicated that such loss of income would be fully compensated, and I am asking what is the program of the government to compensate farmers in western Canada for this very substantial loss of income as a result of the proposed trade agreement with the United States.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, before coming into the chamber today I carefully read the replies that I gave to my honourable friend and to Senator Argue some days ago in light of the announcement that was made several days ago by my colleague, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. The answers I gave on those occasions were correct. The honourable senator has quoted me as saying that the two-price system for wheat is still in place. Indeed, it is still in place.

The Free Trade Agreement does not take effect until January 1, 1989. Even after that it may be some time before we reach the stage where Canadian import controls on wheat would be lifted because the support levels for this commodity on both sides of the border had become equivalent. That is the situation.

I should tell the honourable senator that an announcement was made by my colleague, Mr. Mayer, on November 6 indicating the government's intention to change the two-price wheat policy.

In his announcement he said:

The policy will be altered in such a way that farmers will continue to receive support while processors will continue to be able to compete in both domestic and international markets as various provisions of the Bilateral Free Trade Agreement . . . come into effect.

That is the answer to the question.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, with respect, I hardly consider that an answer. It was a statement. There was no answer.

The question I asked was: What process is envisaged and what are the plans of the government to compensate farmers for a substantial loss of income which will come about as a result of the proposed Free Trade Agreement? The honourable leader has indicated that he was right in his answer, that there has been no change. I agree that that is the case until the agreement is signed and comes into effect. On a very technical basis he is correct.

[Senator Buckwold.]

However, I suggest that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been misleading this chamber by giving the impression that the Free Trade Agreement has no effect on the two-price system.

Senator Murray: With respect, that is not what I said.

Senator Argue: It was not a very full answer.

Senator Buckwold: The question that I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: What will the plans of the government be to compensate farmers for this loss of income?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in answer to that question let me again remind the honourable senator that Mr. Mayer has stated that the policy would be altered in such a way that farmers would continue to receive support. Further to that, I may say that Mr. Mayer is meeting today with people from the various relevant sectors. Our position is that until we have had an opportunity to consult fully with all of the interested groups, it is premature to give a definitive answer as to how the policy will be altered. It is not a technical matter that we have until January 1, 1989 at least—and present indications are that the circumstances under which the two-price policy would become inviable will not take place until perhaps considerably after the January 1, 1989, date.

● (1440)

Further to that, I may tell the honourable senator that there is a sector advisory group on international trade dealing with food, agriculture and beverages. They recognize that some adjustments and trade-offs would be necessary as tariffs were reduced or eliminated over the ten-year period. They have made some recommendations to the government on this matter, which we will be considering, as well as further recommendations from the various SAGIT subcommittees that were specifically set up to consider grains and oilseeds in light of the Free Trade Agreement.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—POSSIBILITY OF REFERENDUM

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I have been asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate some time now about a connecting link between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. He told me that an announcement would be made soon.

Last week the Minister of Public Works came down to Prince Edward Island, held a press conference, and made the announcement. As a consequence, the minister in charge in the Senate did not have an opportunity to tell me first, because the Senate was not sitting. I know he would have done so if that had not been the case. As I read the headlines of our Prince Edward Island newspapers there is an article in The Guardian, which states:

Federal Public Works Minister Stewart McInnes said seven consortia have been "short-listed" to compete for the potential contract. The lowest cost proposal will be accepted if Islanders want the fixed crossing—

My first question is: Does he propose to have a referendum on the island to find out if Islanders want the fixed crossing?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators, we do not propose to have a referendum, although, as my colleague indicated, Public Works Canada will be conducting public meetings in local communities on the island to explain the results of the environmental studies and to provide an opportunity for the public to express their views.

I should also say that the government that is most directly concerned with those issues, the Government of Prince Edward Island, will also be consulting the people of Prince Edward Island on the matter. How they assess public reaction will be up to them. Whether they have a referendum, a public opinion survey or town meetings is a question that perhaps would be better directed to Premier Ghiz.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—BASIS OF AWARDING CONTRACT

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: My second question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerns this statement by Mr. McInnes, who said:

Once the proposals meet this criteria—which, I suspect, means the studies and the approval of the people of Prince Edward Island—at least I hope that that is one of the criteria—we will then ask the developers to price their solutions and we will award on the basis of price—

Is that correct? For $1 will they put up something that will wash away in the first storm? Will they not construct something other than on the basis of price?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Well, honourable senators, first of all, the short list of seven consortia that was arrived at was made on the basis of their competence and their financial ability to undertake and to complete this project.

Second, the question of the lowest bid will be an important factor and, other things being equal, one assumes would be the decisive factor.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—AVAILABILITY OF STUDIES TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: My third question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Since, apparently, there have been some studies carried out so far by the Government of Canada—either environmental, engineering, economic or cost, and so on—will those studies be made available to Parliament? Can we, as senators, have copies of those studies so that we can inform our people of the values of and the pros and cons of hooking New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am not sure whether those studies deal with that question, which is more in the metaphysical realm, but I will see whether the studies can be made available; I will inquire of my colleagues.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, and Mr. Leader of the Government in the Senate, do you not think that perhaps in order for the people of Prince Edward Island to have a complete understanding of the future—because this will probably be a permanent link if it is ever done—

An Hon. Senator: I hope so!

Senator Bonnell:—that their representatives in Parliament should understand and see their studies so that they can talk to the people whom they represent here in Parliament and tell them what they think about the environment and the fisheries? Perhaps it will even change the whole temperature of Prince Edward Island. Maybe we will have a haven there with easy access for criminals to come across. Now we can catch them on the boat, but if we get a causeway perhaps we will not be able to catch them anymore.

There are a lot of things that we have to consider if we want to protect our little province of Prince Edward Island, because the quality of life on Prince Edward Island and our culture is important. We do not think those studies should be made in secret. At least they should not be withheld from the representatives of the people.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not at all exclude the possibility of bringing these studies that the honourable senator referred to into the Senate and tabling them here. I have undertaken to speak to my colleagues about this matter.

I do want to remind him, on the basis of our experience in Cape Breton, that the construction of a fixed link has been an immense spur to progress over the past 30 years or so and has not at all diminished the capacity of the Cape Bretoners to preserve their unique culture.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, let me say to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that Cape Breton is no longer an island, it is now a peninsula; the unemployment rate in Cape Breton is just about as high it is now in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island; and the government had to initiate all kinds of incentives in order to get people to come to Cape Breton to try to get some initiatives going there and to get employment developed. Prince Edward Island could be destroyed—and that might be good, I am not saying that it is bad—

Senator Frith: Oh, you are not?

Senator Bonnell: —but we need to know the facts.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—RAILWAY LINK

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Let me ask another question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We had a fellow by the name of the Honourable Stewart McInnes come down to Prince Edward Island one week before the last provincial election and promise us a Litton plant with 400 jobs. A month afterwards he said, "No, it is going to Nova Scotia," and he lost the election.

Senator Barootes: Because the premier turned it down.

Senator Bonnell: Let me go further and ask another question. First, can we go by the Honourable Stewart McInnes' word?

● (1450)

Honourable senators, I wish to quote from the British North America Act, which states:

Efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers to be established and maintained between the Island—

Honourable senators will notice that it says, "the" Island. It is the only one.

Senator McElman: There is none other.

Senator Bonnell: It goes on to state:

—and the Dominion, winter and summer, thus placing the Island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of the Dominion.

Honourable senators, those are the words used in the Terms of Union with Canada.

Will there be a railway on the causeway or through the tunnel or the combination of both?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I suggest that the honourable senator allow me to take that kind of question as notice and report back.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—CREDIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a further question on this issue, which is so important to my province.

On April 9, 1885, Liberal Senator George William Howland of Alberton, Prince Edward Island, in a Senate speech suggested a causeway or a tunnel be built. On June 2, 1886, an act was passed to incorporate the Northumberland Straits Tunnel Railway Co., and there was a suggestion that the railway go through a tunnel or across a causeway.

On February 19, 1891, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, "Every man . . . must admit that such a tunnel must be constructed if the thing is reasonably practicable."

[Senator Bonnell.]

On June 24, 1891, Sir John A. Macdonald said that the tunnel would receive favourable consideration if the cost were reasonable. Honourable senators, this was just prior to an election.

On May 17, 1906, Joseph Pope, according to an inscription on the title page of a book written by the Rev. A.E. Burke, pastor of Alberton's Sacred Heart Parish, and whose father, William Henry Pope, was a Father of Confederation, and whose uncle, James Colledge Pope, was the premier of P.E.I., was against a causeway being built.

On April 17, 1962, Prime Minister John George Diefenbaker told the House of Commons that he would support the construction of a causeway. He called an election on June 18. That was his "northern vision."

On July 8, 1965, Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson announced that tenders would be called for the construction of a combined tunnel, bridge and causeway worth about $148 million. We even had them turn the sod with a bulldozer.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): You did not invite Walter Shaw, and that is where you went wrong!

Senator Bonnell: Walter Shaw was the Liberal leader at the time!

Senator McElman: He was not a Liberal; he was a Tory.

Senator Bonnell: Walter Shaw was a Tory.

On March 5, 1969, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau told the Commons:

The government should have liked to be able to assist at the same time in the construction of a causeway linking the Island to the mainland, but there is a limitation to the resources of Canada.

Honourable senators, last Monday the Honourable Stewart McInnes said that a causeway or tunnel will be built in 1993. He is the same man who made promises respecting the Litton plant a week before the provincial election in 1986.

My question to the Leader of the Government is: Can we believe the government of today? Can we believe the Prime Minister, and can we trust him?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would like to know where the honourable senator stands on this issue, because he has certainly been rather ambivalent in his pronouncements today.

I hope that he will find it possible to support this project. While he has placed before the house something of the long and colourful history in this regard, he has omitted to point out that what we are discussing here is a project which will be undertaken by the private sector, with certain undertakings to the Government of Canada and the people of Prince Edward Island.

I remind my honourable friend, in all seriousness, that this project, upon its completion, will be extremely important to the people and the economy of Prince Edward Island in, among other things, getting their produce to the expanded markets which will be available to them under the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

I would also remind him that it is an enormous project, one that truly deserves the description "megaproject," which, during the construction period, will create thousands of jobs indirectly and directly throughout the Atlantic region.

I hope that, notwithstanding his jaded view of the history—the ancient history now—of this project, he will welcome the firm intention to proceed with it.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, like 90 per cent of Prince Edward Islanders, before I make my mind up as to whether I am for or against I like to know the facts. That is why I am asking that we have the studies that the government has made available to themselves so that we can have the same information and make our judgment accordingly. If it is that good, let us have the information.

Furthermore, I should like to tell the Leader of the Government that he has the facts backwards. He said that this would result in a boost to the economy of Prince Edward Island. It may provide a better boost to the economy of Canada.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—AVAILABILITY OF STUDIES—GENERAL DESIGN OR CONCEPT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question on this matter.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate has told us that the government will make public the various studies which have been prepared.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Let me stop the honourable senator right there. I do not even know to what studies my honourable friend, Senator Bonnell, is referring. The undertaking I have given to him and to the Senate is that I will make inquiries of my colleagues as to what studies are in the possession of the government, are available, and are appropriate to table at this time.

Senator Stewart: Yes, we are to have a list of the studies that have been made and also a list of those that are appropriate to be tabled in the Senate. I understand that point.

As honourable senators can well imagine, many fishermen are extremely concerned about the nature of the design or concept for a permanent crossing in the Northumberland Strait. There are several reasons for their concern, such as the effect upon the tidal regime, the effect upon water temperatures, the effect upon migration of fish stocks, and the like. For this reason it is important not only to the people of Prince Edward Island, for whom Senator Bonnell has been speaking, but to the people in Antigonish County, Pictou County and Cumberland County, Nova Scotia, and in New Brunswick, to know what studies have been made with regard to the impact of the proposed permanent crossing on the fisheries.

We are told that this is to be a private-sector project and that seven companies or consortia have been invited to submit tenders. What I now want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate is whether he will arrange to make available to those senators who are interested in this matter the general design or concept on which the government has invited these companies or consortia to tender. Is it to be mainly a tunnel? Is it to be mainly a bridge? Is it to be a combination of causeway, artificial island, tunnel, and bridge as was proposed some 20 years ago? I think we really need to have that kind of information, not on the detail of the design but on the general concept, together with the earth and water studies, hydrographic studies, to which Senator Bonnell referred.

● (1500)

Can we have the government's general design or concept, the one it has made available to the seven companies or consortia?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the point raised by Senator Stewart. I will make inquiries and bring forward as much information as is available on this matter.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—POSSIBILITY OF REFERENDUM

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I will not use the preambular possibilities used by my colleague, Senator Bonnell, but I do not recall Senator Bonnell ever dissociating himself from his then Premier Matheson, or my predecessor in the House of Commons, Neil Matheson, who was a strong advocate of the causeway, as it was then called, nor did he dissociate himself from the views of the Honourable George McIlraith, who came to Charlottetown with the most up-dated, thoroughly documented items of research on what the government of the time had learned, and it had learned a great deal.

In essence, I would ask the Leader of the Government, who has been involved in negotiations with reference to the Atlantic area—and who has been doing a splendid job thereat—whether it has been intimated that a referendum to ascertain the views of the people of Prince Edward Island is a sine qua non before construction proceeds. If that is the case, I think it is a very important matter. Is the will of the people of Prince Edward Island, as demonstrated by a provincially sponsored referendum—and only they could do it, as I see it—a part of the entire discussion of the prospects of the construction of this megaproject for our region?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, without having the documentation in front of me I have the impression that Premier Ghiz had at one point alluded to the possibility of holding a referendum on this question. He may have referred to it yesterday, if my reading of the press reports is correct. I think it is fair to say that he is determined to have the widest possible consultation with Islanders on the matter. While he was generally supportive and positive about the project yesterday, he has not, as I understand his position, given a final and unequivocal "yes" to the proposition.

THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—POINT OF ORDER—POSSIBLE REVISION OF RULE 20

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Some years ago there was no Question Period provided for under our rules. I raise this matter now because I see that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders is in his place. When the rules of the Senate were revised, a Question Period was provided for, and the rules governing Question Period were fairly clearly spelled out. If we look at the clock today we realize that, at least by practice, the Senate has chosen to change all of the rules, such as they are, governing the Question Period. We are not following the original principle as it was spelled out under the rules.

If that is the wish of the house, which it may well be, then I suggest that the Rules Committee take this matter under consideration and bring in a revision to rule 20 and all of its various parts. The Question Period has gone from a quick series of questions to debates. Matters that frequently come up now should be the subject of inquiries, and quite proper inquiries. I am not questioning what is desirable to discuss in the chamber. I am merely suggesting that we follow our rules or, if we want to continue with the present procedure, that we revise rule 20.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—RELATIONSHIP OF ANNOUNCEMENT TO FEDERAL ELECTION

Hon. George van Rогgen: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the uncanny timing in years gone by of announcements relative to a crossing to Prince Edward Island preceding by only a matter of weeks a federal or provincial election, can we take it from the announcement last week that we can anticipate a call for a federal election in the next few weeks?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think my honourable friend can get on with the work of the Foreign Affairs Committee in studying the Free Trade Agreement with the United States with some prospect that it will be able to do so undisturbed.

PARLIAMENT HILL

CONDITION OF SIDEWALKS—QUICK CORRECTIVE ACTION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, my observation to the Leader of the Government also has to do with construction. Honourable senators will recall that on October 20 I drew his attention to the deplorable condition of the walkways on the Hill. Perhaps he would accept that I have some concern that the government might fall through the cracks. In any event, my purpose today is to ask him to accept my compliments for the quick action that he took and the results that he obtained. The work, sir, has been done.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am delighted to have that information and I will convey the honourable senator's compliments to my colleague, the Minister of Public Works.

CONDITION OF ROADWAYS—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I, too, put a question to the Leader of the Government some time ago concerning plans for repaving the roadways on Parliament Hill and any plans for fixing the state of the sidewalks. The government leader has never replied to that question. Can he expedite a response from the Minister of Public Works in this regard?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I will do so, honourable senators.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT BROCHURE—USE OF MINISTERIAL POWER

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, only yesterday I received a letter from a pharmacist in Toronto, who, in that capacity and in his capacity as a member of the Health Committee of the Consumers Association of Canada, objected to a letter from the Honourable Harvie Andre, which was accompanied by a propaganda brochure called "Bill C-22 The Patent Act Amendments."

This pharmacist stated in his letter:

If this was not a Ministry foul up, one would be led to conclude that government has failed to adhere to proper legislative procedures. The pharmacies who should have received this package, not being experienced in proclamation of federal laws would assume that the amendments to Bill C-22 are in effect. For your information, there are approximately 6,000 pharmacies in Canada.

My major objection is that the information contained in the brochure is of questionable validity and presents a distortion of the actual facts.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he would be disposed to investigate this use of ministerial power? In view of the alleged unfounded assumptions and misleading statements in this brochure, would the government leader also ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to halt the distribution of this material and to withdraw all copies of it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Senator Haidasz has not specified the alleged errors or inaccuracies in the brochure. I have not read the brochure, but I can tell him that 200,000 copies have been distributed to 20,000 doctors and 5,700 pharmacists in the country. This is absolutely the first word I have heard suggesting that there was anything amiss. I shall examine the documentation which the honourable senator has sent to me to see what specific misstatements, if any, have been alleged.

● (1510)

Senator Haidasz: As a supplementary, since Bill C-22 has been amended and re-amended—and possibly will be re-amended further in a conference between both houses of Parliament—does the Leader of the Government believe that such propaganda is fair and proper; and, if not, would he state his opinion?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I made a promise to myself today that I would not be provocative or inflammatory on this issue. I think I will decline to express the opinion which has been sought of me by the honourable senator, and which, in any case, would be contrary to our rules.

BILL TO AMEND—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT BROCHURE
BEFORE POSSIBLE ENACTMENT OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to express a point on that question, and I, too, will try to be non-controversial and non-provocative. Is it now the practice of the government to issue explanatory material on bills which have not yet become the law of the land? I take no exception to informing the public about a law that has been enacted, but here is a bill that is still a bill; it has not been passed by the Senate; it has not received Royal Assent. What would happen if it were amended or, indeed, if it were defeated? I am wondering whether it is now standard practice or whether it is a mistake by the department in putting out the pamphlet before the bill has been enacted or given Royal Assent.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, this is a matter which received a good deal of attention in the media and elsewhere. It is clear that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs thought that it was necessary and in the public interest to do exactly what the honourable senator has suggested, which is to put out a brochure explaining the purpose of the amendments, what they are, why a change was needed, how consumers would be protected, how the Patent Act amendments would help employment, and, of course, the importance of medical research, which will be increased once these amendments are passed.

So the short answer to the question posed by the Leader of the Opposition in this case is "Yes".

Senator MacEachen: Is the minister saying that it will now be standard practice to put out explanatory material in this form on bills which have not yet become law; and, if so, would it not be fair to ensure that those who are opposed to the bill have an opportunity, at public expense, to express their views before it has become law? Once it becomes law it is quite a different matter. But this is not law, and it might well never become law.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, for a rather modest budget this pamphlet was authored and published by the government. Again, without wishing to be controversial, I think it is fair to say that the budget that was provided to the Senate committee—which was considerably in excess of the budget for this pamphlet—certainly gave the opponents of the bill an opportunity to make their views known.

BILL TO AMEND—SUGGESTED INACCURACY OF STATEMENTS IN GOVERNMENT BROCHURE

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the Leader of the Government to two statements made in this pamphlet. It says that the purpose of the Patent Act amendments is:

To require Canada's pharmaceutical companies to double their investment in research and development to a projected $3 billion.

I would like the Leader of the Government to recollect that there is no such requirement in the Patent Act as passed by the House of Commons. When the conference results in the acceptance of what we have suggested, then that statement will be correct.

Another statement is that:

There is nothing in the new amendments . . .

As passed by the House of Commons:

. . . that will increase the price of any drug now available to consumers.

I suggest that that statement is wrong, definitely wrong, because there is one generic, at least, that will have to come off the market.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Once again, the honourable senator is attempting to debate the bill on the basis of taking objections to statements that are made in the pamphlet. He will have an opportunity to elaborate on those points when he completes his speech tomorrow, and we will have an opportunity to reply.

Senator Sinclair: Then I will put a question: Is it the purpose of government to issue in the thousands and at public expense statements that are incorrect?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the answer to that question, of course, is "No". This strikes me as being an excellent pamphlet. It gives a good summary of the bill, the purpose and the effect of the bill. The honourable senator may put his own interpretation on some of the statements, but that is his business. We will have an opportunity to debate these matters tomorrow.

Senator Sinclair: Would the Leader of the Government consider amending it so that it clearly states what the facts are?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the pamphlet does clearly state what the facts are. The problem is that my friend quarrels with them.

Senator Sinclair: I have just drawn the Leader of the Government's attention to two misleading statements, particularly to one that is absolutely wrong, positively wrong.

BILL TO AMEND—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT BROCHURE
BEFORE POSSIBLE ENACTMENT OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government how Parliament can function or exercise its prerogative—and by "Parliament" I mean to include the opposition parties in the Commons as well as in the Senate—if the government is going to announce before any particular piece of legislation becomes law what, in fact, is going to be in that law. It seems to me that this is the greatest possible contempt of Parliament, that the government should say in this pamphlet what the final act will be before the law is, in fact, on the statute books.

This is a blatant kind of propaganda. I can imagine what the late Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker would say if he were faced with an issue like this: A government with the largest majority in the history of Canada spending public money on propaganda before a bill is passed, which says that the opposition and the House of Commons no longer matter, but only the government; that the government has the power and the government will rule, and the government will spend millions on propaganda before the law becomes the law—but it will tie its own hands by saying, "Here is what the amendments will contain."

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I suggest to the honourable senator that there is quite ample precedent—including ample precedent under his own government—for the expenditure of public funds to explain public policy to the people of Canada before Parliament had taken a decision on the matters in question. He obviously forgets the "flying geese" to which we were treated for so long.

Senator Argue: Now that is no answer at all. This is a pattern which this government is adopting, for which this government is responsible. It says, "We have the biggest majority in history; we will do what we like."

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT ACT
CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, for the second reading of the Bill C-46, An Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act.—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I am pleased to take part in this debate. First I should like to commend Senator Doody for his very clear and very eloquent presentation of this bill.

We agree with practically everything he said. Still, we do have a few questions to ask him and we hope Senator Doody will be able to respond in his usually clear manner.

[English]

Honourable senators, I have a couple of questions that I would like to put to Senator Doody in relation to the amendments proposed in this legislation. Clause 7(2) proposes to increase the number of directors from six to nine. I would like from Senator Doody a clearer explanation as to why there is the necessity to increase the board of directors from six to nine. I hope that there are no political reasons, such as wanting to appoint friends of the government—as has happened in the past—behind this amendment.

• (1520)

Clause 7(6) deals with the conditions of eligibility of members of the board of directors. It reads as follows:

Each director appointed under subsection (2) must have experience in the field of metal fabrication or production, industrial relations or a related field.

This clause changes the wording in the previous act but not the substance. In fact, Senator MacEachen received correspondence from a gentleman by the name of Robert Aaron, who is an expert in numismatics, and who is a frequent contributor in the media on related matters.

Senator Doody: He is a what?

Senator Bosa: A numismatic expert. The letter he sent to my leader reads as follows:

I am writing to you on behalf of Canada's Coin Collectors concerning the pending legislation to amend The Royal Canadian Mint Act and The Currency Act. I anticipate that this letter and your reply (or relevant parts) will be published in my column in the Toronto Star and Canadian Coin News.

For reasons set out in a recent column which I wrote, a copy of which is attached, it is my opinion and that of many of my fellow collectors that the legislation is seriously flawed by continuing a prohibition of coin collectors as such sitting on the Board of The Royal Canadian Mint. I can find absolutely no justification for preventing an educated, sophisticated businessman who happens to be a coin collector from sitting on the Board of the Royal Canadian Mint, and I strongly recommend that that section which continues the prohibition be deleted from the final version of the Bill. I look forward to receiving your early reply.

I would like to put on the record Mr. Aaron's letter as well as an article that he has written recently. Not only does the article deal with the bill from a different perspective but it also outlines the reasons why he believes that clause 7(6) should be amended. The column reads as follows:

Coin collectors and dealers may still be barred from sitting on the Board of Directors of the Royal Canadian Mint under new governing legislation which has already been given second reading or approval in principle by the House of Commons.

A major overhaul of the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act recently received all-party support. It was sent to committee and reported back to the Commons on October 1, 1987.

Final approval in the form of third reading, followed by Senate confirmation, was expected within a few days.

The new Bill C-46, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act, received first reading in the House of Commons on March 24, 1987.

The bill improves the Mint's financial operating arrangements, and consolidates in one Act all legislation concerning the production of Canadian coins. It also provides a better legislative framework for the Mint's ongoing marketing activities.

One significant change which has not been made in the new legislation and is sure to antagonize collectors across the country is the continuation of the apparent prohibition against a collector or coin dealer sitting on the Mint's board.

The controversial clause in Bill C-46, which was carried over from the old legislation, continues the requirement that each director "must have experience in the field of metal fabrication or production, industrial relations or a related field."

The question is whether the word "related" refers to the words which precede it, metal fabrication or production and industrial relations, or whether it refers to any field related to the Mint's work. Until now, the wording has been interpreted very strictly to refer only to metal work and personnel fields, but a slight loosening of the interpretation occurred recently with the appointment of a director whose background is in marketing.

Nevertheless, in the Mint's 18-year history as a Crown Corporation, no collector has ever been seated on the Mint's board. Unfortunately, the appointment process is strictly political, and coin collectors seem to have little clout in this arena.

Perhaps the legislation should be amended prior to passage to require appointment of a representative of the hobby to the Mint's board, especially now that it is being increased from seven to 11 members.

Collectors are bound to ask what harm could result if the president of a local coin club, the curator of the Bank of Canada Currency Museum, a past-president of the Canadian Numismatic Association, or the editor of Canadian Coin News sat on the board of the Mint?

There has even been some grumbling in the collector community that there is no guaranteed collector seat on the committee which selects designs of new Canadian coins. Even the membership of the committee is secret.

It is obvious that the Royal Canadian Mint is very successful in its collector programs and in its marketing of coins to non-collectors, but it is similarly apparent that the Canadian government does not want any serious hobby input into the Mint's decision-making process.

With a view to the possible introduction of a platinum Maple Leaf coin some time in the future, some changes have been enacted in the way coins receive government approval. As well, the authority for production of new coins has been transferred from the Currency Act to the Royal Canadian Mint Act.

In order to give the Mint's marketing team more flexibility to respond quickly to market pressures, new gold, silver or platinum coins can be initiated by the Mint and receive faster authorization than was previously possible.

Bill C-[46] establishes two new categories of Canadian coins—precious metal coins and base metal coins. Precious metal coins are coins which contain at least 50 per cent gold, silver, platinum or the platinum group of metals. Any other coin is a base metal coin.

Under the new Royal Canadian Mint Act, Parliamentary approval will not be required for any new or altered precious metal coins. Now, the federal cabinet acting upon a Mint request, will be able to authorize the issue of any new precious metal coins or alter the size, weight or design of the existing ones.

These provisions are similar to the old Currency Act, but give the cabinet wider authority to approve new precious metal coins without waiting for parliamentary approval.

I would like to ask Senator Doody what harm would it do if we had on the board of directors of the Mint an expert in coin design or in numismatic pursuits. Would that person not be able to contribute to and broaden the experience of the board of directors? Would that person not bring a new dimension to the decision-making process and thereby make a greater contribution, which may be denied under the present situation because there is no such person on the board of directors?

I have a couple of other questions I would like to put to Senator Doody. I would like to take advantage of this occasion to find out how we are progressing with the marketing of the one-dollar coin. If I recall correctly, when we passed last year the legislation to produce the one-dollar coin there was a provision that the one-dollar bills would be withdrawn within one year. I do not know what stage we are at now, but it seems to me that I am not seeing as many "loony" one-dollar coins around as was anticipated. I read somewhere that it has been a success, but I fail to see the evidence of that. Even when you pay a bill in our own cafeterias and parliamentary restaurants you are not given back any one-dollar coins; you are given back one-dollar bills.

● (1530)

Further, I would like to congratulate the Royal Canadian Mint on the success that it has experienced in the marketing of gold coins. I read a recent article in the Toronto Star, which reads as follows:

Canada has sold a record 140,000 gold coins for the 1988 Calgary Olympics . . .

The total sold so far breaks the previous record of about 55,000 gold coins sold for the 1984 Winter Olympic Games in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

That is indeed something to be proud of.

The article continues:

To help offset the cost of the Olympics, the federal government is selling 350,000 gold coins for $255 each and silver coins for $42 each.

Robert Huot, the mint's vice-president of marketing, noted yesterday that Canada now holds the sales record for both gold and silver Winter Olympic coins.

More than 3 million of the silver coins have been sold, and the mint expects to sell as many as 4 million. The previous record—held by Sarajevo—was 745,000.

Honourable senators, that is quite an achievement, and I wish to congratulate the managers of the Mint, particularly those who are engaged in marketing and design.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Bosa for his prompt and in-depth attention to this bill. I congratulate him on his research, and I am pleased to have him ask these pertinent questions today. Needless to say, I do not have the answers with me at the present time, but I would be most pleased to get those answers and provide them to Senator Bosa before third reading. There were one or two points that he raised which perhaps could be dealt with, but not in the depth in which he would like, and, as I say, I would prefer to have an opportunity to deal with the appropriate and knowledgeable authorities before we concluded.

On the question of the eligibility of the directors and why more directors are being appointed, I think the reason is quite obvious. The Mint wants to expand its board to reflect the size and scope of its operation. It is today a much bigger and more business-oriented enterprise than it was at its inception. Also, in order to take advantage of the opportunities of the marketplace the Mint wants to attract to its board people who are knowledgeable in marketing and merchandising and who have knowledge of the markets of the world in this particular field. Whether or not those new directors will be friendly or unfriendly towards this government is relatively unimportant. What is important is that they will be in a position to advise the management of the Mint on the course and direction they should take in terms of their business enterprises over the coming years.

As to the advantages or disadvantages of having a coin expert on the board, and in reply to the posed question: "What harm would it do?", I suspect that it would do no harm. The question that remains is: Should a director's seat be guaranteed to a coin expert, or is it possible to have the advantage of the knowledge of people in that area of expertise without actually assigning a board seat? I do not pretend to know the answer to that, and I will obtain another opinion. I would suspect that the opinions of coin experts can be sought and would be accepted without having to go through the actual process of assigning a board seat to experts in that area.

On the progress of the one-dollar coin, I honestly do not know the answer. Like Senator Bosa, I have read that it has been widely accepted. He says that they seem to be very scarce. I can say that in my experience that is true of most coins and bills! They seem to be getting scarcer all the time. It does not seem to be exclusively a "loony" situation; it is just that there does not seem to be enough to go around in terms of my ability to find them.

Therefore, without meaning to be facetious, I want to thank Senator Bosa once again and assure him that I will do everything I can to get the answers to his questions before third reading.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Doody would consider referring this bill to the appropriate committee so that we could have some representatives of the Mint attend and answer these questions. It seems to me that Senator Doody has made the case for having someone on the board of directors who may contribute to the expertise in this area.

Senator Doody: I do not think I made a case. I said I doubted if it would do any harm. Certainly, everyone who is harmless does not deserve a seat on the board of directors of a corporation. If that were the case, we would have many much larger boards, and a lot of the people who are harmful and who now sit on these boards would obviously have to be removed.

However, I have no hesitation in referring this matter to a committee. I suspect that the appropriate committee would be the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I notice a look of glee and anticipation on the face of Senator Sinclair, who is just so happy to have another little nugget for consideration by his committee. Perhaps Senator Sinclair could comment on the matter and tell us whether he feels that his workload at the present time is such that he would prefer to have this matter referred to another committee. We may be able to take advantage of the absence of some other chairman and assign it to his committee.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I certainly would accept that suggestion with glee.

[Senator Bosa.]

Senator Doody: With leave of the Senate, perhaps we could refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. That might be the appropriate committee. In any event, I will so move after second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just to be technically correct, perhaps Senator Doody should ask for leave to refer the matter to that particular committee.

Senator Doody: Perhaps I will rephrase my motion.

With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Gigantès calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès).

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, when last I spoke on this issue I expressed great fear for my country and yours because of the so-called free trade deal, which I shall hereafter refer to as the Washington accord. I said at that time that what we seem to be heading towards is a North American trading bloc, and the argument that has been made to us is that either we opt in or we stay out in the cold and suffer greatly.

This is not a fanciful fear on my part. I cited eminent U.S. economists who believe that this is what we are moving towards and that this is what we should be moving towards in North America.

● (1540)

In the latest issue of Maclean's they cite an eminent Canadian financier, Mr. Jarislowsky, who manages a great deal of funds, who says that we are going into a North American trading bloc which will have to levy tariffs in order to compensate for the much lower wages that are paid in the Pacific rim countries—$1.50 an hour in Pacific rim countries compared to $20 an hour in North America. The writer of the article says either we join in this trading bloc through a free trade agreement or we shall suffer the consequences.

If we enter into a free trade agreement, it is extremely important that we enter into an agreement that will protect us as much as possible. The fear of not being protected as much as possible is not mine alone. I have considered the sayings of some eminent experts on this issue. For instance, one of these experts said:

Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furnitures and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

Another expert said:

It (referring to bilateral free trade with the U.S.) is silly. Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course, but our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

Yet, another expert said:

Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

I have a final quotation from another expert:

Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade.

You may have recognized these experts. They are all members of the Mulroney government: Mr. Clark, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Mulroney, himself. These gentlemen, who have looked at this issue because, after all, they are statesmen and members of this government, have expressed extreme anxiety about what free trade might do to us.

They are not the only ones who have expressed anxiety. Let us take, for instance, the energy deal. We are supposed to give proportionate access to the Americans. Supposing the Americans get to the point where they are taking, say, 30 per cent of our oil and 45 per cent of our gas, and then there is a shortage and we have to curtail production by 25 per cent, we will curtail what we send to them by 25 per cent and we will curtail what we consume by 25 per cent. That would reduce total U.S. supplies by 2 per cent and would reduce our supplies by 25 per cent.

In this deal we have given up the right to reserve our energy wealth for ourselves. Moreover, we have given the right to American companies to come to Canada and invest, without any conditions. Bill C-22 is an example of that. I really believe that there was an agreement and the government did not want any conditions to force the pharmaceutical companies to keep their promises under penalty, because they had agreed that under the free trade deal no such conditions would be enforced. However, there is no reciprocal protection for us. There is a recent example of that. GM is shutting down an inefficient plant in the United States and many people are being laid off. They are also shutting down an equivalent amount of production in Canada in an efficient GM plant. The GM spokesman said, "Well, I have a social responsibility to my country."

So, the Americans are not playing by the rules of utter free market. They have the power and they exercise the power to do things which are better for them and do not pay any heed to what is good for Canada. Whenever one says such a thing, one is immediately accused of being anti-American.

Did someone comment on this? I love being heckled. Would someone please comment?

We are accused of being anti-American. It is not being anti-American to face the facts. It is not being anti-Quebec, either. That is the new slogan! If you are against giving money to the Ghermezian brothers, you are anti-Quebec! Our wonderful colleague tells the press that he hates us because the press likes to hate us.

Senator Simard: Don't get distracted.

Senator Gigantès: One of the experts has said this:

What is equally important to keep in mind is the reluctance in the United States to accept the verdict when U.S. interests do not win a case.

We are not dealing with just anybody. We are dealing with a nation that will not accept a loss. They are sore losers.

This same expert said:

We see that in the softwood lumber case we won the case in 1983. We then faced a number of legislative initiatives seeking one way or other to limit our exports to the U.S. We then faced a fact-finding investigation and yet another countervail action this year. Now the threat is that if the U.S. industry does not get what it wants there will be the likelihood of more congressional action.

What we have here is a description of Americans as sore losers—these partners we are being urged to join forces with. In case anyone thinks I invented this, this quote is from the Honourable Pat Carney, the Minister for International Trade, and she should know. It is found in Hansard of October 9, 1986, page 254, if you want to check. A minister of the Crown was even saying that we are getting into very dangerous waters.

One has to ask: Why are we taking this risk? Is it because Mr. Mulroney, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Clark and Ms. Carney suddenly saw the light and decided that the Americans are angels, and they are no longer afraid of that? Is it only because they are afraid we might be left out in the cold that they did not play our strong cards, which are that the Americans do need our resources if they are going to go into a kind of commercial fortress America.

I submit that there is one more reason. I will only mention it now and talk more about it the next time. I believe the reason is that this government and people who support it, such as the Chamber of Commerce of Quebec, have given up hope of getting Canadians to give up our social security net and our predilection for a government role in the economy. They do not think they can make us abandon this through the ballot box. What they are trying to do—and it is their right; this is a democracy—is make us abandon our Canadian habits through a trade deal with the United States. We hear this in the cold words of people such as Mr. d'Aquino, who says that—and he said it in front of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations—"we need this trade deal in order to discipline ourselves."

[Senator Gigantès.]

• (1550)

Senator Cogger: He is a good Liberal, Mr. d'Aquino!

Senator Gigantès: Well, he is a good Liberal, like Mr. Crosbie is a good Liberal. Mind you, I like Mr. Crosbie very much; I think he is a fine man. I do not want to criticize him in any way. Let's not get into this business of who is and who is not a good Liberal.

Senator Haidasz: He is a great storyteller!

Senator Gigantès: Thank you, sir.

I promised Senator Frith—and I have been diverted from this—to finish in ten minutes. I have now reached eleven minutes, and he will blame me for it.

Senator Frith: No; you do not have to fulfil that promise.

Senator Gigantès: I leave you with the promise that next time I speak on this I will expand on this business of trying, through free trade, to make us change our habits; to make us reduce our unemployment insurance; to attack our health care; and to make it difficult for us to have a national program of childcare or even a guaranteed annual income. This is what this trade deal as now put together from the document that was distributed to us will do to us.

I would like the Senate's permission to adjourn this debate in my name.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, before we adjourn the debate I would like to reply to some of the points that the honourable senator has made, if I have your permission.

Senator Gigantès: Senator Everett, I would be grateful if you would let me lay it all out. I will then summarize it all in writing and give it to you, which will make it easier for you to answer those points. I did not ask to interrupt you when you were defending the trade debate, I let you speak to it, and I will continue my speech if you do not mind. I beg your indulgence on this.

Senator Everett: Surely, honourable senator, I made my speech in one stand. However, as you are going on with a serial program about this, it is within my competence to intervene. You might adjourn this for three or four months from now.

You have raised an issue. If, indeed, you wanted to make a speech and carry it to a conclusion, then I would not interrupt. I do not call this an interruption. You have made some provocative points here, senator, and I am not sure that we should allow them to stay unanswered. If you want to stand up and complete the speech, there is no time limit in this body. There is no such thing as a "ten-minute rule." If you want to continue and complete your speech, by all means, do so, but I do not think that I should be precluded from dealing with the issues that you have raised when you wish to adjourn the debate in your own name.

Senator Argue: There is a motion to adjourn the debate.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I will deal with this issue at the next sitting of the Senate again, and the one after that. I expect to be finished—by breaking it up in ten-minute segments—in about six sittings of the Senate, which I think is more humane to my fellow senators than to keep them sitting here waiting to hear me speak for a total of two hours. Also, there are committee meetings that I would like to attend. However, it is up to the Senate. If the Senate does not want to give me permission to adjourn the debate, I shall continue.

The Hon. the Speaker: I believe, honourable senators, that Senator Gigantès has the right to adjourn the debate, but I feel that if that is so, then Senator Everett is entitled to ask some questions on what has been said so far.

Senator Frith: If he wishes to ask them.

Senator Argue: You mean with the permission of the Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: With the permission of the Speaker, yes.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have already answered that. I said that I would rather complete my speech, and then Senator Everett can answer all of the points that I have made—if the Senate allows me to adjourn. If the Senate does not allow me to adjourn, I shall continue speaking.

Senator Tremblay: Continue to speak, then!

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.,:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.—
(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question on this motion. This motion is adjourned in the name of the Honourable Senator Flynn. It has been adjourned in Senator Flynn's name for some considerable period of time. We on this side are not endeavouring to preclude Senator Flynn from taking part in the debate, but it has been before the Senate for a long time and we are anxious to proceed and get to the vote. I just hope that Senator Flynn might make his remarks at an early date, that is all.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I will speak on it tomorrow.

Senator Argue: That is fine. Thank you.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 2160)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE
THIRTEENTH REPORT

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1988

TUESDAY, November 17, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

THIRTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, were referred, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Friday, August 28, 1987 submits its report as follows:

The Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses:

From the Treasury Board:

Mr. Allan Darling, Deputy Secretary, Program Branch.

From the Office of the Comptroller General:

Mr. B.A. Gorman, Assistant Comptroller General, Government of Canada Reporting Division.

From Price Waterhouse:

Mr. David Webber, Partner;

Mr. Pierre Mantha, Partner;

Mme Huguette Bertrand, Senior Manager.

Introduction

Supplementary Estimates "B" are special estimates tabled on August 27, 1987. They seek authority for expenditure by three organizations:

	$(millions)
Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency	126.6
Indian Affairs and Northern Development Western Diversification Office	100.5
Regional and Industrial Expansion	466.0
Total	693.1

Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Western Diversification Office

The creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Western Diversification Office was announced by the Prime Minister in June and August 1987 respectively. The Atlantic Agency is a new organization and is the responsibility of the Minister of State (Federal-Provincial Relations). The Western Office is the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Both organizations were established to stimulate regional economic development relating to small- and medium-sized businesses. This is interpreted to mean that individual firms with projects costing $20 million or less can be supported by these initiatives; a project larger than this amount can be supported through the regular programs of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The Atlantic Agency is expected to be financed by the government from new funds, up to $1.05 billion over a five-year period. The Western Office is expected to be financed also from new money, up to $1.2 billion over five years. In addition, there may be some further transfers of money from DRIE to these initiatives later this year when the DRIE reorganization is completed. These will be detailed in the final supplementaries in March 1988.

Regional and Industrial Expansion (DRIE)

DRIE is requesting $466 million in these special supplementaries. Of this, $8.4 million is needed for operating costs, $110 million for a non-budgetary loan to General Motors and $347.6 million to supplement the department's Vote 10 - Grants and Contributions.

This $347.6 million is over and above the $849 million approved in the main estimates bringing the total, if approved, to $1196.7 million. Three of the larger programs, requiring supplementary spending authority under Vote 10, are briefly described:

The first, the Industrial and Regional Development Program (IRDP), requires $178 million to cover additional projects costs for the remainder of the year. This program, established in June 1983, delivers direct financial assistance to private sector manufacturers and processors in all parts of Canada. It is aimed at projects, industries and technologies with the greatest potential for economic return, sustained growth and international competitiveness. The elements of the program may be applied to reflect local opportunities and meet the particular needs of each applicant.

The second, the Economic and Regional Development Agreements (ERDA) with the provinces, requires $50 million which is expected to cover the program needs for the remainder of this fiscal year. The ERDAs are long-term vehicles for federal-provincial planning and co-operation in economic development. The purpose of these agreements is to provide for the special economic development needs of each province while reducing regional disparity.

Each ERDA is supposed to outline a broad development strategy and priorities for action. Each agreement should also form a framework for the development of specific subsidiary agreements and memoranda of understanding tailored to the needs of the region, and with the intention of ensuring effective consultation and co-ordination between the federal and provincial governments.

The third, the Defence Industry Productivity Program (DIPP), requires $25 million for ongoing activities. DIPP operates in support of Canada's international defence sharing agreements on research, development and production. Agreements have been signed with the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands, Italy, Sweden, Norway and the Federal Republic of Germany. These arrangements enable the Canadian armed forces to purchase major weapons systems abroad, while facilitating access to foreign markets for products of the Canadian defence industry.

Of the $347 million requested to supplement DRIE's Vote 10, $80 million is required to meet the overexpenditure from this vote which took place in 1986-87. The remainder of the report focusses on this overexpenditure.

Overexpenditure by Regional and Industrial Expansion

On August 27, 1987 immediately after Supplementary Estimates (B) were tabled, the Honourable Michel Côté, then the minister responsible for DRIE, made a statement with respect to the financial management of the Grants and Contributions budget (Vote 10) of DRIE. He stated that in 1986-87, his department had spent $80 million more than had been appropriated by Parliament and that for 1987-88 his department would require an additional $466 million --- $347.6 for Vote 10, $8.4 million for operating requirements and $110 million to make a non-budgetary loan to General Motors.

At the same time, Mr. Côté tabled two auditors' reports on his department's Grants and Contributions expenditures under Vote 10 --- one by Price Waterhouse and the second by the Operations Audit Branch of DRIE.

The following table summarizes the current state of Vote 10:

Vote 10 --- Grants and Contributions ($ millions)

1986-87

Appropriations:
Main Estimates	789
Supplementary Estimates	10
Total	799

Expenditures:
From previous year commitments	757
From 1986-87 commitments	122
Total	879

DEFICIT	80
---------	----

1987-88

Appropriations:
Main Estimates	849
Supplementary Estimates	347
Total	1,196

The Committee's review of this overexpenditure included hearing from two groups of witnesses --- officials from the Treasury Board and representatives of Price Waterhouse. The first issue facing the Committee was how DRIE could spend $80 million more than has been committed and where would the money come from?

Treasury Board officials indicated that there is a special policy entitled Payable At Year End (PAYE) to account for such an eventuality. This policy stipulates that when goods or services are received prior to the end of the fiscal year the Government leaves the books open until May 15, so that when the invoices are paid, the amount can be recorded as an expenditure in the old year. The cash outlay, however, is a charge to the new fiscal year. This charge then becomes the first draw against new year appropriations. In DRIE's case, expenditures of $80 million from Vote 10 in 1986-87 became the first charge against Vote 10 in 1987-88. It was the view of the Committee that this is a very adequate way of ensuring that expenditures are drawn from appropriated amounts and not spent without parliamentary approval.

The Committee then focussed on the overrun itself, its cause, and the reasons for the apparent alarm. Price Waterhouse representatives indicated that the problem with the overrun was not that it occurred, but that it was known too late in the fiscal year for DRIE to request additional monies through final supplementary estimates.

From both the external audit report by Price Waterhouse and the internal audit reports by the Operations Audit Branch of DRIE, this overrun of $80 million was discovered too late in the year because of inadequate procedures in three general areas: forecasting, budgeting, and financial reporting.

Forecasting

DRIE has not been very accurate in forecasting its expenditures with respect to Vote 10 over the last five years. Its expenditures under this vote differed significantly both from voted amounts and from forecasts. The amounts involved, expressed in millions, are illustrated in the following table:

	Initial Forecasts	Voted Amounts	Actual Expendi- tures	(Under) Over- Expenditures $	% of Voted Amounts
1982-83	N/A	$972	$685	$(287)	(30%)
1983-84	N/A	998	757	(241)	(24%)
1984-85	$ 955	970	773	(197)	(20%)
1985-86	1,027	930	710	(220)	(24%)
1986-87	1,081	799	879	80	10%

Source: Price Waterhouse Report to Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, August 1987.

A major reason for mismatching forecasts and actual outlays is that, under the provisions of its programs in previous years, DRIE had made multi-year commitments to thousands of clients with the consequence that the timing of the expenditures relating to these commitments was difficult to predict accurately. In 1986-87 more was spent under these multi-year commitments than was expected. Also, because few contracts had an explicit time limit for the receipt of invoices, DRIE had little control over when clients would spend the money. Furthermore, DRIE's clients are usually small businessmen who are not able to predict, with any degree of accuracy, when they will submit invoices for compensation. According to the internal audit report the amount of money spent in 1986-87 on previous years' commitments was $767 million, leaving only $22 million for expenditures or new commitments for 1986-87.

Price Waterhouse is critical of the project managers at DRIE's regional offices. It claims that because managers were not close enough to the individual projects, they were unable to anticipate the timing of the expenditures. Senators should be aware that DRIE generated approximately 3,000 new projects in 1986-87 financed through Vote 10.

Budgeting

For 1986-87, Parliament approved an expenditure of $789 million for DRIE's Grants and Contributions budget — Vote 10. In addition, the department followed the practice of over-budgeting, giving managers the authority to commit more than Parliament authorized.

The use of this technique in DRIE, as in other government departments, operates on the assumption that final spending will be less than the allocated budget. (Internal Auditor's report, p.8)

Price Waterhouse reports that at the beginning of 1986-87, the internal budget of DRIE was set at $810 million, $21 million over the voted amount. This over-budgeting would not have been a problem in past years because there had always been significant lapsing of funds. Also there was a growing resistance by Treasury Board to permit the reprofiling of budgets to future years as slippages in forecasted expenditures were identified. This meant that lapsed budgets of previous years were not being carried over to the future years.

This over-budgeting and the anticipated lapse of funds was working against DRIE. The internal auditor reports indicates that:

There was an expectation internally and among central agencies that lapses would continue.... As a result, DRIE appropriation was increasingly used by the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Regional Development as a secondary policy reserve to fund projects in other departments. (Internal Auditor's report, p. 13)

Reporting

Beginning in September 1986, monthly financial reports were being submitted to DRIE's Management Committee. A sample of the comments from these monthly reports follows:

September 1986:

For Grants and Contributions in 1986-87, the budget should be sufficient to handle proper requirements including major items....

October 1986:

For Grants and Contributions a year-end surplus is now forecast, taking into account spending under regular program projects and special initiatives....

November 1986:

For Grants and Contributions in 1986-87, a year-end deficit of $19 million is now forecast . . . A forecast deficit of this magnitude is not considered significant given the usual margin of forecasting error.

December 1986:

For Grants and Contributions a year-end deficit of $7 million is now forecast at year end and will be required to avoid over-utilization.

January 1987:

For Grants and Contributions, in fiscal 1986-87, a year-end deficit of $20 million is now forecast.... A 'steady as she goes' approach to claims processing is appropriate at the present time.

February 1987:

A year-end surplus of $4 million is now forecast.

March 1987

A year-end overexpenditure of $46 million is now forecast for 1986-87.

The considerable variation in the monthly forecasts of anticipated expenditures would indicate one of three possibilities:

- first, the forecasts were so unreliable as to be a waste of time; or
- second, forecasting expenditures could never be accurate because of the lack of specificity in the arrangements with clients as to when invoices would be submitted; or
- third, a combination of the above.

Observations and Conclusions

From the information presented in the two annual reports, the Minister's statement, and the testimonies of Treasury Board officials and representatives from Price Waterhouse, there is little doubt that there were obvious weaknesses in the forecasting, budgeting and reporting. The Committee did not feel, however, that DRIE's late identification of the overexpenditure was something that should have been unexpected. If the cause of the late identification was due to weaknesses in forecasting, budgeting and reporting, then these same problems should have been raised in each of the past five years when DRIE lapsed significant amounts. The Committee feels that if the late identification of the overexpenditure is a problem, then late identification of lapsed amounts is a problem of equal magnitude. If DRIE is criticized for a relatively small overrun in 1986-87, then they also should have been reprimanded for the large lapses of previous years. The one exception is the lapsing of money due to improved efficiency; this obviously should be encouraged.

The large lapses in the past should have caused senior management of DRIE and Treasury Board to look into its causes and request changes. Instead, the only apparent response of Treasury Board was to propose to Parliament that the voted amounts for DRIE be significantly lower than DRIE's forecast.

The Committee concluded its review of the overexpenditure with two observations:

- 1) DRIE should improve its forecasting, budgeting and reporting, but that this should have been required of them years ago when it was first observed that DRIE's forecasts significantly exceeded its expenditure. It is the Committee's view that excessive lapses, that are not a result of due economy and efficiency, are as bad as overruns.

- 2) The Government of Canada should recognize that when programs are established to provide multi-year grants or contributions with uncertain timing as to when invoices would be received and pay outs made, it is impossible to avoid variable lapses and overruns and that the Payable at Year End policy is well designed to deal with them.

Finally, the Committee wishes to remind Senators that the supply bill for this supplementary is not expected until late November or early December. Treasury Board officials noted that the tabling of these estimates in August was necessary for two reasons:

- 1) Allow Parliament the time to scrutinize the audit report on Regional Industrial Expansion's overrun of $80 million;

- 2) Because of DRIE's anticipated expenditures in 1987-88 to meet previous commitments and because of the requirement to meet the past year's overrun out of current year allotment, DRIE has fully utilized its commitment authority for Vote 10. If DRIE is to continue to make commitments at least until the normal tabling of supplementaries in late November or early December, Section 25(1) of the Financial Administration Act requires the tabling of an additional appropriation in Parliament.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

---

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 18, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION TO EXPLORE POSSIBILITY OF FREE CONFERENCE ADOPTED

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), I move:

That the Leader of the Government in the Senate on behalf of the Senate ascertain whether his Cabinet colleagues would agree to a conference between the Senate and the House of Commons on Bill C-22; and

That the Leader of the Government be asked to report back to the Senate whether his said colleagues are so favourably disposed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Sinclair, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i):

That the Leader of the government in the Senate on behalf of the Senate ascertain whether his Cabinet colleagues would agree to a conference between the Senate and the House of Commons on Bill C-22; and

That the Leader of the Government be asked to report back to the Senate whether his said colleagues are so favourably disposed.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Explain!

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I think it important to indicate to colleagues in this assembly why such a motion should be made.

We have here at this time a legislative impasse caused by—

An Hon. Senator: You!

Senator Sinclair: —the government's having introduced legislation to amend the Patent Act. That legislation has not been received here with the feeling that it should be passed without amendment by this assembly. That view has not found favour until now with the other place.

It is not the first time that such disagreement, such a legislative impasse, has occurred between the two houses, and on other occasions it has been resolved through the technique of a free conference. In 1947 it was used in relation to the Criminal Code, and it was used on an earlier occasion, in 1938, in relation to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Sometimes people may wonder why it has not been used since 1947. The answer is that in the interim period there evolved a technique of pre-study of bills and conferences which were carried on in camera—that is, "behind the scenes," to put it in another way. However, in this case that procedure was not possible, so we have this legislative impasse.

As honourable senators know, the rules of the Senate provide that in this kind of situation a motion such as I have put is in order, and it is for that reason I ask all honourable senators to support it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, at the outset I should make the point that this motion asks me to ascertain whether my cabinet colleagues would agree to a conference between the Senate and the House of Commons.

If the Senate requests such a conference, it is, of course, not for my cabinet colleagues alone to respond; it would be for the House of Commons. Nevertheless, the government would express a view on the matter, and, the realities being what they are, one would expect that the government view in the present House of Commons would prevail.

I should also point out that this is not a request for a conference. The honourable senator, the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, who spoke yesterday called for a conference, but he did not put his view to the test of a vote in the Senate. He did not move a motion calling for a conference. He did not attempt to amend my motion, the motion which the Senate is now seized of. He did not attempt to amend it by calling for a vote on a conference between the two houses.

That being the case, we are left in the situation where Senator Sinclair is not formally asking for a conference. He is seeking to know what the answer would be before he asks. He is seeking to know what the likely reply of the government would be to any formal request for a conference.

Honourable senators, for my own part, I wish to remind him and other senators that in the course of Question Period a week or ten days or more ago I indicated my views as to the utility or, indeed, the futility of a House of Commons-Senate conference on this matter at this time, and I will not elaborate on that matter today.

When the honourable senator raised the question of a conference in the course of his speech yesterday, I began to consider what the implications would be if he or other members of the opposition had formally moved for a conference. It seems to me that if such a motion had been presented and if, indeed, such a motion had passed, we would be heading into waters which are very murky and uncertain, indeed. Some authorities state that while such a conference is taking place, both the House of Commons and the Senate would have to suspend their sittings. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, for example, states at chapter 17, page 242, citation 819.(1):

When the time comes for the conference, the names of the managers for the House are called over and they leave for the meeting. While the conference is meeting, the sittings of both Houses are suspended.

One can imagine how members of the House of Commons would feel at this stage of the session if they were called upon to adjourn their sittings, perhaps indefinitely, for purposes of a conference with the Senate.

Senator Argue: They can have breakfast together.

Senator Murray: Let me read citation 819.(2):

The managers for the House of Commons come first to the conference and stand uncovered at the table.

Senator Frith: Oh, they can wear a hat!

Senator Doody: Nobody has mentioned anything about hats.

Senator Murray: The citation continues:

The Senate managers remain sitting and covered during the conference except when receiving the message from the Commons or while speaking during a free conference. Sir Erskine May, Treatise on The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament— and so on. In this parliamentary democracy in 1987 one can readily imagine the response of the House, the elected chamber in this country, to such an invitation.

More seriously, it is a fact that the sittings of the House of Commons and the Senate could conceivably be suspended indefinitely during such a conference, because there is some indication that once into such a conference there is no way out of it except by agreement. I put it to honourable senators that in a situation where three representatives from either house meet, with no chairman and no provision that I can find for any clear rules governing the conduct of such a conference, it is at least theoretically possible that parliamentary business could be paralyzed indefinitely by the holding of this conference.

Senator Argue: Get serious!

An Hon. Senator: You are exaggerating!

Senator Guay: Maybe there will be an election!

Senator Murray: Senator Guay raises the possibility that the holding of such a conference and the paralysis of parliamentary business indefinitely could lead to a general election.

[Senator Murray.]

An Hon. Senator: Good!

Senator Murray: Perhaps that is what Senator Guay has in mind; perhaps that is what Senator Sinclair has in mind; perhaps that is what honourable senators opposite have in mind, but that is a rather indirect and, I think, a rather illegitimate way in our democracy in the year 1987 to proceed to the dissolution of Parliament and the calling of a general election.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Further to that, some authorities—and I can cite at least one—claim that if a conference fails to come to an agreement the bill in question dies. Again, some honourable senators would be accomplishing indirectly what they did not, perhaps, wish to accomplish directly, which is to defeat the bill.

In any case, failure of a conference to come to an agreement resulting in the death of a bill would mean that the Senate and all members of the Senate had not had an opportunity to vote on the bill in question.

I do not necessarily accept all of these authorities, but I can assure honourable senators that they exist and that they state what I have just conveyed to the Senate.

● (1410)

The honourable senator who has just spoken pointed out that in 1947 there was such a conference having to do with the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code and that there had been a previous one in 1938. But the precedents are not very helpful. Indeed, I am told that the last time this procedure was invoked in the United Kingdom was in the 1830s. I repeat that the precedents are not helpful. The rules are incomplete and the authorities, at best, are contradictory.

Various points were mentioned. Yesterday if Senator Sinclair had made a motion for a conference, or if he had tried to amend my motion, I would have made those points in stating that if any such motion had been made the Senate would readily understand, in view of what I have just said, why I and supporters of the government would be obliged to vote against such a motion. We would be heading into very uncertain and, I believe, uncharted waters.

Nevertheless, this is not a motion calling for a conference. This is a motion asking me to find out what the answer would be, at least from my cabinet colleagues, if such a motion were to pass the Senate. I think the motion is harmless enough, and therefore, under the circumstances, I will accept it. I will consult with my colleagues, and I should think that I would be in a position to report back to the Senate on this matter when we meet tomorrow.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has in effect accepted that the motion should pass. Concerning some of the points that he raised, it would be worthwhile to point out the extent to which his comments underline how prudent is Senator Sinclair's motion. It is a motion asking him to consult—in other words, to find out what the answer would be—so that some of the murky waters about which he is concerned could be avoided.

The Leader of the Government is quite right in some of the authorities he quoted. I know about them. In fact, I have had occasion to discuss some of them with him. We share some doubt as to whether the bill would automatically die in the event that there is not an agreement, and there is some doubt about the necessity of some of the more musty procedures to which he referred. The important thing to remember, it seems to me, is that we do not know the answer to a lot of these questions, because so far as I have been able to ascertain the conference has always worked; and it could very well be that the reason why it has worked—if not always, then certainly on most occasions it has worked—is because the same prudent approach that is now being taken was taken then, although not so openly.

In all cases that I was able to discover at least one of the managers sent by the House of Commons was always a minister of the Crown. Further, in all of the cases that I was able to discover it was the House of Commons that requested the conference, and not the Senate—sometimes with a message and sometimes without. In any event, there does not seem to be any doubt that the Senate is perfectly entitled to ask for a conference.

Another important thing to remember is that the precedents are quite clear that neither the House of Commons nor the Senate is entitled to insist on a conference. They can ask for it, but they cannot insist on its taking place. It is in that context that I believe that Senator Sinclair's motion is very prudent, and I am glad to see that it has been accepted by the Leader of the Government. I therefore see no reason why we cannot dispose of it now.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, might I ask a question? On page 67 of our rules there is a paragraph which says:

If the House of Commons insists on its amendment(s), it may ask for a conference.

Does that not, by interpretation, exclude the Senate?

Senator Frith: I would think not. That is a possible interpretation, and the memorandum which I had prepared makes that very point. However, it is just as well Senator Lang asked that question. He cites the rule accurately. However, it is stated in Beauchesne's, at citation 815(1):

Either House may demand a conference upon the following matters:

And then it includes:

to offer reasons for disagreeing to, or insisting on, amendments;

Bourinot Fourth Edition states at page 274 that "either house may demand a conference", and extracts from the rules and from those two citations are available.

I temporarily came to the same conclusion as Senator Lang, but then found that, notwithstanding that rule, there was authority for either house to ask for a conference. But in every case I was able to find it was the House of Commons that asked for the conference.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, with the indulgence of the house and in view of Senator Frith's claims that these conferences have usually succeeded, I would like to share with him and with the Senate this brief exchange from the House of Commons Debates of August 2, 1940. Mr. Ilsley, the then Minister of Finance, was reporting that the free conference had failed. He said:

I regret to report that the free conference between the managers appointed by the House of Commons and the managers appointed by the Senate to consider the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 25, to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, was not productive of any result. The managers were unable to come to an agreement, and I am afraid that with the Senate insisting upon its amendment and the house finding itself unable to accept that amendment, the result will be that the bill will not pass.

Just for the amusement of honourable senators, a little later Mr. Coldwell said:

I would ask the Prime Minister, in view of the difficulty that has arisen, whether he will consider his long-promised reform of the Senate at the next session of parliament?

Senator Frith: We all know how that came out!

Senator Murray: Mr. Mackenzie King said:

That is something I have been considering all my life.

Senator Frith: Spoken like a true Prime Minister. No Prime Minister likes a Senate.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Murray would deal with a question. He has told us about one of the two cases since 1904 when the occasion for a conference arose in which a successful conference did not take place. Would the honourable senator deal with the other nine instances, the instances in which successful conferences took place? Would he deal with those examples?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, perhaps the honourable senator has studied those conferences, but I would like to know how many of those are at all comparable to the present situation in which the Commons has dealt with this bill now on three occasions.

Senator Stewart: I wonder, honourable senators, if the Leader of the Government would deal with another of these interesting historical questions. We know that the election of 1911 was fought largely on the naval question. Nevertheless, the Senate of that day defeated that bill after the election. How relevant is that to the situation today? But let us not talk too much about those murky waters. The truth of the matter is that in Canada we have an established series of precedents showing how to deal with legislative impasses of this kind. There is no reason why we should not make use of the conference technique.

We can go back to some of the earlier instances. For example, let us go back to 1904, the first time a conference took place. It took place because the Liberal majority in the House of Commons was confronted with a determined Conservative opposition in the Senate. The agents for the two houses appeared in morning clothes and were not authorized to negotiate freely. Well, very soon they realized that this was foolish. The next time there was occasion for a conference—in 1910—they appeared in the clothes of ordinary mortals and with authority to work for an agreement or compromise. I have no reason to believe that sensible Progressive Conservatives and Liberals in 1987 would insist on going back to the morning clothes of 1904.

● (1420)

Senator Sinclair: Particularly Senator Murray!

Senator Stewart: Yes. He is a modern man. The truth of the matter is that something of a legislative impasse had developed, but there is a technique by which it can be dealt with efficiently and quickly. There is no reason to expect that the managers on both sides are going to attend in morning clothes or dredge up all the other appurtenances of the remote past to deal with a relatively simple problem in 1987. Let us deal with this impasse simply and directly by means of a conference conducted in a modern way.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I read that particular citation. I trust that honourable senators, if they are attending such a conference, would not insist that the members of the elected chamber come and stand before them at the conference table.

However, there are other more serious problems, including the citation that I referred to a few moments ago to the effect that if a conference fails the bill dies, and again I would say—

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Whose citation? What authority states that the bill dies?

Senator Murray: The Honourable Leader of the Opposition need look no further than the Rules of the Senate, Appendix I, "Forms and Proceedings", where, in talking about a conference, it says:

When a conference is held, business is suspended in both Houses.

Then it says:

See Bourinot, Fourth Edition, p. 280.

It then continues:

The results of the conference are reported to the Senate. If no agreement is reached, the bill dies. If agreement is reached, appropriate procedure is followed to bring the matter to a conclusion in accordance with the nature of the agreement.

There are other authorities that I do not have in front of me indicating that if a conference fails the bill dies.

Those are rather serious consequences to contemplate, and, as I pointed out, I do not necessarily accept these authorities. However, I do say that, at best, the authorities are contradictory; the precedents are not really very helpful, and the rules are incomplete on the matter. For those reasons, if a motion had been put calling for a conference on these matters, I and the senators on this side of the house would have voted against such a motion.

[Senator Stewart.]

Senator Frith: We will make our own.

Senator Murray: Yes, but, in any event, such a motion is not before us at the moment. In the motion presented by Senator Sinclair I have been asked to consult with my cabinet colleagues and to report back as to what their answer would be in the hypothetical situation were such a request to be made. That is an unusual but not an unfair request under the circumstances, and I have agreed to do it.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, Senator Murray seems to have a great fear that such a conference might succeed. If the government is as anxious to pass Bill C-22 as they keep suggesting they are, and thereby please the 10 per cent of Canadians who are in favour of Bill C-22, why are they not searching out ways to make it work? This suggestion has been made by Senator Sinclair in an attempt to arrive at a deal on Bill C-22 so that the bill can pass. If that does not work, there is a good chance that Bill C-22 could be defeated.

Honourable senators, I, for one, will be one of the ones who will try to have that bill defeated. I have never made a secret of that. However, if the government is as anxious as they have been pretending to be for all these months to have Bill C-22 pass, why do they not accept this offer and—

Senator Doody: He has accepted it!

Senator Lucier: He has accepted it very reluctantly, and in accepting it he said that he had no problem in accepting it because he knew it was not going to work, and he therefore has no fear in taking it to his colleagues because he knows that they will not accept it. My point is: Why are you not looking for a solution if you really want one?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, this is not Question Period. It is, I believe, discussion on a motion that was put forward by Senator Sinclair, requesting that I consult my cabinet colleagues on a matter. I shall do so.

The honourable senator speaks about the fate of the bill. My desire and my effort now for many months has been to decide the fate of the bill one way or the other. My request to honourable senators yesterday was that they allow the matter to come to a vote in this chamber. That is still my request, and it is in the hope of expediting that at long last that I have agreed to do what Senator Sinclair asks me to do and what this motion asks me to do, which is to ascertain from my cabinet colleagues what their answer would be in the hypothetical situation where a request was made for a conference.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am pleased that the Leader of the Government proposes to discuss the possibility of a conference with his colleagues. I think that is positive, and I hope that it will be underlined to his colleagues that the purpose a conference would serve would be to secure an accommodation between the two houses and reach a conclusion satisfactory to both houses.

There is some possibility—maybe an expectation—that out of a conference, consisting of four persons from each house a good result would be achieved. The honourable senator has referred to the conference which Mr. Ilsley attended in 1938.

Senator Murray: In 1940.

Senator MacEachen: He also attended a conference in 1938 with two of his cabinet colleagues: Mr. Euler and Mr. Crerar together with Mr. McLean. The following senators attended the same conference: Arthur Meighen, John Haig, Raoul Dandurand and Charles-Philippe Beaubien.

I believe that the recollection of these names would immediately suggest that the process was a serious one and was not engaged in by frivolous or insignificant persons. That is what we would expect in this case, that there would be serious persons on both sides making an effort on substance to reconcile some of the differences. As Senator Stewart has stated, that has happened in the past. It may be that the government will decide that it does not wish to change its present position on the bill in any way. That would be a decision of substance. However, I hope that the government will not decide on a conference on the grounds which the Leader of the Government has used in his statement, namely, that if the conference failed the bill would die. If the conference were held and it failed, the situation would be precisely as it is now and the Senate would have to deal with the motion made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

On the basis of any rule, there is no speaker who would declare that the bill is dead. Certainly, I think that would be absurd, and I assure the Leader of the Government that that is not the attitude that would be taken on this side of the house if the conference failed. The status quo ante would prevail. The Leader of the Government said that he was doubtful if that was the case. I would like to remove that doubt insofar as I am concerned.

Another point I would like to make is that if we had a conference the sessions of both houses would be suspended. The Leader of the Government said that if that occurred we might head into a general election. I understand that he was not entirely serious. Surely a conference of this kind could be held at times when neither house was in session. Much business is accomplished in the morning and the evening, and that could be done, so there would be no threat to the continued sitting of either house. Indeed, if it were necessary to suspend the sittings for an afternoon, presumably the public interest would not be damaged irreparably.

● (1430)

I say to the Leader of the Government: Please consider the matter on its merits; do not bring up old, hoary procedural arguments that would never stand up to any critical examination. I think we have to look at this as a modern situation, demanding the application of the rules in a reasonable and sensible way. It is beyond belief to think that because two houses met in a conference and failed to agree a bill would die.

Senator Murray: No, I just suggested—

Senator MacEachen: That does not make sense.

Senator Frith: We should change it!

Senator MacEachen: I invite the leader to remove that fear from his mind, because the situation would be quite as it is now if such a conference failed.

An Hon. Senator: You are converting them!

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, my concern is about the position of the Leader of the Government, who seems to be walking down the aisle as a reluctant lover, with no determination to use his influence with his colleagues to try to resolve this situation.

Senator Murray: I was not asked to use my influence with my colleagues.

An Hon. Senator: Order!

Senator Murray: A motion was put here asking me to consult with cabinet colleagues to see whether they would agree to a conference. I think I have gone some distance to accommodate the wishes of honourable senators—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: Leave it alone!

Senator Murray: —in agreeing to a motion that is, I suggest, probably without precedent, and certainly highly unusual and unorthodox. I am being asked to put a hypothetical question to cabinet colleagues and to come back here with a reply.

Senator MacEachen: There is nothing hypothetical about it.

Senator Murray: In an effort to try to defuse this situation somewhat, and to accommodate honourable senators who have asked me to find out what the answer would be if such a motion did pass, I have decided to ignore the unusual character of the motion and its unprecedented nature and take the motion and go down the hall and talk to my friends and come back here and report.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: There is no suggestion that I am to go down there as an advocate of a conference. I trust I have explained fully that I am not an advocate of a conference. Nevertheless, I will draw to the attention of my colleagues the arguments that have been made by other senators on the matter.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I seem to have struck a raw nerve in the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Nurgitz: Not “the Opposition,” “the Government.”

Senator Buckwold: The Leader of the Government; I was anticipating a bit.

Honourable senators, this is not a hypothetical request; this is a real thing.

Senator Doody: This is a hypothetical question.

Senator Buckwold: This is a request for the Leader of the Government in the Senate to discuss with his colleagues the possibility of a conference.

Senator Murray: Well, read the motion, senator; read the motion!

Senator Buckwold: I do not have the wording of the motion in front of me, but I am giving the gist of how I heard the motion.

Senator Murray: I have been asked to ascertain—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, we have an order of this house that at three o'clock on Wednesdays we should go into a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of honourable senators to waive that order for today and to continue this debate, or should we adjourn and sit as a Committee of the Whole?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, we have a slight problem here. Yesterday afternoon we agreed to a request of Senator Sinclair's for his committee to have permission to meet at 3.30 today on the assurance that debate on Senator Murray's motion would be Order No. 1 and would be dealt with as the first item of business today.

I would like to have some opinions or suggestions on that. Will we deal with Order No. 1 now, or will we stand it until we have finished with this new motion that is before us—

Senator Hicks: Yes.

Senator Doody: —and the request that has been put to Senator Murray that he consult with his colleagues?

Yesterday some people requested the right to speak on Senator Murray's original motion and that request was not granted. Senator Sinclair adjourned the motion in his own name on the assurance that he would take it up again here today. There are senators who have shown an interest in discussing this, so I would like to get the feeling of the Senate as to how they wish to deal with this matter.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have the impression that the Senate is ready to deal with Senator Sinclair's motion. I know that that does not solve all of the problems, but it does deal with the first question.

We could put that question, and also defer—I am sure with unanimous consent—the Meech Lake matter until, say, half past three, and move immediately to Order No. 1, the adjourned debate on Senator Murray's motion.

I have discussed this with Senator Sinclair. I believe that while he would like to have an opportunity to speak again after his suggestion for a conference has been explored, he would be prepared to yield to other speakers in the meantime.

There is a suggested solution.

If the chairman of the Committee of the Whole feels that that would work, in view of the two witnesses we have, we could immediately vote on the motion now before us, agree to suspend all other items, and go immediately to Order No. 1 under Orders of the Day and give some other senators an opportunity to speak, as long as it is understood that Senator Sinclair could have the adjournment and yield again tomorrow if he were not ready to speak tomorrow.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, if the suggestion is to defer the Committee of the Whole, I would then ask that we do it to a definite and not too distant hour—say, half past three—because, in fairness to the witnesses we have asked to appear, I do not think that we should establish a practice and then change it unilaterally at the last minute. But if it were a delay of only half an hour, I presume that we could ask them to defer for that time.

Senator Doody: I have no desire to incommode or embarrass the Committee of the Whole or the witnesses; it was simply my wish to draw the attention of the Senate to the commitment that was made yesterday afternoon, under which condition we allowed the situation to develop as it has. I repeat, several senators asked for permission to speak yesterday and they could not get that permission.

I do not want the message to go out from this place that we are stalling again and are not letting people speak. I do not think that anyone wants to give that impression.

Senator Frith: Is my suggestion acceptable, then?

Senator Doody: Sure.

Senator Frith: I suggest, then, Your Honour, that we agree to have the question put now on Senator Sinclair's motion and that we then immediately proceed to Order No. 1, continue with Order No. 1 until 3.30 p.m., and then proceed with the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Accord.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I read the motion earlier. Shall I repeat it?

Hon. Senators: Displease!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN CERTAIN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON CERTAIN SENATE AMENDMENTS—
DEBATE CONTINUED

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 1:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

That the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 13(a), (b), (c) and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and 16(a);

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b) and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a); and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.—(Honourable Senator Sinclair).

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I would be happy to yield to any other senator who wishes to speak at this time with the proviso that after they have spoken I would like to have an opportunity to continue with my address.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

● (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, for the third time the Senate is called upon to take a position on Bill C-22—eventually so, in any event. As I see it, the Senate Liberal majority has two options: either it accepts the bill as resubmitted by the elected members of the House of Commons, or it rejects it.

For seven months now the Liberal senators have clearly expressed their opposition to this bill in their capacity as spokesmen, so they say, for consumers, labour unions, and several provincial governments.

First, the special Senate committee chaired by Senator Bonnell recommended following up on the suggestions made by the Eastman Commission which altered the balance sought in the legislation between the expansion of the innovating pharmaceutical industry on the one hand, and consumer protection through the prices review board on the other hand. Secondly, the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce under the chairmanship of Senator Sinclair proposed amendments which would keep innovating companies on a leash, a situation likely to perpetuate Canada's image of hostility towards such companies.

Once again allow me to speak on behalf of sick people, physicians, researchers, academics, medical, pharmacological, biological, physiological and clinical researchers, and the vast majority of Quebecers. In two earlier speeches I gave you my arguments based on 40 years of personal experience in promoting health and the use of more effective means to cure, bring relief, and improve the quality of life of heart patients.

This ideal was the foremost motivation of the Montreal Heart Institute which I headed for 31 years.

My pleas were similar to those of "witnesses" who would like Canadian researchers to be part of medical progress in this country. Ours is a minority voice which has yet to reach the ears of my Liberal Senate colleagues. Still, our objective is shared by the Canadian people who earnestly hope for the discovery of effective ways to prevent, relieve or cure the acute, subacute or chronic diseases of which they are or eventually will be victims. I should think we all agree on that basic consideration. The gap between us comes from diverging views on fluctuating prices. As a matter of fact, that pretty well sums up the only argument of the dispute.

The government has set up three price control mechanisms: a review board which will report annually to the minister responsible and each of the two houses, a government review of the consequences of this legislation after four years, and a mandatory parliamentary assessment in ten years.

Besides monitoring prices, these three levels of authority have been given the mandate to follow up on innovating company management promises to create 3,000 jobs in ten years, invest $1.4 billion, and earmark 10 per cent of their sales for research and development.

Honourable senators, it will be easy to follow the progression of this policy and to review the results. Meanwhile, we should let innovating companies demonstrate their good faith and let scientists meet the challenge of providing for active, imaginative and humanitarian research.

I maintain that with increased financial resources, Canada now has the human and material resources it needs to make a distinguished contribution to the "high-tech" sector of the pharmaceutical industry. The future of our country does not lie in merely copying indefinitely what has been done elsewhere. It is also having the imagination, patience and intelligence to take an active part in research and eventually discover therapeutic substances that will benefit our own population and people the world over.

After this long struggle, honourable senators on the Liberal side, I would suggest a compromise, and that is to accept this bill in the hope that my optimism will turn out to be warranted.

This act of faith in our Canadian researchers, who will use the grants of the innovating pharmaceutical sector, will help medicine in this country for the greater benefit of Canadian patients.

Your reluctant consent to vote in favour of this bill would be a strong incentive for innovating companies to honour their commitments and for researchers to prove their mettle.

Honourable Liberal senators, the decision is up to you. I hope it will turn out to be in the best interests of patients and medicine in this country, and of our democratic system.

This last compromise, namely to accept the will of those who are to go before the voters in the not so-distant future seems quite obvious.

From this perspective, we will all have won the same victory, a victory for democracy. That is why I have taken the liberty of addressing this bill one more time.

Yesterday's proposal for a conference, Senator Sinclair, has been somewhat watered down today to a proposal to see whether there will be a conference. But to stick to my prepared text, I feel that this approach to finding a possible solution to the conflict between the Liberal majority in the Senate and the Conservative majority in the House is a clever abdication of responsibility. It is another obstruction strategy, masquerading as a last attempt at conciliation. It means using one last pseudo-democratic procedure to delay a decision you are afraid to make. For these reasons, honourable senators, I will vote against this proposal which is really an artificial means of prolonging an agony that has gone on far too long already.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, we all admire Dr. David. He is a man of great honesty and talent, a nationally respected scientist. This is why when he occasionally wanders into unfamiliar territory, such as the dramatic, he has certain shortcomings, which are indeed quite endearing on the part of a non-specialist, compared with a specialist such as Senator Cogger, who has quite a flair for the dramatic. He speaks about those poor pharmaceutical companies which would be imprisoned by the proposal of Senator Sinclair. How would they be imprisoned?

Senator David: Honourable senators, I did not say "poor companies". I spoke about the innovative companies.

Senator Gigantès: I added the word "poor" myself because, according to the comments of Senator David, these companies would be imprisoned and, having been a prisoner of war, I believe that all prisoners are to be pitied.

What did Senator Sinclair propose? That the promises made by these companies be written in the Act. They are promising to spend a certain proportion of their sales on research. Therefore, if their sales go down, they would spend less. I do not see how they would be imprisoned.

What Senator Sinclair is proposing is simply a good contract. The government is suggesting that we give a monopoly to these companies for a number of years. It is as though we were building a large office complex with space set aside for a cafeteria and we gave a company a monopoly to operate this cafeteria without putting written guarantees in the contract. My lawyer would never allow me to do such a thing in a private transaction.

There is something else which Senator David did not mention, but which shocked many of us and which we found really unworthy of such a debate. I do not want to accuse anyone in this chamber. It is to state publicly that those who oppose this legislation are against Quebec. Yes, he is saying it again: you are against Quebec. One cannot disagree with Senator Cogger or his friend Prime Minister Mulroney without being against Quebec. In my opinion, to suggest that people who are questioning a policy are against this or that area of our country is like scratching an open sore on the body politic.

I have asked a number of historians to tell me whether there was another example of a prime minister having resorted to this tactic. They have told me that, in spite of their research, they have been unable to find even one. Nobody has been able to explain to me why the pharmaceutical companies will meet their commitments and carry out research in Canada if they are not committed to do so in writing. It would cost them a lot less to send a Canadian scientist to their fine laboratory facilities in Denver, Colorado than to have him do his research here. That is why Senator Sinclair and his committee have proposed that there should be written guarantees that these companies will keep their promises. Companies which are able to mount a misleading publicity campaign such as these have are not to be trusted.

Senator David has said: Let us make it possible for our scientists not to be just copiers. He is well aware that 87 per cent of all research investments made by the pharmaceutical companies which support Bill C-22, are for the purpose of copying drugs developed by other companies. They are always seeking ways to bypass patents and to make the same profitable drugs as their competitors. Such might be the kind of research expected of Canadian scientists.

[Senator Gigantès.]

Personally, I think we are looking into only one avenue to carry out medical research in this country. Yet, we have developed a Canadian health care system which is far better than the American system.

Our health system in 1985 cost the Canadian people $1,500 per year to provide medical care on a universal basis in this country. In the United States, the same level of care, that is doctors, hospitals and even non-prescription drugs, cost $2,200 Canadian dollars per year. Fifty per cent more. Only the very poor or the very old were covered by government medicare.

Under this system, there were, in fact there still are, incidents where someone who was stabbed in the stomach in Alabama...

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Gigantès: They put him in a police ambulance and took him to three hospitals, one after the other, where they refused to admit him because he had no credit card and no money. He died of loss of blood before he reached the fourth hospital. The reason I am giving these examples is that in Canada we have built something, and I am referring to this coordination of efforts by the State and professionals or the private sector to provide services that are essential to this country, including health services. This typically Canadian approach is far better than any methods used in any other country. We have reduced costs far more than any other countries have been able to do because our overhead here in Canada is only 4 percent. In the United States it is as high as 16 percent. The figures are from the Bureau of Labour Statistics in Washington and the New England Journal of Medicine.

We could have looked into the feasibility of applying this efficient and cost effective approach to financing pharmacological research in this country and providing our eminent scientists with the resources to do this research under the auspices of our health care system, instead of making this country a slave, and that is exactly what will happen, to the pharmaceutical companies which, before the legislation we are being asked to amend was passed, had been making Canadians pay the highest prices in the world for drugs. Thank you, honourable senators.

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege under rule 33, which deals with the privileges of the Senate. Under the provisions of that rule—specifically, with respect to the privileges of the Senate—I would like to make a motion which I think will be self-explanatory. I would like to move my motion now, without notice, as is provided for under that rule. I move:

That rule 20 of the rules of the Senate be taken into consideration by the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders with a view to redrafting the same, to prevent the abuse of the meaning of that section by individual senators who use it to indulge in debate.

Senator Gigantès: May I ask a question of Senator Lang? Is he referring to what we are doing now?

Senator Lang: Nothing less.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I thought that this was a debate we were engaged in, not Question Period. Is it not?

Senator Petten: It is.

Senator Gigantès: I thought we were debating the motion by Senator Murray, that it was debated yesterday by Senator Sinclair, and that Senator David answered Senator Sinclair today. I then answered Senator David. This, if I am not mistaken, is proper and traditional Senate procedure.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What we are debating now, by agreement of the Senate, is the motion of Senator Murray. Senator Sinclair took the adjournment of the debate yesterday. He yielded to Senator David and to any other senator who wished to speak. We are not in Question Period at the moment.

Senator Lang: I know. I rose on a question of privilege under rule 33.

Senator Frith: I know, but how is your privilege being affected?

Senator Lang: It is the privilege of the Senate under rule 33.

Senator Frith: I understand that rule 33 covers the reason for such a motion, but the explanation for the motion was that rule 20, which deals with Question Period, is being abused. I do not see how anybody's privilege is being affected when we are engaged in debate on a motion that is properly before us. That question of privilege refers to Question Period. We are not in Question Period. If the question of privilege were raised during Question Period when somebody was carrying on a debate, my inclination would be to agree to the motion. But it was not.

● (1500)

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate. I understand that Senator Bosa has a matter that will take only a minute. It is 3.30, so there is no point in my starting now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand, Senator Sinclair, that you are moving the adjournment of the debate?

Senator Sinclair: Yes, unless some other honourable senator wishes to speak.

The Hon. the Speaker: I believe that Senator Lang has withdrawn his motion, that he has not insisted on it.

Senator Frith: Perhaps so, but I imagine he will put it again.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I will adjourn the debate unless some other honourable senator wishes to speak.

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, may I ask a question?

Senator Sinclair: Certainly.

Senator Cogger: Under the previous motion the Leader of the Government is now mandated by the house to consult with his cabinet colleagues to see how they feel about the holding of a conference. However, they represent only 40 members of the House of Commons. I am wondering whether the honourable senator, in his capacity as mover of the motion, would undertake to tell the house how his colleagues in the Liberal caucus of the other place would react—what their reaction would be—so that tomorrow when we vote on the main motion we may have the benefit of both sides.

Senator Frith: Question!

Senator Sinclair: I don't understand the question.

Senator Cogger: I will rephrase the question and will preface it in this way: Presumably tomorrow Senator Murray will report back to the Senate that his cabinet colleagues would react either positively or negatively to the Senate's proposal to hold a conference. He will then speak on behalf of 40 elected members of the House of Commons. I am asking Senator Sinclair if he would undertake to tell us, during the course of the same delay, how his own colleagues from the Liberal caucus in the other place will react to the same request—because presumably they, too, will have to pass on it.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I am certain of one thing, that when Senator Murray enters the chamber he will say that after consulting with his cabinet colleagues they believe that to re-establish that long rapport—that is the term he used—between the two houses a conference would certainly be helpful; and I am sure that the question raised by Senator Cogger would then answer itself.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Sinclair, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart, that further debate on this motion be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Sinclair, debate adjourned.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

STATUS OF BILL C-254—REQUEST FOR SPEAKER'S RULING

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, on a point of procedure, on April 14 I introduced Bill S-8, to amend the Citizenship Act (foreign spouses). That bill was given third reading on October 8, and it is now in the other place.

Yesterday Bill C-254 received first reading here, and on motion of Senator Macquarrie it was placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate. Bill C-254, which has received third reading in the other place, contains the same objectives as Bill S-8.

I should like His Honour the Speaker to rule on the status of the bill which has now been introduced in the Senate. This may be beyond the purview of his authority, but I would also like him to give us an idea as to what may happen to Bill S-8, which is now, as I said, in the other place.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, my interest in this has been mentioned. I did not know that the matter was going to be raised. I have the right to reply, but I am not going to comment at this time in view of the fact that the Senate, in a very hazardous way, has asked some very distinguished Canadians to appear before it today. We have already delayed them for half an hour, and if we are going to embark upon the exercise of attempting to forecast when an item of discussion will end, we will have to impose some kind of self-denying ordinance to accommodate those distinguished Canadians. I, for one, will not give my brilliant speech, which would result in further delaying those distinguished Canadians.

The Hon. the Speaker: I presume that Senator Macquarrie will rise on the point of order tomorrow.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS— CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, if the Committee of the Whole is prepared to proceed, may I say that it had been my intention to deal first with an item of business, namely, the Second Report of the Steering Committee, the Subcommittee on Agendas and Procedures. The report has been printed and will be distributed. In view of the delay in getting started, I suggest that rather than take the report into consideration now we try to do so between the first and second witnesses if there is no debate on the subject. Honourable senators will then, at least, have had a chance to read the report. We will therefore defer discussion of the report until later this day. In the meantime, it will be distributed. Is that agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Our first witness this afternoon will be the Honourable John W. Pickersgill, P.C. He is already in the building and has been since the appointed hour of 3 p.m.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, may I inquire as to why we do not have the television cameras in the chamber today? We held quite a lengthy debate on whether we should allow television cameras in the Committee of the Whole. Therefore, I ask why we do not have the cameras in the chamber today.

Senator Frith: I am glad that the question has been raised by Senator Corbin, because if he is suggesting that we now have the Senate authorize the presence of cameras to televise the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole, then I would certainly be prepared to support such a motion so that we may have the cameras here each day for Committee of the Whole. All we have done up to now is authorize access to the news media. I am certainly ready at any time to move that forward into a situation where we have cameras in the chamber at all times for the Committee of the Whole.

[Senator Bosa.]

Senator Corbin: May I ask the honourable senator if one could validly conclude that the press is not interested in televising the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole?

Senator Frith: When we agreed to allow them access we made it clear that it was up to them to decide whether or not they wished to televise the proceedings. I guess the inference which the honourable senator is drawing is a reasonable one, namely, that something else has occupied the services of those cameras at this time today.

Senator Bonnell: Mr. Chairman, if the national television people are not interested in covering this important hearing concerning an important matter affecting the future of this country, perhaps he would notify the local cable studios in this city—there are several here—who may be interested in recording our hearings. They could be taped and shown in the various constituencies and ridings by means of VCR or local cable companies for those members of the Senate who remain active in the political field and who would like to have made available what the witnesses are saying before this august body.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Bonnell. I will take that matter up with the steering committee and will see what might be done in that regard.

• (1510)

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, the Honourable John W. Pickersgill, P.C., was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Our distinguished guest this afternoon does not require any introduction to the members of the Senate. He is a distinguished parliamentarian of longstanding, admittedly not from this place but from the other place.

Mr. Pickersgill, I am delighted to welcome you to the Senate. You may wonder somewhat about this seating arrangement, but we have done it this way so that the witness can face all senators rather than having some behind the witness. We are delighted to have you here this afternoon, and I might say, as a fellow Manitoban, how pleased I am to see you here. My colleagues may not be aware that you come from that great province.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I presume that you wish to start with some opening comments and then proceed to questions.

Hon. John W. Pickersgill, P.C.: If that is agreeable to the committee.

The Chairman: You may proceed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Honourable senators, this is the first time I have ever raised my voice in your honourable chamber and, of course, I deem it a great honour. Perhaps I could remind you that I very nearly became a member of this house in 1953, almost before some of you were born.

Senator Frith: Thank you.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would have come here at that time as the government leader, but Mr. Smallwood intervened and persuaded me to seek, I do not say greener pastures but different pastures.

I shall not repeat much of what I said to the joint committee of the two houses some time ago, because I feel sure that all honourable senators have read what I said there. I hope that some of you are even aware of an article I had published in the Ottawa Citizen setting out some of my views on the Meech Lake Accord. I will try not to repeat myself this afternoon.

The prime purpose of the accord, as I understand it, is to change the Constitution Act, 1982 to secure endorsement by Quebec and participation in future constitutional developments by the authorities of that province. I assume that all honourable senators, whatever they may think of the accord, favour that objective, as do the leaders of all three parties in the House of Commons, all the premiers and most Canadians. I say "all the premiers" after reading carefully what the new Premier of New Brunswick said at the joint committee meeting on August 25. Mr. McKenna began by saying that any changes "must not nullify the principles agreed to in the Langevin accord."

And he added:

—any amendments should further advance or clarify the rights of Canadians—

In his written brief he said:

If we want to survive as a united country, we cannot keep on indefinitely with one province politically removed from the Constitution and that constitutional process.

At that committee meeting, in reply to a question seeking a categorical statement as to whether he would accept the accord or oppose it if his misgivings were not met, Mr. McKenna said:

Should I be the Premier of New Brunswick,—

At that time, of course, he was Leader of the Opposition.

—I will do everything in my power to improve this accord—not to detract from it, but to improve it.

I was deeply impressed on reading his testimony by the constructive attitude of the gentleman who is now the Premier of New Brunswick.

I intend to spend a good part of what I have to say here today on Mr. McKenna's views as expressed before that committee, because so long as the other premiers carry out the solemn undertakings they gave at Meech Lake and the Langevin Block, Premier McKenna is the only person who could prevent the accord from being incorporated in the Constitution. Therefore, I think his views deserve special attention. I thought it might be helpful to this committee if I examined those concerns and the improvements he sought. He began by stressing the importance to New Brunswick and to the Atlantic provinces of "a strong national government with virtually uninhibited spending powers." He feared the proposed clause regarding spending powers was ambiguous and might prove restrictive.

In the past, as honourable senators, of course, know, Parliament has proceeded on the assumption that it possesses uninhibited spending power, even in areas of exclusive provincial legislative jurisdiction. In other words, Parliament cannot make laws for the provinces, but it can spend money on the subjects on which the provincial legislatures make laws. That assumption was confirmed by a decision of the British Privy Council many years ago. Honourable senators approaching my age—though none of you, of course, has reached it yet—will recall that the unrestricted right of Parliament to spend in provincial areas was repeatedly and unsuccessfully challenged in 1945 and 1946 by Premier Macdonald of Nova Scotia and Premier Campbell of Manitoba—perhaps the only time the Macdonalds and the Campbells ever agreed! Their objection was that it was an indirect distortion of provincial budgets for the federal government to be establishing shared-cost programs. Quebec, of course, refused to take any part in those shared-cost programs so long as Maurice Duplessis was the premier. More recently, during the First Ministers' Conference, proposals were considered for limiting federal spending power, but such proposals were never agreed to.

• (1520)

For the first time, the accord of 1987 would enshrine in the Constitution itself the right of Parliament to establish national shared-cost programs. This right is recognized in a back-handed fashion, I admit, by proposing that the Government of Canada provide reasonable compensation to an opting-out provincial government, provided that that government carries on a program or an initiative compatible with the national objective.

Mr. McKenna would prefer to have Parliament's jurisdiction set out more positively and explicitly. That, I think, would be fine if all parties agreed to such a change, but it would only be a change in words; it would not be change in substance. The basic principle of our parliamentary system is surely that neither the Constitution nor the courts of law can dictate to Parliament how it should appropriate money. Only Parliament itself could prescribe financial terms and other conditions of a shared-cost program or the conditions for providing reasonable compensation to an opting-out province. In practical terms, as there always has been, there would be consultation with provincial governments before a new shared-cost program was established, but Parliament would have the final word.

It is hard to imagine any federal government in future starting a new program without assurance that most provincial governments would participate, and also without some notion of the nature and extent of compensation for an opting-out province, as well as the degree of compatibility which would be acceptable before compensation would be provided by a parliamentary appropriation. In other words, the government and the Parliament of Canada would, alone, finally determine both these questions, both what the shared-cost program would be and what the compatibility would be. Otherwise, no government would vote any money. In turn, the government and Parliament would, alone, be to blame if the conditions for compensation were so loose that money could be diverted by a provincial government to purposes that were not compatible with the shared-cost program.

Therefore, it seems to me that there is no practical political difficulty that could arise in this situation. Even without changing the language the accord would continue Parliament's uninhibited spending power which a strong national government can use. Whether or not there is a strong national government will depend upon the voters; not on the precise language of the Constitution.

The second concern expressed by Mr. McKenna was, and again I quote:

The role and responsibilities in relation to fisheries was included as a specific subject, along with Senate reform, on the agenda of future annual constitutional conferences.

As honourable senators, no doubt, know, several fisheries organizations have expressed similar concern. The disproportion between Senate reform and the fisheries, as two items on the agenda, seems to me faintly ridiculous. However most of us, I believe, have a well-founded suspicion about why it is there. As a one-time Member of Parliament for a constituency in Newfoundland, and a continuing summer resident of a fishing settlement in Bonavista Bay, I would be deeply concerned if the jurisdiction over fisheries did not remain exclusively federal. However, I do not believe that there is the slightest chance that the jurisdiction will be changed. Moreover, the presence of fisheries on the agenda surely does not mean it will stay there in perpetuity. I hope it would be disposed of at the conference in 1988.

Mr. McKenna was properly concerned, especially as the prospective Premier of New Brunswick, about the rights of minorities, and linguistic minorities in particular—an area in which his province has such an enviable record. He contrasts “preservation and promotion” as related to Quebec with “preservation” alone in the case of Parliament and the other provincial legislatures. He would like Parliament to be charged with promoting—as well as preserving—the fundamental character of Canada with two official languages, but he did not think—and I was very much interested by this realism—that the Constitution could place similar obligations on provincial governments. Such an obligation, he thought, would have to be assumed by individual governments and legislatures, as was done in the case of New Brunswick.

I would be happy if all governments and legislatures agreed to charge Parliament with promotion, but doubt if several would agree. In any case, I ask myself whether it matters in practical terms. Ever since Mr. Pearson appointed the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism every Prime Minister from Mr. Pearson on has actively promoted linguistic and cultural duality, language training in the public service, and the Official Languages Act being two outstanding initiatives of promotion by Parliament and the government.

All Leaders of the Opposition, from Mr. Stanfield on, have been equally strong on promotion, as has the NDP leader. The insertion of the word might have moral weight, but it could, I think, as far ahead as one can see, make no practical difference. It is hard to see how promotion, or even preservation—even if both words were included—could be legally enforced by the courts. All it is is an objective.

Parliament has been very forthcoming, and so have all of the governments from that of Mr. Pearson on. We can also think of many provincial governments that have taken steps in this direction, particularly Ontario. We have also noted that all of the protests about French on cornflake boxes have ceased.

● (1530)

The present Premier of British Columbia seems to be in a different mood these days.

French immersion has proceeded at an extraordinary pace. I happen to know about the situation in Gander, where there is a queue to get into the immersion classes. I know that because I have two grandsons in those classes. My own feeling is that missionary effort in this field is more likely to be effective than declarations in the Constitution.

Mr. McKenna echoed the concern of women's groups and others that clause 16 of the accord might diminish or negate other rights in the Charter; that the reassurance of aboriginal rights and multiculturalism might weaken the guarantee of other rights. Inclusion in clause 16 of the accord of a guarantee of section 28 of the Charter, which provides that all rights and freedoms apply equally to male and female persons, might be reassuring to some women's groups. But in view of the specific and categorical language of the Charter, this fear seems to me rather far-fetched. If in the future the government and legislature of any province, including Quebec, should be disposed to reduce the rights of women, they would surely use the “notwithstanding” clause 33 of the Charter, which the Trudeau government and nine provincial governments put in the Constitution in 1982, rather than base legislation on some fine-spun legal argument, which would almost certainly be declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court.

Nevertheless, a perception by several women's organizations that the equality of men and women might be legally threatened is there. As a one-time practical politician of some years' experience, I cannot imagine that any government or legislature would be foolish enough to reduce the legal status of more than half of the electors. It seems to me to be an illusion. But I say that if the new Premier of New Brunswick could persuade all the premiers and the Prime Minister to include a reference to section 28 of the Charter in clause 16 of the accord, it would provide many women's groups with reassurance. Even a unanimous agreement to include the proposal on the agenda of the 1988 First Ministers' Conference might substantially reduce opposition to the accord. I hope, honourable senators, that inability to achieve even this degree of change would not be regarded as justification for not approving the accord.

Mr. McKenna felt that mobility rights might also be reduced because of the limited scope of clause 16. It is hard to see how. I am not aware of a federal impediment to mobility of Canadians, but we all know that there are indirect provincial impediments—lawyers and medical doctors, in particular, know that. It is not easy to see how they could, in practice, be removed by constitutional change.

Mr. McKenna also expressed concern about aboriginal rights—not the extra reassurance in clause 16 but the failure to include aboriginal rights on the agenda for future First Ministers' Conferences. He does not see why Senate reform and fisheries should be permanent items on the agenda and aboriginal rights should not be. Personally, I do not interpret clause 13 of the accord to require any item to remain permanently on the agenda. It certainly does not say so. I expect Senate reform will be there for a long time. It has been around for a long time, in my experience. But I do not see why fisheries should not be disposed of at the very first meeting.

Unlike Dr. Forsey, I do not think that unanimous consent would be needed to put other items on the agenda. It seems to me that if any First Minister wanted an item on the agenda it would be very difficult to refuse him or her.

Mr. McKenna fears Senate reform will be placed in a constitutional straitjacket by the unanimity rule. I do not know that honourable senators would be too worried if that was true. Since both the composition and powers of the Senate were originally designed to safeguard the relative position of the provinces in the Senate and in the country, I asked myself whether fundamental Senate reform is conceivable without the acquiescence of all provincial governments.

Mr. McKenna does not favour, in his words, "the transfer of responsibility from the federal to the provincial governments for the appointment of Supreme Court judges." Neither would I if "transfer" were the right word, but surely it is not. Only the Government of Quebec has the exclusive right to nominate judges because of the requirements related to the Civil Code. Since no other province is a constituency for the Supreme Court for judicial appointments, presumably the Prime Minister can accept nominations from any of the other nine provincial governments. So there does not seem to be much additional provincial power there.

The vital point, it seems to me, is that the federal government has the final word in all appointments to the Supreme Court. If this procedure should not work or not work well—I believe it would—the Supreme Court could be put on the agenda for a future conference.

I have dealt especially with the misgivings of the new premier, because he is now the only person in a position to bargain for changes in the accord. When one of the Tory MPs tried to pin him down at the joint committee, his cagey replies were, I thought, worthy of Mackenzie King. You can refer to his testimony in the House of Commons committee report, issue number 12, pages 12 and 13. I do not think the old master could have done better.

I should now like to refer to two other sections of the accord that Mr. McKenna did not deal with. One item is immigration. It seems to me that all the objections I have seen betray ignorance of the British North America Act of 1867, which gave both Parliament and the legislatures jurisdiction, with the federal law to prevail in case of conflict. That provision is not changed at all. What the accord would do is to give constitutional recognition to agreements such as the Trudeau government made with the Government of Quebec. It does not seem to me to have balkanized the country yet.

● (1540)

The most substantial and frequent objections to the accord are to its central feature: the recognition of the province of Quebec as a "distinct society." The Premier of New Brunswick took no exception to the "distinct society," and recognized that it was essential to national unity to have Quebec within the constitutional process. As I said at the joint committee, describing Quebec as a "distinct society" in the Constitution will only confirm the decision of King George III, in 1774 and again in 1791, and repudiate once more Queen Victoria's decision, in 1841, to turn Quebec into an Anglophone society. I just mention those sovereigns to identify the reigns; they did not actually do it themselves.

It was to the glory of the Province of Canada that the use of the French language was restored by Parliament in that province with an Anglophone majority. That is one of the highlights about Canadian history. Queen Victoria herself recognized her mistake in 1867, when Quebec was separated from Ontario and recognized again as the "distinct society" it was first recognized as in 1774.

On the accord in general, if honourable senators do not object, I would like to quote from Mr. R.L. Stanfield's testimony at the joint committee. It is a relatively short quotation. He said:

In 1982 we made fundamental constitutional changes in this country that were unacceptable to Quebec. I have heard a lot of rhetoric in my lifetime about one Canada and two Canadas, but in 1982 we created two Canadas, one consisting of nine predominantly English-speaking provinces, which accepted the constitutional changes that were made, and the other, Quebec, predominantly French-speaking, which did not accept the constitutional changes, and, one can say with considerable confidence, never would. We behaved as if the referendum in Quebec had settled the whole Quebec problem, the whole Quebec question. What the referendum had done, in fact, was to provide Canadians with a chance to achieve constitutional renewal, a chance we threw away. The country's response to the referendum was to try to shove important new constitutional change down Quebec's throat. Some renewal. I say to you that Laurier, King, St. Laurent, or Pearson would not have done that. That was not the way they saw Canada.

We really shot ourselves in the foot in 1982.

He went on to say, "What a mess to get out of."

Well, Mr. Stanfield said that the Constitution of 1982 left a mess. I would not go that far. On one occasion I described the process of 1981-82 as "sleazy." Perhaps that word is a little strong, but several premiers seem to do double-crossing in a good cause. Patriation was essential in my view. I believe I would, to use the notorious phrase, "have held my nose" and voted for it. But at the time I deeply regretted the grievance expressed not just by the government but by the whole Legislature of Quebec—every member of it. I felt it was the duty of all Canadians to try to remove that sense of outrage at the first opportunity. In that sentiment, I agree substantially with the presentation of the Honourable Gordon Robertson, recorded in the joint committee Issue No. 3, which I will not bore you by quoting.

That opportunity to do something about it was presented by the moderate and reasonable proposals made by the Premier of Quebec for amendments to the Constitution and by the agreement in Edmonton of the other nine premiers to give constitutional priority to an attempt to agree on amendments which would make the provincial authorities of Quebec willing to accept the Constitution to which they had been obliged by law to submit.

The Prime Minister saw that opportunity and seized it by calling the Meech Lake conference. I am not impressed by the criticism that there was not time enough for public participation. Surely no form of public approval can compare with the unanimous approval of all 11 First Ministers, with majorities in their legislatures. Many of those representing special interests and academic and professional critics have implied, or even specifically stated, that elected politicians are concerned with their own political interests and not the public interest. Surely the supreme political interest of elected politicians is to retain or gain the support of the public.

I was impressed that the leaders of both opposition parties in the House of Commons at once recognized that the unanimity of Meech Lake was an amazing achievement. It seems to me that many of the critics do not realize, as I said at the joint committee—and I would like to quote this brief reference—that "the Constitution is not a Christmas tree on which everybody is entitled to get some kind of special recognition for some kind of special thing. It seems to me that most of the people who have opposed Meech Lake seem to assume that unless you get something in the Charter of Rights nothing can be done about it. They seem to think Parliaments and legislatures do not matter, and if they do they are against the people"—which seems to me to be pretty absurd since they have to get the votes of the people. It would be a great mistake to try to import into the Meech Lake Accord as revised in the Langevin Building anything substantial that is not already there.

I want to repeat one other thing that I said—I am practically concluding, honourable senators; I know that I have gone on too long, but that is what octogenarians are apt to do. On page 123 and 124 I say:

I may say that if we can accomplish what Meech Lake sets out to do, that is to say, to get the willing and active consent and participation of the provincial authorities, both the government and the legislatures, in support of the Constitution, instead of asking them to submit to it, it will be a great achievement.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

I think that most of you know that I am not much of a supporter of the present Prime Minister, but I did respect two things that he has done. I respected his courageous stand against what I call "the bigotry" in Manitoba. I respected his determination to do everything possible to heal this wound to bring Quebec back into the constitution.

● (1550)

I read recently in a press comment the categorical statement that "clearly, the Meech Lake Accord will result in a much looser Confederation." In my opinion, that is not clear and it is not correct. The accord will confer no legislative jurisdiction on the provinces they do not already possess. On the other hand, the legislative jurisdiction of Parliament will be reinforced by the constitutional recognition of parliamentary spending power in areas of provincial jurisdiction.

The accord, it is true, will limit somewhat the exclusive patronage of the Prime Minister in two ways. I am not so sure that is a bad thing. However, in those two ways he will still have the final word. That is hardly loosening Confederation. I would like to be shown any way in which the accord would loosen Confederation. Up to now no one has been able to persuade me of that.

Surely Confederation will be strengthened if all the provincial authorities have willingly endorsed the Constitution. What I am sure of is that Confederation will be weaker as long as the government and Legislature of Quebec are relatively submissive instead of being willing partners.

The failure at this stage of any of the other parties to the accord to secure its acceptance will be a direct affront to the provincial authorities of Quebec. Another generation, at least, is likely to pass before there is another opportunity to remove the grievance, and it is never likely to be possible on such reasonable terms. Meanwhile, the rebuff to Quebec will give encouragement to such separatist sentiment as still persists whereas generous acceptance will discourage any such movement.

But encouragement of Quebec nationalism will not be the only consequence of rejection of the accord. It seems almost certain that as long as the authorities in Quebec have not willingly rejoined the constitutional family the refusal of any conceivable government of Quebec to share in the constitutional process will continue. No extension of aboriginal rights will be possible without Quebec. No Senate reform of any significance will be possible. No improvement in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms could be imposed on Quebec, and no new provinces could be established unless Quebec participated in the accord. In fact, without Quebec's participation Canada will be constitutionally paralysed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Pickersgill. I have a number of senators who would like to ask some questions. First on the list is Senator Lucier, and he will be followed by Senator Macquarrie.

Senator Lucier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Pickersgill, it is an honour to have you appear before our committee. I will ask you a group of questions, sir, and then ask you to reply to them.

You speak of all who agree with the Meech Lake Accord, sir, as it is presently written. Have you studied the accord with regard to its effect on the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Mr. Pickersgill: As I read it there is nothing in the accord whatsoever about the Yukon or Northwest Territories. What it does say is that a new province could not be created unless all the provincial authorities agree to it.

Senator Lucier: By implication, what you are saying is that the Yukon can never become a province, and that is acceptable to you?

Mr. Pickersgill: I said nothing of the kind. Please do not misconstrue my words. I have said that as I understand it, under the accord no new province could be established without the agreement of all provincial governments.

Senator Lucier: Exactly.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very different thing from saying that no province could ever be created.

Senator Lucier: I will now go on to my next question in my series of questions.

You are aware that the Meech Lake Accord as it is presently written denies the Yukon ever having the right, as other Canadians have, to name senators or to put forward names of persons who could be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada. Of you, sir, a great Canadian, I would like to ask: How can you support an accord that gives rights to Quebec—which everyone wants to see—by taking those rights from one third of Canadians? One third of Canadians have been guaranteed and, indeed, will now have second-class citizenship established in the Constitution.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I understand it, there is nothing in the accord that would prevent the Prime Minister of Canada from consulting with the head of the government of the Yukon or the head of the government of the Northwest Territories before senators are appointed. I would be very surprised if he would not do it, whether it is in the accord or not.

Senator Lucier: There was nothing that prevented him from doing that previously.

Mr. Pickersgill: It does not deny them anything. It does not expressly give them something, but that is a very different thing. I am a practical politician, and I assume you are, too. You know that Constitution or no Constitution, people are not going to do things that will lose them support.

Senator Lucier: The accord says that the members of the Senate and members of the Supreme Court will be chosen from lists provided by the premiers, and, in fact, Supreme Court appointments will be made from a list provided by the premier of that province of people who are members of the bar of that province. Therefore, a premier from Ontario cannot recommend a person from Nova Scotia to the Supreme Court unless that person is a member of the bar of Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why can he not? I do not understand you at all. There is no constituency for Ontario in the Supreme Court. When vacancies occur, except for the Quebec ones, any qualified lawyer can be appointed from any province.

Senator Lucier: It is stated in the accord that he has to be recommended by a premier.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I read the document—and I think I read it correctly—there is nothing to prevent the Prime Minister from accepting a nomination from any one of the nine provincial premiers to any of the six vacancies in the court.

Senator Lucier: You are wrong. You have not read it correctly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Show me where it says that Ontario will put forward so many nominations or Prince Edward Island will put forward so many nominations? There are only six other judges.

Senator Lucier: The Premier of Ontario can only nominate a person who is a member of the bar of Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are talking about the Senate. I thought we were talking about the Supreme Court.

Senator Lucier: I am talking about the Supreme Court.

Mr. Pickersgill: How many people is Ontario entitled to have on the bench of the Supreme Court?

• (1600)

Senator Lucier: It doesn't matter how many they are entitled to have. The accord now says that the Supreme Court appointments will be chosen from lists supplied by the premiers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Senator Lucier: The premier has to supply a list containing names of members of the bar of his province. Therefore, if a candidate is a member of the bar of the Yukon, he cannot be named to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I am not making myself very clear.

Senator Lucier: The people of the Yukon will not have the same rights as those of the people from the rest of Canada. That is what I am saying.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I am saying, and I cannot see anything in the language of the accord that contradicts me, is that for the six common law judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, when a vacancy occurs, it can be filled by a candidate from any one of the provinces or even from one of the territories.

Senator Lucier: No, it cannot.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, show me how it cannot.

Senator Lucier: Read the accord. It says that a premier can only name someone who is a member of the bar of his province.

Mr. Pickersgill: That may be so, but—

The Chairman: If I may, honourable senators, I do not think we are here to argue. I do not have the accord before me, but I believe that it is clear in that regard. If Senator Lucier has the accord before him, I would ask him to read that specific passage.

Senator Lucier: I do not have the accord before me, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Walker: Mr. Chairman, it is most undignified that we should be taking advantage of an old parliamentary friend of some years in this fashion. What is the advantage to all of this? It is a lot of nonsense. Either the person asking the questions does not know what he is talking about or our guest doesn't, and I do not suspect for a moment that it is our guest.

The Chairman: I would ask Senator Lucier to proceed. We are not here to argue; we are here to elicit information.

Senator Lucier: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to elicit information when dealing with an issue such as the Meech Lake Accord. I am asking the witness if he has read the accord as it relates to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I was a member of a task force that has just heard some 50 witnesses in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Those 50 witnesses all said that they felt they were being denied their rights as Canadians. They all felt that their right to participate in the Senate and in the Supreme Court, as well as those rights respecting the future of their provincial status, had been denied them by the Meech Lake Accord. I am now told by the witness that he really sees no problem with that. I do not have any further questions; I will leave it at that. I do not think there is much to be gained by further questions.

Senator Walker: Hear, hear!

Senator Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to hear from my long-time colleague in the House of Commons, a bureaucrat of the highest level and a former academic colleague, Mr. Pickersgill. We now hear that he is an "almost" senator.

I want to say that when I visited the college in Winnipeg from which I graduated some 40 years ago I heard talk about a former professor by the name of Jack Pickersgill. We have watched him; we have heard him in action, and he was always intellectual, sharp and lucid in the House of Commons, even when, as I sometimes thought, he was wrong. Today I think he is profoundly right.

I am just going to raise a small question which I do not think was quite covered in answers given to Senator Lucier. Mr. Pickersgill, do you see anything in the Meech Lake Accord that would make anyone in the Yukon or Northwest Territories feel that they would be denied a future right to have senators representing those areas? Would not section 24 of the Constitution indicate that senators from those two territories would continue to be appointed as they are now, without the Meech Lake Accord having an effect?

Mr. Pickersgill: In my reading of it—and I have read it a good many times, both the original and the Langevin versions—I think it would be nicer if it were stipulated that in the case of senators from those two territories, the original nomination could be made by the heads of their governments, as it is in the case of the ten provinces. But as a practical matter I do not see why this practice will not almost certainly be continued, anyway.

I am not saying that I think the accord is perfect. I do not. But I think it is the best that could possibly be achieved. I have done a lot of writing as well as a certain amount of speaking. You never find out what is wrong with something until you have seen it. I do not think that in practice there is any doubt that if the Northwest Territories are divided the Constitution would not prevent another senator's appointment to the Senate. Even though there must be approval of major changes to the Senate, I cannot see anyone who would object to that. I cannot see any sensible Prime Minister, having consulted provincial premiers, ignoring the leaders of the other two governments.

Senator Frith: The candidate, however, must be on a list proposed by a provincial premier. Therefore, if a candidate is from the territories he must persuade the Premier of British Columbia or the Premier of Saskatchewan to put him on the list.

Mr. Pickersgill: With all due respect, senator, that is not a correct interpretation. There are senators who represent the two territories. Certainly no provincial premier is going to have a right to nominate representatives of the territories. There would be nothing to prevent the Prime Minister from consulting the heads of the governments of those territories in the case of a vacancy in them.

Senator Frith: Of course not, there is no reason for him not to consult. If a candidate wants to be eligible for the appointment, he has to persuade a provincial premier to put him on that province's list.

The Chairman: Senator Frith, if I may, Senator Macquarrie has not concluded his questioning, as far as I know. I will put you on my list, senator.

Senator Frith: Do that.

Senator Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that my question to our distinguished witness was not based on any such preposterous suggestion that premiers would be nominating senators from the Northwest Territories or the Yukon. I am very satisfied with Mr. Pickersgill's answer.

Senator Frith: Yes, I thought you would be.

Senator Marsden: Mr. Pickersgill, you said this afternoon, with respect to concerns raised on equality and women's rights, that any government would be foolish to take away rights from half the voting population. I believe those were your words. Well, if one has any sense of the history of women in this country—and I am sure you have—one would know that we have had a long series of very foolish governments. Indeed, in all kinds of instances one can cite half the population has either not gained a right or, as happened in the Persons case, had a right denied it by the Supreme Court of Canada. In the most recent round of 1980-82 some of the premiers were perfectly content to trade off equality rights or to exclude them if they possibly could.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

● (1610)

You have talked very effectively about the sense of outrage on behalf of Quebec deriving from the history of the country, and there is no question about that. There is also a great sense of outrage on behalf of 52 per cent of the population arising out of that history.

Before the joint committee you said—I am quoting from your testimony—that Quebec's lack of agreement to the 1982 constitutional changes ... left a wound and a grievance. Not only that, but it did something that had never been done before: it reduced the powers of the Legislature of Quebec, as it reduced the powers of all the other legislatures and of the Parliament of Canada with the Charter of Rights. That was really taking away from the plenitude, the sovereignty of our Parliament and our legislatures, and doing it without the consent of all of them. To me that was really a very serious situation.

An Hon. Senator: Question!

Senator Marsden: I am coming to the question. Clearly, Quebec did not agree to the Charter in 1982, and, clearly, the Charter is what they still do not agree to. Why, then, do you for one moment think that we should not be very concerned about the possibility that the "distinct society" would override equality rights in the Charter? I might add that Quebec has used the "notwithstanding" clause since 1982 quite vigorously, and might again. Why should we not be concerned?

Mr. Pickersgill: When the "notwithstanding" clause is still in the Constitution—it was put there by Mr. Trudeau and the other nine premiers—and it can be used, then why would they try to find some other fine-spun excuse for taking any rights away from women? The law they would make in this other way would almost certainly be invalidated by the Supreme Court. It seems to me that if you want real reassurance, what you should be working against is the "notwithstanding" clause, and not anything in the accord.

Senator Marsden: It is a double-barrelled approach. Nonetheless, if that were to go, then why not get it right this time with respect to the Charter?

Mr. Pickersgill: In the case of Quebec I think that perhaps we will never totally agree; but in the case of Quebec they had something imposed upon them. I can recollect, in a rather long memory, the day when Edith Rogers was elected to the Manitoba Legislature in 1920, and I cannot think of any instance—perhaps you can—in which any legislature or Parliament has ever taken anything away from women. I admit that sometimes they have been very reluctant to recognize their equality; but now it is right there in the Charter, in black and white, and the idea that any practical politician who could ever get to become a premier or Prime Minister would be so absolutely insane as to try to legislate discriminately against women is beyond my comprehension.

Senator Marsden: Well, we cannot agree, but thank you.

The Chairman: The next questioner will be Senator Stewart, followed by Senator Stollery.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am sure that Mr. Pickersgill, remembering his days in the House of Commons, must appreciate the solicitude that Senator Walker has displayed for his—

Senator Frith: Old pal.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): —old adversary here this afternoon.

Senator MacEachen: It never showed in the Commons.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): My first question concerns the "distinct society" rule of interpretation. As I understood you, Mr. Pickersgill, you said that this only confirms the decision made by George III. Are you implying that it really does not change the legal régime at all, that in fact it is nothing but a rhetorical nullity?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not saying that at all. I am saying that it reaffirms what was first put in the Quebec Act; secondly, in the Constitution Act, which was partly taken away in the Act of Union; which was restored in the act of 1867, and which the Quebec Legislature, I think, had some reason to fear, because they were overridden in 1982 and needed to be reaffirmed.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Am I correct in believing that you believe that the "distinct society" rule refers exclusively to language?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. It refers not to language but primarily to the Civil Code, I would say. Because there really was the recognition of the Catholic Church, which was not recognized in England or even in Ireland. It was recognized in the Quebec Act, and so was the Civil Code. But so far as I can recall, there was nothing in the act that said anything about language. But in practice there was never any restriction on the use of the French language until the Act of Union in 1841. Then, as I pointed out, it was changed by the Canadian Parliament, which I think was a great glory for Canada, because there was an Anglophone majority in that Parliament. Mind you, I am not a lawyer. I have been studying the Constitution for about 60 years, but I do not know what interpretative provision could be found in this clause when it says that it does not enlarge the legislatures' powers or enlarge Parliament's powers. It seems to me that it would be wrong and ultra vires to try to take away any of these things and that the Legislature of Quebec, within its powers, can promote its existing character. I do not interpret the distinct character of Quebec as being just the Francophones in Quebec. I think that one of its distinct characters concerns the constitutional rights for those who use the English language, which are still there, and I think that any decision would require that to be taken into account just as much as the other. For example, I do not think that the right of people to use English in the Quebec courts could be taken away.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): You said just now that it reconfirmed the Civil Code—the provision relative to property and civil rights in the province.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): But I want to know how a court will apply this new rule of interpretation. Does the rule simply reiterate the provision on property and civil rights, or does it add some new ingredient to the Constitution? If it adds a new ingredient, I would like to know what it is that has been added and where you think this is likely to have a practical effect. You have emphasized practicality; I should like to know what practical consequence you envision.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I cannot see that it could have any practical effect on the future. I think it is very important for reinforcing the rights that are there, the powers of the legislature, and so on. But I am not a judge, and I will never be on the Supreme Court at the age of 82 even if I were a lawyer. So I think you will have to wait and let the courts decide whether it has any significance. However, I cannot see how it could possibly be used to limit the Charter of Rights.

• (1620)

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Let me ask another question.

The Chairman: Senator Stewart, I ask you to be very brief, as I have four other questioners.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I will be brief. It relates to section 7, the spending power section, where it provides that if a province carries on a program or an initiative that is compatible with the national objectives, it shall be compensated if it wishes to opt out of any new shared-cost program. Let us suppose that the medicare program were just coming into force as a new program. As you understand this section, would the inclusion of a provision for extra billing for medical services in a provincial program be found to be compatible or incompatible with national objectives?

Mr. Pickersgill: As I interpret that language, it refers to some specific aspect of a program. I think it refers to the general character, and it could not apply to medicare anyway. But what I did say and what I would like to emphasize again is that no shared-cost program will be started in the future unless the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada adopt the legislation, and no money will be paid for opting out unless the government and the Parliament of Canada introduce the necessary legislation. So there is no question whatever that the final say rests with Parliament.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): There is no question on that, but you seem to suggest—

The Chairman: Senator Stewart.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Very well, Mr. Chairman, I yield.

The Chairman: I am sorry. As you know, we were late starting. Our other witnesses have arrived and we are already substantially late. I have four other names on my list, and we should complete our questioning in about ten minutes both in fairness to this witness as well as to the next witness. The next person on my list is Senator Stollery.

Senator Stollery: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to be brief. I have noticed in your testimony before the joint committee on the accord that you seem to emphasize that this was the best deal that could be obtained under the circumstances. I think you have reaffirmed that today.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is correct.

Senator Stollery: You have also mentioned today Mr. Stanfield's comment to the effect that leaving Quebec out of the 1982 Constitution Act was unacceptable. What I would like to know is how you feel the Government of Canada should deal with a provincial government that has decided to secede from Canada, which was the situation in 1982. It seems to me—and I do not know whether it is being done for convenience sake—that there has been no mention here of the fact that the Government of Quebec in 1982 was a separatist government, with no interest in a successful Constitution.

Mr. Pickersgill: They had given it up.

Senator Stollery: What do you think a national government should do in those circumstances?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not expect to be around if such circumstances ever arise again. I do not think anyone in this room will be around, and I hope that the next generation will not be around either. The question is to a high degree hypothetical, and it has no relation whatever to the accord. I would be too presumptuous to try to answer it.

Senator Stollery: But that was the situation in 1982, which you referred to in your testimony before the joint committee. You have said today that leaving Quebec out in 1982 was unacceptable, and that this accord, though you have questions about it, puts Quebec back in the Constitution. Do you not think that it is worth, at least, reflecting on the fact that in 1982 the Government of Quebec had no interest in any arrangement that would develop or enhance the Constitution of Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Lévesque, who was still the premier, came to the conference, took part in the conference, but was dissatisfied with the result. I think you have to conclude that having accepted the verdict of the referendum you could no longer say that the Government of Quebec of that day was still trying to gain independence. Now, whatever was in the back of their minds is another thing. In any event, the question is quite hypothetical.

Senator Stollery: Leaving the question aside, then—though I certainly do not accept that it is hypothetical, as the opposition party in Quebec today is that precise party which has at its main goal independence—I would like to ask you another question about the problems with definitions. A few moments ago in response to Senator Stewart you said that you had particular definitions of your own about a distinct society, and I suppose others will have their definitions, too. Do you think that this matter should be referred to the courts, as occurred in 1979 and 1980?

Mr. Pickersgill: My short answer is no.

Senator Grafstein: Mr. Pickersgill, I remember that in 1967 you gave me one of my first lessons in federal-provincial relations. At that time you were having problems with the Province of Quebec. I recall that it was on a trip to Newfoundland, and you and I and the present leader of our party were present. It was around 12.05 o'clock, and we were discussing the intractable Province of Quebec. You suggested, perhaps facetiously, that one of the solutions would be to take the number of provinces in Canada and divide them. So instead of one Quebec we might have two Quebecs, and instead of one Ontario we might have two Ontarios. You suggested that this might be a means of fragmenting the power that made one province or the other intractable. Do you still hold that view?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I ever held it. I believe you said that this occurred after midnight or just about at midnight. All I ever said was that some of the problems would be easier if there was not such a great disparity in size, wealth, and so on between one province and another, but I do not think things will ever change.

Senator Grafstein: Obviously, under the Meech Lake Accord you could not even arrive at that solution to expand the number of provinces, because you would need the unanimous consent of all the premiers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is totally impractical.

Senator Grafstein: Let me come to the matter of spending power. Do I take your evidence to be that, notwithstanding the provisions in the Meech Lake Accord, from a practical standpoint Quebec and Ontario now have a functional veto with respect to any new national program that might involve both federal and provincial governments? Essentially, therefore, if there was a new federal spending program such as medicare being proposed, without getting the acquiescence of Quebec or Ontario—and you mentioned Quebec specifically—functionally we could not have a new national spending program. Is that the purport of your evidence?

● (1630)

Mr. Pickersgill: It has always been exceedingly difficult to achieve shared-cost programs. As you know, the Government of Ontario resisted medicare for a very long time. There is no doubt that shared-cost programs do distort provincial budgets and that provincial governments, if that tariff were not held before the electors, might prefer to spend on something else the amount of money that they are compelled to spend on the shared-cost programs. I do not think it is going to be any easier or any more difficult because of the accord. I do not think it will make any difference.

Senator Grafstein: An argument has been made, for instance, by the Attorney General of Ontario and others that essentially the federal spending power is now clear and will be able to operate on a much more functional basis, and that the federal government will have more clear-cut power to enforce a national program. You say that in practical terms is not correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I quite follow.

Senator Grafstein: The Attorney General of Ontario has said to me and to others that the federal government's spending power is much more effective now. It will not have these claims made by the provincial government, and it will be more effective in being able to promote and implement new national spending powers that might tranche or affect the provincial authority. In effect, he has said that this is one of the reasons why he was so supportive of Meech Lake, because it strengthens the federal powers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree with your last statement. I think it does strengthen the federal power very marginally, but it does strengthen it. Before the spending power was based on a decision of the British Privy Council. In three years, if everything goes right, it will be in the Constitution, and that strengthens the federal power a little bit.

Senator Grafstein: I do not intend to belabour the point, but you have made the other argument in your testimony that—

The Chairman: Senator Grafstein, I must ask you to conclude. I have two other questioners waiting and we are really at the limit of our time. Our other witnesses are waiting.

Senator Grafstein: Mr. Chairman, I have one further aspect which perhaps I might explore briefly.

The native people in the province of Quebec, I have been told, feel disenfranchised, outraged, left out, and feel as if they are second-class citizens, because they do not expect that their issues will appear on the agenda for constitutional reform for another half a decade, at least, if then. How are we in this place, concerned as we are with minorities, to assist them to accelerate that process if, in fact, they feel that Meech Lake defers the process for them? How can we, in effect, deal with that grievance; the same sort of grievance as you suggest that Quebec had when it was left out of the Constitution?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, the very first attempt made by the Government of Canada to amend the Constitution of 1982 was to extend aboriginal rights. They failed, not because of any lack of will on the part of the government in Ottawa but because of two things: objections by one or two provincial governments, and a certain lack of unanimity among the native people themselves. I think the moment there seems to be any prospect of success you will see that item back on the agenda.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Senator Grafstein. I have Senator Robichaud and then Senator Lang. Can I ask both senators to limit themselves to one question, please?

Senator Robichaud: I have one question, and I will try to follow the rule of the chairman. Mr. Pickersgill, I am very glad to see you again today.

My question is this: We had a formula under which a consensus of seven provinces, representing 50 per cent of the population, was required in order to change the Constitution. Under this accord it requires the unanimous consent of all ten premiers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Only for some things, senator. The other formula is still there in the Constitution.

Senator Robichaud: Yes, for some things—

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it always was for some things—

Senator Robichaud: No, not necessarily—

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I think it was for the Queen, for example, and quite a number of things.

Senator Robichaud: Perhaps I might quote from the Montreal Gazette of Monday, November 16. The title of the story is "Free trade will end regional disparity: PM". I intend to quote only a small portion.

—Mulroney said he is "not in the slightest" worried about a regional split.

"In this country, you can't get unanimity on anything."

That article quotes the Prime Minister, and that was said just last week. Does this accord put Canada in a straitjacket? What is your opinion?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not think it does. I do not think it puts us in any more of a straitjacket than we put ourselves in in 1867. Certainly, we cannot change our Constitution without an overwhelming consensus.

Senator Robichaud: Under the so-called Meech Lake Accord, what does require unanimous consent of the ten premiers and the federal Prime Minister?

Mr. Pickersgill: The particular items are listed in that accord. I have taken so much time now, I do not think I should take the time by reading it.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Robichaud. The next questioner is Senator Lang. One question?

Senator Lang: One question. I have a piece of paper hanging on my wall known as Letters Patent, signed by a man by the name of J.W. Pickersgill, and underneath the name appear the words "Secretary of State." I noted the words on the Letters Patent. It says: "My trusty and beloved servant . . . we command you . . .", et cetera. I am wondering if, under the circumstances when you signed that paper, that was on the advice of the then Premier of Ontario, Mr. John Roberts?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure it is just the conventional language that was used at that time.

Senator Lang: Do you think that a nominee from a province is going to be a trusty and beloved servant of the Crown in the right of the federal government?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sorry, senator, what is your document about?

Senator Lang: My appointment to the Senate.

[Senator Robichaud.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I would say that no Prime Minister would approve the nomination unless he believed that this person was going to conform to that language.

Senator Lang: Would you apply that also to an appointee to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: You will remember that the only person who can make appointments to this place or to the Supreme Court of Canada is the Governor General, and that can only be done on the advice of the Prime Minister. Therefore, I feel reasonably sure that the Prime Ministers will be just as careful in the future as they have been in the past to appoint trustworthy people.

● (1640)

Senator Lang: And beloved servants.

Mr. Pickersgill: And beloved servants, yes.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Lang. At a previous meeting I said that I had to keep the balance together, and I am trying to do that. I have had only one questioner from the government side. Senator Asselin has appealed for one question. I recognize Senator Asselin.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to see Mr. Pickersgill in such good health and looking so well. I knew him in the past when he was a member of the House of Commons.

I have only one question to ask you, Mr. Pickersgill. There have been lots of comments on the fact that the Meech Lake Accord refers to the province of Quebec as a distinct society. In your opinion, will the status of distinct society which would be given Quebec take away any constitutional right whatever from the other provinces or give some to Quebec in the future?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: The simple answer to that is the answer that the Premier of Ontario gave the day after the First Ministers met at Meech Lake, when he said that every grade four student in Ontario knows what a distinct society is and knows Quebec is one. I also happen to think that Newfoundland is a distinct society, but they do not particularly want to be put in the Constitution. I am just as glad it is not.

The Chairman: I thank you, Senator Asselin. Senator Frith, I had cut you off when you were interrupting Senator Macquarrie.

Senator Frith: You were entitled to cut me off. I want to do only one thing, Mr. Chairman, and that is to deal with this question of appointment to the Supreme Court and the Senate. In looking this over it seems to me that Senator Macquarrie was right. There is a good argument, and Mr. Pickersgill agreed with it. I believe that Senator Lucier was also right, and I was wrong.

I indicated earlier with regard to the Senate that for someone to become a senator they would have to be put on a provincial premier's list. If you read sections 24 and 25 of chapter IX together, there could be an appointment to fill a territories vacancy without being on a provincial premier's list, which is your point and Senator Macquarrie's point. However, Senator Lucier's point is that if you are a citizen of a province and you can get on the premier's list, then under the Meech Lake Accord the Prime Minister cannot appoint anyone who is not on that list.

Mr. Pickersgill: He can refuse to appoint any of them.

Senator Frith: Yes, but the point is that you are second class if you are in the territories, because you do not have the right to get yourself on an exclusive list. You say that he could consult, and that is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would have been nicer if they had thought about that in advance, and I am sure if anybody had thought about it it would have been put there.

Senator Frith: So do I, but it seems to be a clear oversight, and it does have the result of both—

Mr. Pickersgill: There were a number oversights in 1867.

Senator Frith: But that does not help the citizens of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. The point is that you and Senator Macquarrie and Senator Lucier are all correct, because, taking your interpretation, the citizens of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are still partly second class.

With regard to the Supreme Court of Canada, section 101C.(1) reads:

Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit . . .

In this case there is no corresponding section 24, because in this case the appointment has to be made from the list provided by the premiers, and it must be someone who is a member of the bar of that province. Again, it is a clear oversight, and it clearly deprives lawyers in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon of rights that lawyers have in the other provinces. It is something that should be corrected. I am sure it is an oversight, but it is there. They are not in the same position. You cannot maintain that they are in the same position.

Mr. Pickersgill: It may be, but—

Senator Frith: A famous shrug will do me fine. Let the record show that the witness shrugged.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Frith.

Senator Petten: Mr. Pickersgill, Senator Molgat welcomed you here as a Manitoban. As a senator from your adopted province of Newfoundland, I wish to thank you for appearing before our committee and sharing your views with us.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been one of the great honours of my life.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Pickersgill. Now you see what you missed in 1953.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have often reflected on that.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, while we are waiting for the next set of witnesses, is it your wish to deal with the report of the steering committee? The report has been distributed to everyone. Would someone care to move the adoption of the report?

Senator Frith: I so move.

The Chairman: It has been moved by Senator Frith that the report be adopted. Is there any discussion?

Senator Lucier: Mr. Chairman, I have received a letter from the government leader of the Yukon Territory requesting that he be—

The Chairman: I am sorry, Senator Lucier, shall we first have the report of the committee adopted?

Senator Lucier: I thought we were discussing the report. I was dealing with the list of witnesses, and I thought that that was in the report.

The Chairman: Let me make this clear. The decision of the steering committee was to hear all the witnesses that had made application prior to October 20. It then reserved the right to ask for further names, and those names will be considered by the committee. So the names that you have will be considered by the committee.

Senator Lucier: At a later date?

The Chairman: At a later date.

Senator Lucier: So they will be part of the report?

The Chairman: Yes, if you submit the names they will be considered.

Senator Lucier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: We have not closed the list by any means. Is there any other discussion on the report of the steering committee? Those in favour?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: The report is carried.

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, Mr. Georges Erasmus, National Chief, Assembly of First Nations, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: The next witnesses are from the Assembly of First Nations. We have before us Mr. Georges Erasmus, the National Chief. Mr. Erasmus, would you please identify the person with you?

Mr. Georges Erasmus, National Chief, Assembly of First Nations: Roger Jones.

The Chairman: Thank you. I welcome you to the Senate Committee of the Whole. I regret that we are a little late in the procedures, but I believe you know that there was a delay at the beginning of the afternoon.

I presume that you have an opening statement. You have submitted a brief to us. Is it your intention to read this statement or simply to refer to it?

● (1650)

Mr. Erasmus: I thought I would make an opening statement, including the summary document.

The Chairman: All right. I will let you proceed, then, if you are ready, and then we will have some questions.

Mr. Erasmus: Thank you. First, I would like to make some general statements to let it be known that we were quite surprised with the kind of agreement that came from the Meech Lake meeting in that a month earlier we had met with the First Ministers and were aware that they were having a meeting to deal with the possible entrance of Quebec back into the fold. We had anticipated that it would be an important meeting, but we had not envisaged the kind of agreement that came out of the Meech Lake meeting. We were extremely upset with the kind of agreement that was reached. We believe there were sections that were dealt with that need not have been dealt with to satisfy Quebec. There were many items that were agreed to that we believe were extra.

We took tremendous exception to the concept that Canada has just two founding nations and one major "distinct society," as outlined in the Constitution; to the forcing of the interpretation of the Constitution to recognize Quebec as a "distinct society;" and to the idea that the whole Constitution should be interpreted thus, without having a comparable and parallel recognition that First Nations were also "distinct societies."

We did not believe that it was necessary to put the North—both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories—into a deep freeze to satisfy Quebec. We think making the amendment even more difficult than it already was after 1982, and forming new provinces so that you now need unanimous agreement, was a message to the North and the native people living in the North that Canada would not see more provinces. We had hoped, in fact, that at the Aboriginal-First Ministers' meetings that we would deal with that part of the Constitution that would affect the creation of new provinces.

What affected us most was what we interpreted as a lack of political will, when, to our surprise, what we saw was that from now on the Constitution would guarantee two First Ministers' meetings every year. Rather than our agendas, that had been reached earlier, being dealt with at the First Ministers' meeting and being part of those two First Ministers' meetings we were completely excluded. That gave us a clear message that issues that are important to aboriginal people in Canada are not on the agenda of First Ministers, they are not important in the process of national reconciliation in this country, and they should be put on the back burner, perhaps never to be discussed at that level again. Every other item is deserving of attention at the constitutional level, but not matters concerning the aboriginal people; not matters that have never, ever been dealt with with us—leave them to the sidelines! This occurred just a little over a month after we had had a meeting with those same individuals. It was a tremendous blow to us. We could not believe that they were doing that to us.

The National Aboriginal Summit, the four major aboriginal groups, sent a letter to the Prime Minister putting forth a number of recommendations. This occurred in the interval between the Meech Lake and Langevin meetings. We recommended that explicit constitutional recognition of aboriginal peoples as "distinct societies," which also constitute a fundamental characteristic of Canada, be put into an amended Meech Lake agreement.

Further, we recommended that a guarantee that constitutional amendments from the Meech Lake Accord would not abrogate or derogate from the rights or status of aboriginal people; a guarantee that opting-out provisions would not prevent aboriginal peoples from access to or management of national programs; a return to the exclusive federal approval for the establishment of new provinces in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories; direct participation of aboriginal peoples in the second round First Ministers' meetings on matters that affect them—such as in the area of fisheries—and participation of aboriginal peoples in negotiation of constitutional provisions of Meech Lake on matters which affect them.

We felt that we had to be directly there to deal with the matters that affected us. Finally, we recommended the establishment of a timetable for aboriginal and treaty rights based on the unfinished 1983 Constitutional Accord on Aboriginal Rights.

In my presentation to the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord I reiterated these recommendations on behalf of the First Nations. First, a recognition of aboriginal peoples as "distinct societies;" a renewed constitutional process for the unfinished aboriginal agenda; a guarantee of protection for First Nations against opting-out provisions for national programs; removal of unanimity requirements for the establishment of new provinces; and a guarantee of aboriginal participation in other First Ministers' meetings on issues which directly affect us.

What responses have First Nations received? As regards the seven proposals to the Prime Minister, the Langevin amendments did no more than include section 16, which states that the "distinct society" clause for Quebec is not to affect existing aboriginal and treaty rights as recognized and affirmed in section 35 and the federal government's exclusive legislative authority under section 91(24) for Indians and lands reserved for Indians.

Two, from the report of the joint committee came recommendations to continue work towards a resolution of constitutional aboriginal issues; to restore constitutional funding; to establish a timetable and workplan for the federal government to prepare for further First Ministers' meetings; to consider closed as well as open sessions of those First Ministers' meetings; and to establish as a deadline for resumption of First Ministers' meetings on aboriginal constitutional matters April 1990.

● (1700)

The two opposition parties felt compelled to present their own recommendations on aboriginal and treaty rights, both of which went considerably further than the recommendations of the government's joint committee. All parties have, nonetheless, endorsed the accord without amendment.

Despite this advice the federal government has taken no action on any of the recommendations. They have also taken little or no action on other non-constitutional issues such as land claims. To add insult to injury, the joint committee's report assures us that First Nations—"like other Canadians are appropriately represented by the leaders of the federal and provincial governments that aboriginal peoples helped to elect." This bland assertion that First Nations and their governments are represented by non-aboriginal politicians who have no interest, demonstrated or latent, in advocating our rights is bogus and is without foundation in fact or action. How, on the one hand, can they say that we are distinct and there is no need to recognize that explicitly, and, on the other hand, say that non-aboriginal people represent us?

The "distinct society" provision ignores the legitimate aspirations of the First Nations and of aboriginal peoples in Canada. The accord sets a mood for intolerance towards the constitutional expression of aboriginal self-government. It sets up legal impediments to bringing aboriginal peoples into the Constitution in a proper manner to complete the circle of Confederation.

If the desire was to placate the people of Quebec and to enable Quebec to play a full role in Confederation, then why have not the same efforts been made to accommodate in the Constitution the role of the aboriginal peoples of Canada?

The Chairman: Does that conclude your presentation, Mr. Erasmus?

Mr. Erasmus: For the moment, yes.

The Chairman: Then we will proceed to questioning. The first senator on my list is Senator Stollery, followed by Senator Fairbairn.

Senator Stollery: I want to thank the witnesses for their presentation.

My question has to do with this "distinct society" definition. I am looking through the report of the joint committee and, Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but say parenthetically that I do not see the sense of this presentation in the report from the joint committee, which only confirms my view that the report from the joint committee seems to have a very strong bias. Did you appear before the joint committee?

Mr. Erasmus: Yes, we did.

Senator Stollery: I do not see anything in here that would leave that impression with me. Perhaps I might just correct my last statement, since I do find something to that effect on page 110.

There seem to be a great number of definitions of "distinct society." Mr. Pickersgill, who appeared before us just a few moments ago, gave us an impression of what it means to him in terms of the province of Quebec. I believe you said that the aboriginal peoples are also accepted as a distinct society. Do you think it would be wise for the courts to decide on some kind of definition, at the very least, of the term "distinct society" as it appears in the accord? Do you think that would help the situation? Do you think that before the accord becomes part of the constitution—which, of course, it is not at the moment—there should be some court interpretation of this rather fuzzy area of just what a "distinct society" is as used in the accord?

Mr. Erasmus: The problem is not so much the need for definition, because the concept of the distinct society of Quebec will evolve over time. It will mean one thing in 1987 and something else in the year 2000 and onwards.

The problem is that we do not have balancing recognition. We do not have the full fact of what Canada is balanced against that. You do not have the proper tension between the recognition of the native people, the English, the French, and the rights of women. The problem arises when you over-emphasize one aspect without bringing up the others. Even the language, itself, is careful to say, "a distinct characteristic." What are the other characteristics? Why did we not have enough time to fully elaborate on that? That is what we wanted to do, and that is why we wanted to participate. The problem is that it looks as though the aboriginal people will never have an opportunity to do that.

Senator Stollery: I understand that, but we have to start somewhere, and the only thing we are dealing with is the agreement as we have it here.

You pointed out very eloquently that the country as a whole is involved in this definition, but, meanwhile, we have a definition in the agreement and it may change as time goes on. It has important legal implications, does it not?

Mr. Erasmus: Absolutely.

Senator Stollery: I understand that the government of the Yukon has launched some kind of legal action to define this term "distinct society." Do you think that before we go any further we should wait to find out what this is supposed to mean as it appears in this document?

Mr. Erasmus: It would be most interesting, because if "distinct society" actually meant that Quebec had the ability, for instance, to put aside the Charter and to override the rights of women and minorities so that the French majority in Quebec could force their will on them through their French language, their French culture, and so forth, it could go too far.

Senator Stollery: Wouldn't you like to know that before we went much further?

Mr. Erasmus: Some people would cry out if it did not go far enough, but others would cry out if it went too far.

However, that would not serve our interests. The problem of the North is that we are not included or involved in this continuing process. A First Ministers' meeting will be held next week and the Yukon and the Northwest Territories will not be involved. There will be meetings next year in which we will not be involved. They will be dealing with matters that affect us and we are being excluded. That is the problem.

Senator Fairbairn: Chief Erasmus, in the constitutional conferences that have been held since 1983 you and other aboriginal groups have been trying to have the question of aboriginal self-government settled. There were also a number of other things agreed to in 1983 that would be on an agenda, including the repeal of section 42(1)(e) and (f) and matters involving land claims. Since writing your letter to the government, have you received any explanation why these commitments were completely pushed aside in the discussions at Meech Lake and in the Langevin building?

• (1710)

Mr. Erasmus: We have received nothing to our satisfaction. Actually, we have not received any more information than has anyone else. The meeting we had with the First Ministers simply adjourned. There was a lot of interest generated there, and I suggest that the majority of the parties were prepared to go on. Certainly, the four native organizations were prepared to go on, and it was our understanding that the majority of the provinces were similarly prepared. All we needed was the Prime Minister's suggestion that we meet again to re-examine the process. Instead, everything just came to an absolute halt.

Then we have the Meech Lake and the Langevin meetings, which have now put in place two other First Ministers' meetings to deal with other matters. We have been doing what we can to be involved in round two and to begin our process again, but we have not yet been successful. The government has told the provinces that it is prepared to hold these meetings because it is important to deal with these matters. When the Prime Minister was questioned in the House on the subject, he stated that when it looks like there will be agreement he is going to begin the process again. Unless there is a tremendous amount of work leading up to the First Ministers' meeting there will be no agreement. At the moment there is no funding for the process—there is no process leading up to a First Ministers' meeting.

The First Ministers are now involved in other matters. They will be dealing with the Senate and with fisheries issues in 1988. They will be dealing with the economy next week, and, indeed, every year. Those processes take a lot of energy. It is beyond my comprehension how we could plan three First Ministers' meetings for any given year and give any of the issues adequate attention.

That is why we have been trying to amend this. We believe that the agenda items of the aboriginal people were all legitimate and that they needed to be dealt with first. Quebec provides just one example of what I am talking about: You cannot deal with the rights of some Canadians without affecting the rights of others. If you upgrade the rights of the French and do not do the same to the rights of everyone else, by definition, you have just lowered everyone else's. The rights of people living in the North have, once again, been put on the back burner. If you are a native you have been whammed twice, because if you are an aboriginal person there is no way in which to govern yourself through your own institutions. The one avenue we had where we still had some sizeable population in the North was through control of the other form of recognized government, the provincial form, and it looks like that door is completely sealed on us.

Senator Fairbairn: In this chamber, just prior to the Langevin meeting, I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he would urge the Prime Minister to ensure that the questions concerning aboriginal self-government would be made a continuing priority on the constitutional agenda just as long as it took to settle them. The response was:

[Senator Fairbairn.]

As of now there would have to be some movement on the part of aboriginal groups and the dissenting provinces . . . in order to justify putting aboriginal rights on the agenda for a constitutional conference again.

I ask you this: In what forum can discussions take place with the aboriginal groups that would reach any kind of a consensus so as to put the question back on the agenda? What options are open to you with the federal and provincial governments on this issue now, especially with no funding for your constitutional research and discussions?

Mr. Erasmus: The first problem is that there seems to be no political will on either side to deal with the issues before us. The Prime Minister and the federal government seem to be taking the approach that these issues are too tough for them to handle. They are providing us with no forum at all. The reality is that these problems are difficult, but we were not far away from agreement. Any time someone is doing something significant it takes a lot of energy.

There could be a lot of other forums, but in reality there are none. We have treaties from one end of the country to the other—we are leaving with senators a document on treaties—and we have tried to open up a forum wherein we could revisit the treaties so that they could become modern, living documents, so that the federal government and the First Nations with treaties could have a clear relationship, so that both Canada and the First Nations would know where they stand.

Whose rights are being affected by treaties? The government is not prepared to do a single thing on the question of treaties. We were told again this morning that the government is not prepared to do anything with respect to this matter. That route, then, has been closed to us; the route that we were involved in with the Constitution is closed. There is nothing there.

It can, however, be opened again. It took a long time just to repatriate the Constitution. Just because it was difficult people did not stop and throw their hands in the air. The reality is that it has only been over a very short time that issues involving aboriginal people—their treaties, their rights in this country, and so on—have been dealt with.

The premiers involved spent something like eight to ten days on these matters over the past five years, and perhaps spent the same amount of time getting briefed on them. Many of the people involved did not know native people and had probably never stepped on to a reserve in their lives. Many of them did not know our situation and certainly did not know anything about our treaties. For the better part of the time spent with them we walked people through things they should have known. It was an educational process.

Finally, when we were reaching the point where we were all talking about the same thing—we did not mean the same thing, but we were all beginning to talk about the same thing—things came to a stop. When we reached the point where we did not have to explain any longer why native people had to have a degree of self-government in Canada, and there were even solid proposals made—although we did not agree with the proposals, we were all now centering on the same thing and did not have to go through the whole argument again, having to convince people—the whole thing came to an end. One or two more years of fruitful effort might have seen more results. The reality is that Canada has not put energy into this question. We never saw the kind of meetings that constituted the Meech Lake or Langevin meetings, where premiers were virtually captive until they agreed. We had a two-day meeting, and by noon the second day the Prime Minister was throwing up his hands and saying, “It’s all over.” There was no question of saying, “We are not letting you people out of the room until we agree. We are close.” We never saw anything like that at all. Even before the end of the prescribed time hands were being thrown in the air. There is no way that you can tell me that there was the kind of energy or political will there that resulted in the thinking that we were going to deal with this Quebec thing and we were going to walk away with an agreement. There was nothing like that at all. Even half or a quarter of that kind of energy would get us further on this issue.

● (1720)

Senator Fairbairn: I have one final question. Is it your interpretation of Meech Lake that unanimous consent of all 11 First Ministers will be required before your issues get back on the agenda?

Mr. Erasmus: Yes, if it means that we are going to have to be part of the prescribed First Ministers’ meeting that will take place and will deal with the round two items. There is no other way to get to those meetings. The right of the Chair to invite members and to set the agenda does not exist in the Round Two talks. It is a club of 11 individuals—all men at the moment—and they decide what is on the agenda and who goes to those meetings.

The Chairman: We now have Senator Lucier, followed by Senator Baroote.

Senator Lucier: I would like to welcome you, Chief Erasmus, to this committee and to say that your little brother appeared before our task force in Yellowknife and did an excellent job. He was very good.

My questions are a follow-up to those asked by Senator Fairbairn. I have already received answers to some of them from Chief Erasmus, but I would like him to elaborate a little more on the self-government aspect. It seems to me that that is the main goal of the aboriginal people, namely, to come up with some form of aboriginal self-government. While you and I may differ on the substance, we do not differ on the principle. When I heard of the failure of the last First Ministers’ conference on aboriginal rights dealing with self-government, I did not see that as being a great disaster. So long as you had an opportunity to keep talking about it I felt that sooner or later you would arrive at a settlement. The aboriginal people are very patient. They have been waiting for a long time for something, and they will continue to fight for it. But it seems to me that the fight has been taken out of this process by the Meech Lake Accord if it is allowed to pass as it is by the very fact that you have been replaced on the agenda by the fish. It seems to me that you no longer have an opportunity to get on the agenda, or even to fight. To win the fight is one thing, but you do not have the opportunity to get on the agenda to fight. Is that correct?

Mr. Erasmus: That’s correct.

Senator Lucier: It has been put to me by several people in the House of Commons that it is their opinion that the end of Meech Lake means the end of constitutional reform in Canada for a number of years. They say the people have had it with constitutional reform—I am referring to substantial changes and the type of thing that will have to be put in place to enable you to have a meaningful discussion on self-government—that once the Meech Lake Accord is passed, if it goes through as it is, it will be 20 years before anyone will again discuss constitutional reform. Do you have any views on that?

Mr. Erasmus: I would agree with a large part of what you are saying. We see this as a serious closing of doors against the involvement of aboriginal people. The message we are getting is that when our interests come up in matters that will be dealt with in round two, we will not have a significant role. Items such as fisheries will be dealt with, and we have already been told more than once by the Prime Minister that that matter does not affect us. I have no idea how he can say that, because if there is anything that aboriginal people throughout the world are involved in it is activity on land and sea. Fishing is an acknowledged basic treaty right, and recently there was a court case in British Columbia which stated that fishing was an aboriginal right recognized by the courts.

So it will mean that, at best, we are protesting outside, saying that we should be at the meeting. This whole process is putting us in a situation where we are continually opposing what is going on rather than being involved in a process where we are resolving the relationship.

The basic problem between First Nations and Canada is that we do not have the forums, the processes, where our rights can be resolved. There was so much hope in the constitutional forum, because it looked like there we had a way in which we could arrive at some major solution. It was the process dying that we had problems with, not the failure of one meeting. We agree with you, senator, that it was not a problem over not agreeing at one meeting. It just meant that we had not yet arrived at a time when Canada, the provinces and the aboriginal people of the First Nations were in agreement—that’s all; but when the process ended and they said, “Don’t talk to us any more. In fact, we are going to deal with a whole host of things, matters that will affect you indirectly, and we will take apart your rights one at a time, and you will have no role in it,” that is what scared us; that is what is seriously affecting our rights.

Senator Lucier: Mr. Chairman, I have one short question for clarification. Senator Frith gave an explanation of the Meech Lake Accord and the fact that the lack of opportunity for Senate and Supreme Court appointments in both territories was an oversight. I appreciate the honourable senator's making that clarification, but he ended by saying that he knew that the clauses were just an oversight. I would like to point out to him that their omission was not an oversight. They were deliberately crafted and drawn into the Meech Lake Accord in the way they are—the very matters with which Chief Erasmus is now dealing. They were not the result of an oversight. All of those things were brought to the attention of the government in the interval between Meech Lake and Langevin.

The Chairman: We now have Senator Barootes, followed by Senator Marchand.

Senator Barootes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My questions have been adequately answered through these last two discussions.

The Chairman: We now have Senator Marchand, followed by Senator Argue.

Senator Marchand: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I agree with what Senator Lucier said about Chief Erasmus' little brother in the Northwest Territories making an excellent presentation. I should add that all of our aboriginal brothers did a superb job in their presentation before the task force. I refer to the Inuit, the Métis and the Dene. Those of us on the task force who heard the presentations were enlightened and, indeed, proud of the competent presentations that were made.

I have two brief questions. The Prime Minister has made a fairly big deal about Quebec again being part of the constitutional family. I agree; I want to see Quebec back in. He also said that having them around the table would be a big help to our aboriginal brothers. How do you respond to that?

Mr. Erasmus: We are not as convinced about that. We recently saw an example where the Province of Quebec tried to introduce a bill that would allow the government to enter into treaties with the First Nations. We think that the result of this bill will affect the relationship we have had with Canada for a long time. The federal government has the ability under the Constitution to enter into treaties. It is our feeling that Quebec is trying to push the concept of the distinct society to its limit, to the point where it has sovereignty in the province over all its citizens, including the aboriginal peoples. So we really have no reason to believe that our cultures or our rights are any more protected in Quebec than in any other province. In fact, at the moment their politics are quite reactionary.

● (1730)

Senator Marchand: I could talk about the province of British Columbia, too, but that is another story and I shall not get into it. The Prime Minister has said that if the Meech Lake Accord is amended the whole process might fall apart. He has referred to the accord as a seamless garment, and so on. What are your feelings on that position?

Mr. Erasmus: I cannot believe it. I do not see why it should be the case. I also do not know why they are hanging a lot of this stuff on Quebec. It is clear that the participants made it more difficult to create provinces. They went from the general amending formula of seven provinces representing over 50 per cent of Canada to a formula involving the unanimous agreement of all ten provinces. I cannot believe that Quebec insisted on this provision. Did Quebec take the approach that it did not want any more First Ministers' meetings on aboriginal issues, that including this provision would be the only way they could be happy with being part of Canada? That is hard for me to believe. I do not see why they would single out this point. I do not see any reasons why these kinds of improvements cannot be made and why the five major points Quebec originally requested could not be met.

Senator Phillips: Mr. Chairman, according to our rules, we should adjourn at 6 o'clock. I suggest that we not see the clock for the next five minutes.

Senator Argue: Or for a little longer.

Senator Phillips: Not necessarily a little longer.

Senator Argue: Until the list has been completed.

The Chairman: I do not see the clock, then. Senator Marchand, have you concluded?

Senator Marchand: I have a number of questions, but I know Mr. Erasmus well, and I am sure that we will be exchanging views on many issues in the next little while.

Senator Frith: Was the suggestion made that we finish the list and then close?

The Chairman: The suggestion was made by Senator Phillips that we continue for another five minutes.

Senator Argue: Mr. Erasmus, I have a couple of questions, but I will be brief. I understand from the questioning that you have a great deal of support for your position, as you have stated, amongst the official opposition. What support do you appear to have at this time for your position amongst provincial governments, amongst the premiers? Do you have one or more premier willing to help you in any way to get your item back on the agenda for a conference in the near future?

Mr. Erasmus: We left the meeting with the majority of the provinces prepared to continue with the process. My understanding is that that feeling still exists, that what they are waiting for is leadership from the federal government. The Prime Minister could have continued the process in March, and he can still do so now.

Senator Argue: From your discussions with provincial governments do you have any real hope that even one provincial government will make progress on your proposals a condition of their approval of the accord?

Mr. Erasmus: We have not been lobbying the provinces strongly on this matter, because we think that we should try to get changes made at the federal level first. That will be our next effort. Over the next three-year period we will be lobbying the provinces directly.

Senator Argue: You may have answered this question already, but what particular consideration have you given to making representations to the Premier of New Brunswick, who is not committed to the accord and who, to me, seems to be the only real hope for this country that this accord will not be approved, and that in its place we will have an accord that is much more acceptable. What work are you doing, or have you done to this point, with the Government of New Brunswick?

Mr. Erasmus: We have been seeking a meeting with the premier-elect since hours after his election. We have not been able to get that meeting. Having just taken over the reins of government he is extremely busy, but it is our hope that we will meet with him before too long.

Senator Grafstein: Chief Erasmus, would you confirm some data for me? I take it that the First Nations represent somewhere between one million to 1.2 million Canadians. Is that correct? If we are talking about enfranchisement and disenfranchisement we are talking about somewhere between one million and 1.2 million, if we include the Metis, the Inuit, the First Assembly, and so on, Canadians. I do not believe we have on record the total number of Canadians represented by your group and other aboriginal organizations.

Mr. Erasmus: It is as close a figure as you can probably get at the moment. There are no accurate figures in Canada on all the descendants of aboriginal peoples. There is reasonably accurate information on status or treaty aboriginal peoples at the Department of Indian Affairs. But we really do not have good figures on Metis and non-status people.

Senator Grafstein: Is that a fair number?

Mr. Erasmus: It is close enough.

Senator Grafstein: Is there any way in which the Senate could assist you in triggering a First Ministers' conference by initiating an amendment which would be parallel to, but would not alter, the Meech Lake Accord under section 35(1) of the 1982 Constitution? Are you familiar with that idea? Perhaps you could spend a few minutes with the senators and give us your understanding of whether or not that is a workable formula.

● (1740)

Mr. Erasmus: As a workable formula, we would suggest that all ten provinces and the federal government consider an additional constitutional accord—and it might be a very simple one—that deals with a resumption of the constitutional talks and puts in place a constitutional process and, perhaps, also deals with some other matters. You would then be accomplishing the result of not amending the original accord, yet still dealing with one of the major concerns.

My preference still is to try to amend the Meech Lake Accord, but certainly the other process would be sufficient.

Senator Grafstein: So this is a parallel process that might be open to the Senate, and we might accelerate this process should we be unable to convince Parliament or the legislatures to amend Meech Lake.

Mr. Erasmus: Absolutely.

Senator Frith: Where do we find that formula?

Senator Grafstein: I think it is section 35(1), and I believe we will have some subsequent evidence to support this. I simply wanted to get the view of Chief Erasmus, because there are other groups who will come forward and elaborate on this point.

Finally, I am interested in the issue of the Charter. During the evidence of Mr. Pickersgill he said, in effect, why should we as senators be concerned about the Charter when one constitutional convention said that there is a notwithstanding clause, and, while this might dilute it again somewhat, the bigger issue is the notwithstanding clause.

In effect, what Mr. Pickersgill is arguing—and it represents a sizeable school of opinion—is that the Charter is really not all that important as a primary symbol in the country and as a teaching value; that Parliament, in effect—as the Quebec legislature did—could use the notwithstanding clause and then face its electorate. Mr. Pickersgill takes the position that the public would be outraged and therefore legislatures would not do it, but we have the example of Quebec where they did not outrage their public by doing that very thing.

What is your position on that? Do you think a lot of your concerns would be remedied if, in fact, there was a clear-cut amendment to Meech Lake which made the Charter unassailable, paramount?

Mr. Erasmus: Our concerns are not that closely connected to the Charter. Our concerns are that the agenda items with which we have to deal in relation to Canada and the provinces have not been resolved. Therefore, an amendment that puts in place the process whereby we can get the work done is what is of paramount concern to us.

We would also like to see an immediate amendment to the Meech Lake Accord, recognizing the distinct societies of aboriginal people.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Grafstein. I have one quick question from Senator LeBlanc.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Actually, I had two questions. Chief Erasmus, the process was difficult enough to crank up. I am pretty distressed to hear you say that it has died. On the other hand, we all know that provincial premiers are, by definition, preoccupied with provincial interests, and very often they come to the table to see what chips are available in the bargaining.

It strikes me that the real worry about the process dying, or at least going into deep-freeze, as you have described it, is that so much was given away at Meech Lake and at Langevin that there does not seem to be a great deal left on which the federal authorities, if they wished to do so, could find a solution to some of the aboriginal problems.

What do you see as the chips that they could use to bring the recalcitrants to the table?

Mr. Erasmus: There may be one; that the provinces could get together and unanimously agree as to who will be the Prime Minister of Canada. I think you are right; there is very little left. That is exactly the worry we have, and that was the way in which we saw the game being played.

Looking back we now assume that the reason the Prime Minister and the federal government were not pushing for a resolution during March when we were meeting was because everything that they needed to pull together the Quebec agreement they could only use once, and they were saving all that for the big deal. That is also our concern.

Therefore, all that is left are things such as fisheries and the Senate. Those things are close and dear to the hearts of some of the provinces. Therefore, if we are not involved, and if they do not intend to deal with our issues at the same time as they are dealing with fisheries, for instance, then we will get the short end of the stick.

On the other hand, if fisheries is going to be dealt with at the same time as our concerns are dealt with, it is much more likely that our interests could be protected, and the provinces could also arrive at some arrangement that they, too, could live with.

Therefore, we really have a concern that whatever chips are left still available will be used up if we are not involved, and very soon.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): I would phrase this next question in the form of a statement—

Senator Phillips: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I ask that we not see the clock for a number of minutes. We have had repeated questions already from two senators and now we are involved with questions from a third senator, whose name was not on the list at that time.

I feel that we should show some respect for our rules. We have senators who have committee meetings this evening, and I think they should be entitled to have the Senate adjourn now.

The Chairman: Mr. Erasmus, I want to thank you very much for your presentation and for that of your group. You were very helpful in providing all the information and answering all of the questions fully. Many thanks.

Honourable senators, the next meeting of the committee will be next Wednesday, November 25, at 3 o'clock. At that time we will have as witnesses from Alliance Quebec, Mr. Royal Orr; from the Canadian Jewish Congress, Mr. John Laskin and Mr. Joseph Wilder; and from the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, Mr. George Corn and Mr. Lewis Chan.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee adjourn, report progress, and ask for leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake Accord and texts subsequently agreed to were referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the Committee of the Whole be given authority to sit again on Wednesday, November 25, 1987 at 3 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I assume that Senator Phillips is the Acting Deputy Leader of the Government. I believe that all remaining orders stand.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I believe, according to our rules, they would have to stand, Senator Frith. It being 6 p.m., I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Frith: You have to be careful. If you do not stand all the orders we may have to sit again at 8 p.m. Are you standing all the orders?

Senator Phillips: Yes.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 19, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SUPREME COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 19, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-53, An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, October 29, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker : Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

FISHERIES

INTERIM COMMITTEE REPORT ON FRESHWATER FISHERIES—RESPONSE OF MANITOBA MINISTER—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, November 24, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to a response from the Minister of Natural Resources of the Government of Manitoba relating to the recommendations made by the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries in its Interim Report on the Freshwater Fisheries, tabled in the Senate on October 2, 1987, and on other matters arising therefrom.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SURVIVOR BENEFITS—ANOMALIES IN LEGISLATION—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, November 25, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to anomalies existing in veterans legislation regarding payment of survivor benefits to spouses of deceased prisoners of war.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND ITS PEOPLE

CONCERNS AND INTERESTS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Ethel Cochrane: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, November 24, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the concerns and interests of Newfoundland and its people.

GERMAN-CANADIAN CONFERENCE

ATLANTIK BRÜCKE—MEETING HELD IN FRANKFURT, WEST GERMANY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, November 24, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Second German-Canadian Conference Atlantik Brücke, held at Frankfurt, Federal Republic of Germany, from October 17 to 19, 1987.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1988 (Sessional Paper No. 332-625).

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

RICK HANSEN

APPOINTMENT AS CANADA'S COMMISSIONER GENERAL TO EXPO '88, BRISBANE, AUSTRALIA

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I wish to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. However, before I do so I would like to do something that is not usual—at least, it is not usual on my part—and that is congratulate the government on the appointment of Rick Hansen as Canada's Commissioner General to Expo '88 in Brisbane.

I doubt that the government could have found a better representative of Canada. Rick Hansen has become an outstanding example of courage and perseverance in the face of adversity. Certainly, those are admirable traits. He is also an excellent administrator. I think this was a fine appointment.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, first of all, let me say that I am glad, though not surprised, that the appointment of Rick Hansen enjoys such unanimous support in this chamber and, indeed, in the country. I thank the honourable senator for his comments in that regard.

TRADE

IMPACT OF GATT RULING ON B.C. FISHERIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jack Austin: I wish to ask the minister a question about the GATT in the ribs of the B.C. fishing industry.

As the minister will know, there is a GATT ruling which has been acknowledged by the Government of Canada that says, in effect, that the requirement that salmon and herring landed in British Columbia shall be processed in British Columbia is not in accordance with Canada's GATT obligations.

Can the minister tell us what the position of the government will be with respect to this ruling, which is so adverse in its economic impact on British Columbia, particularly on fishing dependent, single-enterprise communities?

As the minister knows, the ruling, if its terms were complied with by Canada, would create substantial unemployment in the fish processing industry in British Columbia. I cannot speak to its impact on the Atlantic, but no doubt it will have a similar impact there.

The question, then, is: Is the government considering compliance with the GATT ruling, or is the government considering making further representations to the 95-member council of GATT? Would the government consider discussing with the United States an accord which would either reverse or ameliorate the GATT ruling?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the government is now formulating our response to that finding and an announcement will be made by Ms Carney in due course.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AIDS—AVAILABILITY IN CANADA OF DRUG AZT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate when Canadians can expect the approval of the drug AZT, which is already available in the United States, to treat the unfortunate victims of AIDS, even though it costs $10,000 U.S. to treat one patient for one year with this drug.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to furnish a reply to that question.

Senator Haidasz: As a supplementary question, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate also inform us whether the federal government will pay for this costly treatment of the unfortunate victims of AIDS or share this cost with the provinces?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will accept that question as a representation by the honourable senator and will convey it to my colleague.

THE SENATE

FILLING OF VACANCIES—ROLE OF PROVINCES AND TERRITORIES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the fact that there are four vacancies presently in the Senate—one of them, in the province of Quebec, dates back to January 3 of this year and one, in Ontario, to June 20—and in light of the Meech Lake Accord, would the minister indicate whether these provinces have been asked to submit names from which the government can choose those whom it wishes to appoint?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, first of all, the six- or seven-month delay in filling one of the vacancies to which my friend refers is hardly a record, as he will know. There have been vacancies in this place for much longer periods of time.

Second, I am not aware that the Meech Lake Accord requires the Prime Minister or the cabinet to ask for a list of names. As I understand it, provinces are expected to submit those lists of names.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He did not ask you that.

Senator Molgat: I would like to make the point that it is not six or seven months, it is over ten months, almost eleven months.

Senator Murray: I have known vacancies to exist for twelve years.

Senator Molgat: Be that as it may, do I conclude from the statements of the minister that it is up to the provinces to take action, that is, the provinces should be the ones to initiate the action without any request from the federal government?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend can read the Meech Lake Accord for himself. I think it is a fine point whether it is necessary for us to write a letter to a premier and say, "Will you please submit your list of names?" The procedure is there and provincial governments are free to submit their lists of names at any time. The vacancies, I think, are obvious to everyone.

I will consult to see whether the Prime Minister has taken any action on his own initiative in this respect.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In view of what the Leader of the Government said a moment ago, if I understood him correctly, that is, that they did not necessarily need these lists, is it not clear that the only appointments that will be made—at least according to the Meech Lake Accord—will be from those persons nominated by the premiers?

Senator Murray: Absolutely. There is no question about that. The Meech Lake Accord provides that vacancies in the Senate will be filled by the Governor General in Council from lists submitted by the provinces and that we would appoint a person suitable or acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council of Canada, in effect, the cabinet. The fine point I was discussing with our colleague, Senator Molgat, was whether it was necessary for the Prime Minister to sit down and write a letter to the premier of each province inviting him to submit a list.

● (1410)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have a further supplementary question. As the Leader of the Government knows, the Premier of Alberta is reported to be seriously considering a provincewide election of a nominee, which will probably cost about the same as a provincial election, whatever that is—at any rate, several million dollars. Would that impress the government in the consideration of its appointments?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the important point is that the list must be submitted by the province. My reading of that provision would be that more than one name has to be submitted—

Some Hon. Senators: No!

Senator Murray:—and that the person appointed must be acceptable to the federal cabinet.

Senator Olson: I take it that would mean the premiers should be advised that if they are going to hold an election they should structure it in such a way that there would be more than one name coming out on top.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is not for me to advise the premiers as to how they go about drawing up the names. Early in December I expect to have the opportunity to speak to honourable senators in Committee of the Whole on the constitutional resolution of 1987. I shall have with me the Deputy Minister of Justice and the Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations. We can go into these points at that time. I repeat that my reading of the accord is that more than one name has to be submitted. We can, however, discuss that in more detail later.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for this clarification. I had asked him some months ago, shortly after the signing of the Meech Lake Accord, whether a province could submit simply one name. Now I gather that it is clear—

Senator Murray: What did I say then?

Senator Molgat: At that time, well, I would not accuse the government leader of being evasive, but let us say that the answer was less than clear as to whether "lists" meant one name or more than one. However, now it is clear that for the purposes of that section of the Meech Lake Accord "lists" means more than one name for each vacancy.

Senator Murray: That would be my reading of it. I make that statement advisedly, and we will have an opportunity to discuss it in more detail with the officials when they are here.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, on a supplementary, I understand from the Leader of the Government in the Senate that these lists will be submitted by the premiers, the leaders of the governments of the provinces. But I suspect that that will not be the case in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. In those cases I am hoping that the federal government will be able to nominate prospective senators, since those territories do not have premiers, and they are not even part of Canada according to the Meech Lake Accord.

Senator Murray: That last statement, of course, is utter nonsense.

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, on a further supplementary, I also understood that the Premier of Alberta was contemplating some kind of election to fill the vacancy from that province. I thought that this practice might possibly be adopted by other provinces. I take it from the answer of the Leader of the Government that the provinces really should not contemplate electing their nominees to the Senate, because the Leader of the Government says that a list has to be submitted. That would effectively mean that the provinces could not hold elections for potential nominees to the Senate.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend can draw his own conclusions. I have no advice whatsoever to offer to the provinces as to how they draw up their lists of proposed senators. I suppose that, in theory, it is quite possible to have elections that result in the election of more than one person. That has been done.

In any case, I have no advice to offer anyone in that regard. I have simply said, and repeat, that my reading—and I have stated "advisedly"—of the Meech Lake Accord is that more than one name must be submitted.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, are we to understand from the Leader of the Government that the Meech Lake Accord is now in effect, notwithstanding the fact that it has not yet received parliamentary approval and nine out of ten provinces have not ratified the accord?

Senator Murray: My honourable friend is a little wrong in his arithmetic.

Senator Bosa: Eight out of ten.

Senator Murray: Yes. Quebec and Saskatchewan have already ratified; the House of Commons has ratified; and it is my understanding that the Provinces of British Columbia and Alberta have the matter before their legislatures this fall. However, the fact of the matter is that the Meech Lake Accord does provide explicitly that, pending ratification, the procedure envisaged in the accord for the nomination of senators will be in effect.

Senator Bosa: Is that one of the reasons for the delay?

Senator Murray: What delay?

Senator Bosa: The fact that it has not been ratified by the other eight provinces.

Senator Murray: I have tried to explain to my honourable friend that it is explicit in the political accord that was reached at Meech Lake in April and, again, in the Langevin Building in June that the procedure for nominating and appointing senators envisaged in the constitutional resolution takes effect immediately.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

BINDING DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, some weeks ago I asked certain questions of the Leader of the Government on the allegedly binding dispute-settlement mechanism. It was pointed out to me by senators wiser than I that since the question was possibly too complicated, and the Leader of the Government might not have the facts at hand, I should give him a written question—which I did some time ago.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Did you?

Senator Gigantès: Oh yes, sir. The Clerk of the Senate received the text. The question was properly sent to you, sir. Would you please let me know when I can expect to receive an answer.

Senator Murray: I am sorry; is this a question that is on the order paper or one that was sent to me personally?

Senator Gigantès: When I asked the question in the house you suggested that it be sent to you in writing and be put on the order paper—and it was. I have seen it printed in the order paper.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, first, I shall consult the order paper. I apologize; I am not aware of the question. If it is not on the order paper, I will get in touch with my honourable friend's office and obtain a copy, or I will look around my office and obtain one; and I will see that it is replied to as soon as possible.

Senator Gigantès: To facilitate matters, and not to have the staff burdened, I shall take it upon myself, if I am allowed, to bring the question over to you, sir.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on a point of order, a question that is on the order paper is the responsibility of the Clerk's office, and not that of the Leader of the Government. The question is processed by the Clerk's office to the appropriate department, a reply comes back, and it is printed in the Debates. If the honourable senator wishes to deliver a copy of his question to the Leader of the Government, then that is a different matter and can be dealt with on a one-to-one basis somewhere else; but a question that is printed in our order paper is expected to be answered in the Debates, and not through this short-circuiting system that we see in effect here right now.

● (1420)

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, when I asked that question the Leader of the Government said that it would be proper for me to submit it in writing, and I have done so. I would be most grateful if at his earliest convenience he would answer this question that I consider very important and that the people of Canada consider very important.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

LUBICON CREES OF ALBERTA—SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS— RELEASE OF NEGOTIATOR'S REPORT—APPOINTMENT OF NEW NEGOTIATOR AND MEDIATOR

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Watt on September 30, 1987, regarding Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Lubicon Crees of Alberta. It is a rather lengthy answer, and if Senator Watt will permit it I ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings. Otherwise, if he so requests I shall read it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows.)

The Government of Canada recognizes the outstanding land claim of the Lubicon Lake Band and thus is fully prepared to seek a fair and just resolution through negotiations. In this regard, the Honourable Bill McKnight, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, announced on October 5, 1987, the appointment of Mr. Brian Malone, a Calgary-based lawyer, as Canada's negotiator for this claim. The Province of Alberta has appointed Mr. John T. McCarthy as provincial negotiator. It is the minister's and Mr. Malone's expectation that negotiations on this claim will be renewed in the very near future.

When the Honourable E. Davie Fulton undertook his assignment to inquire into the facts of the Lubicon Lake Band's land claim, there was an agreement between Canada, the Province of Alberta and the band that the results of Mr. Fulton's work would not be released without the consent of all three parties. The Province of Alberta recently agreed to the release of the Fulton report. Copies of the report are now available on request from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

With respect to the appointment of Mr. Fulton as a mediator for these negotiations, the band's claim is primarily a matter between the Government of Canada and the Lubicon Lake Band and, on some aspects of the claim, the Province of Alberta. It is the position of the government that face-to-face negotiations among the parties afford the best prospect for a fair and successful resolution of this claim. Since such negotiations between the band and Canada have yet to occur in a meaningful way, serious attempts must be made at direct negotiations prior to consideration being given to the involvement of a third party.

Regarding the tuberculosis outbreak mentioned by Senator Watt, Health and Welfare Canada and the Alberta TB Control Unit, with the full cooperation of the community, have worked together to effectively contain and control this outbreak. There are at present 38 active cases, none of which is infectious. All 38 people are under treatment.

The honourable senator also mentioned the Lubicon Lake Band's complaint to the U.N. Human Rights Committee. This committee recently made a decision to, in effect, hear the substance of the band's complaint. As the committee requests that the parties to a complaint respect its confidentiality, Canada will abide by this request. However, it should be noted that Canada will be responding to the decision of the committee in the near future.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL OF CANADA

MEMBERSHIP BY PROVINCE

Question No. 31 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

3rd September, 1987—What are the names of all Members of the Medical Research Council, broken down by province?

Reply by the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

PROVINCE

MEMBERS

BRITISH COLUMBIA

Dr. Patricia A. Baird
Professor and Head
Department of Medical Genetics
University of British Columbia
No. 226 Wesbrook Building
6174 University Boulevard
Vancouver, British Columbia
V6T 1W5

ALBERTA

Dr. Douglas R. Wilson
Dean, Faculty of Medicine
2J2.00 W.C. McKenzie Health Sciences Centre
University of Alberta
Edmonton, Alberta
T6G 2R7

Dr. Karl Lederis
Professor
Department of Pharmacology and Therapeutics
University of Calgary
3330 Hospital Drive, N.W.
Calgary, Alberta
T2N 4N1

SASKATCHEWAN

Dr. Denis Johnson
Head, Department of Pharmacology
University of Saskatchewan
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan
S7N 0X0

ONTARIO

Professor Michael Gent
Faculty of Health Sciences
Room 2G-10B
McMaster University
1200 Main Street West
Hamilton, Ontario
L8S 4J9

Dr. Antony H. Melcher
Associate Dean
Faculty of Life Sciences
63 St-George Street
School of Graduate Studies
University of Toronto
Toronto, Ontario
M5S 1A1

PROVINCE	MEMBERS	NOVA SCOTIA	Dr. Bernard Perey Department of Surgery Victoria General Hospital Suite 8028 Halifax, Nova Scotia B3H 2Y9
ONTARIO	Dr. Marty J. Hollenberg Professor and Chairman Department of Anatomy Medical Sciences Building University of Toronto Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A8	NEW BRUNSWICK	Mr. Ed Graham President and Chief Operating Officer Bruncor Inc., Suite 1801 One Brunswick Square P.O. Box 5030 Saint John, New Brunswick E2L 4L4
	Dr. V.C. Abrahams Professor and Head Department of Physiology Room 430, Botterell Hall Queen's University Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6	NEWFOUNDLAND	Dr. David Hawkins Dean, Faculty of Medicine Health Sciences Centre, Room 2702 Memorial University of Newfoundland Prince Philip Drive St. John's, Newfoundland A1B 3V6
	Dr. Wilbert J. Keon Heart Institute, Room 201 Ottawa Civic Hospital 1053 Carling Avenue Ottawa, Ontario K1Y 4E9
	M <sup>me</sup> Ginette Rodger Directrice générale Association des infirmières et infirmiers du Canada 50, The Driveway Ottawa, Ontario K2P 1E2
QUEBEC	Dr. André Archambault 650, boul. Dollard Outremont (Québec) H2V 3G3
	Dr. Eugenio Rasio Directeur Unité Métabolique Hôpital Notre-Dame Pavillon Mailloux—8 <sup>e</sup> étage 1560, rue Sherbrooke Montréal, (Québec) H2L 5K8
	Dr. Phil Gold Physician-in-Chief Director of the McGill Uni- versity Medical Clinic, Room 7135 Montreal General Hospital 1650 Cedar Avenue Montreal, Quebec H3G 1A4

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN CERTAIN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON CERTAIN SENATE AMENDMENTS ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

That the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 13(a), (b), (c) and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and 16 (a);

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b), and (c), 16 (b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a); and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.—(Honourable Senator Sinclair).

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am obviously not rising for the purpose of closing the debate on my motion, but, with your indulgence, I have a very brief statement to make respecting the motion passed yesterday which requested me to ascertain whether my cabinet colleagues would agree to a conference on Bill C-22.

I have consulted my cabinet colleagues and must advise senators that the government would not recommend such a conference to the House of Commons. Ministers are convinced that the conference would serve no useful purpose at this stage of the process, unless, as I noted yesterday, the purpose was to kill the bill indirectly rather than directly.

The bill before us is a major element of the government's legislative program. I think this has been clear from the beginning of the process. We have now exchanged messages with the House on two occasions. Some Senate amendments have been accepted. It is clear to me, as it should be clear to honourable senators, that this gulf between them and the House of Commons is not one that can be bridged by a simple conference. It would be unrealistic to believe that the further delay that would result from such a conference would change matters. While a decision on a formal request from the Senate for a conference would be a matter for the House of Commons to decide, I see no likelihood that such a formal request would elicit a different approach.

Indeed, I am advised that the House leadership of the other parties in the House of Commons was consulted and that there was no consensus in favour of such a conference. It is, therefore, time for honourable senators to come to a decision as to whether or not this house will continue to insist on its amendments as specified in my motion. As I have suggested, we must not continue to insist if we are cognizant of our constitutional role as it has evolved in practice in modern times, otherwise, honourable senators will have taken the decision to kill a major initiative of the elected representatives of Canadians. As I have said, that is a decision that this house ought not to take.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that I moved the motion of yesterday, I can only express great disappointment, and yield to any other senator who might wish to speak in this debate.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I wonder if I might ask Senator Sinclair to clarify the situation. Is he now relinquishing his place in the batting order, as it were?

Senator Sinclair: That is what I was intending to do.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, in considering the motion by Senator Murray one is forced to look back on the history of Bill C-22. Certainly, its voyage through Parliament has not been, in any sense, ordinary. It is really a most unhappy bill from many points of view.

In the first place, at birth, the delivery of this bill was marred by its not being given a gentle slap on the bottom but by being substantially bruised. That created considerable resistance to the consideration of Bill C-22. I am referring to the statement that it was not to be the subject of amendment. To this chamber that obviously presents a "défi" which every senator must resent.

In the second instance, when the bill first came to the notice of the Senate it would have been normal for the subject matter to be considered in committee, as has been done for many years, particularly with a complicated piece of legislation. For reasons best known to themselves, opposition senators were unwilling to undertake that study. This caused considerable delay in consideration of the bill.

Finally, instead of following the normal procedure of sending the bill to the usual committee—in this case the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce—we set up a special committee to deal with this bill. That special committee travelled from coast to coast, an unusual performance that cost the taxpayers some $300,000. That committee learned certain very obvious facts. One of these is that nobody wants to see the price of drugs go up. I do not think it was necessary to go through such an exercise in order to reach that conclusion. However, after a very considerable passage of time the special committee reported with a series of amendments which, in the words of the media, "gutted the bill."

When a message was returned to this chamber from the House of Commons refusing those amendments, Bill C-22 was finally referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which it should have been referred months before. This procedure may seem to be acceptable to the members of the opposition in the Senate, but from an independent point of view it is hard to understand. It seems to spell delay.

The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee spent further weeks in consideration of this bill and, in the process, reheard some witnesses. It then produced a report with moderate amendments. By this time patience was running short, and these last amendments have been returned from the House of Commons as being unacceptable. This is the reason for Senator Murray's motion.

What has been the net result of all this activity on the Senate itself? I believe that it has done some good to the image of the Senate in that it has caused remarks such as "the Senate is now awake," or "the Senate is alive," and "senators are not just rubber-stamping." However, with the beneficial effects have come some negative effects. First, the issue has now become a challenge of ideas between the elected House and the Senate. The challenge may be understandable, but not necessarily desirable. The comment is more frequently made that the Senate has assumed the role of the challenger to the government of the day because of the disastrous defeat of the Liberal Party in the last general election. Has the Senate now challenged the Commons in the bear pit of politics? Has Senator Sinclair been entered as the pit bull by his trainers, Senator MacEachen and Senator Frith?

Senator Sinclair: In that case I would be a Scotch terrier and not an English bulldog!

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, the Senate was never intended to be the cockpit for political fights in this country. It was not established for that purpose and it has never served well in that capacity. I know that my friends to the left of the Speaker will say that Bill C-22 is bad, and the only reason that they delayed it is because it is undesirable for the people of this country. Even if that is correct, I think that the sober second thought of the Senate should clearly point out all the faults of the proposed bill. It should not be a question of setting the opinion of the Senate against the opinion of the House of Commons.

● (1430)

Actually, honourable senators, this bill and the consequent political activity presents perhaps the greatest argument for having independent senators. The House of Lords today has something like 20 per cent on the cross benches, that is, Independents. They provide some balance in the political struggles. Here, at the moment we have a very unusual and difficult situation.

I am referring to one of the main roles of the Senate, that of representing regions. It is undeniably one of the responsibilities of senators to represent their region and their province.

In the case of this bill most Quebec Liberal senators seem to have chosen to follow the dictates of the Whip. That is entirely their business and their right, and it is not up to me to criticize it. But, certainly, I may observe it. As a senator from Quebec I feel a regional responsibility, as I have on previous occasions.

From the point of view of Quebec, we Quebec senators should be supporting this bill. Under the circumstances, I am sure it is embarrassing and bothersome to some of my colleagues, but we are now at the stage where we must stand up and be counted. Some of us sit here as Independents because we insist on our right to express ourselves and vote according to our own minds, and not according to the Whip. My belief is that this was in the design for the Upper Chamber when the Constitution of Canada was written in 1867.

A day or so ago I drew attention to the fact that we were, by practice, changing some of our rules. I was referring to the rules of the Question Period. Perhaps we are carrying that practice even further. Maybe we are changing the role and responsibility of senators in this way. I must observe that when a situation like this comes before us, so obviously beneficial to our region, it must create extreme stress if a Whip is turned on, causing senators to vote against the best interests of their region.

Honourable senators, I cannot but regret that this chamber has in recent times come to resemble or to mimic the House of Commons. Perhaps it is because we have had so many new members who have not had time to feel their way into the Senate traditions. I do not know. But I feel, personally, that in changing the Senate has lost a good deal of face in the country. As we have known for some time, the Senate is held in very, very low regard throughout Canada. In the case of Bill C-22, while giving us credit for being alive, we have also come in for a lot of criticism for unnecessary delay. In addition, we have brought into question the role of senators as regional representatives.

Honourable senators, having said all this, I take my regional representation to be of paramount importance, and so in voting, whether it be on the motion or on the bill itself, I will vote in favour.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, my reservations on this legislation are not based so much on the content of the bill or the amendments that have been proposed but rather on the way it has been handled by the government in the other place. I agree with Senator Murray that this has now become a constitutional matter. If you examine how this was handled, you have to start from the fact that the minister at the outset stated that he would not pay attention to anything that the Senate said. He said that not just once, he said it several times and in a very pejorative manner.

[Senator Molson.]

The Senate, as Senator Molson has stated, created a special committee to look into this matter. The committee made substantial amendments to the bill. These were rejected by the government. The bill came back again and was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. That committee introduced an entirely new set of amendments. They accepted the major provisions of the bill in a compromise, and they proposed in explicit terms amendments to make possible what the minister said the bill would actually do. These amendments were largely ignored by the minister, although he did make minor changes—two technical amendments. He stated that the Drug Prices Review Board must deal with any increase in drug prices over the Consumer Price Index. But there were no sanctions attached to his amendment, which was an element requested in the Senate amendment.

The Senate then asked for a conference, which has now been rejected by the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Murray: Not quite, senator. I beg your pardon, the Senate did not ask for a conference. The Senate asked me to put a hypothetical question to my cabinet colleagues as to what their response would be.

Senator Frith: Come on!

Senator Murray: If the Senate had wanted a conference they were free to move for one. However, I was asked to put a hypothetical question to my colleagues, which I did, and I returned with the reply.

Senator Everett: I stand corrected. The minister was given a hypothetical question. He went to his cabinet colleagues and to members of the caucus in the House of Commons, and it was indicated that if such a request were formally made it would be turned down.

Further, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has stated that this is a major piece of legislation in the government's program. So we are not dealing with something that can be passed off as an administrative matter. What the Leader of the Government is saying is that this is crucial to the government's legislative program.

The Senate's wishes from the beginning have been ignored. As a matter of fact, the minister produced a pamphlet which he distributed to the drug industry. That pamphlet certainly implies that the legislation will go through without interference from the Senate.

What are the obligations of the Senate? It most certainly has the power to amend this legislation. The question is whether or not it should use that power. It is clear—it has been said a number of times—that at the end of the day the elected representatives must prevail. I suggest to you that the elected representatives have a duty to consult with the people and that, in fact, it is the people who must prevail. If the elected representatives have indicated from the very beginning through the mouth of their minister that they will not listen to the Senate, that they will not make a change of a substantive nature to the bill, then it is my belief that they have not consulted with the electorate, because they have said from the beginning that they will make no changes and that they will enter into no consultation. For that reason I come to the conclusion that this is not the end of the day.

Senator Roblin made a speech the other day following on a speech that I had made with respect to this matter. I must say that Senator Roblin and I agree on one point, and that is that this body should be an elected body. Senator Roblin said that the Senate clearly has the legal authority and the constitutional right to amend the legislation. With that I agree. Then he went on to the question of a convention.

• (1440)

Is there a convention that somehow removes the right of the Senate to exercise that power? The analogy that he used was that the Governor General has the right in certain circumstances to refuse to assent to legislation. In fact, the Governor General does not do that. A convention has arisen, but that is a convention that has arisen out of an election that was fought when Lord Byng was Governor General. The public clearly had an opportunity to express its view and stated that the Governor General should not exercise that power. Such a view has not been expressed in relation to the Senate. Therefore, I think we can distinguish the convention that applies to the Governor General from any convention that applies to the Senate. In fact, I think if one were to say that the Senate should not exercise its power, one might well say to the judges, "You should not exercise your power because you have not been elected." We do have the power; we were given it at the time of Confederation. It is interesting to note that for the time being that power has been brought up to date by the Meech Lake conference.

Senator Frith: And in 1982.

Senator Everett: And perhaps in 1982, as the Deputy Leader of the Opposition states.

Senator Roblin goes on to ask the question: "When will this chamber present itself for endorsement, as the elected chamber has to do?"

It seems to me to be pretty obvious that, while we do not stand for election, if we were to refuse this legislation, if we were to insist upon our amendments, we would stand for endorsement. There would be an immediate move by the government to do something to change the powers of the Senate, and the public would eventually decide, as it did in the matter of Lord Byng. We would be put to the test. We are not above having to present ourselves for endorsement for anything we do.

Senator Roblin goes on to say that we do not have political legitimacy. Again, I say that we may not have immediate political legitimacy, but what we do in the end must be legitimate in political terms.

Honourable senators, the Globe and Mail has stated as follows:

In flouting the convention that the Commons prevails, the Senate is abusing a fundamental condition of representative government.

The Montreal Gazette states that the Senate has a duty to know its place, and invites proposals for reform or abolition. Honourable senators, if that is the case, then does that not argue that all we really have an obligation and a right to do is to comment on the legislation from the other place? When it passes us by we simply say, "Well, you should change this, you should do that, but if you do not choose to do that it is perfectly fine with us." If that is the only right of the Senate, then we could get a better job done at a devil of a lot less money by appointing a committee for that purpose.

The Senate means a lot more to me than just that. If it cannot exercise its legislative power—if that is what the Globe and Mail and the Gazette are saying, namely, "You must not exercise your legislative power"—then there is no reason for the Senate to exist at all. What the government should do—and I hope that they do it in consequence of the history of this legislation—is consider amending the powers of the Senate to what they see as being the powers that we should be exercising. There is no question that we have the power; there is no question that we have the legitimacy. However, there is a question as to whether or not we should exercise that power. If we will not be able to do it—if all we are is a nice body of commentary on what the House of Commons does—then I agree with Senator Roblin. He said that "any Senate other than this one would be better for the future of the country." I think that that is quite true. This is a constitutional matter. This is a matter that goes to the root of whether the Senate means anything.

What bothers me is that if we are not prepared to insist on our amendments when the minister and the government have said, "We will not listen to you, no matter what you do," then we lose all legitimacy as a legislative body and we should be abolished.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Duff Roblin: In expressing his opinion here this afternoon about the issue that has been put before us, the battle has been fairly joined, because there is the position taken by Senator Everett, which I agree is constitutionally and legally correct, that this body has the capacity to thwart or to deny the policies approved by the House of Commons. That particular view of our political situation has to be reconciled with the principles of responsible government. I say to this chamber that it cannot be done. You must make your choice as to whether you will stand up for the right of this Senate to contradict the House of Commons and to thwart their will, or as to whether you will accept the principles of responsible government.

What are the principles of responsible and representative government? In this issue I think they are clear in every respect. That is that the government, as represented in the House of Commons, has the right to govern the country. It has earned the right to govern the country, because it has been successful in a general election and it still retains within the House of Commons the power to command a majority of those who sit in that chamber. That is the principle of responsible and representative government. To say that by any combination of words or ideas a body such as this that is appointed, not elected, has the right, when the day is done, to contradict, to thwart, to prevent and to stultify the policies of a government which is elected to carry on the administration of the country is the question that is before us.

I take the view that you have to make up your mind as to whether you wish to stand with Senator Everett and say that the Senate should—and I take that to be his meaning—stand up in this place and say that we will not accept this bill for reasons which seem good to him, or because we have the right both legally and constitutionally to do so—which I admit—or whether we should say that there is a higher principle which we have to take into account, the principle of responsible government.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: That is the argument in a nutshell. You have to decide which one of those stands you will take.

I simply take the stand that I believe that the principles of responsible government come first. Whether it is because I once ran for election—I was not always successful, but I had some success in it—that I have been indoctrinated with this principle of election, of responsibility and representation or not, I do not know. To me the answer to the issue is perfectly clear: We must say that we believe in this country in the principle of representative and responsible government. That means that the government that is supported by the House of Commons, has been elected by the people, and which still commands the majority in that House, has the right, the duty and the responsibility to run the government and to have its measures approved, and this branch of the legislature should not take upon itself the onerous responsibility of denying that principle of responsible and representative government.

I, for one, stand shoulder to shoulder with those who say that the Senate should not consider itself to be a rubber stamp and that we are not going to approve whatever comes before us without any comment, reservation or changes. We have the right to propose amendments, to propose changes, and we do. We have the perfect right to send those changes to the House of Commons and ask them what they think about them. The House of Commons has the duty, through the government—like it or not—to decide how it will react to proposals we have made.

• (1450)

In some cases they accept them. Indeed, in terms of the present argument we are having today, a number of proposals, although some say not the major ones—and they may be right—have been accepted.

However, if the House of Commons, after two tries in this instance, decides that it will not accept the advice the Senate has given it, then I think our responsibility is discharged. We have done our duty. We have said to ourselves, as some senators say, "One of our responsibilities is not to lend ourselves to early passage of legislation we do not agree with. Give public opinion time to build." We have certainly done that. There has been plenty of expression of public opinion. Some of us senators have told the House of Commons what we think is wrong with this bill. We have discharged that duty of revising the legislation to the best of our ability, but that is where our responsibility ceases.

[Senator Roblin.]

To say that we have the constitutional right and legal authority to vote against the bill at this stage may well be true. But it clashes with, in fact it runs headlong into, the principle of responsible government and the principle of representative government, a course which I, for one, am not prepared to advise.

I was very interested in the arcane argument which my friend put forth to the effect that we really are responsible to the people. I did not quite follow how he came to that conclusion, but he left me with a clear impression that somewhere down the line there is probably a general election on the fate of the Senate, and that in the course of time, according to the political process, that may be considered to be a vindication, or otherwise, by the people of what the Senate is doing. I must say, "Good luck." That is a little bit removed from any kind of responsible government that I ever heard of. I think that responsible and representative government means that men and women who want to hold public office stand up and get themselves elected by the people, or not, as the case may be. That is how you get public responsibility, and there is no element of that that can be attached to our positions here in the Senate, none whatsoever.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: I am here until I am 75, and, to use the expression of my dear friend, Dr. Forsey, even the Archbishop of Canterbury could not get me out of this place under the present Constitution unless I committed some crime. The public cannot get at me. No matter what I do respecting Bill C-22 I am safe from public opprobrium—or public praise, as far as that goes—as reflected in an election process. I do not see how you can get around that situation.

Senator Everett: What about constitutional amendments? Do you not agree that the Senate has a role to play in that regard?

Senator Roblin: In constitutional amendments the Senate has no voice at all except that it can impose a 160- or 180-day delay. How that comes into the argument I am not quite clear, because this is a derogation from the principle espoused by Senator Everett—that we should have the power and we ought to use it. That is what he has been saying. Respecting the Constitution, we do not have the power so we cannot use it. We can only discuss the matter and ventilate our ideas for the benefit of others.

Senator Everett: The Senate itself could be abolished, so they could get at you without your having any say. My honourable friend is not in the position of the Archbishop of Canterbury in that regard. If the provinces and the federal government decide to abolish the Senate, we have very little say. We have a hoist, and that is about as far as it goes.

Senator Roblin: What has that got to do with responsible government, and what has that got to do with our right to deal with this matter by voting against it? At the present time, nothing at all.

It is perfectly true that the Senate may be abolished. I hope it is not. I hope it is reformed; I hope it is elected.

Senator MacEachen: We are both in agreement.

Senator Roblin: I have some support and I am glad to see it.

When we make those reforms we should also be careful to introduce mechanisms which will enable us to deal with log-jams such as the one we have at the present time. Whether the Senate continues to be appointed or if it is elected, a change should be made to ensure that the principles of responsible government are incorporated into whatever we have to do.

Honourable senators, I am not going to say any more. I did not expect to say anything at all, but it seems to me that the issue is very simple: Are you going to stand on the letter of the constitution of the law, which you may do, even if it flies in the face of the principles of representative responsible government that has been developed in this nation and elsewhere over the years? I think not.

I think we have done our duty. We have expressed our view.

I would ask you to consider the bizarre course which the whole of this debate has taken. The Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22 brought in recommendations which, in the words of Senator Molson—and I think he is right—“... would gut the bill.” One would have thought that that was a very important situation.

A second committee dealt with the matter and it threw out all of those things. They said that they were not going to bother about those principles that the first committee had in mind.

Senator MacEachen: Didn't the House of Commons throw them out?

Senator Roblin: No, no!

Senator MacEachen: Isn't that the history?

Senator Roblin: When the bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, what did that committee do? Did it reaffirm the position of the special committee? No, it introduced a new set of ideas, none of which had anything to do with the recommendations produced by the first committee. They were abandoned; they were jettisoned. A new set of recommendations was brought in, recommendations that were of a far less fundamental character than those introduced in the first step.

What are we asked to do now? We are asked to say, “Well, we did not take our stand on the main issues. We did not take our stand on the first report, which was vital to the bill, let us say, but now, when we have a much watered down and modified set of suggestions, we are going to take our stand and throw the bill out on that account.” In other words, we have swallowed the camel and we are straining at the gnat. I have never heard of anything so ridiculous in my life. For this Senate to say that we are going to accept the decision of the House of Commons not to agree with our important changes to this bill and that, by George, we are going to stand our ground and we are not going to accept the fact that they won't accept these relatively minor changes in the bill is a bizarre performance.

It is on that ground that we are being asked to violate the principle of representative and responsible government of this nation. I will have nothing to do with it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Everett: May I ask a question of the honourable senator?

I do not wish to prolong this matter, since I have already spoken too long on it, but one area that did give me some concern is that I thought I heard my honourable friend say—and I hope I do not misquote him—that the Senate has a duty to examine legislation and advise on amendments that might be made. I thought he said that the government should listen to the Senate's wishes in that regard. How does he then equate that with the situation where we have a minister who says, “I don't care what the Senate says. I don't care what the Senate does. I am not going to listen.”?

Senator Perrault: That is exactly what he said.

Senator Roblin: It reminds me of a certain senator who said, “I don't care what the House of Commons says. I don't care what they have to do. I am not going to accept what they have to say.” That is exactly the same argument in reverse.

Senator Argue: Do you think they are both wrong?

Senator Roblin: Maybe they are.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I do not wish to engage in the dispute relating to the controversy between the Honourable Senator Roblin and the Honourable Senator Everett, but I do want to seriously challenge the thesis that Senator Roblin has advanced about the nature of responsible and representative government.

It is quite true, and I acknowledge it, that the government is responsible to the House of Commons, and when they lose the confidence of that House they have to resign. Until they lose the confidence of that House they have the right to govern. That is the element of responsible government—that only is the element of responsible government. The government is not directly responsible to the people, though the people have the chance of reviewing the situation at election time.

Senator Perrault: They will.

Senator Hicks: The government is responsible to the elected House of Commons, and I accept that, and until the government loses that confidence, which this government certainly has not, they have the right to govern. I do not challenge that.

However, the government must govern in accordance with the laws of the land as they stood at the time a particular government was elected, and this surely is also basic and fundamental to our constitution. When it comes to changing the laws of the land, the government does not have authority to do so. That certainly is part of the basic constitution of this country and of all institutions that have developed or derived from the British system. The laws of the land can only be changed by the actions of the House of Commons and the Senate and with the consent of the Sovereign.

● (1500)

Therefore, while this chamber certainly cannot interfere with the right of the present government to govern, it does have complete authority—which does not transcend any aspect, theoretical or practical, of our Constitution—to prevent the government from introducing and having passed legislation to change the laws of the land. This certainly is where the responsibility of both houses of Parliament comes in, and as long as our Constitution stays the way it is now it is the duty of the Senate to consider legislation and to vote on it conscientiously, just as it is the duty of the House of Commons. If the Senate should defeat this bill, it has no effect upon the rights of the present government to govern and to continue to govern. But it does deny the present government the right to change the laws in respect of our patent legislation—that is all.

This is not a constitutional question insofar as it is attacking the basis of responsible government. We do not deny the right of the government to govern until it loses the confidence of the House of Commons or until its majority in the House of Commons is adversely affected by a general election. We do insist, however, that under the same Constitution, and without in any way impinging upon the theories of responsible government, this chamber has the right to participate in the process of changing the laws of the land. However we vote on this bill, that is all the Senate is doing as one of the three elements of the Parliament of Canada which is charged with the responsibility of shaping and, from time to time, changing the laws of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, those of us who have criticized Bill C-22 have done it, I think, because we believe that the legislation is not desirable and is not in the best interests of the Canadian people. I think that the electorate in Canada today is very concerned about the functions of the House of Commons and of the Senate. The public may look to the Senate as an appointed body that is not representative in the ordinary sense of the word, but under the Constitution the Senate has been given certain powers, and those powers it has been exercising. I think the public is quite supportive of the actions of the Senate on this particular legislation. There is a deep concern in this country, not just about this legislation but about our whole system of government and how it works, particularly under the present circumstances.

[Senator Hicks.]

It is all right for Senator Roblin to say that we have responsible government, that that is the way it is, and that the Senate should not stand up at any time to the elected representatives of the House of Commons. But in Canada today we have a government with an overwhelming majority. This government is approaching the end of its mandate. The people have come to the conclusion that they do not have particular confidence in this government. I think Canadians are disturbed that their representatives in the House of Commons, perhaps even in the Senate, do not have the vision or the determination with which to use their powers in the interests of the country. I think that when Canadians look to the American system, although they may see a lot wrong with it, they realize that the House of Representatives and the American Senate have the power to bring the President to heel, if that is required.

Our system, of course, is the opposite, particularly when we elect a government—and my comments have nothing to do with any particular party—with a huge majority. The Prime Minister of such a government becomes a virtual dictator, with some controls, for the period of time between the elections. And the Whips are on in the Commons. When the government has a huge majority we know that it can rubber stamp a resolution such as the Meech Lake Accord, no matter what the public may think.

Senator Murray: Both opposition parties supported that, by the way.

Senator Argue: With some notable objections among members who exercised a measure of independence, and that measure of independence happened to be larger in the Liberal Party than in any other party.

The government has the authority to sign a free trade deal that may interfere with Canadian sovereignty. As I understand our system, honourable senators, Senate approval of such a deal is not required. The House of Commons will use a resolution as a means to approve this measure, and the weight of the government will be behind it.

Senator Murray: No.

Senator Argue: The government leader can shake his head all he likes, and he can also make his own speech, but when I reviewed his answer on the two-price wheat system—I always have to throw in a little wheat, even in a constitutional debate—I realized that it was one of the slipperiest answers I have ever seen in the Senate. He was entirely wrong. He said there is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement that would change the two-price wheat system. But the Premier of Saskatchewan said that it will be changed. Finally, the Minister of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the grain industry said that it will be changed.

Therefore, the Free Trade Agreement can be rubber stamped by the government, by the House of Commons, and this change in the fundamental powers of the country will be brought about without any reference to the people.

Although it may be great to look at the way the Senate could be constitutionally changed, I think it is of even greater importance to consider constitutional change affecting the House of Commons. Our rules should be changed so that members of the House of Commons have a method—and a legitimate one—by which they can exercise their independence. Now the government members are saying that the Senate is not a legitimate body because it is not elected. They suggest that we should simply rubber stamp whatever comes over to us. The minister in charge of the drug bill complains about the Senate. Then the Prime Minister unveils the Meech Lake Accord and it freezes the Senate in place, in my judgment, in the current constitutional mould for a long time to come. On the one hand, the government criticizes the Constitution of the country for the way it has structured the Senate and, on the other hand, it has frozen the Senate into its present shape for many years to come.

Honourable senators, I have been in the Senate since 1966. The Senate today, in my judgment, is using the powers granted to it under the Constitution in the very best way possible and is doing a more commendable job than it has done at any time in the past. I believe that the Senate today has greater support among the population than at any time since I have been in the Senate; and after we have decided on this bill, whichever way it goes, there will be more fights in the future. There is more legislation around that needs to be overhauled and amended, and, so far as I am concerned, this is just the beginning of senators exercising their constitutional rights in such a way as to show some responsibility to the thinking and the opinion of the Canadian electorate.

● (1510)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, as one who took part in the 1969 legislation amending the Patent Act, helping the then minister, the Honourable Ron Basford, as his parliamentary secretary, and also as a still practising physician, I cannot let pass this opportunity of making a few remarks before the next step in dealing with Bill C-22.

No one in this chamber can deny that the effects of Bill C-22 will not reduce the excessive drug prices that exist today in the market. In fact, many witnesses have shown to us, on two committees, that prices will still be excessive because of reduced competition which will follow because of the extended rights of multinational pharmaceutical companies, giving them further and longer periods of patent protection on the drugs they produce.

I do not want to "toot" anything that has happened in my personal life in dealing with the high price of drugs and my experience as a physician; therefore, I would like to read into the record a few representative letters that I have received from the Canadian public. The first comes from a pharmacy in London, Ontario. It is a copy of a letter that was written to the Honourable Harvie Andre on November 13, and it refers to the brochure entitled "Bill C-22, The Patent Act Amendments" to which I referred in this chamber the other day. The letter reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Andre:

Today I received your "Dear Pharmacist" letter dated Sept 1987 & thirty copies of a Government of Canada publication "Bill C-22 The Patent Act Amendments Better Health Care and Fair Drug Prices. Since the bill is being courageously upheld by the Senate of Canada, I was outraged to see the Government of Canada distributing propaganda to seek public support for its proposals. This is being done at the expense of the public purse! Since many pharmacists such as myself are strongly against the bill, much of your printing will be discarded and never reach its intended audience. The Canadian Pharmaceutical Association (CPHA) has supported your efforts with Bill C-22, much to the displeasure of many of its members. CPHA has always favoured the multinational drug manufacturers, on whose revenues the association depends for advertising in its publications and magazine.

And here may I add, honourable senators, that this PMAC is not an incorporated body, and we often ask ourselves, "Why not?" Can they not afford $350 to become incorporated? The letter continues:

As a second generation pharmacist, I understand how PMAC companies do business. Their methods and actions in Canada are no different today than they were twenty-five years ago, long before compulsory licensing. Generics have saved Canadian consumers millions of dollars, while PMAC companies have charged ridiculously high prices for their new products. Perhaps the current system is not perfect. Without the Senate amendments, your proposed bill is a sell-out. We need firm commitments from PMAC companies in exchange for patent protection.

I would be happy to supply you with hundreds of examples of greed on the part of PMAC companies. My favourite examples are the products of Squibb Canada. Every six months this company increases its protected products by amounts ranging from 5 to 25%. Such corporate greed is common in the drug industry today.

The letter then lists the unit prices of Squibb products based on the company's catalogue. For instance, for a drug that lowers hypertension, namely, Capoten, 50 milligrams, in January 1983 it was 47.5 cents; in July 1983 it was 48.8 cents; in January 1985 it was 65.4 cents; and in July 1987 it was 80.7 cents. The letter continues to explain that this is how companies price their products when they have patent protection.

It continues:

Currently no generic equivalents for the above products are available in Ontario for use. Can you imagine the amount of money the government, taxpayers and patients of Canada could save if a generic equivalent were available?

The second letter is from a practising family physician in Belleville, Ontario. He is Dr. Jeffrey J. Whitehead, who wrote to Mr. Andre, as follows:

The following quotation was ascribed to you in your appearance before the Senate banking committee: "I think you can say without fear of contradiction that nobody in Canada goes without drugs for financial considerations." Well, Mr. Andre, I would like to contradict you and I suspect any practising physician in Canada would contradict you if they sat down and put pen to paper.

I agree that most patients are covered by drug plans, that is the very poor, the elderly, and those with well paying jobs. It is the "working poor", those who have poorly paying employment who ironically do not have the protection of drug plans.

At least once a month I have patients who plainly state that they cannot afford to buy a certain medication. Of those who can afford to purchase it, it often causes a significant financial hardship. Let me give you a few specific examples. I recently saw a man in his 40's with a gastric ulcer who could not afford the ranitidine (ulcer medication) he was prescribed by a gastroenterologist. This medication costs roughly $65.00 a month. It was only on direct questioning that he admitted that he did not take the drug because he could not afford it. Partially due to the intermittent medical therapy he has received, the ulcer has not healed. He will probably require a gastrectomy in the next few months. At least that will be covered by OHIP.

The treatment of hypercholesterolemia has become more prevalent as the importance of this risk factor becomes evident. Cholestyramine, the drug of choice at present in Canada, costs $170.00 a month at the 24g/day dose usually required. I have one patient who simply cannot afford it. The answer for him will be a premature death from atherosclerosis.

The newest antihypertensives such as the ACE inhibitors and the calcium channel blockers have few side effects and do not adversely affect lipids. I prescribe them rarely because patients simply cannot afford them unless they have a drug plan.

● (1520)

Please do not take the Canadian Medical Association endorsement of your bill as proof of its beneficial effects on patient care. This is just a further example of how the leaders of organized medicine have supported the position of right wing elements at the expense of their traditional role as patient advocates. They opposed the Canada Health Act which gave every Canadian the right to medical diagnosis and surgical treatment. Now they support a bill which will limit further Canadians' right to medical treatment by means of drug therapy.

In summary, your statement that nobody in Canada goes without drugs for financial considerations could only be made by someone who has never practised medicine. Furthermore, it astounds me that you can be so out of touch with reality on an issue of such importance to so many people's health. Some Canadians are suffering today due to high drug prices. If your bill goes through their lot in life will only get worse. Please reconsider your position.

I shall not read any of the other letters I received from such groups as the National Federation of Nurses or the pharmacists, to which I referred in my previous interventions, which have condemned Bill C-22. However, I also bring to your attention the terrible misuse of ministerial power in the printing and distribution of this blue pamphlet entitled "Bill C-22 The Patent Act Amendments", for which the government was criticized in this chamber not only by me but also by Senators Sinclair, MacEachen, Argue and others. I just cannot see how a government who promised during the federal election campaign to be honest and caring could bring out such information before the legislation has been passed by both houses of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I do not want to prolong the debate on this bill, but let me state again that Bill C-22 is flawed legislation. It is unfair and, indeed, it is unjust. It is unworthy of a government that promised to the electorate that it would be caring and that it would bring in a just society. Furthermore, what will we do later today when we come to the crucial moment in dealing with Bill C-22, which can only be described as a dark blot on the already sad record of this government? I do not know how anybody in this chamber who is caring or how anybody in this chamber who is courageous could support Bill C-22.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I had not intended to say anything about this bill. However, I do want to say a few words to compliment and to thank Senator Sinclair for the excellent job he did in chairing the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee in its study and report on the message from the other place and on the motion of Senator Murray.

I would like to set the record straight on one thing. Senator Roblin has suggested that we cast aside the recommendations made by the special committee that travelled from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Victoria, British Columbia, to hear the concerns of the Canadian people when the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee introduced its second group of recommendations. In case some of you might have forgotten, I would like to read to you what the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee said in its report of October 21 at page 2022 of the Debates of the Senate:

The House of Commons, in its Message to the Senate, declined to concur in most of the Senate's amendments to Bill C-22. In doing so it rejected the approach to intellectual property protection in the pharmaceutical industry and compulsory licensing proposed by the Senate. It also rejected the measures favoured by the Senate to promote greater research and development, to protect the consumer, and to foster better health care

Further on on the same page the report says:

Bill C-22(S)—

That is, the Senate motions.

—is designed to protect intellectual property primarily through the payment of royalties by licensees to patenttees. It recognizes that the 4 per cent royalty now paid by licensees is inadequate and consequently provides for an increase to 14 per cent. It recognizes the importance of guaranteed periods of exclusivity, by providing four years to patentees. This period, according to the Report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry (the "Eastman Report"), is sufficient to allow patentees to establish their products on the market.

This combination of a short guaranteed period of exclusivity and higher royalty payments by licensees constitutes the Senate's preferred view of how intellectual property should be recognized in this industry.

Let me say that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee concurred in and recognized the work of the special committee as having the preferred view, but since the House of Commons did not want to accept that view the committee decided to look for a compromise between the special committee's views and the Commons' views, and they brought forward something that did not disrupt the overall view of the government but that tried to make it a little stronger to protect the Canadian consumer, to protect against unjustified increases in prices, and to protect the industry.

Honourable senators, this may be considered a constitutional matter, but actually it has gone beyond that. It is a matter that will take $2.5 billion out of the economy of Canada. That $2.5 billion will go to multinational drug companies throughout the world. Of those companies 85 per cent are in the United States of America and about 15 per cent in countries such as Japan and the United Kingdom. If you take $2.5 billion over the next ten years out of our economy it will cost our economy 9,000 jobs. I know that we have been promised 3,000 jobs. However, even if we get the 3,000 jobs, we will have lost 6,000 jobs. Perhaps the 6,000 jobs we will lose will not be those of university professors or researchers, but they could be in car manufacturing. It could be people working on the wharves, people in the fishing industry, or people in the farming industry. You cannot take $2.5 billion out of Canada's economy and not lose 9,000 jobs.

• (1530)

We certainly have been promised money for research and development. Everyone in Canada is in favour of research and development. Everyone in the Senate, I am quite sure, is in favour of research and development, but let us not put all of the cost of research and development on the backs of the sick, the infirm, the aged or the crippled. Let us put some of it on the backs of the banks, the big corporations, the rich, the working people, the doctors. We certainly need research and development, but perhaps we should let the government put more money towards it and then direct that research to where it will do some good for Canada.

Therefore, honourable senators, while we need more jobs and we need more research, there are ways of acquiring these things without destroying our economy, and there are ways of doing it without doing it on the backs of the aged, the sick and the infirm.

Honourable senators, I have been in the political field now since 1951. During that time I have watched the build-up of Old Age Security, Family Allowance, Unemployment Insurance, veterans legislation, hospitalization and medicare—all the good social legislation that tries to equalize the "have nots" with the "haves" and give us all an equal chance to survive in this great country. Therefore, I hate to see any government, regardless of political stripe, try to destroy that great social network that we have built up over the years, which protects those people who do not have the advantage of salaries of $50,000 a year or more and who have no security in their jobs. There are people in this country who do not have the advantages that some of us here in this chamber enjoy.

Therefore, honourable senators, we should keep in mind those disadvantaged people who will have to pay a larger premium for their Blue Cross and those have-not provinces who will have to pay more for their social programs for the aged, for hospitalization, et cetera. After hearing those concerns expressed across this country I am afraid that I cannot support this legislation.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it appears that the situation has ripened to the point where we can expect to take a decision on Bill C-22 very soon. However, before that point comes, I would like to make a few comments about the situation as it presently exists. Last month, honourable senators, we proposed to the House of Commons some amendments to Bill C-22 which we believed were reasonable and in complete conformity with the government's own assurances to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has frequently told Canadians in every part of the country that the Drug Prices Review Board would keep price increases on pharmaceutical drugs at less than the cost of living. In fact, in the House of Commons as recently as August 21 the minister said that:

Bill C-22 . . . provides that drugs will not increase more than the cost of living.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce took the minister at his word and recommended that the bill be amended to provide that the prices of drugs would not increase more than the Consumer Price Index—hardly a fundamental restructuring of the bill. The committee was merely legislating the commitment made by the minister. That was the first amendment.

The minister, Mr. Andre, also told Canadians that he had a promise from the brand name pharmaceutical companies that research and development expenditures would increase substantially. In fact, he told the House of Commons, on that same day in August of this year, that:

We have a commitment for 10 per cent of sales to go into research and development.

What the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce did was to cover that point in the form of an amendment, totally in accordance with the commitment—or, at least, the principle of the commitment made by the minister.

The third major recommendation made by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee and accepted by the Senate deals with retroactivity. When the minister appeared before the House of Commons Legislative Committee on Bill C-22 he stated:

This Bill does not affect any of the drugs currently on the market . . . .

And further:

The only possible impact this bill could have is on a drug not yet discovered or not yet marketed.

Honourable senators, my understanding is that the amendment put forward by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, approved by the Senate and sent to the House of Commons, did precisely what Mr. Andre, himself, advocated.

We now know what happened. I was certainly amazed to read in the message that we received on Tuesday that the last two amendments were "in contradiction to the fundamental principles of the bill and undermine the objectives of the policy." The Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee makes a careful effort to place into law the commitments made by the minister himself, only to find that the minister claims that we have undermined the objectives of the policy and proposed something that is in contradiction to the fundamental principles of the bill. One wonders whether anyone is reading or following what is happening in the Senate, and whether the person who prepared the message had understood the amendments which were put forward by the Senate.

It was not surprising that when the minister brought forward his motion in the House of Commons he asked for leave to have it introduced and taken as read. Of course, that leave was not granted, and he then raced through his motion with great haste, saving himself the necessity of having to consider why amendments, which mirrored his own words, were in contradiction to the fundamental principles of the bill and undermined the objectives of the policy. I am surprised he did not choke on those words which he read to the House of Commons.

● (1540)

Honourable senators, I do not intend to dwell on the role of the Senate or its constitutional foundation, but it is a fact that the Senate is a legislative body which exists in a federal state and, as has been pointed out earlier in the debate, it has always taken regional concerns to heart. This was a key part of the Senate's mandate at the time of its creation, and is a role that still dominates the thinking of all senators. The role has been confirmed by the Meech Lake Accord in the sense that now, as we have been discussing in the Committee of the Whole, senators are to be nominated by provincial premiers, even underlining more forcibly the regional basis of senatorial representation.

That gives me an opportunity to refer to the contradictory logic of the rather patronizing intervention made by Senator Molson; patronizing not only to those senators who are unfortunate enough to have political convictions and sit as declared representatives of a political party; patronizing to the House of Commons in his comment that any attitude carried from the House of Commons might be alien to a civilized body like the Senate; patronizing to the work of both committees—the chairman who has just spoken, Senator Bonnell, and the chairman who spoke earlier, Senator Sinclair—which have very carefully studied Bill C-22. All that work was trivial and beneath the notice of a cross-bencher.

If I know anything about the work of the true cross-benchers in the British House of Lords, they would find Senator Molson's views on the role of the second chamber quaintly outdated.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Senator Molson has told us that he is voting in support of this bill, because his province, Quebec, is in favour of the bill and therefore, as a regional representative, he has to support the bill. He challenges others from his province to do likewise and to follow the noble example set by a person unencumbered by political convictions. Is Senator Molson aware that of the six provincial governments and the one territory which made representations to the committees all opposed the bill except Saskatchewan, which gave only conditional support?

Senator Barootes: Good for them.

Senator MacEachen: Not a single province or territory appeared before the committee to testify in support of the government's initiative. So, if we were to accept the admonitions of Senator Molson and vote on regional lines this bill would be defeated today. It would be defeated. That, of course, would counter another principle which I thought was enunciated by Senator Molson, namely, that we ought not to challenge the views of the House of Commons, that that was somehow unbecoming behaviour. He cannot have it both ways.

If we are to be true regional representatives, and if at a certain point we feel regional interests are at stake, then we have to stand up and defeat a bill which has regional implications. That, of course, would cause a flurry amongst those who have argued not only today but in earlier days that the role of the Senate is a purely advisory role.

I must say that I was impressed with the evolution in Senator Roblin's thinking today.

Senator Perrault: Where is he?

Senator MacEachen: On the occasion that he dealt with the borrowing bill Senator Roblin was very anxious about the possibility that the Senate would delay the bill for a few days. We were speaking of a few days, when you look at what happened in the case of the borrowing bill. Senator Roblin cautioned us that "ours is an advisory role and an advisory role only."

I argued at the time that the Senate was more than an advisory body; it was a legislative body, and that that legislative function empowered the Senate to, at least, make amendments and send them back to the House of Commons. Indeed, so anxious—timid, I think is the correct word—were supporters of the government on that historic occasion when we dealt with the borrowing bill that, when Senator Roblin moved that the Finance Committee report the bill later that day, the Whip on the other side, Senator Phillips, told us prior to the vote that the vote on that procedural motion to bring the borrowing bill out of the committee "... will decide not only the future of the Senate but also the future reputation of the Liberal party." That was February 20, 1985.

[Senator MacEachen.]

No one would make those comments today, because the Senate has changed. As even Senator Molson has admitted, it has wakened up and it is active. It is becoming more authentically a legislative body. Indeed, the Senate on this occasion has had the nerve to send over not one set of major amendments but two sets of major amendments to the House of Commons. That must have shaken the Leader of the Government in the Senate, because in the summer of 1986, when we had the temerity, as a legislative body, to send an amendment over to the House of Commons on the parole bill, the Leader of the Government urged us to be careful and not to amend bills. He stated:

We have not proceeded by way of bringing in important amendments to government bills from the House of Commons... we have relied on quiet diplomacy and on persuasion.

● (1550)

All that is in the past. The Senate has flexed its legislative muscles. It has decided to become a true legislative body and to deal with legislation in a serious way. It has succeeded in having its views considered twice by the House of Commons and in alerting the nation to the contents of Bill C-22, because every citizen—maybe it is an exaggeration to say that—but many citizens now know the implications and the content of Bill C-22. Certainly, in my experience, I have never been encountered so frequently in airports, on the street and here and there by citizens who have raised the question of Bill C-22. They understand it and do not have the same warm feelings for it that have been expressed by Senator Molson.

So the Senate has made a positive contribution. I have not been in the Senate long enough to have a view! Of course, I have not been inducted into the traditions of the Senate—

An Hon. Senator: No.

Senator MacEachen: —and therefore I would not rely on my own judgment to determine whether the Senate has risen in the estimation of the people of Canada through its actions on Bill C-22.

I wish to refer to one commentator, whose name I use merely because he has been somewhat critical of the Senate in the past—at least, as I recollect—and that is Don McGillivray of the Ottawa Citizen. This is what he has said about Bill C-22:

The gains for the Senate at this point are impressive. It has established new credentials as a champion of ordinary Canadians. It has gained experience in tactics and strategy, which may be applied in future to the Meech Lake accord and free trade.

It has established itself as a working part of the Canadian constitution and given some strong hints of how a reformed, elected Senate would operate.

I am pleased that, quite apart from what one may think about the substance of the bill, the Senate has moved ahead, as the author says, as "a working part of the Canadian Constitution."

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: We have made it clear on this side of the house that we do not think much of the bill. In fact, we think little of it. As Senator Haidasz summed up our view in a concise way: "Anyone with compassion and courage could not support this bill." We certainly do not intend to support it; I certainly do not.

If all of the senators decided today to defeat this bill, regardless of the views of Senator Roblin, I think their decision would be widely applauded by the Canadian people.

I will quote a recent poll—and I am not good at analyzing polls; others have made it a career. I am told by those who are much more knowledgeable that the poll is reasonably reliable and is put out by a reliable research agency. It puts this question to the Canadian people: The Senate should do what the government wants and pass Bill C-22 without amendments. Only 18 per cent of the respondents say, "Yes, pass the bill without amendments." The next question put is: Should the Senate defeat Bill C-22 unless it includes amendments that guarantee benefits for Canada?

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator MacEachen: I think that is a reasonable question, and 81 per cent responded in the affirmative. There is a further question that supports quite consistently the view that the Canadian people generally do not like this bill.

If I were relying only on polls I would be somewhat hesitant in saying that the Canadian people do not like the bill. But that judgment is supported by the volume of mail that has come to my desk and to the desks of many senators, thanking us for what we have done on Bill C-22, and in some cases asking us to kill the bill. It is supported by the personal contact that I have had with citizens whom I meet, as we all do, in the daily course of life. I merely make the point that if we on this side stood and defeated the bill I think we would get a resounding clap from the Canadian people.

We do not intend to defeat the bill today. We have, however, been encouraged by the support we have received from Canadians in our fight to improve Bill C-22. They have cheered us on every step of the way. At the end of the proceedings they will now ask, "Why have you not taken the final step of defeating Bill C-22 and thereby save the country from its damaging effects?"

I think that question deserves an answer. Certainly, defeating the bill today or now would give direct expression to our intense opposition to Bill C-22. However, defeating the bill would relieve the government of its commitments, which it steadfastly refused to put into legislation, to provide additional jobs, investment and research, and to safeguard the population from the harm arising from future increases in drug prices. These are the burdens of the government. The defeat of the bill today could become a victory for the government. Its energies would then be devoted to fanning the flames of regional grievances. It would blame the Senate for denying the people the alleged benefits of Bill C-22. In these circumstances, and in our system, it is much more appropriate that the government take the responsibility for the impact of the legislation rather than that the Senate should do so.

• (1600)

We might—certainly, I might—take a different attitude if relief from the ill effects of this bill could not be secured in another way. We all know that the mandate of this government is stale. The government is in the fourth year of office; its popularity is low; and there is every prospect that a new government will be in office in a new Parliament. Then relief will be secured.

The Senate, honourable senators, has assisted greatly in sensitizing the public to the evils of this bill and the intransigence of the government in pushing ahead with it and refusing all reasonable improvements. The Senate has done that job. The same public which has been sensitized by the work of the Senate will have an opportunity in the next election to make a judgment as to whether it wishes to keep in office a government which has made the enactment of Bill C-22 one of its principal priorities. Perhaps we ought not to deprive them of the opportunity to make that judgment.

In this body we have done everything within our means to secure the needed improvements. Twice we have sent amendments forward to the House of Commons. On the second occasion we departed from our preferred amendments and proposed a set of changes with more limited impact, but which, if accepted, would have put into the law commitments already made by the government and which would have provided needed assurances to a worried citizenry. The second and more limited amendments were an effort at compromise. We know the outcome. The government, supported by its majority, refused to accept those amendments. It remained adamant in its stubborn desire to implement unpopular and bad legislation.

The Conservative majority in the House of Commons, despite our efforts in the Senate, despite the efforts of the opposition parties in the House of Commons in admonishing the government, in amending the law, has time and time again affirmed, reaffirmed and confirmed this particular bill, sought more by President Reagan, the Mulroney government and the multinational pharmaceutical lobby than by the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Time and time again the Conservative members of the House of Commons have refused to listen. They must now take responsibility for their conduct. I think it is time for the Conservative government and the Conservative members to be saddled entirely with the results of their own mistakes and to be allowed to face this issue in the next election.

[Senator MacEachen.]

As far as I am concerned, our duty has been done. To go further would deprive the Canadian people, themselves, of rendering the absolute veto.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Murray speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion.

Senator Murray: —it is late in the day. It is, to employ the phrase of the Right Honourable John Turner, “the end of the day.”

My honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, is in fine form, and I greatly enjoyed his speech. It is rather an unfinished symphony, however, because he did not state precisely what his own intentions were with regard to this bill. He has indicated quite clearly that he does not support the bill. He has also indicated that for his part, or on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, they had done as much as could be done and that they would not defeat the bill. I obviously do not quarrel with that decision, if it is a decision.

We on our side will do our part by being rather more pro-active in voting to pass the bill.

That being the case, honourable senators, it remains only for me to thank the honourable senators who have participated today in the debate on my motion.

Let the matter now come to a vote.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

That the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 13(a), (b), (c) and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and 16(a);

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b) and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a); and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say “yea”?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say “nay”?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the “yeas” have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

• (1620)

Motion agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Asselin	Macquarrie
Atkins	Marshall
Balfour	Molson
Barootes	Murray
Bélisle	Nurgitz
Bielish	Phillips
Cochrane	Roblin
Cogger	Rossiter
David	Sherwood
Doody	Simard
Doyle	Spivak
Flynn	Tremblay
Kelly	Walker—27.
MacDonald
(Halifax)

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Everett	Lang—3.
Haidasz

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Lefebvre
Anderson	Le Moynes
Austin	MacEachen
Bonnell	Marsden
Bosa	McElman
Cools	Molgat
Corbin	Neiman
Cottreau	Perrault
Davey	Petten
Denis	Riel
Fairbairn	Rizzuto
Frith	Rousseau
Gigantès	Sinclair
Hébert	Stewart
Kenny	(Antigonish-
Leblanc	Guysborough)
(Saurel)	Stollery—32.
LeBlanc
(Beauséjour)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to put on the record that the reason for the abstention of my colleagues and myself on this vote has been fully explained in the comments that I made earlier to the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

RIDEAU HALL
Ottawa

THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

19 November 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 19th day of November, 1987, at 5.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Leopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

● (1630)

SUPREME COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, since Royal Assent is scheduled for later this afternoon, I wonder if you would grant leave to bring forward Bill C-53, an act to amend the Supreme Court Act and various acts in consequence thereof, the report on which was tabled earlier today. At that time we moved that third reading be given at the next sitting of the Senate. It would seem, perhaps, tidy to have third reading on that bill now and give it Royal Assent this afternoon as well.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the only reason we did not agree to give it third reading earlier is that Royal Assent was not anticipated at the time, so we followed the usual procedure of giving one day's notice unless Royal Assent is provided for. So, since Royal Assent is now available, why not?

Senator Doody: Then, with leave, may we have third reading now?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the day before yesterday I had promised Senator Argue that I would be speaking to his motion yesterday, but the sitting lasted until 6.20 p.m. Even today I hesitate to keep you here longer, but I do not have much to say and this will take a few minutes at most.

I think the proposition of Senator Argue is very interesting, but its scope and possible difficulty have me deeply concerned.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Which item of the order paper are we dealing with now?

Senator Flynn: On the motion of Senator Argue to establish a special Senate committee to examine all health problems in Canada.

[Senator Frith.]

The speech made by Senator David indicated the wide scope of this study and the possible difficulties. I simply wish to suggest that the Senate obtain further information on this issue before voting on it. If it is convenient, I shall move, seconded by Senator Roblin:

That this motion be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology with instructions to review the following matters and to report thereon to the Senate:

(a) To establish the general program called for in the terms of reference of the special committee.

The wording of the motion is very vague, so we could certainly get more information.

(b) In relation to this program, to provide an opinion on the relative ability to implement this program compared to that of a Royal Commission.

This program seems to me extremely vast, based on the comments made by Senator David. And finally, I shall read the last paragraph of this motion:

(c) To provide an estimate of the costs and the duration of the committee's study.

I shall not insist if the Senate does not agree to this motion. I shall not be too crestfallen as this is only a suggestion. If the Senate agrees, however, I believe that all senators, except for Senator Argue, who is perhaps surer in his own mind, would find it useful to have a report of the standing committee about what the terms of reference which have been proposed for this special committee really entail.

Senator Frith: Unfortunately, I did not quite understand. Is it proposed that the motion be referred to a committee?

Senator Flynn: The purpose is to refer the motion to the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology with instructions to review the contents of the motion and to report on the extent of the program, the ability of the special committee to carry out this work and an estimate of the costs and the duration of this study.

Senator Frith: I understand the purpose of the motion, but unfortunately, I did not quite follow the procedure. Is this a separate motion or—

Senator Flynn: The purpose is to refer the motion to the standing committee.

Senator Frith: The motion as such?

Senator Flynn: The motion itself.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: You can adjourn the debate, Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before the question is put, I shall adjourn the debate on the motion of Senator Flynn.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Inquiries:

Hon Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I do not wish to take undue advantage of your time this afternoon. However, I have noticed that some of the inquiries standing under the names of various honourable senators have been on the order paper for some time, one of them well over a year. Inquiry No. 1, standing in the name of the Honourable Senator De Bané, P.C., "That he will call the attention of the Senate to the need for the Federal Government," and so on and so forth, has been on the order paper since November 5, 1986. I do not know what the object is in leaving a notice of inquiry on the order paper undebated. It could well be that the intention is to keep honourable senators in a state of indefinite suspense. However, it seems to me that unless there are serious reasons for doing so it is unacceptable for an honourable senator to give notice of his intention to make a speech or an intervention on a given subject and then not to proceed with it at the earliest opportunity. Further, it seems to me that a year is more than generous.

I see Senator Marshall looking at me with a rather inquisitive look. I certainly do not intend to attack his integrity by raising this point of order at this time, because he is a very active senator and has brought forth a number of topics that are indeed crucial and fundamental matters.

In the same vein, I can say that regional development is also a fundamental matter inasmuch as the general location of this chamber is concerned, but to give notice of a topic and then, for reasons unknown to me, not to proceed with it, and to let the matter stand indefinitely, I think borders on abuse of the goodwill and cooperation among senators.

I wonder whether we should have the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders look into the possibility of bringing forward a solution to this problem. I hate regulations as much as anyone else. I do not like to be regimented into situations. However, on the other hand, I do not like to have my goodwill abused. Therefore, perhaps the Rules Committee should look into the possibility of allowing these notices of inquiry to stand on the order paper for a reasonable, given period. It could be three months or it could be four months, but not have them stay indefinitely on the order paper. After all, it costs the taxpayer a great deal of money to print the texts of notices of inquiry in the order paper.

Therefore, I think we ought to adopt a reasonable attitude, but compel senators who give notice of an inquiry to proceed with that inquiry expediently, within a reasonable period of time, otherwise, those inquiries will be removed from the order paper.

Honourable senators, those are my views on this matter. I think it is rather silly to have these matters read into the record at sitting after sitting and to have no one address the questions that have been raised. In my view, it is an abuse.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As honourable senators know, the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders is entitled to take notice of a matter such as this without motion. Frequently, when someone raises a matter of this kind in the Senate, that committee does take notice of it and deals with it of its own motion, and I think that that procedure should be followed in this case.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: We should probably adopt a procedure like the one used in the courts to strike cases from the roll.

Senator Frith: Exactly.

Senator Corbin: May I ask Senator Flynn, referring to the particular example he just gave, how long it takes for cases to be struck off the roll?

Senator Flynn: There is no set time limit, but perhaps we could have one for our purposes.

Senator Corbin: In the specific example you mentioned, is this left to the discretion of a judge or a committee of judges?

Senator Flynn: It is entirely at the discretion of one of the judges, Senator Corbin.

Senator Corbin: Thank you, Senator Flynn.

[English]

Senator Frith: In English the expression is "purging the list."

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, December 1, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.35 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto (Bill C-22, Chapter 41, 1987)

An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-53, Chapter 42, 1987)

An Act to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act (Bill S-10)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

---

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 1, 1987, at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 1, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-90, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

[Translation]

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CONSULTATION PAPER ON TRAINING AND DOCUMENT ENTITLED "EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: PREPARING CANADIANS FOR A BETTER FUTURE" TABLED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the ninth report of the Senate Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology on the consultation paper on training and the document entitled: "Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians for a Better Future".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Tremblay, for Senator Gigantès, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

TAX REFORM 1987

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to table its twentieth report, respecting tax reform in Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Sinclair, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at 4 o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesdays for the balance of the present session even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

STATUS OF FRENCH IN ALBERTA—STATUS OF FRENCH IN PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

Hon. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and I simply want to ask whether he is indeed the minister responsible for Federal-Provincial Relations.

Hon. Senators: He doesn't know.

Senator Thériault: Are you the minister responsible for Federal-Provincial Relations?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I think it is unfortunate that my honourable friend doesn't seem to realize I am still Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I had the impression he was, but I simply wanted to confirm his position before asking my main question.

As a French Canadian not from Quebec, I am saddened, as are many of my fellow citizens, to see what is happening in the province of Alberta, and I would like to ask him about two items.

The first item concerns the legislature's decision to allow a French-speaking member to ask questions in his mother tongue, but only with its specific permission. I realize this is a provincial matter.

Second, the matter of a person in Quebec who was not allowed to go to court—a matter which, according to my information, is not necessarily under provincial jurisdiction—and especially the fact that the federal government was a party to this decision.

So I simply want to ask the minister whether, as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, he has discussed these problems with the Government or the Premier of Alberta.

Senator Murray: If I understood the senator's questions correctly, he also referred to a trial in Quebec.

Senator Thériault: No, I did not.

Senator Murray: You did not?

Senator Thériault: I said, as a French-Canadian not from Quebec, that my fellow citizens were concerned about what they were reading in the press and what was happening in Alberta regarding two specific matters. I want to ask the minister whether he has been in touch with the Government or the Premier of Alberta about these important matters.

Senator Murray: There are two questions. One concerns a trial in Alberta, and I am not familiar with any of the details. Second, there is the matter of Mr. Piquette and his right or desire to express himself in French in the Alberta Legislature. The only answer I can give my honourable friend is that I did not discuss the matter with the Government of Alberta.

Senator Thériault: Well, Mr. Minister, since you say you did not discuss this item, did you discuss the other one, the matter of the trial in French of another Francophone in Alberta?

Senator Murray: I am sorry, but I am not at all familiar with the details of this case. I will make enquiries and report back to the Senate in due time.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, could the minister tell us how many other francophones in Canada's legislatures may be in the same situation as Mr. Piquette in Alberta at the present time?

Senator Murray: As far as I know, honourable senators, there is no similar case.

Senator Thériault: Could there be a similar case?

Senator Murray: That is purely hypothetical.

Senator Thériault: It is not purely hypothetical. Could the minister, in the course of federal-provincial conferences or in his capacity as Minister of State responsible for Federal-Provincial Affairs, find out the status of the French language in all legislatures in Canada?

Senator Murray: My friend must realize that our Constitution gives us the right to use either English or French in the Parliament of Canada and in the New Brunswick Legislature.

Senator Thériault: Only there.

Senator Murray: Only there. It seems to me that in Ontario . . . excuse me, of course in Quebec, under the Constitution the same right applies to the Quebec National Assembly. But it seems to me that in Ontario and perhaps in one or two other provinces, the French-speaking members use their mother tongue.

[Senator Thériault.]

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary.

Could the minister inform the Senate whether these problems were discussed during the talks leading up to the Meech Lake Accord?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, language rights across this country and in our various provincial legislatures were discussed in Victoria in 1971, during the constitutional exercise in 1980-81-82 and during the Meech Lake and Langevin talks. The answer is: Yes.

Senator Thériault: Is the minister telling us that the situation will not change even if the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord finally becomes the law of the land?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Meech Lake Accord has not changed existing constitutional provisions with respect to language rights.

• (1410)

[English]

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I hope that English-speaking Canadians will take notice that if this situation is going to remain static, the Government of Quebec may eventually seek an amendment to the Constitution, because only one language will be allowed in Quebec.

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RESTORATION OF SOREL-NICOLET BRANCH LINE

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The region I represent, the city of Sorel and the vicinity, has launched a campaign directed at federal authorities and CN management. A number of organizations have asked for my support concerning a problem related to the railways. To give you an idea of the exact nature of the problem, I quote a resolution adopted by the Société nationale des Québécois du Richelieu:

Whereas the Sorel subdivision railway line goes through the centre of existing and future industrial sites, it has been proposed . . . and unanimously resolved that Canadian National Railways and the federal government be asked to work jointly so that the investments required for the restoration of the Sorel-Nicolet branch line be made, and that rail traffic on that line be reorganized so as to draw maximum benefit from this line, a project which would make our industrial sites much more prosperous because of this direct link between Bécancour and Tracy Contrecoeur, and which therefore would create many more jobs for the future of our region.

I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to enquire as to progress made concerning the needs of this section and report at the earliest opportunity.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will direct my enquiry to my colleague the Minister of Transport, Mr. John Crosbie, and report later this week or perhaps next week.

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): Thank you.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DATE OF RELEASE OF FINAL TEXT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is whether it was possible at the Toronto meeting of the First Ministers for the Government of Canada to indicate a firm date for the release of the final text of the trade agreement with the United States.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, it was not, honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: Is there any time period anticipated? Is it a month or two months away, or is it a week away?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I had hoped to inform myself on this matter before coming in this afternoon, but I was not able to do so. I trust and continue to believe that it is a matter of days, not weeks.

FORMER PRIME MINISTERS

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE JOHN GEORGE DIEFENBAKER—PRESERVATION OF BIRTHPLACE
THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE R.B. BENNETT—ERECTION OF COMMEMORATIVE STATUE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the leader of the Senate in the government which is prompted by a report that was in the Canadian Press and in other sources that the birthplace of the Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker, distinguished former Prime Minister, is very much in danger of being obliterated.

Considering that we lost the magnificent home of Sir Robert Borden in Ottawa a few years ago, and other important historic recollections and reminiscences of our great leaders, can he tell me if there is any avenue, vehicle or organization in the Government of Canada which may be helpful in forestalling this outrageous act of "anti-historicism", if I may put it that way?

At the same time, can he assure me that there will be some agency in the government which will prompt, promote and accelerate the honouring of another of our great Prime Ministers, the Right Honourable R.B. Bennett, with a statue erected to his memory on Parliament Hill, considering that he, of all Prime Ministers, had the most difficult time—even beyond those who ran this country through World War I and World War II.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall certainly inquire to see what, if anything, can be done by the Government of Canada to prevent the disappearance from the landscape of Mr. Diefenbaker's birthplace.

I note that Mr. Hnatyshyn and Miss MacDonald announced quite recently considerable assistance on the part of the Government of Canada to the Diefenbaker Museum at the University of Saskatchewan, and I am pleased that the government was able to do that. I will look into this question as well as into the matter of the statue of the Right Honourable R.B. Bennett.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE OF CONTRAS AS REFUGEES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have one other question which deals with the statements alleged to have been made by Mr. Clark during his visit to Central America.

Is it true that the government would now consider, as was reported to have been said by Mr. Clark, accepting Contras as refugees in Canada?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my information is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was making a highly hypothetical reference to the possibility of accepting so-called Contras as refugees. The Senate will be aware that Canada has an active refugee program in Central America designed to help victims of the conflict there, regardless of their political affiliation.

● (1420)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am not quite clear as to which part of the situation is hypothetical—the statement, the existence of the Contras, or the possibility that Canada will accept them.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what is hypothetical about it is that Mr. Clark, in replying to the questions—I believe at a news conference or in a news scrum—stressed that he was not making any commitment on this matter.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to four questions. I will read the answers if any honourable senator wishes me to do so; otherwise, I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM—REQUEST FOR CONCLUSIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough) on October 28, regarding Post-Secondary Education—National Forum—Request for Conclusions.

(The answer follows:)

The Secretary of State reports that the members of the Conference Secretariat, in cooperation with the three theme secretaries, are now reviewing the reports produced at the workshops. From this material a number of documents will be prepared in both traditional printed and various electronic forms. The main report should be available by the middle of December and will be tabled in both the Senate and the House of Commons.

STATISTICS CANADA

RESTORATION OF FUNDING FOR CENSUS PUBLIC-USE SAMPLE TAPE—EFFECT ON CANADIAN STUDENTS OF NECESSITY TO USE U.S. DATA

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Marsden on October 28, regarding Statistics Canada—Restoration of Funding for Census Public-use Sample Tape—Effect on Canadian Students of Necessity to use U.S. Data.

(The answer follows:)

Results of the 1986 Census are being made available in a variety of ways. The primary source of census information will be approximately 200 publications containing census results for all regions of Canada. These publications will be readily available to students, and more generally the Canadian public, as they will be provided free to all depository libraries across the country. The census publications will provide students with a wealth of up-to-date information on Canadian society. Census data will also be provided in the form of more specialized electronic products. However, in keeping with the government's commitment to reduce expenditures, Statistics Canada has developed and implemented a cost recovery policy to ensure that the general taxpayer does not bear the burden of the cost of supplying specialized output and products for the benefit of specific individual firms or institutions. Thus Statistics Canada is passing on the costs of preparing, storing and delivering electronic products. The government recognizes that more specialized products, including Public Use Sample Tapes, are of value to Canadian students and researchers. The Minister responsible for Statistics Canada therefore has instructed his officials to work with representatives from the academic community to seek ways of producing the Public Use Sample Tapes within the budget constraints facing the government. The move to a modest level of cost recovery, along with other cost saving measures, allowed Statistics Canada to carry out a comprehensive census in 1986. As a result, Canadian data users, including students, will have access to much more up-to-date data than users in the U.S. and most other countries where censuses are carried out only at ten-year intervals.

[Senator Doody.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LONDON, ONTARIO LAYOFFS—JOB GUARANTEES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on November 4, a question was asked by Senator Turner regarding Canadian National Railways—London, Ontario Layoffs—Job Guarantees.

(The answer follows:)

A copy of the terms of reference for the Price Waterhouse survey of drugs and alcohol in the railway industry is available through the Leader's office.

It should be noted that this survey was aimed at railway operating personnel holding positions designated under the CTC's General Order 0-9. This General Order does not cover officials of CN or the Minister of Transport.

With respect to the senator's question concerning CN layoffs in London, the Minister of Transport advises that:

A study of the workload associated with accounting activities at London and at Great Lakes Region headquarters in Toronto was conducted. The study showed there is considerable duplication of work, and that significant economies and productivity improvements can be realized through consolidation of the two accounting centres at Toronto. CN management thoroughly considered the option of consolidating the accounting centres at London; however, this option would be costly and inefficient.

Of the 44 positions to be eliminated at London, 36 are unionized positions and eight are supervisory. A total of 23 new unionized positions will be created as a result of the transfer of workload—20 in Toronto and three in Montreal. In addition, the eight supervisory positions will be transferred to Toronto.

Each affected employee at London will decide over the next several weeks which course of action to pursue: to relocate to Toronto or Montreal; to exercise his or her seniority on another position at London or elsewhere; or, in the case of those eligible to retire, decide to take an early retirement package.

The proper course of action followed by CN management, upon reaching a determination that organizational or operational changes are necessary, is to provide the appropriate elected officials with the rationale supporting the decision.

As much advance notice as possible is given, usually at least three months before the changes are scheduled to take place. CN is obligated to notify its unions and employees as far in advance as possible, and in most cases the communication to elected officials takes place simultaneously. CN believes that it has indeed kept city officials informed of any planned changes in its work force in London as promised. However, it would be unreasonable to expect CN to consult all involved parties prior to making operational decisions designed to improve productivity and reduce operating costs.

The primary objective of CN is to provide efficient and effective transportation service to Canadian industries at prices enabling them to compete in domestic and international markets, while remaining financially viable itself. Therefore, it is imperative that CN seize every opportunity to improve its own efficiency and reduce costs.

CN officers met on November 16, 1987 with elected officials in London to discuss the accounting activities and other matters. It is imperative, however, that the consolidation take place as planned on February 1, 1988 so that CN can begin to realize the economic benefits which will enhance CN's attempts to serve as a transportation company.

In addition, Transport Canada officials advise that they are unaware of the program established by the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin to which Senator Turner referred in his question. If the senator would care to provide more information the minister would be pleased to pursue the question.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS FOR 1987 CROP YEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on November 4 a question was asked by Senator Olson regarding Agriculture—Deficiency Payments to Western Grain Farmers for 1987 Crop Year—Government Action—Request for Answer.

(The answer follows:)

The federal government's major goal is to resolve export subsidy and surplus-related problems at the international level through the continuing GATT negotiations, other bilateral trade negotiations and economic summits. In the meantime, the government will continue to work with farm leaders and our provincial counterparts to design short-term assistance measures which will soften the impact of the trade subsidy war.

It is the federal government's position that any future support program should be as production and market neutral as possible. This means that the government does not want to see producers growing crops, or not growing crops, in order to collect assistance payments.

A proposal was put forward by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture on behalf of its National Council when Mr. Wise met with them and other farm leaders in Winnipeg on August 27. This proposal, along with other options, has undergone extensive analysis and consideration over the past three months to ensure that any further assistance program will be fair to all regions and commodities and as well be administratively feasible. Discussions are currently under way to explore a number of options to assist the farm sector. An announcement cannot be forthcoming until these deliberations are completed.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of the Bill C-254, An Act to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence).—(Honourable Senator Macquarrie).

SPEAKER'S STATEMENT

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on November 18 Senator Bosa asked the Chair to rule on the status of Bill C-254. I am informed that there have been discussions concerning this matter, and I now understand that Senator Bosa does not require a ruling. Perhaps I can call on Senator Macquarrie to try to clarify the situation.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have spent a good many years in the other place, and once in a while in this place, hearing discussions about points of order. I have assiduously avoided entering into those, because usually I find they are not very helpful. On this occasion I believe I may have a contribution to make, which is not based upon Beauchesne or Bourinot or any of those lesser or greater authorities.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Bosa!

Senator Macquarrie: Very good alliteration there. It seems to me that the situation is that Senator Bosa proposed Bill S-8, which dealt substantially with the subject matter of Bill C-254, and I respect the honourable senator for that. Presumably I was in the great north on a task force, or somewhere else, and did not hear his contribution; but I admire his internationalism.

So far as my sponsorship of Bill C-254 is concerned—considering all the bills that I have been for or against in 31 years—it really does not matter whether I or someone else sponsors the bill. My only concern is that this very good piece of legislation—namely, Bill C-254—should pass in this chamber as expeditiously and unanimously as it did in the lower chamber—which is not always noted for unanimity or expedition, as senators for 117 years have noted.

It will be fine with me if honourable senators agree that Senator Bosa become the sponsor of this piece of legislation, which I support completely and of which I advocate speedy passage.

While I am on my feet, to use a rather stupid expression heard in Parliament, I must apologize to Senator Corbin. He was right; I did use the word "petition." I should not have done that. I should have said "submission." I am not going to waste the time of the Senate to discuss the difference between a submission and a petition. All I can say, honourable senators, is that it will be totally satisfactory to me if I am allowed to withdraw my sponsorship of this bill—which I still support wholeheartedly, and the early passage of which I am devoted to—and I ask that the Senate substitute for my name the name of Senator Bosa. In that way we might move quickly to give justice and proper recognition to those people this bill is designed to help and to recognize.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Then this order will stand in the name of Senator Bosa.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Macquarrie on his treatment of this matter. I know how close to Senator Bosa's heart this particular bill is and how closely he associated himself with the previous incarnation of what was much the same bill. But can anyone indicate to me when Senator Bosa is going to bring the bill forward? I believe it was put through all three stages in one day in the other place. There is a lot of pressure from outside sources to get this piece of legislation passed. I know that the spouses' organization has been pushing for it, as have other people who are interested in the status of these Canadian citizens-to-be. Have we any indication of the time at which we will deal with the bill?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am not absolutely certain whether the information in my head has come from an earthly source, but I understand that Senator Bosa will be here early next week.

Order stands in name of Senator Bosa.

[Translation]

THE ESTIMATES 1987-88

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

On the Order:

Consideration of the Thirteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Supplementary Estimates (B) 1987-88), presented in the Senate on 17th November, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, on Tuesday, November 17, I tabled the thirteenth report of the Committee on National Finance on Supplementary Estimates (B). This is the second time during the current fiscal year that the government has tabled special supplementary estimates. Basically, the purpose of the first was to meet the special needs of the agricultural sector while these have been made necessary mostly because of the sudden increase in the requirements of the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion. These estimates also include requests for funds for the new Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Western Diversification Office.

For the moment, as Chairman of the Committee on National Finance, I shall restrict my comments to the issues examined by the committee as concerns the request for $347.6 million from the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion to supplement the department's Vote 10.

On August 27, 1987, after Supplementary Estimates (B) had been tabled, the minister then responsible for DRIE tabled two auditors' reports on an $80 million overexpenditure by his department in 1986-87. In other words, the department spent $80 million more than had been appropriated by Parliament for 1986-87.

Overruns at the end of a fiscal year are very common, to such an extent that the Treasury Board has even developed a policy to deal with them. Under this policy, each time that payments are due to be made from insufficient funds and it is too late to ask for additional appropriations, the amount owing must be the first charged against the new year's appropriations. In this case, the $80 million in question did indeed become the first charge against the appropriations for 1987-88.

The authors of the two auditors' reports tabled by the department accused the minister of lack of accuracy in establishing the forecasts and reports of the department. The auditors believe that management has only a vague idea of when the customers of the department can present their invoices and is therefore unable to make accurate forecasts. According to the auditors, it is because the forecasts were inaccurate that the Estimates lacked so much specificity. Finally, because the monthly reports to management were inaccurate, it was absolutely impossible to anticipate this overexpenditure.

The committee does not mention the two audit reports, but it does have the following query: Why wasn't the problem detected before if the overrun was indeed the result of obvious weaknesses in forecasting, budgeting or reporting?

The committee found that during the past five years, the department always ended the financial year with lapsed amounts, and that in each case, the amount lapsed was far greater than the overrun recorded in 1986-87. However, no one seems to have shown any concern. Normally, lapsing of money is the result of sound management practices and the managers concerned would be given credit for this. However, in this particular case, there were other reasons. Senior management at the department and Treasury Board did not see fit to look into the causes of these lapses. They simply decided to authorize voted amounts that were lower than the forecasts.

If anyone had paid any attention to these lapses during the past five years, they would soon have realized that the dam was about to burst. We must remember that the department's programs involved thousands of relatively small clients. Similarly, contracts concluded by this department extend over several years and contain few or no indications regarding the date on which invoices are to be submitted. The department and the central agencies should have realized that this repeated accumulation of lapses would eventually lead to an overrun. And that is exactly what happened last year.

I am sure that if the department's managers had been closer to their clients, the overrun would have been less extensive. Similarly, if senior management had paid more attention to the reports of its program managers, it might have been quicker to anticipate this overrun. In fact, owing to the very nature of the department's programs and the unpredictability of its expenditures, overruns should not be any more surprising than lapses.

Our committee concluded that the government should not worry about annual overruns if they are due to the nature of the program, in other words, when a program covers a large number of clients who sign small contracts with the department which extend over several years and contain no specific date on which invoices are to be sent.

The committee also concluded that the payable at year end policy is designed to deal with these overruns. Finally, the committee felt that while stricter forecasting, budgeting and reporting would have made it possible to reduce these overruns somewhat, senior management at the department and Treasury Board should have realized much sooner that the annual amounts lapsed by the department were far too substantial to be merely the result of sound management practices.

On November 19 I decided to transmit the committee's remarks and comments to the President of the Treasury Board. I hope that together with the department's officials, they will be able to find a solution to the problem that was raised in the department itself.

Since honourable senators will be able to discuss this report when the bill is tabled in the Senate, and provided no other senators intend to speak to the report at this time, as far as I am concerned the debate is closed. Thank you very much.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other senator wishes to speak, the debate on this item will be considered closed.

[English]

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM ENTITLED "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—PUBLIC
RESPONSE TO PETITION—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the response of Canadians to a petition mailed out, calling upon Parliament to urge the government to act on the motion dealing with the production of the NFB film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss".—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I shall take but 30 seconds of your time. I think it worthwhile to report that since I tabled a petition with 14,164 signatures on the Billy Bishop controversy on November 5 signatures have been coming in steadily and that as of Friday, November 27, I have received a further 2,201 signatures in favour of correcting the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". Also, I have been speaking in various parts of the country, and I can say that interest is mounting and that anger is growing. I feel that it is our duty to demand that the National Film Board correct this wrong that has been committed some 70 years after the event.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

● (1440)

WAR VETERANS

BENEFITS LEGISLATION

Hon. Jack Marshall rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, November 17, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the advisability that the Government consider amending the legislation pertaining to the War Veterans Allowances Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act or introduce other equitable legislation which would result in the qualification for war veterans allowances for those members of the Canadian Forces who: (i) volunteered for unrestricted active duty; (ii) served for a period of no less than 365 days; (iii) were assigned to service within the boundaries of Canada; and (iv) are 65 years of age or over.

He said: Honourable senators, this inquiry arises out of a request by the Dominion Command of the Royal Canadian Legion to all parliamentarians—and I think the request is justified—to have qualified those veterans who did not serve overseas through no fault of their own.

To give you a short history of the War Veterans Allowance Act, it was passed in 1930. At that time it was introduced to provide a maintenance allowance for those veterans of World War I with theatre of war experience who could no longer provide for themselves by reason of incapacity or age.

The intended beneficiaries of the legislation were veterans who were 60 years of age or over and who were unemployable.

Owing to changing conditions in the years thereafter the terms of the legislation were gradually broadened to cover veterans of other wars and countries, as well as civilians, dependants and children. Amendments were also introduced regarding service eligibility, age and income factors. Female veterans, for example, qualify for the allowance at age 55. That, in itself, has been overlooked over the years as a basis of contention of equality by those groups seeking women's rights. I say that because a male veteran qualifies at age 60 and a female qualifies at age 55.

But what we now have in the legislation are totally different guidelines from those which were originally envisaged by legislators back in 1930. As a result of a precedent decision taken just a few years ago, the then War Veterans Allowances Board, which is now amalgamated and comprises part of the Veterans Appeal Board, expanded the requirements for service eligibility for war veterans allowances. An interpretation was given to the effect that former members of the Canadian forces were considered to have served in a theatre of actual war if, while on duty, they were transported in ships or aircraft between Canada, Newfoundland, Bermuda or the West Indies during World War II. Subsequently, the same board ruled that those persons who while on duty proceeded by ferry across (i) the Northumberland Straits between P.E.I. and the mainland; or (ii) across the Bay of Fundy between Saint John, New Brunswick and Digby, Nova Scotia, were beyond the territorial waters of Canada, and became eligible on service grounds, because those waters were considered to be a theatre of war.

Added to the list of those who served in Canada only, who also were eligible for benefits under the War Veterans Allowances Act and the Civilian War Veterans Allowances Act, were Canadian Pension Commission disability pensioners in receipt of an assessment of 1 per cent or more. We have knowledge of veterans with only short periods of service who hold entitlement for an aggravated pre-enlistment condition which carries an assessment of 1 per cent or more and who are receiving war veterans allowance pensions. Also added were disability pensioners in receipt of an assessment who enlisted after the cessation of hostilities in May or August 1945, and who were granted veterans allowances because of legislation which allows for such when a veteran "is in receipt of a pension under the Pension Act." That veteran is getting a disability pension, and after 1 per cent can qualify for a war veterans allowance, regardless of length of service.

Also added were Royal Canadian Air Force and Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve personnel who may have had only one short trip by air or sea beyond the three-mile territorial waters limit. As such trips were often not verified by service documents, the authorities accept affidavits from the applicant and other witnesses as to proof of such journeys.

Also added were World War II Non-Permanent (Active) Militia personnel who may have on one occasion only crossed the Northumberland Straits to P.E.I. for a training course of one or two weeks' duration.

Also added were civilians who sailed on schooners or other seagoing vessels in or about the waters of Newfoundland, which waters for civilian war allowance purposes are described as "dangerous waters." That refers, in the main, to merchant seamen.

Because of the confusion caused by the different criteria used by Veterans Affairs for a "Canada Service Only" applicant, is it any wonder there is a desire on the part of the Dominion Command of the Royal Canadian Legion to have legislative improvements as quickly as possible? Surely, honourable senators, personnel who were restricted to service in Canada only for long periods of time—many for four, five and six years—have as much right to receive war veterans allowances as some recipients who receive the benefit and who may have served only for a few weeks or months.

The "Canada Service Only Analysis", done by Veterans Affairs in November 1984, concluded that the potential annual cost of any war veterans allowance program to this group would be in excess of $300 million. This figure was based on the average annual benefit which would be available to the 50,000 veteran and widow applicants who were expected to apply, and was viewed as the potential maximum cost to economic support programs within Veterans Services. However, all WVA applicants and recipients at age 65 must apply for OAS/GIS benefits, which payment automatically lowers the veterans allowance payment to no more than a small monthly pittance. The costs would be further reduced if applicants took advantage of Canada Pension Plan retirement benefits, which now may be paid at age 60.

Because of the high potential cost of providing war veterans allowance benefits to all those in the "Canada Service Only" category, and as most World War II veterans will reach the age of 65 years over the next two to three years, the Dominion

Executive Council of the Royal Canadian Legion has agreed to change the 1986 convention mandate by adding the proviso that "Canada Service Only" personnel be granted eligibility for WVA upon reaching 65 years of age.

• (1450)

Depending on their financial circumstances, those applicants in this grouping could receive a small monthly payment or be placed in the classification of "near recipient" and, as such, be eligible for treatment rights as a DVA responsibility and for the Veterans Independence Program. From a national point of view, having access to this latter program is probably of greater importance to this group than any financial remuneration because of the service provided for veterans to remain independently in their own homes.

Honourable senators, as I indicated previously, to qualify for the war veterans allowance a veteran had to be 60 years of age. Now most World War II veterans are at the average age of 67. There are less than 50,000 veterans who would qualify. If the Canadian Legion extended their project to include only those at age 65, which most veterans are at this time, it would reduce that $300 million to only between $40 million and $45 million. I think it is justified. In a projected population of recipients of war veterans allowance the Department of Veterans Affairs project that in 1991 the number of veterans receiving war veterans allowance will drop from 87,000 to 69,000 and the expenditures, by millions of dollars, will drop from $452 million to $194 million. If we project into 1995-96, there will be only 48,000 recipients, and the total expenditure will be $71 million. By the year 2000-01 there will be only 44,000 recipients left, and the cost will be approximately $37 million.

Honourable senators, it might be worth while indicating the amount of allowance a war veteran receives. A single widow or widower receives an amount of $736.68. That amount is indexed every three months. When we move to a married couple, the war veteran and his wife receive $1,118.51. However, when the veteran reaches age 65 and qualifies for old age pension, he will receive the single rate OAS-GIS, which would be $674.46, and WVA would have to pay only $62.21. A married veteran and his wife who both receive OAS-GIS would receive $1,093.50. The maximum allowable under the War Veterans Allowances Act for a married couple would be $1,118.51.

We would be recognizing those people at age 65. As "near recipients" they are receiving partial war veterans allowance and partial disability pension. Those "near recipients" qualify for a certain amount of war veterans allowance, which qualifies them for veterans benefits, such as the VIP program, and other treatment benefits, such as drugs and hospital care. I feel, taking into account the justifiable reasons pointed out by veterans' organizations, that it is only reasonable that the government show interest in the service provided by those people. Even though many of those people wanted to serve overseas, because of their value as instructors in Canada they could not.

Honourable senators, I offer this to the Senate as a justifiable recommendation to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I hope we will be able to deal with this, along with our mandate, in the Sub-Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I enjoyed Senator Marshall's remarks, and I am sure we will support what he is asking for.

I wonder if I might ask the honourable senator a question. Could you tell us approximately how many veterans in the particular categories you have described are under the age of 65? You said that the eligibility should be for those who are now age 65. How many veterans are under age 65?

Senator Marshall: I do not have the actual numbers, but I can tell you that there are still some veterans under 60 years of age. The veterans who would be under age 60 are those who joined up very early in their lives and the Korean veterans, who are at the average age of 57. I do not know the actual figures, but I could certainly get them for you. I would take a wild guess at around 50,000.

Senator Argue: It seems to me that a case can be made not only for the veterans who have reached age 65 but for those who have reached the age of 60. It is difficult for people at the age of 60 to earn a living if they do not have a profession and if they do not have a job. There are programs currently in effect for people who reach the age of 65. They receive old age security, and they may receive the guaranteed income supplement. I feel the economic need is probably greater for some of those veterans under age 65, and I would think that Senator Marshall's request might be broadened.

I know that governments resist additional expenditures, but I believe a particularly good case could be made for reducing that age limit to the age of 60.

Senator Marshall: The war veterans allowance was designed to look after the chap who was unable to work. That is now called the pre-aging process. They were supposed to have pre-aged ten years in advance of others.

Your point is well taken. However, the Canadian Legion is trying to get the greater number looked after at the present time.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if I could ask Senator Marshall whether or not he would further clarify one aspect of his comments with respect to the treatment of war veterans in receipt of war veterans allowances who are also in receipt of the maximum OAS-GIS. Is it a fact that the payment from the Department of Veterans Affairs is reduced dollar for dollar by the amount of the total OAS-GIS?

Senator Marshall: You cannot get an allowance from both sources. The maximum for a married couple is $1,118.51. If the veteran and his wife are qualified for both OAS and GIS, there is a difference of $22.01.

The advantage of receiving the war veterans allowance is the receipt of treatment benefits. The veteran is allowed drugs for anything that is wrong with him, although his wife is not. He also qualifies for the veterans independence program, which I think is of great benefit to veterans who do not want to go into an institution. The Department of Veterans Affairs will provide modification to his home, will allow attendant care, and will allow transportation to go shopping so he is comfortable in his own surroundings rather than going 200 or 300 miles to an institution.

Those are the advantages of being what is called a "near recipient," where the veteran receives OAS and a small amount of war veterans allowance.

Senator MacEachen: I am interested in the dollar for dollar treatment. Am I correct in saying that the recipient of the guaranteed income supplement, for example, does not have the benefit reduced dollar for dollar by having other incomes, in other words, is there a graduated relationship? Has the committee ever considered the application of that principle to the recipients of war veterans allowance who, as Senator Marshall acknowledges, do have other benefits simply because they are in receipt of war veterans allowance? However, the additional cash is limited by the amount of the OAS-GIS pension. Would it be possible to have an inter-relationship between the two benefits that might take into account a more favoured treatment for the veteran?

• (1500)

Senator Marshall: An interdepartmental committee is looking at what they call "harmonization," that is, harmonization between the war veterans allowance and the OAS-GIS, and I think we will see some progress in that regard in the coming months.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: I have a supplementary question. I am a little confused as to the allowance available to a qualifying veteran under the terms of the legislation.

Putting aside the old age pension and the supplemental pension for both a man and his wife, or vice versa, does other income come into the picture? In other words, are the figures you gave the maximum that can be earned by a qualifying individual? Am I correct that if he earns anything more than that he would not be eligible?

Senator Marshall: There is what is called "casual earnings." In order that a recipient of the war veterans allowance shall not become static or wither away he is allowed to earn up to a certain amount. If he is married he can earn up to $4200 a year over and above his war veterans allowance. Honourable senators, I did not go into all of the details, since the substance of my discussion was related to the war veterans allowance for Canadian service only.

A single veteran can earn above $736 per month. In fact, he can earn $2700 a year over and above and be exempt. However, if he is receiving workmen's compensation or a Canada pension, that is deducted from his war veterans allowance. He is also allowed an exemption on interest income up to $100.

Senator Buckwold: By way of clarification perhaps I could give you an example. Let us assume that a war veteran has an income of $25,000 a year from investment income, or from a company pension if he is working. Does that disqualify him from receiving the war veterans allowance?

Senator Marshall: Yes, it does disqualify him. However, if he has a certain income and he is earning interest, only the interest is taken into account. Ten years ago a veteran was only allowed to have a certain amount of money, which I think was $1,250, but that was changed. If he had savings, only the interest on his savings would be taken into account, and that would be deducted from his war veterans allowance.

Senator Buckwold: If a war veteran earned the relatively large amount I mentioned, would he, if he qualified, still have his health care and drugs paid for, or is there a limit on his income in order to qualify for those benefits?

Senator Marshall: Over the past five or six years the VIP program has incorporated various types of war veterans. Formerly it applied only to those receiving a disability pension, but it now covers those receiving a war veterans allowance or those over a certain age who were disabled.

However, honourable senators, I would point out that any veteran receiving a substantial income will not receive the war veterans allowance. He will be disqualified if he is receiving over $1,118 per month, which is the maximum allowable.

Senator Buckwold: My question related specifically to fringe benefits.

Senator Marshall: Depending on certain circumstances with regard to service, he will or will not receive the fringe benefits. It would involve a rather lengthy process to go into all of the details regarding fringe benefits.

Senator MacEachen: Perhaps Senator Marshall, just for the record, can tell us if the recipient of a disability pension would be eligible for that as a right, regardless of other income.

Senator Marshall: If a veteran is eligible to receive a disability pension, he can be earning any amount each year and still receive that disability pension as a right.

Senator MacEachen: Tax free?

Senator Marshall: Only the disability pension.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered debated.

GERMAN-CANADIAN CONFERENCE

ATLANTIK BRÜCKE—MEETING HELD IN FRANKFURT, WEST GERMANY

Hon. William M. Kelly rose pursuant to notice of November 19, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Second German-Canadian Conference Atlantik Brücke, held at Frankfurt, Federal Republic of Germany, from October 17 to 19, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, I will be very brief. During the dates of October 17, 18 and 19 of this year I attended the meeting of the German-Canadian Conference, Atlantik Brücke, in Frankfurt, West Germany. This meeting was hosted by the Deutsche Bank and took place at the head office of that bank.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Atlantik Brücke meetings between West Germany and the United States have taken place annually since the early 1950s and have followed a pattern of holding two meetings a year, alternating between the U.S. and West Germany year by year.

Last year the first meeting of the Atlantik Brücke between West Germany and Canada took place. The location of the meeting was Toronto and the meeting was hosted by the Bank of Montreal.

This was my first exposure to the Canada-West Germany Atlantik Brücke conference, and I found the discussions and the list of participants most impressive. The representatives from Germany included senior officials of major West German industrial and financial institutions such as Robert Bosch, Volkswagen, Mannesman, Deutsche Bank, Dresdener Bank and senior officials of the West German government, academia and the military.

The leader of the Canadian delegation was our own Senator Allan MacEachen, who, together with Bill Mulholland, chairman and CEO of the Bank of Montreal, was instrumental in organizing the first meeting last year. Our group consisted of the same spread of representation as the German delegation and included senior officials of, for example, Merrill Lynch, Canada; Lac Minerals; Consolidated Bathurst; Canadair; and Alcan Limited. It also included the Canadian ambassador to NATO and the president of the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies. The Senate representatives, in addition to Senator MacEachen, were our Speaker, Senator Charbonneau and Senators van Roggen, Grafstein and myself.

In-depth discussions ranged from current disarmament negotiations—future implications for the alliance—through to economic cooperation in trade, including prospects for GATT negotiations, the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, two specific discussions on Canada-Federal Republic of Germany relations and the strengthening of our economic relations.

Honourable senators, in my opinion, the Canadian delegation certainly presented itself very effectively. I have to say that this was due in no small part to the very competent and effective leadership of Senator MacEachen.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Kelly: It was clear that there was an excellent meeting of minds. There were many similarities in viewpoints between the Canadian and West German delegates.

I believe that periodic sessions of this sort can greatly assist investment opportunities between Canada and western Europe, and can certainly improve trade relations generally between this country and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Kelly for having drawn our attention to the meeting held last month in Frankfurt.

Quite apart from my association with the effort, I believe it was important that it was from the German side that the first initiative came to establish this dialogue with Canada. The Atlantik Brücke, a private foundation of Hamburg, had conducted with the United States, as Senator Kelly has pointed out, a dialogue for some considerable number of years. The more recent German initiative to Canada came from Mr. Walther Kiep, the president of the foundation, who is also a well-known German politician and businessman and very closely linked with the present ruling party in West Germany. I felt that we ought to respond.

It will be useful to Canada to maintain a dialogue at the private-sector level with West Germans. They are deeply interested in securing a perspective from North America which is not exclusively a United States perspective. At our first meeting they were quite struck by the fact that the views expressed by Canadians were quite different from the views they would have received if they had been discussing matters with their American friends. They obviously value those exchanges. I hope it will continue and grow as the relationship between the United States and West Germany has continued and grown. That is now a well established feature of the bilateral relations between the two countries.

If this type of institution can develop, it can make quite a valuable contribution to the bilateral relations between Canada and West Germany.

Every government and every foreign minister is always searching for ways to strengthen these relationships. I believe that this is a good way.

One other point that I want to mention, which was mentioned by Senator Kelly, is that our Speaker, Senator Charbonneau, was present in Frankfurt. He was also a member of the initial Canadian delegation at the Toronto meeting a year ago. I thank him, Senator Kelly and my other colleagues in the Senate for their participation.

I should add that it had been our intention to have the Canadian Foreign Minister address the conference in Frankfurt. We extended an invitation to the Right Honourable Joe Clark, who, unfortunately, could not attend because of his obligations at the Commonwealth Conference.

While Mr. Clark was unable to be present, his parliamentary secretary attended and led the discussion at one of our conference meetings. His presence was useful, as was the presence of Ambassador Smith from NATO and a number of other officials from the Department of External Affairs.

The principal speaker at the opening dinner was the Governor of the Bundesbank, Karl Otto Pöhl, who gave us an interesting analysis of world financial trends as of Saturday, but failed to prophesy what would happen in the world markets the following Monday. I assure you that as the day developed the atmosphere at the Deutsche Bank on that Monday was quite different from the atmosphere that had prevailed on the preceding Saturday night.

In addition to the private sector representation mentioned by Senator Kelly and the political and departmental representation, there were some academics and journalists present. In fact, the business editor of the Financial Post was among the journalists present.

This conference constituted an interesting development, which I hope will continue in the future.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 2, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BROADCASTING OF CALGARY OLYMPIC GAMES IN FRENCH

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, I would like to bring to your attention a remark made by the Honourable Flora MacDonald, as recorded on page 11126 of Hansard of the other house, in which she expresses her gratitude to the members of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages.

I would ask the Leader of the Government, on behalf of the senators on my committee, to convey their pleasure in having been recognized by the other house.

By way of explanation, last March the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, which I have the pleasure to co-chair, learned that the Calgary Olympic Games would not be broadcast in French outside the TVA network's coverage area, which is mostly limited to the province of Quebec. Such neglect of Canada's linguistic duality could not be permitted. Thanks to our committee's intervention, this sensitive and very serious problem has now been solved, if not 100 per cent, at least to a general level of satisfaction.

The solutions required the cooperation of a number of agencies and private corporations such as cable companies, CANCOM, TVA Network, the CRTC, the Olympic Committee, the French networks of the CBC, and the Department of Communications. All joined their efforts to correct the situation. Our experience over the last four months has also shown that members of both houses can work constructively together towards a common goal.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

PRIVATE BILL

COOPERANTS, MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan B. Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, December 2, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-14, An Act to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the Province of Quebec, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, November 4, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Cogger, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its eleventh report respecting the desirability and advantages of the Turks and Caicos Islands becoming a part of Canada.

I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 2270.)

CONSIDERATION OF ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I ask permission to say a few words at this time. I assure honourable senators that I will not take more than about three minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators will recall the reference of this matter to the committee in the terms that the Clerk has just read out. The committee held one meeting in camera with members of the Department of External Affairs so as to be brought up to date on the present state of play in this particular area. We had planned, of course, to hold further meetings after that. However, in view of the evidence we received, we decided not to do so.

The report itself, to which senators can refer, deals with the geographical location of these islands, their population and their general character. The important point I would like to make this afternoon is that the Turks and Caicos Islands have the status of a British Associated State. They had a locally elected government, but in July 1986, following a commission of inquiry into alleged government corruption, the British government suspended the ministerial functions after the Commissioner had reported that three ministers, including the Chief Minister, were guilty of unconstitutional behaviour and ministerial malpractice. The presiding Chief Minister and two other elected members were arrested and are serving jail sentences in Florida for drug trafficking offences.

Under these circumstances, at the moment there is no effective government of the Turks and Caicos Islands with which the Canadian government, or anybody, can really deal in connection with this particular matter. As a result of a royal commission inquiry, the British government has announced its intention to hold new elections for a local representative government sometime in 1988. The recommendation of the committee is that the Canadian government should take no initiative in this connection at this time.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Would the honourable senator read precisely what is in the report, please?

Senator van Roggen: Yes, honourable senators. I want to be careful about this. I should not have added the words "at this time." The second last paragraph of the report reads:

The Committee concludes that caution is all the more called for since the U.K. government has indicated that a duly-elected legislature will be in place by 1988. In the opinion of the Committee, the earliest appropriate time for Canada to consider this subject would be after the 1988 elections on the Islands and then only if and when the new Turks and Caicos government raised the subject with Canada. Canada not having had a colonial past, could send the wrong signals abroad respecting its international posture if it were to take the initiative in this matter, even after a new government has been elected for the Islands.

In effect, the committee is saying that there should first be a new government and that any initiative should come from that quarter.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, the report we have before us is, in my view, a totally negative one.

Senator Doody: You could say that.

Senator Argue: I attended the committee meeting at which this matter was considered. I felt that much of the evidence was inaccurate and inappropriate, and that those who came as experts from the Department of External Affairs came with their minds already made up. When asked about a number of matters, they did not have replies. One of the reasons why there could not be an association such as the one that was being promoted in the House of Commons by a Conservative member of Parliament was, they said, that these islands do not have adequate hotel accommodations for an enlarged tourist trade. Isn't that bright? I am sure that if increased tourist traffic were to develop between these two areas, hotel facilities and other tourist facilities would be forthcoming.

I think it was a very negative presentation, and I do not feel that this report should be accepted as is. I can understand that we cannot deal with a territory or an area which does not have in place an elected government or governing body. I can understand that it is necessary to wait until such a government is in place. But I think that to say in the report, as this one does, that no initiative should be taken at this time by the Government of Canada leaves a good deal unanswered. I believe that parliamentarians who in the past have taken initiatives in this direction should continue to take those initiatives. All of the excuses and reasons may sound rather plausible that nothing in this direction should be done, but I believe that there is an area of consideration that could bear good results both for Canadians and for the people of the Turks and Caicos Islands.

There are not millions of people down there but only 14,000. They have probably one of the best climates in the world; they are the most hospitable people, and they love Canada. When one visits the islands, one may probably see more Canadian flags flying in relation to the population than one will see in Canada, because they think that Canada is a very special place. In their schools they have a special place for Canada in that they consider their relations with our country to be very important and commendable.

So there is a lot of goodwill in that area. I believe that many business people in Canada are excited about the prospects of a close association with the islands, and over the years I, for one, have lost none of my enthusiasm to go forward to see what can be done to bring about a close association. I believe it could be of great benefit both to the people of the islands and to Canada.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I, too, have long been an advocate of closer relations between our country and the Turks and Caicos Islands. I agree with Senator Argue that the attitude of the Department of External Affairs clearly has not changed very much since the subject was before us ten years ago. Even the phraseology seems similar.

Senator Argue: Even 15 years ago.

Senator Macquarrie: Having said that, as we used to say when we were filling in, I believe there is a great difference between what went on ten years ago and the situation today. At that time we had a clear and definite commitment, a desire—indeed, a request from the unanimous Legislative Council of the Turks and Caicos Islands—and it was my view then that it was very wrong of Canada to turn a cold shoulder and a deaf ear on that. Should the situation arise again, if it ever does, that will still be my view.

However, I consider the report of the committee to be sound in that I do not believe that it is up to Canada to go peddling its partnership in the Caribbean or anywhere else. I used to recall some of the other smaller islands saying, "How come you are more interested in the Turks and Caicos than in us?", and I would say, "If the time came when a demonstrated wish for union with us came from your people I would have exactly the same attitude."

I do not believe that we can take the initiative. Although I still think it is an excellent idea, I think that our response should be totally positive when we have a clear message from them. Also, I have thought from the beginning that the time is not opportune, because the status of the islands in terms of government and constitution is not clear. That is why I believe it was wise to have in the report the suggestion that at this time it is not a good thing to go forward. That does not mean that there may not be times in the future when we can take a better attitude.

Senator van Rогgen: Honourable senators, I should have moved the adoption of the report at the conclusion of my remarks. With your permission, I will now do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Argue: On division.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I think we are proceeding rather speedily on this item. The honourable senator has asked for leave to present the report, to comment, and so forth. I would like to adjourn the debate on the motion for adoption.

On motion of Senator Corbin, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fourteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance regarding Supplementary Estimates (C) tabled in Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

(For text of report, see Appendix "B", p. 2272.)

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall the report be taken into consideration, honourable senators?

On motion of Senator Leblanc (Saurel), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—GENERAL DESIGN OR CONCEPT—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, on November 17 I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate to ascertain what information could be made available to this house concerning the general design or concept for the proposed fixed crossing of the Northumberland Strait. There is some anxiety among fishermen who fish in the strait about the design of the crossing. I wonder if the Leader of the Government could tell us when information on the design might be available.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my friend asked several questions on that occasion and I undertook to obtain replies. Some information came forward and I was not satisfied with it, so I requested further information. I shall attempt to inform myself in the next day or two on the status of this matter. I may say that there are a number of reports around. I happened to be in Charlottetown last week and I heard a briefing from officials of the Department of Public Works, who told me that these reports are about to be placed in the public libraries of Prince Edward Island. So I shall obtain all information that is available and bring it to the house.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I would appreciate that greatly. It would be helpful if ministers who deal with this matter realized that people other than the residents of Prince Edward Island may be affected. I agree that the people of Prince Edward Island will be affected chiefly, but fishermen in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, whose livelihood may be at risk in some degree, are interested too. Consequently, it would be helpful if senators could be given this information and if some of the public libraries in the two adjacent provinces could have it also.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—INVITATIONS TO TENDER FOR CONSTRUCTION

Hon. John B. Stewart: While the honourable senator is getting that information, it would be useful if he could find out whether tenders or proposals for the construction of the crossing have been invited. If so, can he tell us who has been invited to tender and when the tenders are receivable?

● (1420)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I think the answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. I will obtain a list of the companies that were invited to tender—Senator Phillips tells me that there were six of them—and I will bring that information into the Senate.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT AND REVIEW

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. While the Leader of the Government in the Senate is asking for the information requested by Senator Stewart, I wonder if he would ask for two additional pieces of information. The first is: What environmental assessment has been done, and what review panel has been organized to assess the environmental studies? I would tend to be somewhat skeptical if the main information on environmental impact came from the companies or from the government without having some participation by organized fishermen, including my neighbours, who are fishing in the Northumberland Strait.

The other point I would like to suggest to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is that there are precedents where fishermen, through their organizations, are represented on panels that assess damage to gear, in particular. The precedent I am thinking of is the dredging of the Miramichi River where the fishermen were participants in the study of claims for damage to their gear. I suggest that this is also a precedent that Public Works Canada might want to examine. In fact, it did protect the fishermen's interests, with a minimum of quarrelling and legal recourse.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I appreciate those points raised by the Honourable Senator LeBlanc. I have been informed that environmental studies have been done over the past year or so, including studies of the possible impact on the fishery. However, I will obtain copies of those reports, if I can, and bring them into the Senate. I will also convey the honourable senator's representations to his successor, the Minister of Public Works.

AIR CANADA

LABOUR DISPUTE—CURRENT SITUATION—INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I wonder if he is in a position to bring to the Senate information on any developments that might be taking place in the Air Canada lockout. It is more of a lockout than a strike. Also, I wonder if he can tell us whether or not the government has any views with regard to what I understand is the central issue, namely, the request of the unions that their pensions be indexed to the cost of living.

It seems to me that that is a fair and reasonable position for the unions to be taking. Our parliamentary pensions have been indexed; other pensions in the country are indexed; the Canadian Automobile Workers have recently won from the three main Canadian automobile companies indexing of their pensions. Therefore, I think it is reasonable to ask what developments, if any, are taking place in this dispute that is causing a great deal of inconvenience to Canadians at this time of year, and whether the government has any position on the important principle of pension indexing.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, we are not taking a position on the issues as between the company and the union. Our only position is that this dispute is the responsibility of the parties involved, and we urge them to try to settle it as soon as possible and without further inconvenience to the travelling public.

MARITIME PROVINCES

SUGGESTED CHIGNECTO ISTHMUS CANAL

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, not entirely facetious, related to the fixed crossing between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Perhaps the honourable leader would bring to the attention of his colleagues that there is a very narrow isthmus between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia called the Isthmus of Chignecto. There has been a project in the minds of Maritimers for many years that there should be a canal across that isthmus.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government and his colleagues would consider a double project. A term normally used in connection with contracts on highways is "borrow." The borrow is a principal part of such a project, and I understand that there is a proposal that the borrow, or rock, or fill will come from Nova Scotia. Why not dig the Isthmus of Chignecto canal to save time, and therefore get two projects for the price of one?

I see Senator Robertson smiling. I am reminded of a proposal made many years ago for the digging of the Isthmus of Chignecto canal. An old friend, a journalist, who was then an editorial journalist for CKCW radio in Moncton, said, "Yes, I agree, we should have the Chignecto canal. It will employ 5,000 Maritimers for ten years, because we will have them use shovels to dig it, and the next ten years we will fill it back in and employ them again." This is not that kind of project!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I thought perhaps the journalist that my friend was referring to was the late Brigadier Wardell, who, of course, was a staunch advocate of the Chignecto canal project.

Senator Frith: And a great friend of Senator McElman's!

Senator Murray: And a great friend of Senator McElman's!

Senator McElman: I do not accept that.

Senator Argue: Only part of it.

Senator Murray: I will see what the engineers from the Department of Public Works have to say about this novel suggestion and I will bring a report.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I hope, will understand that in response to the comment that Brigadier Wardell and I were great friends, those who organized the great evening for Brigadier Wardell before he departed Canada ensured that I was given an invitation, much to my delight. Relax, Senator Walker! I was given an invitation well in advance for this great evening of celebration. I replied three weeks in advance of the celebration that I was sorry I could not be present, because I planned to be ill that evening.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AWARDING OF FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a further question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In recent days and weeks there has been a lot of publicity with respect to the letting of the contract for the building of the additional six frigates. There have been many suggestions as to what might happen in the award of that contract and as to whether or not the full contract should be awarded to Saint John Shipbuilding.

Saint John Shipbuilding has been responsible for the drawing up of the specifications. In the course of the last number of years it has developed a Canadian centre of excellence in shipbuilding, particularly with respect to naval vessels, which is pre-eminent in Canada.

I ask the honourable leader to consider and to discuss with his colleagues the very serious situation that the contractual bid of Saint John Shipbuilding runs out at the end of the year, which is approaching. If the contract for the six additional frigates is not let to Saint John Shipbuilding by the end of the year, it is suggested by that centre of excellence that the additional cost of the frigates will run anywhere from $50 million to $80 million each, which could result in a $300 million to $480 million additional cost, because the price situation is out the window as at the end of the year.

● (1430)

My question is: Would the Leader of the Government please determine what the situation is with regard to the letting of the contract by the end of the year so that we will not lose advantage of the price now available to us?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The matter is now under consideration by the government. I expect a decision will be made before the end of the year.

[Senator Murray.]

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—SUGGESTED PLEBISCITE

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, to follow up on the discussion regarding the proposed causeway between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick—and ultimately this will give rise to a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate—I should like to bring to the attention of honourable senators certain facts that transpired in the past with which I am intimately familiar.

One of the greatest idols I have in my political life is the late Winston Churchill. He once said that politics, in our democratic system, consists of the art of being consistently inconsistent. That has always struck me—

Senator Buckwold: That is the secret of your success!

Senator Robichaud: I cannot say it is, because I have never been consistently inconsistent. I think I have been consistently consistent except on one occasion, which related to a link between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

When I was premier of New Brunswick, year after year I took my wife and children by ferry to Prince Edward Island on a ten or fifteen-day holiday. I did so because my children enjoyed the ferry ride from Cape Tormentine to Borden, and from Borden to Cape Tormentine. That meant something to them.

At that time the Honourable Walter Shaw was premier of Prince Edward Island. He was a strong advocate of a causeway between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. I told him that I would support him in that regard, but that should a causeway become a reality, Prince Edward Island would become one of the finest counties of New Brunswick. I said, "If that is what you want, I will support you."

Then Premier Campbell came along. He was also in favour of the construction of a causeway. I also supported him, but always with reservations; I believed that the people of Prince Edward Island had their own identity, that they were Islanders, and that if a causeway were built, the Island would immediately become part of the mainland and those Islanders would lose their identity. I am now coming to my question!

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate assure other senators and myself that no contract will be awarded for the construction of that causeway until there is a plebiscite taken on the Island by the people of the Island to determine whether they want to have it or not?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think I can safely give that assurance.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, the answer was much briefer than the question.

Senator Murray: The question was brief; it was the preamble that was long!

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to two questions. As usual, I will read them if honourable senators so desire, but I would otherwise ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

TRADE

IMBALANCE BETWEEN CANADA AND U.S.S.R.—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on October 20 and 22 last by the Honourable Hazen Argue, regarding Trade—Imbalance between Canada and U.S.S.R.—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

At the time of the signing of the most recent Canada-U.S.S.R. Grains Agreement in October 1986, the Canadian government undertook to extend our "best efforts" towards assisting the U.S.S.R. to achieve certain export targets in the Canadian market.

It was made quite clear that the Canadian Government neither practices countertrade nor enters into specific purchase commitments with any of its trading partners.

In connection with the signing of the bilateral grains agreement, Canada established a Task Force to provide marketing advice to Soviet trade officials and to endeavour to bring our bilateral trade into better balance.

In March 1987, the Honourable Charles Mayer led a Task Force-organized mission of importers to the U.S.S.R.. Other Task Force activities to date include the identification of over $150 million worth of opportunities for Soviet goods in Canada, helping to organize the visit of the Minister of Local Industry of the Russian Republic, the liberalization of travel notification regulations for Soviet businessmen and technicians in Canada, and the introduction of multi-entry visas for all senior Soviet business managers based in Canada. The Task Force has been instrumental in establishing a number of important connections between Soviet exporting organizations and Canadian importers, including introducing Soviet trade representatives to the purchasing agents of a major chain of retail outlets.

After over a year of service, the Executive Secretary of the Task Force has accepted employment in the private sector. A replacement is currently being sought.

THE ENVIRONMENT

REPORT OF NATIONAL TASK FORCE ON ENVIRONMENT AND ECONOMY—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on October 28 last by the Honourable Mira Spivak, regarding The Environment—Report of National Task Force on Environment and Economy—Government Action on Recommendations.

(The answer follows:)

The Government of Canada supports the World Commission on Environment and Development (WCED), welcomed its Report, Our Common Future, and is committed to the Commission's call for sustainable development. The WCED defines sustainable development as that which "meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs."

At the Commonwealth Heads of Government in Vancouver, Prime Minister Mulroney confirmed Canadian support for the Brundtland Report and agreed with other Commonwealth members that the goal of environmentally sustainable development should be central to national and international economic policy. The government is now developing an action plan to implement recommendations of the WCED Report, and the Report of the National Task Force on Environment and Economy.

The government is already implementing many of the specific recommendations noted in Senator Spivak's question. In particular:

- The Task Force report was endorsed in principle by the First Ministers at their recent conference on economic development. In his opening remarks on November 27, the Prime Minister referred to the consensus by the First Ministers to support and promote the goal of sustainable economic development. They encouraged the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers (CCREM) to continue to work toward the achievement of environmentally sound economic development based on private and public sector cooperation.
  - ERDAs and EDAs are in the process of being charged to incorporate environmental consideration into economic decision-making. Amendments will be made to the annual courses of action and the overall five year plans to include this policy change. Mechanisms are being studied to modify other government processes and documents to better integrate environmental and economic decision-making.
  - Currently, the terms of reference for the National Round Table on Environment and Economy are being developed, and the search for an appropriate chairperson, to be appointed by the Prime Minister, is underway.
- The government has undertaken several other initiatives over the past year that are very much in accordance with the WCED Report's recommendation:
- The Minister of Environment now sits on the Cabinet Committee for Economic and Regional Development.
  - The Department of Environment, in cooperation with Statistics Canada, has agreed to undertake State of the Environment reporting in order to assess the quality of our national resources on a regular basis.

- CCREM discusses the integration of environment and economy at their annual meeting.

- The federal government has a Memorandum of Understanding with Prince Edward Island in the recent development of the province's Conservation Strategy. Environment Canada is also working closely with the Territories to develop their Conservation Strategies.

- The Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) has adopted a radically new approach to its development projects in the developing world. CIDA is committed to promoting programs that foster sound environmental practices and to ensuring that its projects are subject to the most rigorous environmental scrutiny.

- Environment Canada has made tremendous progress in researching, promoting, and facilitating environmental industries.

- CCREM has undertaken a Water Pricing Study which will determine a mechanism to ensure more responsible use of Canada's water resources.

- Canada has offered to host the 1992 International Conference on Sustainable Development, proposed in the Brundtland Report.

● (1440)

There is one other matter that I think honourable senators should recognize, and that is that this tax reform has been driven in very large measure by actions taken in the United States. I am talking about tax reform of the United States where not only corporate rates but also personal rates were significantly reduced. Once there is a variation between rates, particularly in the corporate sector, many of our industries are able to transfer parts of their operations from one side of the border to the other. Therefore, to have a level playing field, and not to bring that situation about, it was necessary not to have a wide divergence in corporate rates. That is of particular interest and importance because of the trade negotiations and the trade agreements that are now under discussion and are up for possible ratification in the very near future.

In regard to variations in personal rates, one has to remember that young people, professional people in particular, are mobile, and if there is too large a divergence in personal rates there could be a brain drain of our most competent people to south of the border. That is, to some extent, offset by the very fine systems we have here in a number of areas, particularly in the social areas, and also because of the multiculturalism of this country, which is attractive to many of our more highly educated people.

Tax reform has been driven to a certain degree—and perhaps to a greater degree than many realize—by what has already taken place in the United States.

The committee is very much of the view that by moving to tax credits, instead of using deductions or allowances, they have materially improved the progressivity, and we are supportive of that.

One of the matters that I think everyone who looks at this issue must appreciate is that there has been a broadening of the base both in the corporate area and in the personal area. On the whole, there is a shift of total tax from personal to corporations, and that general thrust, as we say, we fully support.

It is, of course, a very difficult problem to deal with tax reform. It is highly complicated and it takes a great deal of courage to even start on it. The committee resisted the temptation to advance its own views on tax reform in the broad-based aspects because of the difficult job of arriving at a proper balance. However, we do deprecate and feel very much hampered by the fact that we have this two-stage operation.

Honourable senators, I will say just a word about the two-stage operation, because the figures are important. I would like you to recall the percentage the white paper used, which was 8 per cent, on a multi-staged sales tax, or a value-added tax. For each 1 per cent the revenue inflow would be $3 billion. Therefore, on an 8 per cent basis the revenue inflow from a multi-stage sales tax would be $24 billion per annum. Against that, the offset from the present manufacturers' sales tax is about $15 billion, and the surtaxes now in place on both personal and corporate income tax amounts to $2 billion. Therefore, $15 billion plus $2 billion amounts to

TAX REFORM 1987

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twentieth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Tax Reform in Canada), tabled in the Senate on December 1, 1987.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, in moving the adoption of the twentieth report of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee I may say that this was an interesting task that the committee had in dealing with the white paper on tax reform.

As honourable senators know, when this paper was made public in June last it had an arresting cover. It showed the force and thrust of what the government said the white paper contained. That force and thrust had two aspects: first, lower rates, both personal and corporate; and, second, a fairer system, both personal and corporate.

Honourable senators, I think the committee was of the view that the overall thrust of tax reform in an integrated situation deserves high marks. By an integrated system the committee means both stage one and stage two. By splitting the two stages the result has been to introduce a number of issues that do have to be addressed in order that the system is fair. As it now stands, with only the first stage, the system is flawed on the side of unfairness in certain respects, and the committee dealt with those in its recommendations.

[Senator Doody.]

$17 billion. If we subtract $17 billion from $24 billion, that leaves $7 billion when stage two comes into effect.

What did the government say it was going to do? One of the things they said was that this would enable the government to address the impact of the tax rates proposed on the middle level, that is the middle-income level. Honourable senators will recall the figures $17 billion, $24 billion and $26 billion. The ten stages were reduced to three stages, but the jump from $17 billion to $24 billion and the smaller jump from $24 billion to $26 billion will mean a very heavy impact of taxes on the middle-income group. [See p. 2293]

Honourable senators, I note that it is 3 o'clock, and at this time I believe it is the desire of the Senate to continue with the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord. Accordingly, I adjourn my remarks until the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Sinclair, debate adjourned.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—
CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

That during the absence of the Honourable Senator Molgat, the Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel) do preside as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Fernand-E. Leblanc in the Chair.

[Translation]

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, Messrs. Orr and Scott were escorted to seats in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I am pleased to welcome Alliance Québec President Royal Orr and law professor Stephen Scott who are appearing as witnesses this afternoon. I believe they may have a preliminary statement to make before the question period.

[English]

If you have any declaration to make before we proceed to questions, you are welcome to. The floor is yours, gentlemen.

Mr. Royal Orr, President, Alliance Quebec: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We do have a short presentation, if that is acceptable.

Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I should first introduce myself. I am Royal Orr, President of Alliance Quebec. Seated to my left is Stephen Scott, a member of our legal committee, a member of Alliance Quebec, and a professor of law at McGill University.

Honourable senators, the vision of Canada which has consistently inspired the work of Alliance Quebec has been that of a country in which two official language communities can live and work together in mutual respect. In order to accomplish this, we believe that English-speaking and French-speaking citizens must be assured that wherever they go in Canada they will be guaranteed a common denominator of rights and access to basic services in their respective languages.

We have been an active and constructive advocate for this vision of Canada not only in Quebec and at the federal level but also in various forums in almost every province of our country.

Before entering into an analysis of the specific provisions of the agreement before us, we wish to join those Canadians who, regardless of their assessment of the accord, have denounced the process which our First Ministers have adopted. The Constitution represents the single most important legal document in our country. The haste with which our First Ministers signed the accord seems to us unseemly and unacceptable. There appears to have been a conscious strategy to ensure that no changes are made to it. The outcome of the hearings before the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons only confirms this for us. Despite the concerns expressed by many individuals and groups that appeared before it, the signatories of the majority report recommended the adoption of the accord with no amendment. The committee concludes that the terms of the accord reflect a delicate political compromise which would be jeopardized by any suggestions for improvement. In this way the report echoes the federal government's contention that the accord is "a seamless web" which must not be disturbed, and that any improvements should await a subsequent round of constitutional discussions.

Alliance Quebec does not seek to jeopardize the accord, only to improve it. Perhaps no community feels the impact of Quebec's isolation within Confederation more than the English-speaking community of Quebec. Certainly no Canadians feel more strongly about the importance of obtaining Quebec's adherence to the Constitution than English-speaking Quebecers. We will, however, be neither intimidated by those who say the agreement will unravel if amendments are made to it nor mollified by the suggestion that improvements could be made in future years.

That is why we are here today. We firmly believe that this accord must be improved, and we will continue to advocate changes to it.

We would first like to say a few words about nominations to the Supreme Court of Canada. We are pleased that the proposed constitutional accord addresses the question of Supreme Court appointments and embodies the principle of formal participation of both levels of government in the selection process. However, it does not deal effectively with the problem of politicization of the appointment process and the possibility of deadlock.

Alliance Quebec therefore endorses the Canadian Bar Association's proposal made before the joint Senate-House committee of an advisory committee. This would ensure community involvement in and depoliticization of the selection process. This would also avoid a potential deadlock. Failing this, we would recommend a reasonable deadlock-breaking mechanism along the lines of the Victoria Charter scheme proposed by the 1971 Constitutional Conference of First Ministers.

We have three comments regarding the interpretative clause of the Meech Lake Accord. Alliance Quebec believes that the interpretative clause fails to reflect adequately the diversity of Canadian society. A document as important as the Constitution should articulate a vision which includes all Canadians. It is therefore surprising that the proposed interpretative clause makes no mention of the original peoples of Canada or of the diverse peoples from many lands who have made this country their home. We therefore recommend that the interpretative clause also recognize multiculturalism and the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

[Translation]

Secondly, although we are pleased with the explicit recognition of our community within Quebec, we believe that there should be an equally explicit recognition of the French-speaking communities in each province.

The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures, as expressed in section 2.2, to preserve the fundamental duality of the country, although significant, is insufficient.

Just as the role of the legislature and the Government of Quebec in preserving and promoting Quebec's distinctiveness is affirmed, the role of Parliament and of the provincial legislatures not only to preserve but also to promote Canada's linguistic duality must also be affirmed. The presence of the official language minority communities is critical to ensuring linguistic duality across Canada.

It is therefore unacceptable that the First Ministers would do no more than commit their legislatures, within the constraints of their respective powers, to preserving Canada's duality.

If Canada's linguistic duality is to continue to be an essential facet of our country, our governments must commit themselves to an active role in promoting official language minority communities wherever they exist in Canada.

[English]

The question has been asked: Who spoke for Canada at Meech Lake? We must also ask the question: Who spoke for the linguistic minority communities? The timid affirmation of the role of the legislatures to preserve Canada's linguistic duality reveals a narrow vision of a Canada, which is simply a compact between the two linguistic majorities. We therefore recommend that the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures undertake the role of preserving and promoting Canada's linguistic duality.

[Mr. Orr.]

[Translation]

Finally, as for the recognition in clause 2.1(b) that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society, and the affirmation in clause 2.3 of the role of the National Assembly and the Government of Quebec in preserving and promoting that distinct character, Alliance Québec, as it has always done, states its agreement in this regard. We have stated repeatedly that it is both necessary and legitimate for the Quebec government, while respecting fundamental rights, to take positive measures to protect the French language. No one can say for certain what the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society within Canada will mean ultimately or what effect it will have on the French-speaking and English-speaking communities in Quebec. However, we ask as a guarantee the assurance that every democratic society must provide its citizens: the assurance that their fundamental rights will be respected.

[English]

In our opinion and in the opinion of many groups and constitutional experts who appeared before the special joint committee, section 16 is the critical flaw in the accord. That clause provides that nothing in the section recognizing Canada's duality and Quebec distinctiveness shall affect the rights of the aboriginal peoples or the multicultural heritage of Canadians. By omitting to protect explicitly all of the Charter rights the First Ministers have left open the possibility that the most fundamental freedoms guaranteed to Canadians by the Charter of Rights may, in fact, be diminished by the present accord.

Senator Lowell Murray, in attempting to justify the federal government's refusal to amend section 16 of the accord, explained to the special joint committee that the "distinct society" clause does not override the rights guaranteed in the Charter. At the same time he rejected the proposal that the whole Charter be saved from the effect of the "distinct society" clause, because this was said to be "totally unacceptable to Quebec." Clearly, this is because it is the intention of Quebec to rely on section 1 of the Canadian Charter when limiting rights to promote the distinctiveness of Quebec. It is obvious that the First Ministers understood this to be the intention of Quebec. In effect, we are being told that what would be considered reasonable limits on Charter rights in Quebec may not be considered reasonable in any other part of Canada. It is a repugnant notion to us that the basic rights of Canadians could vary, depending on who they are, where they live, what language they speak, or to which group they belong.

In an attempt to reassure our community, the special joint committee stated:

...in law, the "distinct society" clause is unlikely to erode in any significant way the existing entrenched constitutional rights of the English-speaking minority within Quebec.

We are left wondering at the meaning of all of these qualifiers in this statement, such as "in law," "unlikely," "in any significant way," "existing," and "entrenched constitutional." It certainly does not provide any assurance of a flourishing English-speaking community in Quebec, with full and uncompromised constitutional rights.

• (1500)

Alliance Quebec has repeatedly asked federal and provincial authorities for a clear and explicit assurance that our rights cannot be adversely affected by this accord. It is clear to us that they cannot give us that assurance.

The English-speaking community of Quebec had every right to expect that its rights would not be weakened by the accord, and, in fact, that they would be strengthened by the recognition of our community as an essential part of a fundamental characteristic of Canada. Moreover, all Canadians had every right to expect that there would be no retreat from the rights afforded to them by the Charter of Rights. The proposed section 16 makes this assurance impossible. There is no reason to allow for the potential reduction of individual rights to which section 16 may expose us. We therefore recommend that section 16 be amended to read:

Nothing herein shall derogate from any rights or freedoms accorded by or under the Constitution of Canada.

The proposed 1987 Constitutional Accord has highlighted what remains the most serious flaw in the Constitution—that is the section 33 override provision which allows Parliament or any provincial legislature to declare that any legislation will operate notwithstanding the fundamental freedoms, legal rights and equality rights contained in the Charter. The accord signed on June 3 not only fails to correct this aberration in our Constitution; it has also led Premier Bourassa to suggest that with the adoption of the accord it would be politically more legitimate for Quebec to invoke a "notwithstanding" clause. Mr. Bourassa suggested that in carrying out its role of preserving and promoting Quebec's status as a "distinct society" within Canada, it might be both legitimate and necessary for his government to override fundamental rights such as freedom of expression guaranteed to Quebecers by the Canadian Charter. We disagree vigorously.

Alliance Quebec firmly believes that the French language, and all that is distinct about Quebec, can be protected and promoted without negating individual rights. A number of groups and individuals called for the repeal of section 33 during the hearings of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. We were pleased to see that the report of the committee addressed this issue, and that there was an all-party consensus that the override clause be examined at the next constitutional rounds.

Alliance Quebec wishes to take this opportunity to restate its long-standing position in support of the repeal of section 33. We hope that the Senate will go further than the majority report and recommend the removal of the "notwithstanding" clause.

[Translation]

Quebec and Canada are becoming increasingly diversified. We must have the assurance that when our governments are faced with this crucial challenge, they do not opt for a solution that negates our fundamental rights. When all is said and done, Alliance Québec aims to promote that which makes Canada distinctive and that which unites it. In other words, our linguistic duality. Our future as a minority and the future of Canada's linguistic duality cannot be guaranteed unless we and the other official language minorities in this country obtain the tools we need for our development.

[English]

Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, we thank you for the privilege of appearing before you, and we will be happy to try to answer any questions you may have.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Orr, for your presentation. I have been given to understand that Alliance Quebec have provided some documents for the information of honourable senators. One is a brief by Alliance Quebec to the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord.

[Translation]

With the French version, Mémoire présenté par Alliance Québec au comité plénier sur l'Entente constitutionnelle du lac Meech. Also another document submitted by Alliance Québec, Analyse des audiences et du rapport du comité mixte spécial du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes sur l'Entente constitutionnelle de 1987.

[English]

The other document, in English, is "Analysis of the Hearings and Report of the Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on the 1987 Constitutional Accord, November 26, 1987."

On my list of speakers I have Senator Wood, followed by Senator Robichaud. I call upon Senator Wood.

Senator Wood: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have one question. As a senator from Quebec and co-chairman of the Official Languages Committee, I am very pleased to see Alliance Quebec here today. I believe that Alliance Quebec is a voice for English-speaking Canadians residing in Quebec. Your group obviously took on momentum and viability with the various repressive language laws being debated in Quebec, the present one being Bill 101, which every Quebec court considers illegal.

As an English-speaking senator from Quebec, my concerns are that English-speaking Canadians residing in Quebec must not have their rights compromised in any way by the Meech Lake Accord. As you are aware, there is a consensus that the "distinct society" clause, agreed to by all premiers, will serve to finally legalize Bill 101, bearing in mind the statements of Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Remillard that the "distinct society" clause gives them all the powers essential to their aims and objectives.

My question is: Does Alliance Quebec believe that the rights of English-speaking Canadians in Quebec are compromised in any way under the Meech Lake Accord? And, if so, in what way do you see those rights diminished or weakened?

Mr. Orr: As an alliance, we believe that the rights of English-speaking Quebecers could be compromised by this accord. Since the very beginning of this whole process we have supported the notion that Quebec's distinctiveness should be recognized within the Constitution. But that being said, we thought it was essential that guarantees of fundamental freedoms had also to be in any kind of constitutional deal that recognized Quebec's distinctiveness. Our concern, obviously, is around a number of issues where Charter rights are becoming increasingly important to protect the interests of the English-speaking community of Quebec. I alluded to freedom of expression guarantees and protections. Obviously, that is an issue in some very high profile cases going on right now—decisions that we are awaiting from the Supreme Court.

Our concern is that the "distinct society" clause, especially when coupled with section 16 as it currently exists, could be used in such a way as to make an argument that fundamental rights in Quebec could be limited more severely, or curtailed more completely, in that province than in other places in order to maintain what any one government may consider to be the essential elements of the distinctiveness of that society.

So, yes, we do believe that our rights are compromised. The lawyers whom we have consulted believe that, and I think that if you look in the document that we submitted to you—namely, the analysis of the testimony that was given this summer at the Joint Senate and House Committee—you will find that a number of other groups have expressed this same kind of concern. I think that probably English-speaking Quebecers are a lot more directly touched than other groups. That is because, obviously, we are in Quebec and we are a group that does rely on Charter rights and Charter protections to guarantee the interest of our community.

[Translation]

Senator Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I did not realize I would be given the floor so soon. In any case, there are two questions I would like to ask. I don't know which one I should ask first, but my queries will concern statements appearing in your brief on page 2, and I quote:

We believe that English-speaking and French-speaking citizens must be assured that wherever they go in Canada they will be guaranteed a common denominator of rights and access to basic services in their respective languages.

Very good, this makes eminently good sense. I also see on page 4:

We believe that equal and specific recognition should be given to the French-speaking communities in each province.

Further on, and again I wish to quote from the brief you submitted today:

It is a repugnant notion to us that the fundamental rights of Canadians could vary depending on who they are, where they live, what language they speak or to which group they belong.

This also makes very good sense, and in fact it goes without saying, like . . .

[Senator Wood.]

• (1510)

[English]

"motherhood".

Having quoted you, how do you explain that recently in our sister province of Alberta a member of the legislature was not allowed to express himself in French? No one can have access to a trial in French in Alberta, according to what I have heard yesterday and today. I refer to Alberta because the situation there is current. That is the first part of my question. The second part is: If these rights cannot be provided in Alberta, why is it that in the province of Quebec, la belle province, a Greek, Italian, Englishman or Irishman cannot have the name of his company published outside his establishment in the language of his choice? I know that there is a lot involved in those two questions, and perhaps I am asking for too much.

Mr. Orr: You have hit on two very good examples of why we are concerned. First, let me deal with the situation in Alberta. The Alliance has already taken a public stance on this shocking situation to the effect that Mr. Piquette's right to speak French must be recognized by the Alberta Legislature. We have been speaking regularly to Mr. Piquette to try to ascertain how we might be helpful in his situation.

I think that this action underscores what some provinces see as their responsibility with respect to preserving the official language minority in their province. If this is how Alberta demonstrates its commitment to the preservation of the French-speaking community in that province, then we think there is no question that the Meech Lake Accord should require some kind of stronger response by the provincial legislatures than a simple agreement as to preservation. The accord should also include the term "promotion," as we have suggested in our brief. This also gets back to the common denominator of services and rights. It is not enough to simply say that everyone has the right to use the official language of his or her choice when dealing with federal public services in any part of Canada. As you well know, for a community to survive it has to have a full range of services under its control, including education, management, health and social services; a whole range of services is necessary. We think that the current situation in Alberta is a classic illustration of why the current level of commitment by provincial legislatures to the preservation of official language minority communities has to be increased and reinforced in the accord with something like a requirement to promote.

On the question of signs, again, this is precisely why we are asking for some clear guarantee of fundamental freedoms. As English-speaking Quebecers, or as the Alliance Quebec, we have never asked that other governments intervene directly. What we have asked for is that the guarantees of fundamental rights that currently exist in the Constitution remain and that they not be compromised in any way by this accord or any future accord. We see the process of constitutional development in this country as one where we take steps forward in terms of the protection of minorities and individuals, and we see this accord as a serious step backwards in that march of constitutional development.

So, I cannot explain to you why governments choose to behave the way they do toward the official language minorities under their jurisdiction. What we are saying is that the federal government, more than any other government, has the responsibility of making sure that the minority communities have the tools they need—be it promotion of constitutional guarantees or be it clear guarantees of fundamental freedoms—to defend their fundamental interests.

Senator Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I may be too direct in this, my last, question, but I shall ask the witness and his confrère for an answer. If you were the premier of Quebec today, would you sign the Meech Lake Accord as it stands?

Mr. Orr: Based on everything I have heard Mr. Bourassa say, yes. He has guided the accord through the National Assembly. It seems to meet the requirements of his particular vision of Canada and of Quebec. Obviously, his government is very much behind the accord as it currently stands, but I do not speak for Quebec. I speak for the largest minority community in Quebec, 18,000 English-speaking people. We are saying, first, that it is essential that Quebec be a full partner in the Constitution, but that this current accord has serious flaws, which we firmly believe can be corrected before it is signed into law. In some ways our biggest frustration is with the process we have been through in the past five or six months. During this time we have been involved in actions that have the appearance of public consultation, but we were told from the outset that public consultation will not result in changes to the accord. So it is a very frustrating process and, in some ways, a frightening process for our community, because we feel that our rights are more directly touched upon than, perhaps, the rights of any other group in this country.

Senator Robichaud: Would you echo the sentiments of your colleague?

Mr. Stephen Scott, Professor of Law, McGill University: Of course, it is the president who speaks on behalf of the Alliance. Neither the Alliance, its president nor myself speaks on behalf of the Premier of Quebec. Clearly, it is the Alliance's view that the 1987 Constitutional Accord is gravely flawed as it stands and should not be passed in its present form.

I was very much struck by some of your observations on the positions of linguistic minorities in other provinces, particularly in Alberta, pertaining to the language of administration of justice and pertaining to the language of legislatures. May I say that just this morning Alliance Quebec obtained an order from the Supreme Court of Canada—I have the privilege to represent the Alliance—joining us as an intervener in the Saskatchewan language reference. I just received a copy of the Piquette No. 2 judgment from Alberta, and I shall be studying it. The Alliance's policy has been very strongly that the provisions of section 133 and the parallel provisions in New Brunswick on language of administration of justice and language of the legislatures should apply throughout the country. This position is contained in Alliance policy resolutions, and certainly the secretary of the Alliance would be delighted to give you the documents. Episodes such as you have described are of the greatest concern to the Alliance.

The Alliance intervened in the Manitoba language litigation with a view to trying to get the Supreme Court to oblige Manitoba to pass the constitutional amendment to extend the use of French as a language. We went before the legislature of Manitoba and we argued for that there, and we have been consistently of the view that the rights of the Francophone minority must be protected throughout the federation. Alliance, I think, has not asked for the English-speaking minority of Quebec anything that it has not asked for the linguistic minorities elsewhere. When you apply that particularly to Meech Lake, you see the flaws in section 2, because not only is the French-speaking minority outside Quebec simply to be preserved, rather than preserved and promoted, but there is no statement that this will apply throughout the federation. So as long as a minority somewhere or other is preserved, that is good enough.

● (1520)

Therefore, section 2 is flawed, both from the standpoint of the English-speaking minority of Quebec and flawed from the standpoint of the French-speaking minorities outside of Quebec.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Senator Thériault has a supplementary question, then we will get back to you, Senator Robichaud.

Senator Thériault: Once Senator Robichaud has finished, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Once you have finished, Senator Robichaud.

Senator Robichaud: I will end with this, for I know I took too much time.

[English]

The premiers have signed this agreement. Do you feel that there is room to manoeuvre for all of the improvements that you are suggesting in your brief here? We all know that there are a number of other improvements that could be made. However, do you feel that it will be possible to bring about those improvements, even after the signing of the agreement?

Mr. Orr: It is difficult to say. Obviously, there are a number of very powerful forces that want to make sure that this agreement is passed. However, we do believe that in a number of provinces in Canada there is some concern about some of the issues we have raised. There is a certain openness to considering serious changes to section 16—at least, that is my understanding. Whether or not that can be done I am obviously not able to say.

However, I do think that we must take seriously the various public forums and the processes that are offered to us to try to come up with the best accord possible. On the question of fundamental freedoms, we would find it surprising if some of the premiers of provinces which will be holding public hearings are able to stand up and say that it was, indeed, their intention to compromise fundamental rights with such things as the "distinct society" clause and section 16. What we have said right from the beginning, since the appearance of the legal text, is that if this was not their intention, then they should fix it, because it does seem to be a reasonable implication of section 16, taken in conjunction with the "distinct society" clause.

However, if that was their intention, then we have further very serious questions to pose, and we hope that other Canadians will have further serious questions to pose. As far as we are concerned, the constitutional development of Canada cannot proceed in this fashion, where 11 First Ministers—11 men—get together in a room and come up with a constitutional deal which compromises the fundamental rights of any particular group of Canadians. If that is the way we are to go about amending the Constitution in this country, I think we had all better take a very serious look at where this country may be going, because it is a completely inadequate way to advance ourselves as a nation.

Senator Robichaud: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Senator Thériault, then Senators Marsden and Stewart. You have a supplementary, Senator Thériault?

Senator Thériault: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I will try to be very brief. In fact, my colleague Senator Robichaud almost asked my question when he put his last one.

[English]

I would like to ask the Alliance whether, before the signing and up to the present time, you were in contact with La Fédération des francophones hors Québec, and whether or not you are attempting to lobby some of the premiers in support of what the new Premier of New Brunswick has indicated he has in mind with respect to the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Orr: Yes, we have been in touch with the FFHQ, senator. In fact, we are in regular contact with the FFHQ. As you can see from the recommendations that we are making with respect to the first part of the interpretative clause, we are clearly making recommendations with respect to the inclusion of the word "promote," as well as "preserve," with those communities very much in mind. That is in addition to our suggestion that there be an explicit recognition of the presence of French-speaking minorities in each province as opposed to just in English Canada, generally speaking.

La Fédération des francophones hors Québec is not as concerned about some of the fundamental freedoms issues as we are. Obviously, that touches us much more closely than it does them. However, I should point out that the president of the Société Franco-Manitobaine appeared before the joint Senate-House committee and supported the position that we have taken on the potential problem concerning section 16. Therefore, at least one Francophone organization has noted that this is a cause for concern and has supported the recommendations that we have made.

On the question of other provinces and other premiers, we have had occasion to speak with representatives of the governments of Ontario and Manitoba as well as representatives of the new government of New Brunswick about their intentions regarding the Meech Lake Accord. We are encouraged in a number of ways by the responses we have received. There seems to be a commitment to use the public processes that they are planning for their provinces in a much more creative way than what we saw here in Ottawa over the summer months. There seems to be more reality to their suggestion that this is a real process that may result in change. We are very hopeful that Mr. McKenna will be able to convince some of his colleagues around the First Ministers' table that some of these matters deserve serious consideration.

[Mr. Orr.]

However, what we are saying to these people in these various governments is not simply that they should be concerned about these matters. In many instances they are already concerned. What we are saying is that people should be starting to think through how to go about changing this accord. It seems to me the thing we must reject most firmly is the suggestion of the federal government, as well as of the Government of Quebec, that this is a seamless web; that it is, by definition, impossible to make any kind of change or improvement to this accord. This is a political deal like any other political deal. Constitutional deals can indeed be fragile, but if one deal can be struck, I fail to see why another deal cannot also be struck. Therefore, what we are saying to the various premiers and the representatives of certain provincial governments is that they should start thinking about the political means and processes of effecting change to this accord, because we firmly believe that it can be improved without destroying it.

Senator Thériault: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Senator Frith?

Senator Frith: Mr. Orr, on page 2 of your presentation you say you want to say a few words about nominations to the Supreme Court of Canada, and you support the proposal of the Canadian Bar Association for an advisory committee. Since we have not had any representation from the Canadian Bar Association at this point, can you tell us what their proposal is, and thereby put it on our record?

Mr. Scott: At various stages they offered suggestions and I have not re-read their proposal recently enough to be able to speak for them. However, since honourable senators were so good as to communicate through one of their clerks that they wanted me to come and testify, I agreed to refresh my memory as to the details.

Essentially, they proposed various schemes whereby there would be input not only from both levels of government but from members of the bar and the general public. I think the intent was to ensure that the process was not one of pure exclusivity of provincial government input.

There was the McKelvey report, and Mr. Williams came to the joint committee with slightly different proposals. The proposals are in the committee debates, but before I try to set them out precisely I had better look at them again.

Senator Frith: You have also referred to the Victoria Charter scheme proposed in 1971 and a deadlock-breaking mechanism. How does that differ from the proposal of the Canadian Bar Association?

Mr. Scott: The Canadian Bar Association is quite interested in widening the input beyond governments. The Victoria Charter scheme, in its essence, involved nominating councils—either larger nominating councils or smaller nominating councils. The larger council would consist of all the attorneys general; the smaller council would consist of the Attorney General of Canada, the Attorney General of the relevant province, and a chairman appointed by agreement or by the Chief Justice of the relevant province. It would make a final selection from a federal list of proposed judges.

Under the Victoria Charter scheme it would be impossible to make a Supreme Court appointment unless there was the consent of a particular provincial government. That is, of course, the case with three judges from Quebec.

Moreover, under the Meech Lake scheme cross-nomination is impossible. A judge qualified from British Columbia could only be proposed by the Attorney General of British Columbia, for example, and not Ontario, or a judge from Quebec could only be proposed by the Government of Quebec. So it is a great deal more rigid than the 1971 scheme, which was, indeed, a scheme which Mr. Bourassa himself found quite acceptable in 1971.

Senator Frith: You make no comment in this presentation about the accord's provisions for appointments to the Senate. Do you have nothing in particular to say about that?

Mr. Orr: We did have something to say about that in our first brief. We submitted that brief, as well as this current brief, because we stand behind all of those recommendations. The limitation of time today forced us to choose between the two briefs.

With regard to the appointment of senators, while we thought that it made sense that there be some kind of provincial input, we felt that there should be some kind of process to guarantee that the public saw who was being proposed for appointment to the Senate. We would suggest, at the very least, that the lists of potential nominees be made public.

Our concern here comes from a concern that you see in a number of other points, and that concern is that provincial governments tend not to be very concerned about minorities—certainly official language minorities—within their boundaries. There is no provision and no kind of mechanism in the existing accord to guarantee that the Senate should be reflective of the linguistic reality and the linguistic duality of this country. One could even go further, I suppose, and say that one could not presume, or one should not assume, that those provincial governments will be concerned about making sure other minorities are represented in the Senate in the future.

We thought that there had to be a way of setting up that process so there would be much more public scrutiny of what the provincial governments were doing in terms of their submissions.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, my last question concerns section 16. The presentation you made today does not make particular reference to the interpretative rule of inclusio unius and the reason for people being concerned that aspects of the Charter will be affected and some aspects of the distribution of powers might be affected, because section 16 refers to specific provisions of the Charter and specific provisions of the distribution of powers in sections 91 and 92.

I would like to ask Professor Scott what weight he feels would be given to that interpretative rule by the courts when interpreting section 16?

Mr. Scott: Clearly, from our point of view, the scheme would be better off without section 16. The more exceptions are made to the operation of section 2, the more ruthless and inevitable the inference is that section 2 is intended to affect the Charter of Rights, or so much of the Charter of Rights that has not been accepted by section 16.

Senator Frith: That was not mentioned in section 16?

Mr. Scott: That is right. If you have section 2 and you start off by putting a paragraph in that says it is not going to affect the distribution of powers, then what is left are rights and guarantees of various sorts, such as section 133. Then, in addition, you make certain exceptions for multiculturalism and for aboriginal rights. The inference becomes more and more deadly and inevitable that the whole purpose and thrust of it is to say that even if certain kinds of legislation are not demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, they are, nevertheless, justified by the distinct character of Quebec.

Personally, I believe the courts would do their best to try to avoid this. But you have a problem in damage control. You have section 2 drafted in such a form as to simply present to the courts the problems in damage control. The outcome also depends a great deal on the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada. That is closely related to the submissions which Alliance Quebec has made on that subject.

While it is possible for a fair-minded court to control the problems created by section 2, nevertheless, section 2 essentially creates problems for the court. The problems are heavily compounded by the presence of section 16 and the inclusio-exclusio rule.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, that may be a good place for me to yield to Senator Marsden, who might, on that subject, have a question about women's rights.

The Chairman: I have the names of Senator Marsden, Senator Stewart, Senator David and Senator Le Moyne on my list. Senator Marsden.

Senator Marsden: I was not going to raise the question about women's rights, simply because I think you have referred to it very clearly in your recommendation. Senator Frith, you may ask your question if you wish.

Senator Frith: No, that is fine. I think it is clear that the rights that are being referred to in the Charter of Rights would include women's rights as rights that might be at risk in this interpretation.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Chairman, if I may add, there is a rather complete analysis in the document entitled "Analysis of the Hearings" of a number of positions and arguments that were brought forward precisely on section 16. I believe it is a very complete and very balanced analysis of everything that was heard. If that is of particular concern to the senators, I would invite them to read that analysis.

Senator Frith: You do understand that there are things that we want to have on the record directly rather than having to go to other documentation. Thank you for drawing our attention to that analysis.

The Chairman: Senator Marsden.

Senator Marsden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the witnesses for a very clear and powerful brief, especially for the documents that you have tabled that deal with individual rights—section 15 and section 33. I would also like to thank them for the document "Analysis of the Hearings" in its entirety, but especially insofar as it comments on the process. In that regard, I would like to ask my questions. You talk about the limitations of the process. I would ask you to extend your comments on that in this way.

In the province which I represent—the province of Ontario—we had no idea what our premier asked for at Meech Lake or Langevin or, in fact, whether or not he got what he asked for. In the province of Quebec it was very clear to all of us what Premier Bourassa was after. Those requests were made public.

Did the premier and the Government of Quebec consult with you before those requests from Quebec were drawn up between the Meech Lake meeting and the Langevin meeting and subsequent to them?

Mr. Orr: Senator Marsden, the process in Quebec has been rather complicated. Quebec, to its credit, did publicly come out with five points, which they said were the core of their demands. We supported those five points. The process then started to move so quickly and with so little consultation that things began to change between the point when the five points were brought out and the Meech Lake Accord.

There is a distinction between Langevin and Meech Lake. Suddenly the recognition of Quebec as a "distinct society" slipped from perhaps being in the preamble to the Constitution to being an interpretative clause, and that was something that was not necessarily a part of the public demands of the Government of Quebec.

● (1540)

The Government of Quebec held its public hearings on the Meech Lake Accord. It held no public hearings on the legal text. At that time we made our points very clear, and we are continuing to do so. At that time we said we could accept the recognition of a "distinct society," but that there had to be clear, unequivocal guarantees for fundamental freedoms, other Charter rights and other constitutional rights as well.

Between Meech Lake and Langevin, suddenly section 16 appeared, and section 16, as we have just been discussing, has a number of implications with which we are not comfortable. So, at every step of the way in Quebec there has been a certain amount of public discussion and public debate, but each time the First Ministers got together in a room somewhere the result has been quite surprising. Something that was unexpected resulted, something which has implications which were never part of the Government of Quebec's public position has resulted. For example, the Government of Quebec has never said publicly that it is its intent to limit fundamental freedoms with the inclusion in the Constitution of this accord. So, at each step the Government of Quebec, to its credit, has held some kind of public debate or has made some kind of position public, unlike some other governments, but each time we have been surprised by the results of the meetings of the 11 First Ministers.

Senator Marsden: Professor Cairns of the University of British Columbia has said that regardless of whether one likes or dislikes the actual context of this accord, the process is deeply immoral. Would you agree with that? Do you think that this undermines the democratic process of Canadian society?

Mr. Orr: If we were serious about the 1982 Constitution, if we were serious about putting in place a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, then coming up with a constitutional deal five years after, which a number of experts and a number of groups agree could very well compromise precisely those Charter rights, then I have to say that this is an improper process, that this is not the way we should be proceeding as a country. I find it quite offensive, because one takes certain things as a "given," or we think we are being encouraged to assume certain things that are fundamental to aspects of our political life; that is, the protections the Charter affords. We had thought the only debate around the Charter would be when you repeal section 33 as opposed to having to fight rearguard action to stave off constitutional deals among First Ministers which went further in the direction of compromising that Charter.

Senator Marsden: I know that you object to the entrenchment of this process through Meech Lake—that is, executive federalism. Can you describe what dangers, from the point of view of your organization, you think might occur in the future if the First Ministers continue to do what we have seen them do over the past couple of years?

Mr. Orr: I suppose my concern stems from the fact that we feel that our community is the group that has been consciously forgotten in this whole process, that our concerns have been systematically denied and denigrated by a number of powerful people in this country. Our experience with this kind of executive federalism, if that is the best way to characterize it, has not been very good so far.

I should underline for people who are not from Quebec the kind of message Quebecers got the day after the Langevin Accord was signed. In the rest of Canada the premiers went home, and there was a lot of jubilation about, finally, bringing Quebec on side, before people started to reflect on the text. What we got in Quebec was the premier coming back and, in response to criticism that he had not got as much as he could for the province, saying, "Well, there were a number of things that were acquired, and one of the things that was acquired through the current wording was a kind of political justification for the use of a 'notwithstanding' clause." That was the ultimate power that resided within the Constitution.

[Mr. Orr.]

So whether or not this interpretative clause recognizing a "distinct society" was powerful enough, ultimately the Constitution gave Quebec that power, and the recognition of a "distinct society" in this accord gives some kind of political justification to the use of a 'notwithstanding' clause.

That was the message we received as English-speaking Quebecers. That is our experience from this process of constitutional reform. You can understand why we are skeptical about continuing with this. I cannot imagine what they might use this process for the next time around, but I feel fairly confident that minorities, or let me say people who are under-represented in the corridors of power, will not come out the winners.

Senator Marsden: Thank you. I can assure you that a great many Canadian women share those views entirely. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Senator Stewart.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To some extent my question has been anticipated. What I want to do today is put Mr. Scott on notice for later, when, as I understand from you, Mr. Chairman, he will be appearing in his own right.

When the Honourable J.W. Pickersgill was here on November 18, I asked him if I was correct in believing that he thought that the "distinct society" rule refers exclusively to language. He replied, and I quote:

No. It refers not to language but primarily to the Civil Code, I would say.

I notice that it is the language question which seems to be at the centre of your focus, that is, the relationship between the "distinct society" rule and the Charter of Rights, particularly as it relates to language.

I want to shift away from that concern to another; we know, of course, that the "distinct society" rule of interpretation is not to derogate from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or of the legislatures. When Mr. Pickersgill was talking about the Civil Code, he said he was talking particularly about the provision for "property and civil rights in the province," subsection 13 of section 92. The question I have is this: In your view, will the "distinct society" rule of interpretation have any effect whatsoever on the interpretation of sections 91 and 92? If Mr. Scott would prefer to leave that question until he appears in his own right, I would be happy.

Mr. Orr: I have one comment on that. In partial response, "distinct society," for us, includes many things. It is not just the French language, it is not just the Civil Code, it also includes the presence of the only English-speaking minority in the country. That is part of Quebec's distinctiveness.

The potential use or impact of that interpretative clause on other sections of the Constitution is something that we, as an alliance, have not addressed. I suspect that Mr. Scott would be able to respond to that during his own appearance.

Mr. Scott: Yes, I think that it is desirable, as much as possible, for me to assist with alliance positions rather than give legal advice in my own right.

May I say that I have been working away at trying to put a brief of my own together, one that is adequate to the issues here. I have done so far two papers, which I intend to integrate into a brief, or am considering integrating into a brief, which deal with quite a few questions honourable senators have been asking today. One is on precisely the "distinct society" provisions and the national objective; the other is on a close analysis of the Supreme Court provisions. Both have rather concrete proposals. They are already in the form of papers now, and I could give them to the clerk at this stage, who might cause them to be circulated if senators wished.

Since they are not on the public record yet, and since it would be of considerable assistance that they should be, I would be grateful if the Senate would care to order that they be printed as appendices, because they are quite detailed and worked out. However, I would certainly give them to the clerk in anticipation of my appearance here in due course, and also try to work out a brief particularly on other issues.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): That would be entirely satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Frith: I have a supplementary question. While Mr. Scott is looking that up, perhaps he would see if he could find any judicial definition of the word "society". I looked it up, as I mentioned on another occasion, in Sanagan, a Canadian authority on words and phrases judicially noted, and found nothing in the alphabetical order for the word "society". I found nothing between "soap" and "sodomy."

Mr. Scott: The whole thing is, in a sense, an exercise in studied ambiguity. There are limits beyond which you cannot define things. If you are to use words like "society", I do not think that you can define it further. Although the Alliance is primarily concerned, obviously, to ensure that whatever any of this means it does not affect fundamental rights and freedoms, that does not mean that it would not like to see a great deal of improvement in the clause and has, indeed, made various proposals—for example, "distinctive" as opposed to "distinct," and so on.

The famous statement by de Gaulle, "Je vous ai compris," in front of the crowd, was precisely the classic exercise in an ambiguous statement which would be understood by everyone to mean what it was wanted to mean. Of course, honourable senators are right in seeing ambiguity in this clause, but it is not altogether unintended, I think. However, to be fair to anyone drafting a scheme like this, I am not sure that you could refine the term "society" very much.

Senator Frith: You understand that I was not asking that it be refined, I was just saying that when you are doing research for your own appearance you might see if the word "society" had ever been judicially defined.

Mr. Scott: I very much doubt that you would find a legal definition of "society," unless it was in a phrase like "the society of railway workers," meaning an unincorporated association.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if Mr. Scott would consider looking at the way that the term "society" was used for some 450 years in the extensive literature of so-called natural law jurisprudence, where the word "society" always meant a polity. It was the term that was used to translate Aristotle's classical term "polis," and meant "a distinct and independent political entity." Indeed, it was the predecessor of the modern term "nation." There was a long and distinguished usage of the term in that tradition, which was outside the common law world but very close to the civil law world.

Mr. Scott: I will give that some thought; I think I should not steal the Alliance's forum and comment on that.

The Chairman: Senator Marsden, do you have a supplementary question?

Senator Marsden: I do, and it is brief, because it follows on these questions of distinctions.

It would be interesting, when Mr. Scott returns, to know if there is in Canadian constitutional experience a distinction made among "society," "state," "nation" and "culture"—all of which are highly distinct in, say, sociological or political science terms, but may or may not be in judicial terms.

Mr. Scott: These terms tend to require interpretation when they are used in an enactment. Since they have not been used much in enactments in this country, I think there would be a dearth of attempts at legal definition. On the other hand, ordinary words of the language appear in statutes or other enactments and then require definition. The judges just have to do the best they can at that point.

The Chairman: Mr. Orr, do you have anything to add on that subject, or shall I move to another senator?

Mr. Orr: I have nothing on that point, thank you.

The Chairman: Senator David?

[Translation]

Senator David: Mr. Orr, I am very glad that Alliance Québec should appear before this committee. I have already had a few meetings with you, being a member of the Committee on Official Languages where your group has given evidence on a number of occasions.

Of course, the main goal of the Meech Lake Accord, and you will admit this, is to bring Quebec back in the Canadian Constitution. One thing for sure is that to reach this goal it took an exercise which lasted for about two years of compromises, which in turn led to discussions of compromise as well, and they went on for 12-odd hours or more in the Langevin Building.

Of course, you are speaking on behalf of what you call the "anglophone minority" of Quebec which amounts to roughly 800,000 people, if I am not mistaken. It is quite obvious that in

[Senator Frith.]

Quebec you represent a sizable minority, about 20 per cent of the population of Quebec. This minority is supported by about 25 million English-speaking Canadians and 220 million English-speaking North Americans, to the extent that it is a minority within which you might indeed feel rather comfortable.

Still, to me you appear very concerned. I think the word is quite appropriate because you have the impression that the Meech Lake Accord might deprive you of certain basic rights which are still guaranteed under the Charter of Rights which has not been invalidated by the Meech Lake Accord.

If I avoid any reference to the case now before the Supreme Court with respect to signs, if I simply remain within the limits of Quebec without considering other minorities in Canada, for the purpose of this discussion, on behalf of those you represent I would like you to give me very concrete examples of so-called "basic" rights which you do not now enjoy. I think you have them all. Why do you stand to lose with the Meech Lake Accord?

It seems to me that your representations would give me more satisfaction if you were to support them with fairly concrete examples so that I, residing in the same province as you, can see a very real danger in the Meech Lake Accord. In short, I am simply trying to find out whether you are talking about anxiety or about a very probable reality.

Mr. Orr: It is difficult, as you know. When we speak about a constitution, we are speaking about a statute which is normally used in the worst, and not in the best, of circumstances.

First, you spoke about business signs. Naturally, this concerns freedom of expression and it is just an example. Apart from that, there could be the question of guarantees for equal status. As for immigration, the Quebec government has certain policies which are of some concern to us, and we have to look at this issue.

I must also point out that the existing guarantees for our school network are not as firm as many Canadians think. The guarantees which now exist in the Constitution are for the denominational and not the linguistic system; that is a fact. Perhaps it will become necessary for the English-speaking community to use clause 23 of the Constitution to protect its right to manage its own schools.

Naturally, we are somewhat concerned about the potential reduction of basic rights. Freedom of expression is the most obvious for the moment. We are also concerned about the minority language educational guarantees. Also, I must say that if there is a possibility that clause 133 can be reinterpreted to weaken existing rights, this is also a cause for concern.

As I have said, it is rather difficult for us to provide concrete examples. I repeat that constitutions are developed over many decades and it is difficult to say immediately what the results of such an agreement will be.

Mr. Scott might have some ideas about that.

Mr. Scott: Perhaps I shall elaborate on that another time, but there are examples. As Mr. Orr said, we cannot predict the future, but there is an impact on all legislation and government services. For instance, there is the matter of educational subsidies, the control of the books prescribed for schools, health services, and so on. We might ask that these be provided in English, and the government might refuse to do so administratively or by legislation. We want to be able to rely on the guarantees of equality in all possible or hypothetical situations and in all the legislation. However, we shall be told that Quebec is a distinct society and that the guarantees do not apply to specific legislation or to provincial administrative practices.

Senator David: I am glad to see you agree with the definition of a distinct society. If my understanding of your replies to previous speakers is correct, the distinction you make is not just a matter of language but also of tradition, culture and religion, the latter much stronger in the past than it is today.

While accepting this distinct society, you would like to see it provide safeguards against that distinct character. I think it is right and reasonable to have guarantees for fundamental rights, but when we are asked to make a distinction between fundamental and secondary rights, this often requires legal definitions that are extremely difficult to establish.

Now about your concerns. Considering that the past fore-shadows the future, do you not believe that in the case of the English-speaking minority in Quebec, the past leaves considerable hope for the future, especially considering the support afforded by a very sizable population nearby?

You refer to the dangers of immigration. I think that is opened to debate.

About the school system, you referred to the separate school system. However, this is also an important issue for the French-speaking population, where the struggle continues, although to a lesser extent than in the past, to maintain a Roman Catholic school system. The same is true of Protestant schools, although we know perfectly well that the dominant issue on both sides is not so much religion as language. I don't see why the system should be any worse off today than it was before.

I would have liked to have many other examples. The signs issue arose as a result of a law that is now being challenged before the Supreme Court, so I think we should wait for the outcome of this appeal before drawing any conclusions.

Mr. Orr: First of all, you may have noticed that some tremendous changes have been taking place in our schools. Perhaps I should explain the situation in the Protestant schools in our province.

The French-Protestant sector is growing steadily, and within the next three years, we will have a situation where the school board that covers Eastern Quebec will have a majority of French-speaking students. The same will happen to the Protestant School Board for Greater Montreal. In eight or nine years at the most, the PSBGM will be a Francophone institution in the meaning of Bill 101.

So a lot of changes are taking place, and it means we will have a situation in Quebec where the guarantees for a separate school system will not necessarily guarantee language rights.

As for your first question about the recognition of a distinct society, I must say that the Anglophone community is showing an increasing willingness to participate in this distinct society and that it realizes that speaking French is an essential part of that participation. Increasingly, the situation is that if we want to participate fully in the Quebec community, we must do so in French. However, there are two requirements for a minority to be able to participate to that extent. The first requirement is to be able to speak French. The second requirement is that as a minority, one must have access to another political avenue if one does not have a majority in the National Assembly. The traditional avenue is that of the courts, which includes safeguards such as the Quebec Charter and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

As a Quebecer and a member of a minority group, I realize I must participate in French in the province of Quebec, but I also think that the majority should realize that minorities must be given basic safeguards, and especially guarantees for their fundamental rights, to ensure that participation is fair and genuine.

Senator David: My last remark will be to congratulate Mr. Orr who speaks excellent French, much better than my English. You are in fact a shining example of linguistic participation in the Quebec community.

M. Scott: I want simply to add something in reply to the last question. To a certain extent the past can indeed vouch for the future. However things we thought impossible can happen. Who would have thought, say 30, 40 or even 50 years ago, that a Quebec legislature would ever try to abolish English as a language for use in the legislature and before the courts? The fact is, however, that a government has passed and ratified a Bill to that effect. It is only because clause 133 was ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, after a long battle, that this fundamental right of Quebec Anglophones was saved. Without this ruling, what we had thought impossible would have happened. This is why we must show good will toward the Francophone majority and respect their wish that the French culture and language in Quebec be protected, but not to the point of infringing upon individual basic rights.

The Chairman: Before recognizing Senator Le Moynes, I should like to say that the group representing the Native Council of Canada has arrived and wishes to be heard. Well, Senator Le Moynes?

Senator Le Moynes: I will yield, Mr. Chairman, because I would not want to extend unduly the sitting of the Senate.

The Chairman: Thank you. On your behalf, therefore, I want to thank Mr. Royal Orr and Mr. Stephen Scott for appearing before us today as witnesses. Thank you for your presentation and your clear and precise answers to the questions raised by honourable senators. Now, you are excused.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, Messrs. Bruyère and Groves were escorted to seats in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: On your behalf, I wish to welcome the Native Council of Canada, as represented by its President, Mr. Louis "Smokey" Bruyère, and its special counsel, Mr. Robert Groves.

Before answering questions, would you like to make a statement, or would you rather answer questions right away?

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Louis "Smokey" Bruyère, President, The Native Council of Canada: Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman. I would first like to introduce Mr. Bradford Morse, a professor of law at the University of Ottawa. He will be seated next to me rather than Mr. Groves.

I wish to thank the Committee of the Whole and all honourable senators for providing the people I represent some voice in the constitutional future of Canada.

Senators are probably all interested in hearing about our proposal that the Senate initiate what we call "companion resolutions." We have circulated the amendments in English and French. Before I get to that initiative, however, I have a little story to tell.

As you know, the right of self-government of aboriginal peoples was reaffirmed in September by His Holiness Pope John Paul II. I had a small part to play in getting the Pope to go the extra distance he did. Believe me, getting the last minute changes to a papal message makes dealing with Meech Lake look easy. Anyway, we had hoped that the Pope's forceful assertion of the moral and legal strength of our case would have some influence on the federal government, on provinces, and on the Joint Committee on the accord.

It is not the first time that a pope's message has failed to get through. Exactly 450 years ago this year another pope, Pope Paul III, issued a famous bull, Sublimis Deus. It is generally seen as one of the formative documents of modern international law.

It basically said that Indians were independent men with rights, that they had souls, and that they could not be enslaved or deprived of their territories or liberties.

The Pope's announcement led to an infamous Spanish procedure called the Requerimento—the requirement. By way of respecting the Pope, if not the papal bull, Spain required that a clear and public proclamation had to be made at each meeting with Indians to announce that Indians had the recognized right to be independent and free.

As you can guess, Indians were also told that there was an exception to their rights. The exception was if Indians refused "open trade" with Spanish merchants—that was the Spanish term for "free trade"—or if Indians opposed Spanish priests in their missionary work.

If trade or the missions were opposed, a "just war" could be declared, and Spaniards would be absolved of any guilt about killing or enslaving Indians and seizing their lands and resources.

[Mr. Orr.]

You might understand that even with the loophole, the Conquistadores of the day were not too pleased with the Requerimento. It slowed things down. But they managed to get around the dilemma. They did read out the proclamation. But they did so quietly, in Spanish, and in isolated jungle clearings. Then they raided the closest Indian town.

The Langevin accord reminds me of the Requerimento. If you look at section 16 of the accord, you will see it in writing. Like the Requerimento, it gives the impression of concern and respect. But it is, in fact, nothing more than a face-saving gesture, a way of getting around having to recognize the damage being done to fundamental rights.

Perhaps I should apologize to senators, not for my little story but for Meech Lake and its aftermath. The fact is that it was the 1982 aboriginal rights package that gave First Ministers their only formal on-going role in "facilitating" the procedure of constitutional amendment. Some facilitators!

The Langevin accord takes a procedure that was unique to the aboriginal reform process—formal First Ministers' meetings as the basis for amending the Constitution—and makes it permanent. The only twist is that aboriginal reform is dropped from the agenda. That's gratitude for you!

If it were not for the aboriginal conferences, the precedent and the legitimacy of the First Ministers' coming up with the Langevin accord on their own would have been far less apparent.

I apologize. We should have known better.

What are the aboriginal concerns? Think back to 1982. Was it really only five years ago? Compare the situation we faced then with the reality today. Many of you will recall the battle in 1981 and 1982 between the "people's package" and the "power package." That battle, even if only partly won, was at least public. Some of you were directly involved and know how Canadians from all walks of life were able to become directly involved in improving the draft, especially the Charter.

No one got all that they wanted, and the Parti Québécois refused to go along with it. But a truce, uneasy but stable, was won.

In the 1987 accord the truce between power and people—especially aboriginal people—was broken. Shots have been fired, and from the darkness of a closed meeting room. Because of the fait accompli approach of First Ministers, we have very little ammunition to defend ourselves.

The accord completely ignores aboriginal peoples and our place in the existing constitutional order. It misstates Canada as it is and as it had a greater chance of becoming—a country housing a number of distinct peoples and societies living in harmony and mutual respect.

Canada is premised on the relations between three—not two—founding societies. The first, and the most distinctive, are the aboriginal peoples.

The accord takes a simplistic, sledge-hammer approach to the amendment procedure. The amending formula is critical to setting out what Canada should be and could be in the future. For this to work it must balance interests—not only the interests of governments but of the peoples involved.

The accord takes a formula that had ten distinct procedures and slashes that number back to seven, all in the name of provincial veto power. In the process two procedures—critical for the rights of peoples—have been simply wiped out.

Section 42 is gone, and along with it the “second round” reform agenda worked out in 1982. All those agenda items are to be locked in to the unanimity procedure. Beyond the effect on Senate reform, this move also clearly strips northerners of any hope for provincehood and signals a new, colonialist partition of the north.

● (1620)

Secondly, the special procedure for the “first round of reform” on aboriginal rights is totally gone. In its place is a seemingly never-ending series of conferences on fish and the future of this place.

The aboriginal reform process from 1983 to 1987 was based on the understanding that aboriginal peoples were the number one, the first round, of reform. It was assumed that concerted effort would be given by all First Ministers until the basic issues were resolved. Section 42 also provided an agenda of other reform items that could be addressed. But we were assured that we were the number one priority of Canada. Aboriginal peoples were finally to get top billing. Aboriginal people felt assured that they would get a secure place in Confederation. Clearly, we were wrong, all of us.

The accord proposes to gut the aboriginal rights provision and to forestall, possibly forever, the completion of the circle of Confederation—and just when we were getting close to an understanding and to making a breakthrough. As Georges Erasmus explained to you a few weeks ago, the first three meetings were spent largely in educating Canadians and Canadian politicians. So, in fact, we really had only one shot at serious and informed discussion on reform, and that was preempted by preparations for Meech Lake, as I point out in the background paper that I have previously circulated.

Again, going back to 1982, that constitutional exercise embraced a vision of aboriginal peoples as being partners in Confederation. The 1982 act recognized the realities of Canada and the need to provide some countervail and some balance, to allow aboriginal peoples effectively to negotiate our place in Confederation. That is why the First Ministers' conference process, legally required, was so important. The accord abandons this vision. The 1982 package provided us with the basis for a distinct aboriginal charter and the means to fill it in. The accord wipes that out, and there is little hope, without a bold and courageous move by the Senate, to right the damage done.

I have to single out for special comment the accord's provision on unanimity. It ensures that the worst inclinations of future politicians will be pandered to. It invites every single province to ransom proposed changes for whatever that province might want, probably out of the federal treasury or whatever is left of federal jurisdiction. Every other province will demand, and get, equal treatment, and it will mean that every effort to amend the Constitution on one issue will lead to a repetition of the Langevin meeting—a grand power play.

With unanimity the accord strips an entire section of society of its right to self-government. Northerners—totally unrepresented in the meetings—have lost any real chance to become provinces. They remain fiefdoms. If they do seek provincehood, then they will be held to ransom and blackmailed for part of their homelands and for their right to participate fully in the Constitution. This is virtually a certainty under the accord.

They say that the definition of a politician is a person capable of holding two contradictory views on any topic. That may be true in the normal course of political life, which often deals with vague and ambiguous realities; but there is no room for equivocation when it comes to applying unanimity in an amending formula. Once in place, it is just short of impossible to go back.

With this thought in mind, I was outraged last Friday night by what the Prime Minister said in response to Tony Penikett's plea for sanity and justice in this matter. Some of you may have seen the Prime Minister's performance on television. It was the purest expression of equivocation I have seen in a long time.

He told Tony Penikett, and the public, that unanimity is not to be feared; “It's not hard,” says he; “It's been done before,” says he; “Don't be so negative,” says he. Yet, on the same day, when asked about applying unanimity to the Free Trade Agreement, he rejected the suggestion utterly. Why? Because, in his own words, “Getting unanimity, believe me, is the exception.”

Which Brian Mulroney do we believe? I can only tell you what common sense tells me. Unanimity makes sense only when applied to matters that we all agree should not be questioned or opened up for change except in very extraordinary circumstances. Unanimity defends the status quo in a big way. That is why, in 1982, very few matters were made subject to unanimity. Only “sacred institutions” like the sovereign and minimum language guarantees were to be placed under that onerous procedure. Logic tells me that to apply unanimity to things that do require reform is to invite major trouble. Either those reforms will not happen or someone will have to pay, and pay big. I have already told you how I think northerners will have to pay under unanimity.

As for the prospects for unanimous agreement, I refer you to a recent study published in Policy Options. It clearly shows, using a neutral and objective test, how the unanimity procedure is over 100 times harder to satisfy than the general or “7 and 50” rule. I am not surprised that Brian Mulroney thinks that seven out of ten is good enough in Baie Comeau on free trade. He knows how rare the Meech Lakes of the world really are. So why did he allow it to be imposed on the north?

Mr. Mulroney's "Baie Comeau" rule highlights another point that I want senators to understand. The Prime Minister has said forcefully that the Constitution gives Parliament the exclusive power to make treaties. He won't, he says, run the country by committee when he has the clear right to move alone. The fact that treaty implementation may require provincial action leads to the need for some measure of provincial concurrence. The amending formula does not answer what the test should be. It leaves it open. So that is why we get the "Baie Comeau" rule. That is the rule which means whatever the Prime Minister thinks it ought to mean. It may be "seven out of ten" today, it may be "six and 50 per cent" tomorrow, or it may be unanimous consent next week—we don't know. It's his rule and he can make it up as he goes along.

My point is this: What holds for free trade treaties holds even more strongly for aboriginal rights. The fact is that Parliament has the exclusive jurisdiction over treaty-making with aboriginal people. The federal government could tomorrow enter into a treaty agreement with any or all aboriginal peoples that would recognize and constitutionally entrench self-government. No provincial concurrence is required.

So why hasn't Ottawa done this? Why has Ottawa hidden behind the appearance of provincial veto when no veto is actually involved? Why hasn't Mr. Mulroney ever got up in the House, during one of his "aboriginal peoples are my number one priority" speeches, and got tough with hold-out provinces? Why hasn't he made a stand and protected Parliament's jurisdiction when it is to the benefit of aboriginal peoples?

The answer is simple. Mr. Mulroney and the other First Ministers have not really grasped the reality of the special relationship that Parliament has with aboriginal peoples. The Constitution clearly provides that, if and when necessary, the federal government can exercise a tremendous amount of autonomy in protecting aboriginal rights—up to and including amending the Constitution through treaties and land claim agreements.

We all know that provinces are probably necessary if self-government is to be effectively implemented. That is why we have been using the "7 and 50" rule for the last five years. That is why the aboriginal reform process was written into the Constitution in the way it was.

The First Ministers have now allowed that process to die. This simply highlights how imperfect their grasp of the intent and subtlety of the Constitution truly is. It also means that we may, without your assistance, continue to be tossed about in the uncertainty of "Baie Comeau" rules—and, in fact, that is precisely what has happened to us since last March. Mr. Mulroney keeps coming up with a new "Baie Comeau" rule every time we ask the simple question: "What will it take to restart the aboriginal reform process?"

Where do we go from here—the companion resolution approach? You have all had a chance to look at the companion resolutions option. We have tentatively been raising this idea now for six months, and the paper that we have provided tries to flesh out in concrete terms how it could be implemented. All that the approach asks is that the Senate fulfil its constitutional duty and defend the clear interests and rights of aboriginal peoples and northerners. We are minorities who rely on you as the last and, in this case, only line of defence. The task set before you is one that you know yourselves to be inescapable. The rights that I ask that you uphold and advance are precisely those which the Senate was created to safeguard.

The means to carry out this task is straightforward; it is legal; it is without pretence. You are asked to start the ball rolling. It will be left to others to see through the course that you set. But the task cannot be started, let alone completed, without your initiative.

The Senate is asked to initiate an amendment to reinstate the aboriginal rights procedure that was terminated by the accord. The Senate is asked to correct the disenfranchisement of northerners in the Supreme Court nomination process. Finally, the Senate is asked to put an end to the anti-democratic and colonialist imposition of the unanimity rule on the territories.

I have talked to dozens of politicians about this proposal, in Ottawa and in the provinces, and the response has been overwhelmingly supportive. Questions have, of course, been raised, and I feel it only fair to discuss them with you.

● (1630)

The first question that has been put to me is: "Why can't we do the same thing for other issues?" I have given this question a great deal of consideration. In fact, our original proposal was for five or six companion amendments, including some that were adopted by the Liberals and New Democrats in the joint committee report. These were cut back and the other issues rejected. Why? The reasons are simple and straightforward. The success of the companion resolution option depends on whether it meets certain basic tests. First, only a limited number of amendments that are of the "clear and present danger" nature can be sought as companions to Meech Lake. Second, there can be no reasonable opposition to the changes sought. Third, there must be no reasonable doubt about their objectives or necessity. Fourth, the companion amendments must be companionable, not competitive. They must not challenge or affront the core provisions or objectives of the Meech Lake and Langevin agreements. I do not say that these aspects of the Langevin accord must not be challenged or opposed, only that companion amendments must not be asked to do this.

The companion amendments must not involve this place or any legislature in having to directly amend the wording of the Langevin Accord. It is the stance of at least ten of the First Ministers that the accord is a "seamless web" that cannot be tinkered with for fear of killing the whole. We can disagree, but the companion amendments must not challenge this political reality. In my view, the three companion amendments that we are proposing are the only ones that meet these tests. Other issues are either open to reasonable dispute or they involve changing something essential to the Langevin deal. To add any of them to the companion amendments would also undermine the potential to resolve the more clearly supportable amendments regarding the aboriginal-rights-reform process, northern representation in the Supreme Court, and the effect of unanimity on the establishment of provinces in the north.

I note in passing that apparently the Prime Minister suggested to premiers last week that they collectively jump the Langevin gun and pass amendments affecting the Senate under the section-38 rule. Two of our proposed companion amendments can, and should, proceed without waiting for the Langevin accord. They do not in any way depend on the Langevin accord being proclaimed. However, the difference between my approach and the Prime Minister's approach is that I do not ask the Senate or any legislature to use amendment procedures that would not also apply under the Langevin accord. Again, my approach respects the political reality, even though I do not like that reality.

A second question that has been posed relates not to the companion amendments, as such, but to the reasons for our lack of success between 1983 and 1987. Quebec, as many of you know, has been generally blamed by almost all First Ministers for the failure of the aboriginal reform process. I dispute this. The fact is that while Quebec's non-participation was a problem, it was not an insurmountable one. We did, in fact, amend the Constitution without Quebec in 1983. This is often forgotten. If it was not for the distractions of the impending Meech Lake deal, we could well have had an agreement on self-government in 1987, especially if the Prime Minister had invested the kind of energy he did on behalf of Quebec.

Nevertheless, wouldn't Quebec's active participation be a great thing for us? The reality is that this assertion has nothing to base itself on. I have already indicated that, in fact, Quebec stated earlier this year that it would add a sixth demand to its list if the 1987 FMC was successful. They were ready to demand a retroactive veto over self-government. It is our view that it is going to be no easier to deal with Quebec than it has been to deal with Saskatchewan, British Columbia or Alberta. All the more reason, in my mind, for linking the reinstatement of the formal aboriginal reform process to something that Quebec does appear to want, the Langevin Accord.

In closing I would like to say a word on statements from some quarters to the effect that anyone who opposes what the First Ministers have done is somehow "anti"—anti-Quebec, anti-First Ministers, anti-democracy, anti-everything. I do not mind this so much because I am used to the rough and tumble rhetoric of federal-provincial politics. What I find unacceptable is the implication that the First Ministers cannot be questioned, that there is no room for sober second thought, and that reason and justice have to take a back seat to expediency and power. That is what makes me angry. I was brought up to believe that the rule "let no man put asunder" applies only to things that God has wrought.

It is said that a change to any part of the Langevin accord, however meritorious, will lead to the death of the whole package. The companion resolutions approach respects this stance and the political reality behind it. It can proceed unchanged. The companion amendments I am advocating would not involve the Senate in trying to amend the Langevin accord. But if you were to initiate the amendment procedures I have suggested, the direct, negative and permanent damage done to aboriginal peoples and northerners would be significantly reduced. The Senate can initiate the companion resolutions now, right away. You do not have to wait until you decide on the accord. You may then be in a position to view the Langevin accord in a different light.

The NCC is asking that the Senate be political. Some people are mildly upset by this suggestion. They say that "politics" should not intrude into the Senate's deliberations. In my mind, politics is a matter of achieving the achievable in the here and now. It is not a matter of partisanship or advantage. However, it does mean taking advantage of opportunities that are given you to improve the lot of those you are here to represent. The Senate is here to represent the regional and minority interests and concerns. You are here, above all, to represent those who are not always represented or who are not well represented in the majoritarian politics of elected legislatures. The Senate is not undemocratic. Democracy, it has been said, is the worst of systems, except for all the others. The Senate exists to make sure that false, temporary or shortsighted majorities do not knowingly or carelessly undo the diversity and strength of a country in which the electoral map does not always reflect social and cultural boundaries. The Senate exists to temper the excesses of democracy. The Senate has the constitutional right to exercise its power to initiate constitutional amendments. The companion resolutions are achievable. The case for them is compelling. They are a clear and present necessity.

In adopting the resolutions the Senate would revive its proper role in the process of constitutional reform. Adoption would confirm the importance of the Senate's critical role in safeguarding the rights and status of aboriginal peoples and northerners against the tyranny of any majoritarian House of Commons and the parochial interests of provinces. Finally, the companion resolutions, if adopted, would reflect, in a consistent way, the basic duty of the Senate to uphold fundamental rights and values set out in the Constitution and in its Charter of Rights and Freedoms, both of which are violated in spirit and in letter by the Langevin accord.

I have one other suggestion, and that is that the Senate do as Senator Watt asked some of you to do about one year ago, set up a committee of the Senate to look at aboriginal issues as they affect aboriginal people in Canada. I thank you for the opportunity to be here today.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a point of order. Mr. Bruyère has referred again and again in his presentation to draft companion amendments. We have those amendments before us. May I suggest that those amendments be printed so that the record will be meaningful to people who read it?

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of draft companion amendments, see appendix "C", p. 2282.)

Senator Fairbairn: Mr. Bruyère, before getting to the companion amendments, I would like to ask you, keeping in mind that the federal government has the fundamental responsibility for aboriginal people, whether you and your organization, since the Aboriginal First Minister's Conference and since the Meech Lake and Langevin Accords, have had an opportunity to discuss with officials the background of why, first, native people were excluded from the discussions leading up to the Meech Lake and Langevin Accords, and, second, precisely how your procedure for discussion on self-government will take place, given the fact that funding for this exercise has been removed.

● (1640)

Mr. Bruyère: In answer to your first question, senator, when we asked the question, "Why were we not involved in this process?", the only response we have ever received from the Prime Minister is that none of the matters discussed in the Langevin meetings or Meech Lake meetings affects aboriginal peoples. That was the only response we received from the government side on that subject.

Second, in terms of how we continue this process, since the funding has been cut off, I might say that we find it very difficult, and we will find it much more difficult as time goes on. That is why we see the Senate as being almost our last hope in terms of getting any change in the process back into place.

Senator Fairbairn: On the question of your very innovative proposal for companion amendments, perhaps one of you gentlemen could take me through exactly the process that you have in mind. In other words, is this something that you would foresee being started by the Senate prior to the expiry of our own 180-day suspension of veto procedure? How would you foresee the idea continuing if, at the end of that 180-day process, the accord is reconfirmed by the House of Commons, as it is now? Where would that procedure go after that?

Mr. Bradford Morse, Professor of Law, University of Ottawa: Thank you, Senator Fairbairn.

The Chairman: Are you Mr. Groves?

Mr. Morse: My name is Professor Brad Morse.

Senator Frith: As in "code?"

Mr. Morse: As in "code," yes. Actually, he was a distant relative. However, I will not give my answer in Morse Code, if you do not mind.

Senator, our interpretation of Part V of the Constitution Act of 1982, the amending formula, is that a resolution can be initiated, as in the case with the Langevin accord, in the House of Commons, or it can be initiated in the Senate, or it can be initiated in any provincial legislature in Canada. Therefore, our view of these companion amendments is that they are amendments that can be introduced by way of a resolution emanating from this chamber, or they could emanate from the Government of Prince Edward Island or British Columbia, or from the House of Commons.

In terms of how these companion amendments relate to the Meech Lake Accord from the timeframe of procedural standpoint, our view is that these amendments could be introduced by this chamber tomorrow; that there is no requirement for you to wait out your 180-day period, if that is what this chamber elects to do, or to await your approval or rejection of the resolution that has been ratified in the House of Commons.

Therefore, based on that kind of explanation, there would be no necessity to wait for this matter to then go back to the House of Commons, if you chose not to act within your 180-day period.

However, our further view is that these resolutions could be initiated in this chamber after the 180-day period has expired. Indeed, the Native Council of Canada would recommend to this chamber that it not wait out that period of time. However, it is within your abilities to have the matter introduced in this chamber next summer, next year or the year after. So that these are intended to be companion amendments in the sense that they do not conflict with the language of the Langevin accord, but they are based, obviously, on its existence and on the understanding that that accord has at least been proposed by the House of Commons and is going forward.

Senator Fairbairn: In your view, if seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population supported this proposal now, would you think that these amendments could go ahead separately from the Meech Lake Accord?

Mr. Morse: If we look at the three amendments that we have specifically submitted for the Senate's consideration, very clearly the first one, which deals with the restoration of the First Ministers' conference process relating to aboriginal issues, can definitely go forward without being tied to the results of the Langevin accord.

The second proposal here, dealing with the Supreme Court, really is more directly tied to the Langevin accord. If the Langevin Accord does not become law, then we have not changed the Constitution as to how we appoint judges to the Supreme Court of Canada. There would then not be a necessity for the proposed amendment that we have put forward to ensure that lawyers from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory would be eligible for such appointments.

The final amendment that we have put forward is in relation to the possibility of the territories becoming provinces. Our view of that one is that it could go forward independent of any amendments as proposed in the Meech Lake accord. In effect, what I am suggesting to you is that the Senate can initiate all of these resolutions. If the Meech Lake Accord should die, for one reason or another, there would not be a necessity to go forward with changes on the Supreme Court of Canada's composition and appointments. The other items clearly would be eligible to go forward. If seven provinces approve them and the House of Commons approves them, then they would be eligible to be issued as amendments to the Constitution under the Great Seal of Canada and, as such, would then become part of the law of the land.

Senator Fairbairn: Mr. Bruyère, can you tell me whether at any time the native people were told, or an indication was given to them, that the provision to revisit the question of the amending formula on the creation of new provinces had been abandoned? As I understand it, in 1983 that became part of the new agenda for the aboriginal conferences, and clearly the intent was to go back to pre-1982 so that the amending formula of seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population would not apply; it would revert to an agreement strictly between the northern territories and the federal government.

At any point, was it indicated to you that this proposition was no longer valid?

Mr. Bruyère: No, senator, at no point was it conveyed to us that there was any change in the rules. This is one of the reasons why we cannot understand how the Prime Minister could say that neither the Langevin accord nor the Meech Lake Accord would affect us. In fact, it will directly affect us in terms of the accord we all signed in 1982 on this subject, which meant that we knew we were going to revisit that subject at some point in time, and there was no indication whatsoever from the federal government—or from any of the provinces, for that matter—that they intended to change it.

The Chairman: Senator Marchand, followed by Senator Stewart and Senator Frith.

Senator Marchand: I want to congratulate Mr. Bruyère on his excellent presentation. Some of the matters that he has raised answer many of the questions that I had. However, perhaps he can expand on some of them.

What is the feeling of your organization with respect to the reference to “distinct society” in the Meech Lake Accord as it relates to Quebec? I have heard your statements and those of Mr. Erasmus about the “distinct society” and the fact that there could be no more distinct societies than those of our aboriginal peoples.

I wonder whether you could expand upon that and tell me if you have any proposal as to whether the Constitution should be changed to include references to the aboriginal peoples as “distinct societies.”

Mr. Bruyère: In 1982-83 when the first amendment to the Constitution on aboriginal rights was made, I thought that was putting the aboriginal peoples of Canada in a distinct position. However, in the sense of the aboriginal people in Quebec, there is a fear that this “distinct society” clause will greatly affect the aboriginal peoples of Quebec in terms of the rights that they have as aboriginal peoples. The “distinct society” clause only affects English and French people and does not affect the aboriginal peoples.

Our association in Quebec—the Native Alliance of Quebec—have come forward to us with that fear on behalf of their constituents. We see it as possibly having great implications for the rights of aboriginal peoples. From the national aspect, when we look at the four tests that we have put forward for ourselves in looking at amendments to the Constitution, there is some question about the “distinct society” clause. In that sense, we did not feel that we should raise that as an issue through a companion amendment. If the companion amendments go through as they are, in terms of reinstating the process, then we can deal with that in our second round.

Senator Marchand: I have not seen the reference from your members of Quebec about the “distinct society.” Could you expand on what their fears might be? Under the “distinct society” clause, are they afraid, for instance, that the Province of Quebec may wish to take jurisdiction over reserves?

Mr. Bruyère: The Province of Quebec has always said that they will look after their own within their own province. During the First Ministers’ meetings, when Quebec’s minister was present but the Premier of Quebec was not, that was always the understanding. The Province of Quebec would look after the people within their province, and in that sense the aboriginal peoples would come under provincial—not federal—jurisdiction. That does concern a lot of our people. That clause will greatly affect them, for example, when looking at the off-reserve special education benefits.

There are a number of other ways that will affect them in terms of being designated as aboriginal communities in Quebec. Under this new interpretation they are not aboriginal communities, because that clause deals only with English and French people in Quebec.

Senator Marchand: You will perhaps recall that the Special Committee on Youth recommended that there be a committee established. As I recall, our recommendation was for a standing committee. Could you elaborate on what kind of committee you would like to see established? Would you also indicate what kind of support there is in the native community for this kind of action?

Mr. Bruyère: The committee is a great idea, because it gives our constituents at the community level another opportunity to come forward and voice their concerns over something that directly affects them, such as legislation and the Constitution.

In its first stages the committee could go across the country on a fact-finding mission to find out how much support there is for the government’s position in terms of the legislation they are putting forward. I know there is a lot of support for this committee.

Senator Marchand, you and I talked about this some years ago in terms of how a committee could be set up. There is a good possibility that it would be very acceptable to people across the country, simply because they would have an opportunity to talk to the people who are looking at legislation in terms of the second round. Perhaps senators will look at concerns that members of the House of Commons will not.

Senator Marchand: The Penner Committee on self-government have used ex officio members from the native community as full participants in the committee process, except where exclusive parliamentary decisions were taken. Do you think that model should be used in the committee you are proposing?

Mr. Bruyère: I believe that model could be very useful. However, they were allowed to do that because it was a special committee. They are not allowed to do that with a standing committee. I am not sure what the rules would be if a committee were developed with the Senate, but we would have to look at that in terms of how we would be able to set that up. I think that committee was an excellent idea, and it gave the members of Parliament a different insight into what they were looking at. It was an excellent thing for the aboriginal organizations, because the organizations were directly involved in the decision-making of what the MPs were putting forward as legislation.

Senator Marchand: I heard what you said about the Government of Quebec being around the table and some of the comments they made respecting our people. In the early 1970s when the James Bay project was started, I recall the fight that the Crees and the Inuit—the Crees in particular—had with the Quebec government regarding the implications of the James Bay project. That fight is still very vivid in my memory.

Could you give us more insight into why the Prime Minister stated on so many occasions that it would have been better for our people, during the two meetings respecting aboriginal issues, if the Government of Quebec had been around the table?

Mr. Bruyère: All the premiers continually said that once Quebec was there it would be easier. We have the distinct feeling from the aboriginal communities in Quebec that it would not be any easier if Quebec were sitting at the table and were full partners in the Constitution with regard to aboriginal rights.

Looking back, you can see how the Bourassa government has taken the aboriginal peoples to the cleaners in terms of the James Bay agreement. The Cree and the Inuit have taken the Quebec government and the federal government to court because they have not lived up to the agreement. In that sense, I do not see how Quebec will be of any help to us at the table when they have not lived up to any of the agreements they have already made with the aboriginal peoples in Quebec. We are now asking them to make a national agreement with people across the country, and I do not see how Quebec will help us in any way.

Senator Marchand: Thank you, Mr. Bruyère, for your excellent presentation.

The Chairman: Senator Stewart, followed by Senator Frith.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I have two questions with regard to the "distinct society" rule of interpretation. First, do you think that Parliament has been discharging its responsibilities to the Indian peoples, as set forth in the distribution of powers as between Parliament and provincial legislatures? Second, if the "distinct society" rule of interpretation comes into operation, will that, in your view, open up the possibility that Parliament's capacity to discharge its responsibilities will be altered?

[Senator Marchand.]

• (1700)

Mr. Bruyère: I think the federal government has been shirking its responsibilities to the Indian people in general. One can look at a number of issues in that regard. One can look at the whole issue of non-status Indians and the Métis people of this country and the question of self-government. The federal government has allowed the provinces to become involved in the structures of self-government. That clearly abrogates the federal government's responsibility to Indians and lands reserved for Indians.

When the Native Council of Canada talks about Indians, it talks about all people of Indian ancestry who want to call themselves "Indians." If you look back at the treaties from the maritimes to southern Ontario, they were friendship treaties. All of those treaties said, "And the natural descendants shall derive the benefits of these treaties," or words to that effect. At that time they did not tie things down to being a status Indian with a card and a number on it. They said, "All natural descendants." The federal government has not lived up to its responsibilities in that regard, as far as the Indian people are concerned. It only looks at Indians living on reserves as being under its jurisdiction.

There were at one time three special programs established for Indians who lived off reserves. One was a program providing a special housing allowance, which was taken away in the spring of 1985 when Bill C-31 was enacted to reinstate some Indians. The others relate to post-secondary education and health care. The federal government has not been looking after its responsibilities with respect to those three issues.

Land claims always arise in talks about self-government and how self-government relates to those land claims. In the north right now, where the majority of land claims are, the Indian people and the Métis, the Dene and the Inuit are being told that they cannot discuss self-government in terms of land claims settlements. If land claims are anything, they are real self-government structures in terms of how one sets up one's land and how one looks after one's land, and the infrastructures needed to be put in place.

So, as far as I am concerned, the federal government is not looking after its responsibilities or its area of jurisdiction.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): The second part of my question was: Do you think, notwithstanding the provision that there is to be no derogation from the powers of Parliament, that the application of the "distinct society" rule of interpretation will in fact have the effect of changing the power of Parliament to legislate in relation to Indians?

Mr. Bruyère: I will let our legal-beagle answer that.

Mr. Morse: Thank you, Smokey—I think!

Needless to say, that is a difficult question to answer. Part of our concern is that it is not possible for myself or anyone else to give you a definite answer, or to be able to say, "This is what the Meech Lake Accord will do." Instead, we are ultimately taking a bit of a shot in the dark. You will get legal opinions suggesting one way that may impact and legal opinions suggesting another way that may impact. Ultimately, as Professor Forsey likes to say, it will end up being a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, 5, 10, 25 or more years from now, that will tell us that. We really do not know what the implications of the "distinct society" clause will be. The concerns are that even with the notwithstanding clause that has been put into the Meech Lake Accord to, theoretically, protect the existing sections that deal with aboriginal people, the Government of Quebec may choose to interpret its power to implement the distinct English-French society component in Quebec in ways that impact negatively on aboriginal peoples, such as to say, for example, that education can only take place in English or French, that the Iroquois people and the Mohawk people and the Caughnawaga cannot maintain education in their own language, that the Cree of the James Bay region cannot do that, or the Algonquins of western Quebec cannot do that. We are just not sure. The suggestion that has come from many is that that would be possible.

Given that there is that element of concern, aboriginal peoples are suggesting that they would prefer to see a result that is intended to be a permanent change in Canada, namely, an amendment to the Constitution that is more certain than this. The notwithstanding clause that is proposed is worse than having no such clause, in some ways, because it raises a variety of other unintended negative implications.

But I think the suggestion—and perhaps the majority view of lawyers at this time—is that the "distinct society" clause will enable the Government of Quebec to pursue policies that it could not pursue normally under its section 92 powers, and, during the course of doing so, it can impact negatively on other section 91 powers of the federal government, including its power over Indians and lands reserved for Indians, at least when that is not the sole explicit objective of the legislation.

What Quebec will be saying when it requires education to be given in only English or French is that it is not intentionally depriving aboriginal people from having their own language and instruction in their own language but that that is an unintentional by-product. It will say that its intention is to protect the French language in Quebec, and therefore it is a constitutionally valid exercise of that power. Unfortunately, the results are that aboriginal peoples lose some of their authority.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): The matter dealt with is education or language rather than Indians.

Mr. Morse: Yes.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): My second question relates to one of your proposed companion amendments, the one regarding erecting new provinces. Your amendment is clear. What I want to ask you is why, in your opinion, it was decided to make it impossible to extend existing provinces into the territories, or to erect a new province without unanimous agreement?

What I am trying to discover is the motivation behind that change, the rationale of that, because if there is a valid rationale, it would bear upon the desirability of your proposed amendment.

Do you have any explanation as to why this was done in the Meech Lake agreement? For example, we have a fairly good idea why roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries are placed perpetually on the agenda. One of the premiers told us how that got in there. That gives the Premier of Newfoundland a permanent ace of trumps. What is the explanation for the inclusion of subsections (h) and (i) of the new section 41?

Mr. Bruyère: There are a number of reasons. I will give you some and let Professor Morse give you others.

Back in 1955, or earlier, the provinces expanded their boundaries into the north to acquire resources. Not one of the territories, under this proposal, could become a province without everybody agreeing. Under the old system it was just the federal government. Prior to 1982 the federal government could make a province out of any one of the territories. After 1982 it took seven out of the ten, representing 50 per cent of the population, to make a province. Now it takes all ten of them. It is not likely that there will be a new province, but it makes it more likely that the provinces could then extend their boundaries into the north in terms of the resources that are there. That makes it more saleable to them in terms of why they should not do it.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Are you suggesting that if any greedy province—we will not name one—wanted to extend itself into the territories, it would be easier for it to achieve that than it would be for the territories to become a province?

Mr. Bruyère: It would be easier simply because you would have a number of provinces. A number of provinces in the past have expressed an interest. British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec have all expressed an interest in terms of extending their boundaries north. So that if you have those five provinces, and they go to the table and say to the other provinces, "We will give up something here because we want this," you get back into a power play situation. It makes it much easier for that to happen. Whereas, if you have the territories coming forward only when they are invited to come forward to the First Ministers' table to become a province, it makes it easier for the provinces who so wish to extend their boundaries into the north.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): This is a question, you understand, on which I am fairly sensitive, because Nova Scotia is one of the three or four provinces which have not enriched themselves by engorging parts of the territories with their natural resources. We never had that opportunity—and I do not say that we would have not indulged if we had had it. We look at Quebec, which embraced a great part of the north east of the Ottawa river; and Ontario, which was presented with a great part of the north in 1912 by Mr. Borden.

How relevant is this question, aside from concerns of your own people? How relevant is the possibility of putting the natural resources of the territories under provincial jurisdiction, either by creating a new province or by extending one or more of the provinces? Is that a question which, for some developmental reason, is coming to the fore these days?

Mr. Bruyère: I think it is coming to the fore in a number of ways. I know that the people of the north are certainly concerned about it. When the committee went north, I think it heard quite a bit about the aspect of the provinces being able to extend their boundaries in terms of getting at the natural resources that are there. It is not just the native people in the north who are concerned about this, it is the non-native people as well, because they are the ones who have spent their time there. They have spent part of their lives and part of their earnings in that country and they want the benefit to remain in that country and not come down south all of the time. I think that you will find a lot of opposition to extending the boundaries to the north, because those people want to be able to take advantage of their own resources. They now consider them to be their own resources, because they have spent a lot of time in that area of the country. In that sense, there is a lot of opposition from everyone—not just native people in terms of section 41(e) and (f).

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Those are the questions that I wanted to ask, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Senator Frith, followed by Senator Marsden and Senator Fairbairn.

Senator Frith: I just have one question, and I imagine that Professor Morse will be the one to deal with it. I ask this question to understand the practical consequences of your suggestion for companion amendments.

Section 38 of the 1982 amending formula provides that:

An amendment... may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions—

Notice that that is plural, and not a joint resolution, which it used to be prior to 1982—

—resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons;

Which must mean separate resolutions. It goes on to say:
and

(b) resolutions—

Again, plural—

—of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have,...

Therefore, if we passed a companion amendment, it would really be a solo effort. In fact, you are proposing that it be a solo effort. Assuming that we passed it, there is no way that we can force anything to happen, because it is not like, for example, bills or other resolutions that are sometimes sent from the House of Commons to the Senate asking for concurrence or vice versa. Prior to 1982 it was a joint address, with the participation of the provinces not being clear—there was almost every possible form of provincial participation, including, in some cases, none. The joint address was to the Queen and the British Parliament, because they were the ones who had to make the necessary amendment.

[Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough).]

Let us assume that we pass these draft companion amendments. What pressure will there be on the other partners to the process? The other partners to the process are the House of Commons, dominated by the present government, and the provinces, all of whom except Premier McKenna have supported the present Meech Lake agreement. What pressure would there be on any of them to do anything, or is your idea simply that we would draw attention to the question?

In practical terms, it seems to me that there is no pressure on anyone else to do anything after the Senate has amended it—assuming that the Senate does what you are suggesting.

Mr. Morse: Perhaps I could respond to that from a legal perspective, and then I will turn it over to Mr. Bruyère to give you a political one, as he has spoken to nine of the ten premiers last week.

My interpretation of the Constitution, which I gather is supported by the government—including the government leader in this chamber—is that such a resolution can be initiated in the Senate. The effect of such a resolution legally is that it initiates the amendment process—

Senator Frith: I have no quarrel with that at all. I totally agree with that.

Mr. Morse:—under the Constitution.

Senator Frith: But then what?

Mr. Morse: There is no obligation, as such, on the House of Commons or any provincial legislature to move such a resolution as there is no obligation on any of the provinces to move the Meech Lake Accord, other than the political commitment of those First Ministers who signed it. Under the Constitution there is an effect, namely, that if nothing happens in three years, then the resolution is dead.

Our perception is that there are a couple of effects. First, given the constitutional convention that has begun to develop in Canada over the last five years, a resolution that is initiated will be considered by all other relevant law-making bodies, namely, any of the other provincial legislatures and the two Houses of Parliament.

• (1720)

Furthermore, there is a particular provision in the Constitution that has some impact in reference to these companion resolutions, especially the first one which we have proposed. Section 35.1 of the Constitution Act, 1982 compels the Prime Minister to convene a First Ministers' conference, inviting aboriginal people to appear when there is an amendment that affects any of the aboriginal provisions.

Our view is that if the Senate were to move this companion resolution, one clear legal effect would be that the Prime Minister would be compelled to convene another First Ministers' conference and invite aboriginal people. Again, that does not mean that the Government of Canada has to change its position at such a meeting, nor does it mean that the government, using its majority in the House of Commons, must pass such a proposed amendment, but it does have a triggering effect on section 35.1, which then triggers the First Ministers' conference.

Our hope and firm belief is, given the incredibly high level of public support for aboriginal peoples in Canada—on the opinion polls of last winter some 77 per cent of Canadians supported the aboriginal position—that this will create the kind of public pressure that leads to political pressure that will lead to government action.

Perhaps Mr. Bruyère can advise you as to what the premiers are saying in reference to this precise proposal by indicating how politically significant it can be.

Mr. Bruyère: As I said earlier, I have been discussing this with a lot of people over the last six months. Last week, in Toronto, at the First Ministers' conference, which I attended as an observer, I was able to talk to all of the premiers with the exception of Premier Frank McKenna, because, quite clearly, every time he moved from the table, there was a federal cabinet minister, a provincial cabinet minister or a provincial premier waiting to talk to him. Therefore, I did not have an opportunity to talk to him.

However, I did have an opportunity to talk to all the other premiers, and they were all quite amazed at the fact that nobody else had thought of this process. They were very interested in it and wanted to look at it. As a result, since last Friday we have sent out copies of this to all the premiers and the appropriate ministers so that they can consider it.

What I asked the premiers was whether some of them would consider placing this before their legislatures. A number of them expressed a direct interest in doing something such as that.

Last spring, at the First Ministers' Conference, Premier Buchanan was very supportive of the aboriginal positions. He was very supportive of this process that we are now asking the Senate to initiate.

Premier Howard Pawley was also very interested. Premier Peterson was very interested. I did spend quite a bit of time with Premier Vander Zalm and he was interested, but God only knows what that means. I spent about an hour with Premier Getty and he seemed to be genuinely concerned that something had to be done for aboriginal peoples, but he felt there had to be a "Made in Alberta" product, and he indicated that the Alberta government is dealing with that through the Alberta constitution. He said that he would not step in the way of any national change. Premier Devine told us that he could not see anything that would necessarily convene another First Ministers' conference, but he was willing to sit down and talk about the issue to determine the direction we could take.

There was a good show of interest and support across the country. This is the first time I have had an opportunity to talk to all the First Ministers since last March, and I was very encouraged by it. It looks as if something could happen, and that is why we are trying to initiate this step here.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I would certainly like to debate with Professor Morse the question of whether this idea of a convention that he refers to has taken hold under the 1982 amendment, and also whether the Senate, by using the expression "initiating a process," indicates being affected by the previous procedures. It was initiating a process then, but it is initiating a resolution now, not necessarily a process, because we do not send it along to anyone else.

However, if the political will is there to do it, then I have no doubt that this formula will work. The problem, of course, would still be the House of Commons, but I take it your position is that if you get the Senate and enough of the provincial premiers and, therefore, the provincial legislatures on side, that that would have an embarrassing effect on the House of Commons and it would have a useful effect on your cause.

Mr. Morse: We have not received any indication from the Government of Canada that they are opposed to these companion methods. What Prime Minister Mulroney has continually said is that we cannot touch the Meech Lake Accord itself. Given that that is his firm and public position, we have attempted to come forward with an alternative proposal that still allows him to maintain his view that the Meech Lake Accord cannot be touched in any way—the seamless web that will unravel if a puncture is made—yet still allow some of the defects that are present, and are accepted as present in the Meech Lake Accord, to be rectified. There is then, at least, some opportunity for the current government to change its position on this, particularly if it is evident that there are provincial legislatures which are in agreement with the Senate if the Senate chooses to act in this way.

Senator Frith: Perhaps you want to start another loom.

Mr. Bruyère: The legislature in Saskatchewan presented a resolution similar to that contained in Annex 1. It was put forward by one of the members and it was defeated by a vote of 29 to 21. They almost changed the Meech Lake Accord.

Senator Frith: I would like to add one comment just because it is the appropriate time. I have never understood the metaphor "seamless web." A web, I take it, is a web that is made by spiders and, of course, it is absolutely full of seams. It seems to me to be not a very good metaphor, but, nonetheless, everyone seems to understand it, so I suppose it works.

Senator Marsden: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question and it is one of clarification.

In your discussion of the companion amendments and why they must be restricted to those that you have presented to us this afternoon you argued—and I trust I have this correctly—that it would not be possible to propose an amendment that would come into conflict with the intention of the Meech Lake Accord.

As you know, some of us are very worried about the conflict between the Charter of Rights and this "distinct society" clause. In responding to Senator Stewart's question about the "distinct society" Professor Morse said that he was just not sure what that means. I assume that you are sure that a "distinct society" takes precedence over the Charter, otherwise one would be able to add a companion amendment clarifying that. Am I interpreting you correctly?

Mr. Morse: I think that one of the effects of the notwithstanding clause that was put in here, that was intended to address possible concerns from aboriginal peoples and other ethnic groups, namely, clause 16 of the Meech Lake Accord, by virtue of the language that it uses, which is that section 2 of the "distinct society" clause now going into the Constitution Act of 1867 is not intended to touch a small list—under a standard principle of statutory interpretation that you would readily be so advised by your counsel—one must come to the conclusion that section 2, therefore, does touch everything that is not mentioned on the list. There is a very old principle, inclusio unius est exclusio alterius, which is the Latin expression for those Latinophiles in the chamber. The effect, then, would be that there is a suggestion that section 2 can be allowed to override other provisions of the Charter.

Of course, the Government of Quebec has had the ability to override provisions of the Charter, and, under the former government, exercised that power, namely, the section 33 opt-out provision.

Our feeling is that although we are clearly dissatisfied with the "distinct society" clause as it is drafted because of the uncertainty it raises in relation to the rights of aboriginal peoples in Quebec, amending the notwithstanding clause is truly an amendment of the Meech Lake Accord. If the Prime Minister is to be taken at his word—and many premiers have said the same—that we cannot touch the Meech Lake Accord, that whether we are happy with it or not, it is now a deal that is cast in stone, then we have concluded that all we can do, at least over the short run, is try to seek changes that complement the Meech Lake Accord and thereby rectify some of its unintended abuses without actually trying to amend any of the clauses contained in it.

• (1730)

Senator Marsden: Therefore, you conclude that the precedence of "distinct society" over the Charter is an intended abuse. Could you say "yes" into the microphone?

Mr. Morse: Let me put it this way: If the First Ministers did not intend it, then perhaps it was due to the problem in trying to draft constitutional amendments at 3 o'clock in the morning. Of course, the same First Ministers have been telling aboriginal peoples for a number of years, "We can't draft in a rush; we must draft with great care; we must know what everything means," and for that reason we engaged in dozens and dozens of meetings at the technical and ministerial levels as well as the four First Ministers' Conferences. Therefore, one either concludes that they intended this or that they made the mistake of not following their own advice, because the result is language that does have that effect. The only way we can readily see addressing that so as to cover all of the concerns being voiced by a number of different groups, women's groups and others, would be to amend the Meech Lake Accord. And that, we are advised by nine of ten premiers and by the Prime Minister, cannot be done.

Senator Fairbairn: Mr. Chairman, my question was asked by Senator Stewart and had to do with the extension of boundaries, which was such a large issue when we travelled in the north. I can only hope that it will not be necessary to get a higher power than the Pope to get you back into the constitutional process!

Mr. Bruyère: Do you have one in mind?

Senator Fairbairn: Thank you very much, gentlemen.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions?

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, just for the record, I must withdraw my criticism of the metaphor "seamless web." In checking the Oxford Illustrated I found the first definition of "web" to be "a woven fabric, especially whole piece, in process of weaving or after coming from the loom." So there are indications of some webs that might have seams. However, I return to my other metaphor, that the witnesses are seeking to set up another loom.

The Chairman: In the name of honourable senators, I wish to thank the two witnesses who appeared this afternoon from the Native Council of Canada. That, honourable senators, concludes this afternoon's session on the Meech Lake Accord.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee adjourn, report progress, and ask for leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake Accord and texts subsequently agreed to were referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, because the task force on the Meech Lake Accord is required to report to the Committee of the Whole next Tuesday, I move that the committee have leave to sit again Tuesday next, December 8, 1987.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the acting whip on our side tells me that all of the items standing in the names of senators on this side—I am always worried when I use that expression and look over at loyal attendants Corbin and Le Moyne. Perhaps I will say that all remaining orders adjourned in the name of Liberal senators will stand.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Not having done a poll on this side, honourable senators, I will, nevertheless, risk offering the same message to the house and move that all remaining orders stand.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, having gotten away with that one, I move that all inquiries stand.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 2240)

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

WEDNESDAY, December 2, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred an inquiry calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability and advantages of the Turks and Caicos Islands becoming a part of Canada; the support for such action among the Turks and Caicos Islanders and Canadians; and whether any of the following steps might be usefully taken prior to a formal union or association:

- 1) adaption of a common currency;
- 2) designation of Canada's Governor General as the Queen's representative for the Islands;
- 3) a closer economic association between the two countries;
- 4) any change in procedures to our mutual advantage that would assist the entry of Canadians to the Islands, and of Islanders to Canada; and
- 5) provision of efficient direct air service between the two countries.

has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of March 17, 1987, examined the said reference and now reports as follows:

The Committee held an in camera meeting with two witnesses from the Department of External Affairs, Mr. John Graham, Director-General, Caribbean and Central America Bureau and Mr. Myles Godfrey of the Western European Division. Mr. Frederick Livingston, Senior Country Program Director, Caribbean Region, Americas Branch, from CIDA also gave testimony at this meeting.

The Turks and Caicos Islands are two groups of Caribbean islands which geographically form the south-eastern archipelago of the Bahamian chain. They lie about 500 miles southeast of Florida and about 90 miles north of Haiti and the Dominican Republic. The Caicos group of islands is separated from the Turks group by a 22 mile-wide channel - the Turks Island Passage. The total land area of the Islands is estimated at 193 square miles. The Turks and Caicos Islands have a pleasant, warm climate, although they lie in a zone that is hit occasionally by hurricanes. Only six of the more than 30 islands are inhabited. According to the last census, the total population numbered about 8,000. There has been substantial emigration from the islands, notably 14,000 islanders who have gone to the Bahamas to live and work. In recent years, substantial immigration to the Islands, much of it illegal, has taken place, mainly from Haiti and the Dominican Republic. Haitians are now said to constitute 10 percent of the population.

The status of the Turks and Caicos Islands is that of a British Associated State. They constitute an internally self-governing dependency with a ministerial system of government. Under the 1976 constitution, the Governor appointed by the United Kingdom, retains responsibility for external affairs, internal security, defence and certain other matters. Otherwise he is normally required to act on the advice of the Executive Council. This Council comprises the Governor, the Chief Minister who is elected by and from among the elected members of the Legislative Council, three official members -- the Chief Secretary, the Financial Secretary and the Attorney General -- and three other ministers from among the elected members of the Legislative Council. The Legislative Council consists of eleven elected members, three members appointed by the Governor after consultation and three ex-officio members. The Turks and Caicos have two major political parties: the Progressive National Party (PNP) and the People's Democratic Movement (PDM).

In July 1986, following a commission of inquiry into alleged government corruption, the British government suspended the ministerial functions after the Commissioner had reported that three ministers, including the Chief Minister, were guilty of unconstitutional behaviour and of ministerial malpractice and were unfit to hold office. The presiding Chief Minister and two other elected members were arrested and are serving jail sentences in Florida for drug trafficking offences.

Since that time, as an interim measure, the Islands have been administered by the Governor with the aid of an appointed advisory council composed partly of members of the Legislative Council. A constitutional commission headed by Sir Roy Marshall was appointed to review the situation and its report was presented to the British Parliament on March 31, 1987. This report recommended a restoration of the ministerial system, the holding of new elections and certain new administrative arrangements. The U.K. government subsequently announced that new elections would be held in 1988.

The present Governor, charged with the administration of the Islands since the 1986 suspension of the government, has no mandate to discuss a proposed association between the Islands and Canada. Nor has he or members of the advisory council made any moves to do so. For this reason, the British Government could be expected to react negatively to any formal Canadian initiative for closer economic or political links at this time and to consider it as a challenge to its sovereignty over the Turks and Caicos Islands. Accordingly, there is need for great caution on the part of Canada, particularly during the period when there is no elected government on the Islands.

The Committee concludes that caution is all the more called for since the U.K. government has indicated that a duly-elected legislature will be in place by 1988. In the opinion of the Committee, the earliest appropriate time for Canada to consider this subject would be after the 1988 elections on the Islands and then only if and when the new Turks and Caicos government raised the subject with Canada. Canada not having had a colonial past, could send the wrong signals abroad respecting its international posture if it were to take the initiative in this matter, even after a new government has been elected for the Islands.

The Committee recommends that the Canadian Government should take no initiative of its own nor support any proposal either from the Turks and Caicos Islands or Canada to form a closer political or economic association.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE C. VAN ROGGEN
Chairman

---

APPENDIX "B"(See p. 2242)THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88*REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C)

---

WEDNESDAY, December 2, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

FOURTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, were referred, in obedience to the Order of Reference of November 19, 1987, submits its report as follows:

The Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses:

From the Treasury Board:

Mr. A.J. Darling, Deputy Secretary, Program Branch;
Mr. Brent DiBartolo, Chief, Estimates Division.

The appendix to this report contains some material prepared by Treasury Board at the request of the Committee; this material is classified under the following four section headings:

1. List of One-dollar Votes Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1987-88 and Additional Explanations;
2. Summary of Voted Items (greater than $5 million) Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1987-88;
3. Statutory Items Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1987-88; and
4. Summary of Expenditure Framework and Estimates for 1987-88.

Supplementary Estimates (C), totalling $2.9 billion are the first regular supplementary estimates for the 1987-88 year. They were preceded by two special supplementary estimates; Supplementary Estimates (A) totalled $700 million for a special grains program and Supplementary Estimates (B) totalled $693 million for regional industrial development. Of the total $2.9 billion, $1.0 billion is required for statutory purposes while the remaining $1.9 billion is being requested as new spending authority. The sixteen items which make up the $1.0 billion for statutory programs are briefly described in section 3 of the appendix. The voted items having a value of greater than $5 million are described in section 2. The Committee was informed that there are seventeen one-dollar votes included in these estimates; twelve authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another; four authorize the payment of grants; and one seeks to increase the loan guarantee authority of Indian and Northern Affairs with respect to mortgages for Indians.

These supplementary estimates bring the total estimates for the year to $114.4 billion, of which $114.3 is for budgetary purposes. Viewed another way, these estimates bring the total statutory estimates for the year to $73.2 billion or 64.0% of the total and the voted estimates to $41.2 billion, or 36.0%. A summary of the main and supplementary estimates for 1987-88 showing cumulative totals is shown in section 4 of the appendix.

The remainder of this report focusses on aspects of these estimates.

Reduction in the Valuation of Assets

Of the $2.9 billion requested in these estimates, a total of $1.36 billion is required for debt forgiveness and asset revaluations for crown corporations. While this amount is requested, it will not appear as an expenditure nor will it affect the deficit since an allowance has been made in past years in the Statement of Assets and Liabilities in the Public Accounts of Canada.

Each fall, the Treasury Board asks departments whether the value of loans or investments in crown corporations for which they are responsible, is fully recoverable. At the end of the year, if these loans or investments have not been forgiven formally and remain unlikely to be recovered, their total value is included in the "allowance for valuation" item in the Statement of Assets and Liabilities in the Public Accounts. The effect of this is to reduce the total value of the loans or investments in this statement. At the end of the 1985-86 fiscal year the total value of the "allowances for evaluation" item with crown corporations stood at $3.7 billion.

When the government decides to forgive the value of a specific loan or investment in a crown corporation, it notifies Parliament through the supplementary estimates process. If this reduction has already been accounted for in the "allowance for valuation" item, the net value of assets does not change. That is, the recoverable amount of loans or investments in specific crown corporations is reduced and the general "allowance for valuation" item is reduced by the same amount.

In these supplementary estimates the government is indicating that loans or investments to specific crown corporations totalling $1.36 billion is to be forgiven and that the general reserve, "allowance for valuation" is to be reduced accordingly. Some of the major corporations affected are: St. Lawrence Seaway Authority ($625 million); Marine Atlantic ($327.6 million); Montreal Port Corporation ($133 million); Vancouver Port Corporation ($76.5 million); Saint John Port Corporation ($37.8 million); and the Jacques Cartier and Champlain Bridge Inc. ($60 million).

The Committee was informed that in 1979 the government decided that part of the loans to some crown corporations was unrecoverable. At the same time, officers of these corporations were also informed of this decision. The Committee was unable to obtain any good reason why eight years had elapsed between the time of declaring these loans uncollectable and the time of their forgiveness. If the government had anticipated that there was some possibility of collecting these loans, a delay would have been considered reasonable. But this was not the case. The Committee concluded that since no collection action on these loans was anticipated, they should have been forgiven in 1979 when they were considered uncollectable.

VIA Rail

The Department of Transport seeks authority to provide VIA Rail with $122 million for operating requirements over and above the $500 million granted in the Main Estimates. The Committee learned that VIA Rail, like other crown corporations, is accountable to a Minister of the Crown through an annual submission of a corporate plan. Treasury Board officials indicated that they carefully scrutinize all requests such as that of VIA Rail to ensure that the money is to be used with due regard for economy and efficiency. Yet, it was clear that Treasury Board does not interfere with management's responsibility to deliver an effective service.

The Committee has, for some time, been concerned that the effectiveness of public enterprises is not being reported adequately. The Auditor General's mandate in the area is to ensure that there are adequate procedures in place to measure effectiveness. It is not his responsibility to report on effectiveness. The Part III's in the Estimates report on effectiveness of government operations, but do so very inconsistently. The Committee intends to follow-up in this area by undertaking a review of the responsibilities for reporting on effectiveness through comprehensive auditing of public enterprises.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

APPENDIX TO THE REPORT

LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES
INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1987-88

The 17 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates are listed in Appendix I by ministry and agency along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates.

These One Dollar Votes are grouped below into categories according to their prime purpose. The votes are also identified in Appendix 1, according to these categories. The category for each vote has been designated by an "X". In those instances where a vote falls into more than one category, the prime category is designated by an "X" and other categories by an "*".

- A. Twelve votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)
- B. Four votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)
- C. One miscellaneous vote which adjusts the amount of loan guarantees associated with on-reserve housing and for the Indian Economic Development program. (An additional explanation is provided for the Indian Affairs and Northern Development Vote 5 in Appendix II.)

Estimates Division
November 16, 1987

APPENDIX IList of One Dollar Votes in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1987-88

Page	Department/Agency	Vote	Categories
			A	B	C
16	Communications	1c	X
34	Employment and Immigration	15c		X
60	External Affairs - Canadian International Development Agency	30c		X
72	Indian Affairs and Northern Development	5c			X
78	Indian Affairs and Northern Development	35c	X	*
86	Justice	1c	X
94	National Health and Welfare	1c	X	*
96	National Health and Welfare	10c	X
100	National Health and Welfare	20c	X
104	National Health and Welfare	35c	X
106	National Health and Welfare	45c	X
108	National Health and Welfare	55c	X
138	Transport	10c		X
138	Transport	25c	X
138	Transport	35c	X
148	Treasury Board	1c		X
150	Veterans Affairs	1c	X

APPENDIX IIAdditional ExplanationCategory C - Miscellaneous $1.00 Votes:Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Vote 5c To extend certain authorities made under the provisions of Vote 5, Appropriation Act No. 3, 1972 and Vote L53b, Appropriation Act No. 1, 1970.

Explanation Through 1972-73 Main Estimates, Parliament authorized the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to guarantee loans made to Indians by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and other approved lenders. The cumulative aggregate amount outstanding was not to exceed $25,000,000, which has been increased several times, reaching $350M in October 1985. This vote seeks to increase the guarantee authority to $575,000,000.

Vote L53b of Appropriation Act No. 1, 1970 authorized the establishment of a program of loans and loan guarantees for the purpose of assisting Indian economic development. Since its creation, Appropriation acts have been used variously to increase the level of loan and/or guarantee and/or statutory default payment authorities. The purpose of this vote is to rationalize at a level of $60,000,000 the combined amount of loan guarantees and statutory default payments under this program.

Summary of Voted Items ($5M or Greater)
Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1987-88

Department		Funds Transferred ($Millions)	Increased Appropriation Requested ($Millions)	Total ($Millions)
	Item

AGRICULTURE

Agri-food Program

-	Freight Rate Assistance Program for Grain Producers	-	19.0	19.0
-	Payments for producers for designated Agricultural Commodities	-	9.0	9.0
-	Tobacco Diversification Plan	-	6.5	6.5

Canadian Forestry Service

-	Federal-Provincial Forest Renewal Agreements	-	19.9	19.9
-	Increased contribution to the Maritime Forest Research Complex	-	8.0	8.0

COMMUNICATIONS

-	Transfer of National Programs from National Museums	11.5	-	11.5
-	Increase in the Cultural Initiatives Program	-	6.0	6.0

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

-	Write-off recorded financial claims	-	6.3	6.3
---	-------------------------------------	---	-----	-----

NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA

-	New Accommodations	-	17.2	17.2
---	--------------------	---	------	------

EMPLOYMENT & IMMIGRATION

Immigration Program

-	Additional Operating Costs	-	9.3	9.3
---	----------------------------	---	-----	-----

Summary of Voted Items ($5M or Greater)
Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1987-88

Department		Funds Transferred ($Millions)	Increased Appropriation Requested ($Millions)	Total ($Millions)
	Item
ENERGY, MINES &amp; RESOURCES
-	CEDIP Administrative Requirement	-	9.4	9.4
ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED
-	Nuclear Power Demonstration decommissioning program	-	8.0	8.0
EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
-	Summits Management Office	-	21.2	21.2
-	Participation in EXPO 88, Brisbane, Australia	-	5.9	5.9
CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION
-	Forgiveness of financial claims	-	10.0	10.0
CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGCY
-	Class grant for international institutions and organizations	5.0	-	5.0
FINANCE
-	Additional Operating Costs	-	10.8	10.8
INDIAN AFFAIRS &amp; NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT
Indian and Inuit Affairs Program
-	Implementation of an Act to amend the Indian Act	-	9.7	9.7
-	Indian Child Welfare Agreements	-	5.6	5.6
Transfer Payments to Territorial Gov'ts
-	Provision of justice services under the Young Offenders Act	-	17.3	17.3
-	Transfer of forest resource program to GNWT	7.1	16.9	24.0

Summary of Voted Items ($5M or Greater)
Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1987-88

Department	Item	Funds Transferred ($Millions)	Increased Appropriation Requested ($Millions)	Total ($Millions)
NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION
-	Loans for capital expenditures	-	6.7	6.7
HEALTH AND WELFARE
-	Funding for the National Drug Strategy	1.3	4.6	5.9
-	Increased non-insured health services to registered Indian & Inuits	-	46.5	46.5
-	Olympics 88 National Communications Program	-	7.5	7.5
HOUSE OF COMMONS
-	Members Annual Allocations	-	6.0	6.0
NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL OF CANADA
-	Space Station Major Crown Project	-	21.6	21.6
SECRETARY OF STATE
-	Official languages promotion	-	5.1	5.1
SUPPLY AND SERVICES
-	Unsolicited Proposals Program (UPP)	-	10.0	10.0
TRANSPORT
-	Forgiveness of debt and interest - various Crown Corporations	-	1,349.4	1,349.4
-	Payment to Marine Atlantic Inc.	24.4	-	24.4
-	VIA Rail - Operating Requirements	-	111.9	111.9

STATUTORY ITEMS INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1987-88

Increases (to previous projections)

-	$ 350,000,000	Energy	Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program
-	$ 330,000,000	Fiscal Transfer Payments	Fiscal Equalization
-	$ 275,000,000	Public Debt	Public Debt Charges
-	$ 93,000,000	Agri-Food	Payments for named commodities under the Agriculture Stabilization Act
-	$ 63,000,000	Income Security	Old Age Security Payments
-	$ 52,626,084	Northern Canada Power Commission	Write-off certain debts and obligations
-	$ 26,400,000	Energy	Canada/Newfoundland Development Fund
-	$ 14,500,000	Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation	Loans to the Corporation in accordance with the CDIC Act
-	$ 5,000,000	Grains and Oilseeds	Payments in connection with the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act
-	$ 2,500,000	Energy	Canada/Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board

Decreases (from previous projections)

-	$ 150,000	Fiscal Transfer Payments	Statutory Subsidies
-	$ 3,819,000		Youth Allowances Recovery
-	$ 5,000,000	Energy	Payments to Nova Scotia
-	$ 30,000,00	Agri-Food	Reduced payments under the Crop Insurance Act
-	$ 75,000,000	Income Security	Guaranteed Income Supplement payments
-	$ 84,000,000		Spouse's Allowances payments

SUMMARY OF EXPENDITURE FRAMEWORK AND ESTIMATES FOR 1987-88

Expenditure Framework at time of Main Estimates

Budgetary Main Estimates	$110.1 billion
Projected Total Budgetary Estimates	$114.0 billion
Projected Budgetary Expenditures (includes consolidation of accounts)	$122.5 billion

ESTIMATES TABLED TO DATE FOR 1987-88

	TO BE VOTED	STATUTORY (in thousands of dollars)	TOTAL
Main Estimates
Budgetary	$37,826,901	$72,314,176	$110,141,077
Non-Budgetary	59,184	(128,545)	(69,361)
	$37,886,085	$72,185,631	$110,071,716
Supplementary Estimates (A)
Budgetary	$700,000	-	$700,000
Non-Budgetary	-	-	-
	$700,000	-	$700,000
Supplementary Estimates (B)
Budgetary	$583,110	-	$583,110
Non-Budgetary	110,000	-	110,000
	$693,110	-	$693,110
Supplementary Estimates (C)
Budgetary	$1,871,808	$ 999,557	$2,871,365
Non-Budgetary	8,889	14,500	23,389
	$1,880,697	$1,014,057	$2,894,754
TOTAL ESTIMATES TABLES
Budgetary	$40,981,819	$73,313,733	$114,295,552
Non-Budgetary	178,073	(114,045)	64,028
	$41,159,892	$73,199,688	$114,359,580*

*Details do not add to total due to rounding.

Present Expenditure Framework

Total Budgetary Estimates	$114.4 billion
Projected Total Budgetary Estimates	$116.9 billion
Projected Budgetary Expenditures (includes consolidation of accounts)	$124.2 billion

APPENDIX "C"

(See p. 2262)

DRAFT COMPANION AMENDMENTS

NATIVE COUNCIL OF CANADA
OTTAWA, DECEMBER 2, 1987

ANNEX 1

Draft Companion Amendment

Issue 1: Reinstatement of the Aboriginal Reform Process

SCHEDULE

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987(A)

Constitution Act, 1982

1. The Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35.1 thereof, the following section:

"35.2 (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened at least once every five years by the Prime Minister of Canada to address matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples, the first such conference to be convened no later than one year after this section comes into force.

(2) For each conference convened under subsection (1), the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

CITATION

2. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987(A).

---

Note 1. This amendment requires application of the s. 38 general amendment procedure and is not consequential to or reliant on the passage of the proposed Constitution Amendment , 1987 (Langevin Accord).

Draft Companion Amendment

Territorial Representation in the Supreme Court

SCHEDULE

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987(B)

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection 101C.(4) thereof, the following subsection:

"(5) For greater certainty, a reference in this section to the government of a province other than Quebec or to the bar of that province shall include the government of a territory and the bar of that territory."

CITATION

2. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987(B).

---

Note 1. This amendment would require application of the unanimous amending procedure (s. 41) and is consequential to passage of the proposed Constitution Amendment, 1987 (Langevin Accord).

ANNEX 3

Draft Companion Amendment*Establishment of Provinces in the Territories

SCHEDULE

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987(C)

Constitution Act, 1982

1. The Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 44 thereof, the following section:

"44A. Notwithstanding anything in this Part, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the establishment of provinces in the Yukon or Northwest Territories."

OR

1. The Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 45 thereof, the following section:

"45A. Notwithstanding anything in this Part, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the establishment of provinces in the Yukon or Northwest Territories may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1)."

CITATION

2. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987(C).

---

Note 1. Either of these amendments would require the application of the unanimous procedure (s. 41) but would not, as drafted, be consequential to or reliant on passage of the proposed Constitution Amendment, 1987 (Langevin Accord).

---

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 3, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I want to table new information on the Billy Bishop inquiry which is revealing and relieving. The release was telephoned to me by the National Film Board. I quote the following release:

The National Film Board of Canada today announced that an historical documentary about Canada's World War I hero, Billy Bishop, will soon go into production.

The NFB has already done one film on Billy Bishop, a docu-drama that gives a perspective on the nature of heroism and the legend of Billy Bishop, entitled "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss." The NFB feels it is also important to make a documentary on Canada's most decorated military figure, Billy Bishop. The production will be entirely financed by the National Film Board.

Honourable senators, my reaction was to respond to that release by indicating that I was pleased to hear from the board that a documentary on Bishop's career was planned. I added the following:

A new film, a real documentary about Bishop, will be welcomed. It is obvious that the NFB has recognized the concerns of veterans and other members of the general public who are admirers of Billy Bishop. In my opinion, the board deserves credit for taking the initiative in making a true documentary about Canada's most highly decorated military figure.

Honourable senators, I contacted individually all the members of the subcommittee and I will be reporting to the committee on December 7. At that meeting a detailed position will be agreed upon in light of today's announcement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT ACT CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 3, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

FIFTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-46, An Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, November 17, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Leblanc (Saurel), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE PRESENTED, PRINTED AS APPENDIX AND ADOPTED

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord has the honour to present its second report respecting authorization to incur special expenditures in accordance with the guidelines governing the financing of Senate committees.

I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this House.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 2300.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be now adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

[English]

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Molgat to explain the item of approximately $50,000 for professional and clerical services.

Senator Molgat: I believe that the report has been distributed to all honourable senators. The request for funds arises out of a decision made by the steering committee, which was reported to the Committee of the Whole and approved, that we place advertisements in newspapers across Canada advising Canadians that the Senate is carrying out a study of the Meech Lake Accord and subsequent texts and that it would welcome briefs from Canadians. There has been some urgency in this matter, because, as senators are aware, if the Senate wishes to express an opinion by means of a resolution, there is a deadline of 180 days under the present constitutional arrangements within which to do so. Therefore, the advertisement should be placed very soon. The $50,000 amount, then, is to provide for the advertisements across Canada and for the assistance of technical personnel dealing with that matter.

Senator Phillips: Before asking my second question, honourable senators, I should say that we are very glad to have the honourable senator back from his "vacation" in Haiti.

I find it rather odd that the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole, which have been reported in the Debates of the Senate, do not constitute sufficient notice. Is the honourable senator implying that the record of the Senate is insufficient notice to the general public?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I should first like to thank the Honourable Senator Phillips for his comments about my return. I, too, am glad to be back. With regard to his specific question, I wish that all Canadians would indeed read the Debates of the Senate. I think it would be a great advantage to the nation if they did, but, unfortunately, they do not. There seems to have been some confusion in the minds of people regarding the hearings on the Meech Lake Accord. Because there was a joint committee sitting during the summer, some people concluded that when that committee reported and the House of Commons passed its resolution the matter had come to an end.

Senator Frith: I told you so!

Senator Molgat: That is not the case, of course. The Senate has a major responsibility in this regard. In fact, it seems to me that the Senate, on constitutional matters, has a prime responsibility as the body charged with regional representation. So, the decision of the steering committee—it was a motion passed by the steering committee and reported to and approved by the Committee of the Whole—was that advertisements should be placed so that Canadians would know, without any question, that the Senate is pursuing this study and that it wishes to hear from Canadians.

• (1410)

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I have one further question. The honourable senator referred to the assistance of technical personnel in placing the advertisement. Can he tell us who the technical personnel are and the cost involved as separate from the cost of placing the advertisement?

Senator Molgat: Certainly. I am not certain of the exact name, but I believe it is called the Humphreys Group. I now see that the correct name is Humphreys Public Affairs Group Incorporated.

I had the pleasure of working with them when we had the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Senate Reform and found that they did an excellent job for us. I believe they have done some work for other Senate committees, possibly the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries. No—I see Senator Marshall shaking his head. However, I do believe they have done work for other committees of the Senate, and also a lot of work for the House of Commons.

My experience with them is that they are indeed well qualified and do a good job. They worked with us on the Meech Lake Task Force in the North, and I believe that my colleagues who were on that task force will agree that they did an excellent job in that regard.

Senator Phillips: The honourable senator neglected to answer part of my question. I asked for a breakdown as between the cost of hiring the Humphreys Group and the cost of the advertisement.

Senator Molgat: I want to make it clear that this does not involve simply the placing of the advertisement, quite obviously. It involves the whole of the media activities across the country as a whole. It would involve whatever needs to be done in informing the media as to who will be appearing before the committee, making sure that there is proper coverage, and so on. Their fee will be $10,300. The advertising—namely, insertion of the public notice in newspapers across the country—will cost $39,664. The number of newspapers is not listed in the report to the Senate, but it was listed in the submission to the Internal Economy Committee. It will involve 123 publications across the country, in both languages.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable Senator Molgat, could you please tell me what you mean by the minority press? Is it the ethnic press? Would the Quebec English-speaking community, for instance, be considered as a minority group? What is the definition of the term "minority press"?

Senator Molgat: Honourable Senator David, I would like to be able to give you a definite answer, but I must admit that I do not really know. I can only conclude that this term refers to the French language press. I know that we are going to advertise in all newspapers throughout Canada, especially in certain regions with a French language minority where there are no daily newspapers. These are regions where newspapers are published sometimes weekly and sometimes even monthly. We judge it to be important to advertise in these newspapers. I would think that this is what the minority press means. It is the French language press.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Can the honourable senator tell us whether the advertisement will include a notice to the public to the effect that the Senate has only had a suspensive veto in such matters since 1982 and that, after 180 days, whatever the views of the Senate, if the House adopts the resolution once more, the work of the Committee of the Whole will have been completely useless, even though it might have gone on for months or years?

Senator Molgat: I thank the Honourable Senator Flynn for that suggestion. I did not have the impression that it was necessary to include this detail in the advertisement. Rather, the advertisement should explain to the public that the Senate is interested in hearing the views of Canadians, that it is carrying out this study and that it is asking for submissions by Canadians. We shall set a final date for accepting briefs for the Senate and we shall then decide which of those people will be invited to appear before the committee. It seems to me that if the advertisement contains too many details, it will lose some of its impact and usefulness. I hope that it will not be necessary to include all those details.

Senator Flynn: It would be to avoid the confusion mentioned by Senator Frith.

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have been out-manoeuvred by more glib members of my own party. I was going to say in reference to the Humphreys Group, as Senator Molgat described them, and as one who was up in the glorious and far north with the task force, that I think that this particular public relations group did a very fine job. That is all I shall say. I shall not reconstruct the advertisement today. I merely wanted that comment to be on the record.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, indeed, I would point out that the advertisements that were placed for the trip to the north by the task force were prepared by the Humphreys Group. They recommended what should appear in the advertisement, and they will be recommending the wording in the case of the proposed advertisements. From my past experience I can indicate that they have been very good.

Senator Macquarrie: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

HAITI

CURRENT SITUATION—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, December 8, 1978, I will call the attention of the Senate to the situation in Haiti.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE REPORT—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, December 8, 1987, I will move:

[Senator Flynn.]

That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Tuesday, 7th of April 1987, the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence be empowered to present its final report no later than Thursday, 15th December 1988.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday next, 8th December 1987, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon Senators: Agreed.

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, I simply want to tell you that the committee had arranged a meeting with the Minister of Employment and Immigration for tomorrow morning, but we have been obliged to postpone the hearing. In fact, the only time the minister can be with us is Tuesday afternoon next from 3.30 to 4.30 p.m. That is the reason for making this request.

● (1420)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs if she can inform me at what stage of its program will the committee deal with Bill S-7, the bill regarding Opus Dei?

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, this motion has nothing to do with the matter that has been raised by Senator Corbin.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Perhaps, Senator Neiman, you can now answer Senator Corbin's question.

Senator Neiman: I have advised Senator Bélisle, who is the sponsor, that the committee may be able to have at least one meeting on this bill at some time next week. It certainly will not be on Tuesday when we are hearing from the minister on another bill, but I will keep interested senators informed as to the arrangements and as to whether it will be Thursday, Friday or even Wednesday of next week.

Senator Corbin: When you speak of "interested senators," that, of course, would include myself. You mentioned Senator

Bélisle's name. It would include myself and my colleagues "in joint action."

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, December 8, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

SENATE TASK FORCE ON MEECH LAKE CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD AND YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF INTERIM REPORT AND EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Standing Order 45(1) I move:

That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Tuesday, 17th November, 1987, the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be empowered to present an interim report to the Committee of the Whole no later than Thursday, 17th December, 1987, and

That the Task Force present its final report to the Committee of the Whole no later than Monday, 8th February, 1988.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, would the chairman explain why the committee of the Whole is attempting to extend the deadline for presentation of the final report? If I am not mistaken, the committee was to submit its final report next week.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I will be pleased to explain what has happened.

First of all, concerning the drafting of the report, one of our officers who was from the Parliamentary Library was unable to travel up North with the group, for a good reason, ill health. So we only had one officer with us. Therefore, to prepare the report we had to wait for the records of the proceedings. It takes a certain amount of time to obtain those records. Therefore the report was not prepared as expeditiously as we would have liked.

There are also problems with respect to translation. First, before dealing with translation, the committee itself must reach an understanding. This in part is my problem, because I have been away these last six days, and not by choice. But my return was delayed and I repeat that was not a matter of choice either. So there were a number of things I could neither do nor arrange.

Secondly, the committee decided, when it met, that at this point we would simply produce a record of what we had heard in the North. The factual part. We will come up with a preliminary report that will simply explain what we heard. We therefore expect to have the opportunity later of making recommendations.

One of the reasons for a certain amount of delay is that, as you know, we visited three communities in the North. We were at Whitehorse, Yellowknife and Ikaluit. We did not go to places like Baker Lake, Cambridge Bay, et cetera.

Still we have some applications from people living in those places who might ask to appear. This would provide an opportunity to give them a chance to come to Ottawa and meet with the committee without impinging on the deadlines or whatever. So this would give us a little more flexibility. Those in my view are the reasons why we have asked that the deadline for submitting the final report be extended to February 1988.

There is another small detail, honourable senators. We picked that date, of February 8, 1988, for a rather personal reason. Our dear colleague who accompanied us everywhere in the North, Senator Le Moyne, is due to leave this place on February 17, 1988, I believe.

And since the House of Commons has a scheduled recess in February and I suspect the Senate will have the same recess, we decided on a reporting date that would fall before Senator Le Moyne's departure. Accordingly, he will be able to work on the committee's report with the other members.

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I would like to ask a question of Senator Molgat. I gather that the decisions regarding the postponements, and the reasons for them, are decided by the steering committee of the task force rather than by the steering committee of the Committee of the Whole. Is that standard procedure? There is a rather substantial steering committee of the Committee of the Whole—if I may be modest about it—in terms of size, at least. Obviously, they are not included in the planning or in the reasoning or in the decision-making process of the task force. They are a different entity, which I find unusual.

Senator Molgat: The decisions have been taken by the task force itself. All of the members of the task force were invited to the meeting, and, in fact, almost all of them were there. Out of eight members of the task force seven members attended.

If I may make a comment in passing, I have never worked with a committee where there was as good and as constant attendance by the members as was the case with the northern hearings.

The task force in this regard is similar to a subcommittee or, indeed, a special committee. It is empowered to make decisions for its own working methods, provided it does not go beyond the power that the Committee of the Whole has vested in itself. If it limits itself to that, then it is the master of its own operations. It is on that basis that the task force is requesting, by decision of the task force, that there be this extension.

I suppose there would be an interesting rule point as to whether or not it should obtain that permission from the Committee of the Whole or from the Senate itself. This would be an interesting matter to discuss, and I had not looked at it that way. I believe the task force was created by the Committee of the Whole and then sanctioned by the Senate. However, it is an interesting rule point.

Senator Frith: If you are erring, you are erring on the right side.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators will forgive me if once again I take the opportunity to point out the difficulties that arise when you use a Committee of the Whole. That committee, in my opinion, was designed to do a clause-by-clause examination of legislation and not to act as an investigative body, which is what we are attempting to do in this chamber at the present time.

• (1430)

Every step you take is a step in new, uncharted fields, which might lead to questions, which might establish precedents, which might make it difficult for committees and legislatures to conduct their business properly in the future.

Senator Frith: Or might create some for the Senate.

Senator Argue: Spoken like a true Conservative!

Senator Doody: Or create some work for the Senate.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, if we could terminate this contretemps here, I will give my considered view.

As one who attended the meeting this morning, and, indeed, as one who attended all meetings of the task force—and I hate to do this—

Senator Doody: But you will!

Senator Macquarrie: I will, yes—I bring in a small, minor, simple anxiety which I had this morning, that once the task force comes back from the true north strong and free, and there are witnesses here before the Committee of the Whole, I found it difficult to think that we of the task force would, in Ottawa, have a particular brief over what was said on our geographic area now that we had returned to the national capital. If someone expressed the desire to come to Ottawa and appear before the task force rather than the Committee of the Whole, then, as I said this morning, we would have proper jurisdiction and authority to hear them, since our life will not be terminated for some weeks yet.

But I am wondering, in practical terms, if someone from the North comes to Ottawa, should they not be invited to give their views to the Committee of the Whole itself rather than to the task force. I am wondering if perhaps it would not be a good thing to reflect upon this in the tranquility of the weekend and then deal with it on Tuesday.

[Senator Molgat.]

I want to say that Senator Molgat was a most excellent chairman on our northern trip. He made us proud all of the time. Thank God he is back from Haiti. I went to Haiti once in more tranquil times and I praised my Presbyterian God for getting me out of there safely, while Senator Molgat was there in more difficult times.

I suggest that we deal with this matter on Tuesday.

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, debate adjourned.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DATE OF SIGNING—IMPOSITION OF DEADLINE

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question that has to do with the negotiations still going on regarding the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, but the question does not have anything to do with the merits of free trade per se.

It always intrigued me that there was a deadline of October 4 for the signing of the general principles of the agreement. There is still a deadline of January 2 for the final legal text to be adopted.

For what reasons were the deadlines of October 4, 1987, and January 2, 1988, imposed by each government?

This is something I believe Canadians are entitled to know. I am one of those in the dark. I do not know, myself.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, many months ago the United States administration sought and received from Congress authorization to negotiate this agreement with Canada, adopting what is called a “fast-track” procedure.

One of the aspects of the fast-track procedure is that when the matter eventually comes to a vote in the Congress, it will be a matter of a “yes” or “no” vote. It is not possible for the members of Congress, for example, to amend the agreement at that time. I emphasize that the deadlines are United States deadlines imposed on their administration; for our part, we are not facing any deadlines in Canada. October 3 or 4 was the last date by which the President of the United States could send a message to the Congress indicating that it was his intention to place before Congress a treaty with Canada, and January 2 is the last date by which the agreement can be signed by the two parties under the fast-track procedure.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, that puzzles me. I do not want to be political—I do not want to say that I am in favour of or opposed to the free-trade negotiations going on, and all of that—but it intrigues me that we were forced by the United States Congress to meet a deadline in October. We are now forced to meet a signing deadline as of January 2, 1988, to satisfy the Americans. On our side, in Canada, there is all the flexibility in the world whereas the Americans have absolutely no flexibility. Could there not be the danger, then, that within the agreement there might be something that the Americans could impose upon the Canadians? This not only intrigues me, it somewhat frightens me.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, first, the deadline is on the United States negotiators and on the United States administration; the deadline is not on us.

Second, I think it is generally agreed in this country that it was in everyone's interest, however, that the so-called fast-track procedure be adopted for the negotiation and ratification of this treaty in the United States.

AIR CANADA

LABOUR DISPUTE—CURRENT SITUATION—INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate report on whether or not there is any progress in the Air Canada lockout? Are the parties likely to come together soon? What information does the government have?

As I said yesterday, it seems to be a reasonable request by the union that their pensions be indexed to the cost of living.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I appreciate the honourable senator's opinion on the issues at stake between the company and the union. The government has not taken a position on those issues. Our position, as I said yesterday, is that the resolution of this dispute lies with the parties, and we encourage them to resolve it as soon as possible and without further inconvenience to the travelling public.

● (1440)

Senator Argue: I should like to ask whether the Minister of Labour has any contacts at this time, or if he is making any contacts, with either party to the dispute. Has Bill Kelly got a watching brief? Is his assistant or associate deputy minister playing any role today? I think that is a reasonable question to ask and I would think the minister would have that kind of information.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have not inquired today of my colleague, but I can tell the Senate that as of yesterday it was the view of my colleague, the Minister of Labour, that intervention by government or by his department by way of mediation would not be useful or productive at this time.

Senator Argue: I take it from the minister's response that there has been contact. I think that is what his answer must mean.

There is a feeling around that this is a ploy by the government to influence the Air Canada corporation, if I may put it that way, with regard to its labour relations in the hope that the deal that is made or the settlement that is eventually reached will leave the unions in a relatively weak position so that the proposed price, or the possible price, for the sale of Air Canada to private interests may be greater. Is this a method being used by the Government of Canada to make the Air Canada corporation more palatable for purchase by private interests?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not wish to be argumentative or offensive, but I do not think it adds anything to our deliberations here or, indeed, to the problems that may exist between Air Canada and its union for an honourable senator to come in here retailing rumours that he hears, as he put it, "around."

Senator Argue: They may or may not be rumours. We have seen this government take particular actions which have been anti-labour with regard to the postal strike. They are on an anti-labour binge today, because they are not taking any position on de-indexing. I, for one, think there could well be a good deal of reason for that feeling that the government wants to soften up the unions so that the Air Canada corporation may have attached to it a higher price when the government gets around to privatization, and which I hope will not happen.

Senator Murray: This repeated solicitude for organized labour comes strangely from one who left the NDP because he found the company of the Canadian Labour Congress uncongenial.

Senator Argue: My leaving the NDP had nothing whatsoever to do with any conflict I had with the rank and file of the trade union movement. At that time I felt there was too close an association between that party and certain labour leaders who were associated with what seemed to be American dominated unions.

I think the things I said at that time have been justified by events, because Canadian unions are now taking a more independent position, a clearly Canadian position.

The minister increases my suspicion that the government wants to get a higher price when it gets around to privatizing Air Canada by making the unions weaker.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in a more substantive way, I do have this much to add to what I told the Senate yesterday and today, and it is that if my colleague were to receive a request from the official spokesmen for the parties seeking mediation, without setting preconditions and indicating flexibility, he would give serious consideration to such a request.

Senator Argue: I hope that that word leaks to Air Canada, because they are the people who need to be prepared to come to the bargaining table.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to two questions. If honourable senators want me to read them, I will; otherwise I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

PARLIAMENT HILL

CONDITION OF ROADWAYS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on October 13, 1987, by the Honourable Senator Bosa, regarding Parliament Hill—Condition of Roadways.

(The answer follows:)

The roads on Parliament Hill have been repaired, patched, and re-topped many times over the past number of years, and this work continues. Public Works has also decided that a more permanent solution is required and has undertaken a major study on refurbishing all Parliament Hill's grounds, roadways, and underground services. The study is in its early stages with design guidelines, priorities, and strategies being developed. No cost estimates or implementation schedule have yet been identified. Presentations will, of course, be made to the appropriate parliamentary committees as the study proceeds.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—AVAILABILITY OF STUDIES—GENERAL DESIGN OR CONCEPT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer to a question raised in the Senate on November 17, 1987, by the Honourable M. Lorne Bonnell and the Honourable John B. Stewart, regarding Prince Edward Island—Proposed Fixed Crossing to Mainland—Availability of Studies—General Design or Concept.

(The answer follows:)

The following is the list of studies undertaken to determine the feasibility of a fixed crossing for the Northumberland Strait:

1. Fishery and Environmental Resources, May, 1987.
2. Vessel Traffic and Bridge Safety Study, June 30, 1987.
3. Assessment of Winds, Waves, Tides and Currents, May, 1987.
4. Ice Climate Study, June, 1987.
5. A Study of Freezing Precipitation Icing, April, 1987.
6. Potential for Sea Spray Icing on Proposed Northumberland Strait Bridge, April, 1987.
7. Tunnel Feasibility Report, June, 1987.

[Senator Doody:]

8. Erosion and Scour Assessment, July, 1987.

9. Economic Feasibility Assessment for the Northumberland Strait Crossing, June, 1987.

10. Social Impact Assessment of Construction and Operations of a Fixed Crossing between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, May, 1987.

11. Northumberland Strait Bridge Substructure, May, 1987.

12. Northumberland Strait Bridge Substructure, June 19, 1987.

13. Financial Analysis of the Northumberland Strait Crossing Project, May, 1987.

It is Public Works policy not to release project estimates. As a result, certain parts of studies numbered 11 to 12, and complete study numbered 13 will not be released because it contains information that will be used to determine the financial feasibility of the project.

Complete copies of studies numbered 1 through 9, and part of studies 10 and 11, will be tabled in the Senate early next week.

PRIVILEGE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I want to assure my colleagues that this is the first time I have risen on a question of privilege, and I hope it is the last. I think it is a very painful, unfortunate form of parliamentary confession.

Yesterday I made some remarks in reference to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on the Turks and Caicos Islands. Although I am the deputy chairman of that committee, I did not have the format of the report in front of me. I thought that my suggestion of many days earlier had been followed. It was that in the final paragraph the three words "at this time" be included in regard to all these negatives that the Canadian government should never do, like taking no initiative of its own, or support any proposal either from the Turks and Caicos Islands or Canada to form a closer political or economic association. Indeed, someone told me that that had been noted in the report.

Had I thought for a moment that those words were not in the report, and that the committee was suggesting that we were foreclosing for all time any kind of acceptance of an interest in the relationships with us from these lovely islands, I would have made remarks of a far different calibre, and much closer to and perhaps even beyond those made by Senator Argue. I apologize to him for not having done more research than I did and to have assumed in good faith that things were as I thought they would be.

It is not the end of the world, but I hope that the 12 or 15 Canadians who read Senate Hansard will now know why I said something yesterday in relationship to the report which was totally askew. That is all I am asking.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

PRIVATE BILL

COOPERANTS, MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY—THIRD READING

Hon. Michel Cogger moved third reading of Bill S-14, an Act to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean Bazin moved second reading of Bill C-90, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

He said: Honourable senators, I would like to submit to your attention for second reading Bill C-90. The purpose of this legislation is to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to extend the variable entrance requirement, or VER.

The Unemployment Insurance Act enacted in 1971 provided that to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, a claimant needed at least 14 weeks of insurable employment. At the end of the 1970s, the VER was instituted in order to make that requirement more flexible, thus helping many Canadians who lose their job when they have only from 10 to 13 weeks of insurable employment in their account.

● (1450)

[English]

As provided for by the variable entrance requirement, or VER, the number of weeks of insurable employment that a UI claimant needs to qualify for regular benefits depends on the rate of unemployment in the region where he or she lives. In regions of high unemployment, for example, claimants can qualify for UI benefits with as few as ten weeks of insurable employment. As honourable senators may know, the present VER legislation is due to end on January 3, 1988. We propose to renew it again. By doing this we will ensure that thousands of Canadians living in regions where the economy is weaker will continue to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits.

Statistics show that the Canadian economy is doing well. However, in some regions economic recovery is slower and the rate of unemployment remains higher than the national average.

[Translation]

The principle of the VER recognizes that it is more difficult to find and keep a job in a region of high unemployment. This is, in fact, one of the most important aspects of the UI program since it takes into account the labour market conditions in each region of the country.

Honourable senators, if the VER is not renewed, all claimants will, as of January 4, 1988, have to show that they have 14 weeks of insurable employment in order to be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. This means that more than 100,000 unemployed Canadians could be unable to meet the entrance requirements to receive UI benefits.

[English]

Many Canadians would thus find themselves in difficulty and would, by necessity, turn to other sources to support themselves and their families. Inevitably, they would have to turn to provincial welfare programs. This government believes that we must continue to provide financial support to Canadians in the designated regions—that is, to those who need it the most. Unemployment insurance claimants need to know where they stand with regard to their entitlement. Therefore, it is important that Bill C-90, to renew the VER for a 12-month period, be passed as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

As I mentioned earlier, the VER enables us to recognize economic disparity between regions when deciding the entitlement of UI claimants. It is in this connection that the VER was created and it is for this reason that we want to continue it for the next year.

This is the amendment which I am proposing in Bill C-90. I ask senators to approve the renewal of the VER for a twelve-month period until January 3, 1989. Thank you.

On motion of Senator Corbin, debate adjourned.

[English]

TAX REFORM 1987

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Sinclair, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough), for the adoption of the Twentieth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Tax Reform in Canada), tabled in the Senate on 1st December, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Sinclair).

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, in yesterday's Debates of the Senate at page 2247, in the second-last paragraph of my speech, there is something, to use Senator Macquarrie's word, "askew." I started by saying, "What did the government say it was going to do?" To my absolute amazement, and while I expect many things from this government, I found that Hansard said that the lowest rate on which people would be taxed was $17 billion. I can assure senators that the government has not introduced anything quite as good as that.

Honourable senators, what is proposed under tax reform is the reduction of the number of tax brackets from ten to three. Those tax brackets and rates are: 17 per cent on the first $27,500 of taxable income; 26 per cent on taxable income between $27,500 and $55,000; and 29 per cent on taxable income above $55,000. Those are federal rates, and to those rates are applied, for all provinces except Quebec—for all provinces that are part of the tax collection agreement—the provincial tax rates as a proportion of the basic federal tax. They range from 60 per cent in Newfoundland down to 50 per cent in Ontario down to 46.5 per cent in Alberta. The combined rates, therefore, are significantly higher for those tax brackets that I have indicated.

In our report we have set out in a table what the effect will be, and I ask honourable senators to note that that does not take into account the surtax on personal income.

As the report of the committee indicates, we have two major concerns about stage one of the tax reform. The first has to do with the way in which the new tax brackets will affect middle class incomes, particularly those incomes of middle class families with more than one child. Simply put, the marginal rates are too high. Our second concern has to do with investment income and the proposed treatment of it under tax reform, and, in the more general sense, the integration of personal and corporate taxes. I will have more to say about that later.

As I have indicated, the committee was of the view that in terms of both marginal rates and absolute rates the tax rates proposed for middle income Canadians are too high. That is true not only in relation to other brackets but also in relation to the existing tax system. I would first like honourable senators to recall that one of the major changes under tax reform is that a family's taxable income, in most cases, will be essentially identical to its total income. That is a marked difference that arises from using tax credits rather than deductions and allowances, as is done under the present system.

Therefore, in looking at family incomes the committee has developed a series of charts, which are set out in our report. Our analysis has demonstrated that under the new set of proposals, with respect to the net tax gain of a two-adult family with one or two children and one wage earner in the middle income bracket, the divergence becomes very great indeed. That divergence is highest where the income is between about $28,000 and $50,000 per annum. Indeed, one comes out, at a net tax, less favourably under the new scheme if one has two children and has $46,000 of taxable income—we assumed that this was all wage income—than one would under the old scheme.

● (1500)

The effect of the committee's analysis was to recognize that significant bias against families. It is for that reason that honourable senators will find that the committee's first recommendation deals with family income. The purpose is to obviate the proposed tax credit for those families supporting children and to go back to the old system of having family allowances, and having those family allowances not taken into income.

Honourable senators might say that this is a very unusual step in view of the fact that the committee did recognize and support the movement away from allowances, and so on, to the conversion to tax credits; and the committee appreciated the effect of that on the whole realm of progressivity.

When honourable senators recall what I have just said about the divergence between net income of people with families and the adverse effects, they will understand that by doing this we have eliminated that very large spread between the curves in our statistical analysis, as set out in the report, and have brought them more into harmony.

While it does still adversely affect families, it does not do so to the great extent that the proposals do. It still does not completely eliminate the advantages under tax reform for people who have no children, and the impact is still less favourable on people who have more than one child.

The committee went on to look at another matter of concern. In some of our provinces children are still at school, continuing their education, when they are over 18 years of age. That applies particularly to the province of Ontario, but it applies also to other provinces. We have therefore recommended that the $130 tax credit for financially dependent children between the ages of 18 and 21 be reinstated.

In addition, the committee felt it was wrong not to recognize the necessity of supporting those lower income families who experienced considerable problems in supporting their children who were continuing their secondary education. The committee therefore decided to extend that tax credit of $130 per child for children who were completing secondary education, even though they were over 21. There are many students taking post-secondary courses in medicine, law, and in other professions, and who remain in school beyond 21 years of age.

There are a number of other recommendations. Another point that bothered the committee is that there is a drawback, an erosion of benefits to a family, if a child who is deemed to be financially dependent has income exceeding $500 per annum. That amounts to $10 per week, and we think it is absolutely ridiculous to start taking away or eroding the credit for a dependent child after he or she makes $10 per week. The person who delivers your morning or evening paper is making more than $10 per week, and any teenager working in a convenience store or in a fast food facility is making considerably more.

Here again, the impact is particularly heavy on low-income families or teenagers who are still at school and who are trying to help their families by undertaking work evenings or at weekends. So we have drawn that to the attention of the government.

There are a number of other recommendations. I will not go through them all. Let me move away from families, which was our first concern, to our second major concern, which had to do with corporates and the bias that we found against investment income. There were two things that bothered us. The first is that if we adopt the purport of the white paper and move to take capital gains into income to 75 per cent after the second tranche, we will be double-taxing if the corporation has a tax base in excess of 20 per cent.

That is down very significantly from the 25 per cent that is in existence this year, and is down significantly from the 35 per cent which existed some time ago. The whole aspect of double taxation is something that we believe should be addressed, and therefore we have stated that there should be a cap put on the taking into income at 66 2/3 per cent rather than 75 per cent.

I will again refer to families, but here we were looking at a different type of family. I refer to the families of more elderly people who have been very active in using the investment tax. We have suggested that the $1,000 investment deduction be converted to a credit at 17 per cent. If we take 17 per cent of $1,000, there will be a credit of $170. If adopted by the government, that would be particularly beneficial for those who are elderly, for those who have a few Canada Savings Bonds or a little bit of interest income from bank accounts, or if they had worked for such companies as Bell Telephone or some of the paper companies who have had in place for many years schemes under which employees were able to build up savings plans or hold stocks in the companies they worked for. The committee felt that by making it a credit the impact on people with higher incomes would not be that bad or that objectionable.

Another aspect that bothered us was that a process was being adopted here that certainly made taxation much more difficult to follow. I refer to the provisions which have been introduced with regard to preferred shares. The committee agreed that while some action was necessary, what has been proposed is so complex and so difficult that it would be almost impossible to discern how one could structure one's preferred shares to meet the requirements as set out in the white paper. Technical people representing the bar and the accounting profession who appeared before the committee were all very much against those proposals.

I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to one other matter—namely, that dealing with MURBs. There seems to be a penchant on the part of this government—and here it was reflected again—to not give effect to existing contractual relationships but to change the rules in the middle of the game. What is proposed here really is to take a contract and limit its application to 1990. So any advantage that a person had by investing in MURBs would run out by 1990. It also provides that anyone acquiring a MURB from another person after these rules go into effect will not have any benefit at all.

● (1510)

The effect of that provision on the investor is that he is locked in. Not only is he locked into his investment, because he cannot sell it to anybody, but his contract insofar as taxes are concerned is reduced. Surely there should have been some grandfathering here.

This government has said on numerous occasions that it is very supportive of R&D. However, in looking at the tax reform papers, the committee was shocked to find that what the government is proposing is a limit on the amount of tax credits for R&D of one-half of taxable income. At present, of course, tax credits for R&D can be fully applied to taxable income. The result of this provision will be to force R&D across the border into the United States, and to make it impossible for many small companies to carry out their R&D programs. There is a cost involved here, according to the people from Finance. The evidence before the committee was, and the view of the committee is, that this so-called revenue loss is completely illusory. The fact is that there will be no R&D taking place.

There is another unfortunate aspect. I think all the committee members recognized the need to secure more revenue flows for real estate companies. Nevertheless, what is proposed here is not only a capitalization of soft costs in real estate but a capitalization of carrying costs on vacant land. The effect of capitalizing costs on vacant land is to make it impossible to recover the capital amount until the asset is sold. If you capitalize soft costs, of course, you can get CCAs—capital cost allowances—because they apply to buildings or to projects. CCAs do not apply to land. Consequently, we are recommending that carrying costs—that is, taxes and interest—on vacant land not be capitalized but be charged against the taxable income of developers, and we are leaving the proposal on soft costs capitalized against buildings.

We have some recommendations in regard to taxes on automobiles used for business. We believe that the rules proposed are much too restrictive and that they make it very difficult for people who make their living with their car, travelling sales people and others. We accept the $20,000 limit for the capital cost of an automobile, but we say that to that figure they should add the cost of transport and the cost of taxes, because the taxes on automobiles in various jurisdictions vary and, of course, the cost of transport varies. The price at Oshawa is $20,000, but in Goobies, Newfoundland, the price is higher.

The committee received over 2,000 letters from taxpayers. Some people say that the people of Canada do not know that the Senate exists or that the people of Canada do not expect anything from the Senate. Now they will have to wonder what caused some 2,000 Canadians to have a different view and to write asking for our assistance in dealing with their concerns. One of their major concerns with the white paper was the proposal to tax the investment part of life insurance policies at 15 per cent. Here again, this measure would have a heavier effect on families with lower incomes, because the 15 per cent would apply irrespective of the level of income. We are suggesting that the government not proceed with that provision.

I think every witness who appeared before the committee said that the general avoidance proposal of the white paper is unworkable. None of them understood what this provision, commonly referred to as the "put-in-business class," would do. What it means is that you will have to get a ruling in advance on every business transaction. If that is not bad enough, the Department of Finance is now proposing a charge of $65 per hour for the work involved in arriving at a ruling. You are completely in the hands of the department as to how many hours each ruling will take. I sometimes think that the deputy minister forgets that he no longer works for Stikeman, Elliott, that he is working for the people of Canada. One witness said, "I think they put this in here just to get us mad." He could be right, because we have received the same reaction from every single witness or group from the accounting profession, the bar, everybody who dealt with the proposal. They asked, "What is the government trying to do to us here?"

One of the problems we have, and with these comments I shall conclude my remarks, is with the objective of stage one in that it was to be revenue neutral. Our proposals, if adopted in every respect by the government, would result in a net reduction in revenue of something under $1 billion. We came to the conclusion that while we depart from revenue neutrality, we do so for good reason, to be fair, in particular, to families and to offset some very Draconian aspects of the proposals, and with the knowledge that the second stage does not need to be long delayed. The second stage involves the change from a manufacturer's sales tax to a multi-sales tax, or value-added tax. It is for that reason that we feel that, notwithstanding the costs involved in our proposals, they should be favourably considered.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have a question for the chairman. As I understand the white paper, the amount expended on charitable donations will result in a tax credit. That tax credit will be at the lowest marginal tax rate. This would mean that if somebody has a marginal rate higher than the lowest rate, he or she would not receive a 100-per cent deduction as they do now under the present act. If I am correct in that assessment, I wonder if the committee addressed this matter and whether the chairman has any views on it as it relates to the amount of money that will be given to charity in the future.

Senator Sinclair: We looked at the proposal dealing with charitable donations and we came to the conclusion that it could have an adverse effect on such donations. However, we felt that since there was no hard evidence as to the effect of this proposal, the situation should be closely monitored, and if the result is as some people suggest—namely, that the provision will result in more affluent people cutting back because of the way this tax credit is calculated, which is at the lowest rate, that is to say, 17 per cent—some action should be taken.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I have another question dealing with tax credits. I am thinking of the person who is looking after, say, a spouse or child with a chronic medical condition and who is spending considerable amounts of money to look after that person. For example, it could be somebody with a debilitating disease such as multiple sclerosis. The other person has the income and is willing to look after the disabled person in their own home and provide the help and assistance that the victims of that disease, and other similar diseases, require.

● (1520)

Under the present Income Tax Act, as the honourable senator knows, a person who is making those sorts of donations can deduct the full amount of those donations from their income, thereby reducing their taxable income. They therefore do not pay any tax on the portion that they expend on behalf of the afflicted person.

[Senator Sinclair.]

Again, as I understand it, under the proposed act the tax credit will only be available to people who are prepared to pay privately for the care of their afflicted relative instead of having the public pay for them. However, they will only be allowed the tax credit at the lowest tax rate, thereby inviting, in fact, a tax on what they are expending on the care of the sick person.

Senator Sinclair: Unfortunately, that is one of the drawbacks of converting to credits. There is no doubt about it, that the conversion to credits has some unusual and unfavourable aspects. However, we are supportive of the conversion, notwithstanding the indication of difficulties such as Senator Everett has pointed out, because of the general advantage that it brings about. We recognize the difficult task that faces the department in bringing about a balanced system of tax reform.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CONSIDERATION OF ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator van Roggen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buckwold, for the adoption of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (Turks and Caicos Islands), presented in the Senate on 2nd December, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, yesterday I adjourned the debate on the report tabled by Senator van Roggen. That was the eleventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, and it dealt with the order of reference it had received earlier this year concerning the Turks and Caicos Islands. The reason I thought I should adjourn the debate was that at the time I did not have at my disposal the text of the report, and, for that matter, very few senators had, because it had not been circulated or left on our desks, as is usually done with committee reports on the day that they are tabled in the chamber. Therefore, I could not be a party to approving a report without seeing its contents.

It is not that I have any particular desire to see Canada engulf the Turks and Caicos Islands. During most of the year I am lukewarm to the idea, although at this season I tend to warm up a bit to the suggestion. Nevertheless, I thought that we were proceeding too expeditiously with the adoption of the report. We had given Senator van Roggen leave to comment briefly, and there ensued a debate. Senator Argue stepped in, and then Senator Macquarrie, the distinguished deputy chairman of that committee, also made some comments. They, of course, knew what they were talking about since they were members of the committee. I, as a senator asked to pronounce myself on that report, did not know what it contained. Therefore, I did what I did.

I have since examined the report and I can say that I am generally satisfied. On the face of the evidence which is contained in the report, I, too, would probably come to the conclusion that the committee arrived at. However, I find it passing strange that the committee held only one meeting on the matter, on May 7 of this year. Furthermore, that meeting was held in camera. I inquired from the officials of the committee if there were minutes of that meeting, or, indeed, a printed verbatim report, and have been informed that there were no minutes kept and that there is no verbatim report available. Three witnesses were heard at that meeting—two from External Affairs and one from CIDA—all Government of Canada officials. No one else was invited to appear before the committee.

Therefore, I believe that the report is tainted. I am not saying that in a negative fashion, but I cannot say that it is a positive comment on the report, either. I am asking questions here. The committee had the benefit of the views of three government officials. The Canadian public has not had the opportunity—and, indeed, was not given an opportunity as far as I know—to voice its views and opinions with respect to the suggestion that Canada and the Turks and Caicos Islands get together at some point in time and form some kind of political union.

However, when one reads the terms of reference—in fact, when one reads the inquiry and the way in which it was worded—one would think that the committee would have attempted to seek the views of interested Canadians on this question. I would like to quote briefly from the text of the minutes. It says:

Your Committee, to which was referred an inquiry . . .

And there then follows the inquiry:

. . . calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability and advantages of the Turks and Caicos Islands becoming a part of Canada; the support for such action among the Turks and Caicos Islanders and Canadians; . . .

And, honourable senators, I dwell on the phrase “and Canadians.” As far as I could find out, the views of Canadians—with the exception of government officials—was not sought by the committee. It could well be that the committee in its wisdom, having heard the views of the government officials, decided that there was no point in pursuing the examination of that inquiry. Therefore, the public not only could not attend the single meeting that took place on the matter but was, of course, not invited to appear at any subsequent meeting that the committee could have decided to institute to examine the order of reference in the spirit in which it was put in the hands of the committee.

Therefore, I find the committee report wanting in that respect. I understand that in the given political situation in the Turks and Caicos Islands there is no merit or advantage for the Canadian government to pursue this matter. However, this matter is not a government initiative; it is a private initiative on the part of a senator, and I feel that it ought to have been treated with more generosity, if I may use those terms. In fact, I feel that an initiative should have been taken along the lines of the text of the inquiry itself, to invite interested Canadians to make their views known to the Senate.

● (1530)

There being no written record of what went on in the committee, one could always suspect that there was possibly some kind of pressure put on the Senate committee from some quarters to not proceed with this matter at this time. That is only a possibility. If that had occurred, I am not suggesting that senators would have succumbed to that kind of pressure, but it could well be that there was that indirect pressure from some quarters not to proceed any further with this matter.

Therefore, I find that justice has not been done to the inquiry. I say this very impartially. I am not overly interested in union with the Turks and Caicos Islands. I am saying this strictly in terms of procedure. With the same breath I would say that I have the highest respect for all of the members of that committee—the chairman, the deputy chairman and its members. However, I have not found an explanation as to why they have not sought the views of, if I may use the expression, Canadians generally. I feel that that should have been done. It was not done, and the conclusions of the report do not contain an explanation as to why the committee did not follow that road. In fact, the conclusion deals with the governmental aspect of the question.

I would like to quote from the report:

The Committee concludes that caution is all the more called for since the U.K. government has indicated that a duly-elected legislature will be in place by 1988. In the opinion of the Committee, the earliest appropriate time for Canada . . .

I suppose one should read the “Government of Canada,” because that is what is intended here.

. . . to consider this subject would be after the 1988 elections on the Islands . . .

I cannot agree more with that, but what prevented the committee from having one additional public session in order to hear the views of Canadians interested in the matter? In that way we would have a more balanced report.

We now have the opinion of the government officials, but we do not have the other side of the coin. I have heard debate both in the other place and in this place, and I suspect there are Canadians who have a keen interest in the matter who could have come forward and given us good reasons why it would be in Canada's interest to pursue this matter further or, on the other hand, to put a stop to the nonsense, if they thought it was nonsense. I have no real personal views on that.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I think that the report has not done proper justice to the question that was put in the house by our colleague, Senator Argue. I wish the aspect that I have just raised had been dealt with properly—at least, on the surface—by the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by Senator van Roggen, seconded by Senator Buckwold, that this report be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Argue: On division!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): In the circumstances, I think it would be advisable to adjourn the debate in the name of Senator van Roggen in order to give him a chance to speak to the points raised by Senator Corbin. I move the adjournment of the debate in Senator van Roggen's name.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Frith for raising that point. I had made a note to suggest that. I am grateful to Senator Frith for raising it. If the record needs any clarification, Senator van Roggen ought to be given that opportunity.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator van Roggen, debate adjourned.

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING HELD IN BANFF, ALBERTA—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Heath Macquarrie rose pursuant to notice of Friday, October 9, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Fifteenth Annual Meeting of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association held in Banff, Alberta, from 21st to 25th September, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, I ask leave to table the report of the Fifteenth Annual Meeting of Delegations from the Canadian and European Parliaments dealing with the meeting on which this inquiry is based.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Report tabled.

Senator Macquarrie: If you will be gracious enough to suspend your interest, I will resume my remarks next week.

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, debate adjourned.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

FORUM IN SASKATOON, OCTOBER 25-28, 1987—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Henry D. Hicks rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, October 29, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Forum on Post-Secondary Education held in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan from October 25-October 28, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, I am sorry that this inquiry has stood for so long. Due to the interruptions that have taken place since notice was given, I have not yet had an opportunity to speak to it. I can speak to this in a relatively short time this afternoon, and tidy up the matter.

In the Throne Speech which was delivered in this chamber on October 1, 1986, reference was made to the federal government's intention of convening a forum to consider the question of post-secondary education in Canada. In due course that forum was arranged, and it was held in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, from October 25 to 28, 1987. The forum was attended by some 600 people from all walks of life in Canada—educators, people from business and industry, people from the labour movement, and a few politicians. I suppose I belong in the last named category, because the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which had previously published a report on post-secondary education, was, late in the day, asked to name a representative to participate in the Saskatoon forum. I was the member of the Standing Committee on National Finance who was chosen to represent the committee.

● (1540)

The conference, even though it had some 600 participants, I must say, was extremely well organized, and ran better and was even more productive than I could ever have expected it to have been. It was opened on a Sunday evening with greetings from the Mayor of Saskatoon, from the minister, the Honourable David Crombie, and from the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada, the Honourable Rolland Penner, and from the Premier of Saskatchewan.

After the polite greetings and introductions, three significant addresses were made, one by Maurice Strong, one by Claude Castonguay, presently Chancellor of the University of Montreal, and one by Rosemary Brown, a former NDP member of the legislature of British Columbia and now a professor of some degree at Simon Fraser University. Those speeches, I may say, were all of a general nature. They were well worth listening to, but they dealt in most general terms with problems in education and some ideas of the respective speakers as to what might be done in the future to improve the situation in Canada. Then on Monday morning the forum got down to business with keynote speeches on the three themes of the conference, the first by Paul Gallagher, who talked about the challenges and opportunities facing post-secondary education in Canada; the second by Michèle Fortin, who talked about accessibility to and participation in post-secondary education in Canada; and the third from Ron Watts, a former principal of Queen's University. He talked about the framework for managing and financing post-secondary education in Canada. I was more interested in the third theme than in the other two, and I had rather hoped that the workshops which ensued would consider those themes separately. But that was not done.

There were 22 workshops averaging, as you can calculate, between 25 and 30 persons each. They were split up fairly well across the spectrum of Canadian society from among those delegates to whom I have already referred. Each workshop considered seriatim each of the three main themes of the conference. As I said, I could speculate as to whether we might have gone a little further and achieved a little more if there had been more specialization in the workshops, but that was not done. Each workshop dealt with each of the three themes.

I was in Workshop No. 9, which was chaired by a young lawyer from Montreal, Michael Goldbloom. He did an extremely good job in chairing the workshop, in keeping the subjects before the participants, and in soliciting the views of all. There was a rapporteur, and I may say that I thought Workshop No. 9, of which I was a member, was extremely well run and really got its teeth into some of the problems and the difficulties that we are facing in post-secondary education.

I believe from my contact in the corridors and otherwise that not all workshops were as well arranged or handled as the one I was fortunate enough to participate in, and that the result of the workshops was perhaps a little uneven.

Finally, at the plenary session on Wednesday morning an excellent job was done by the same three persons who introduced the themes in summarizing the conclusions of the various workshops.

In due course there will be a report on this. I will not attempt to go into any detail today, because I do not have the documents before me, and, of course, as a participator in only one of the 22 workshops, I cannot claim that I have the whole picture. But this will be brought together and made available in a report on the conference which, it is hoped, will be forthcoming fairly soon in the new year. The three theme introducers, Mr. Gallagher, Madame Fortin and Professor Watts, did an extremely good job of summing up.

That was the form the forum took. What can I say about it in general terms, and before seeing the report which will bring together the views expressed in the 22 workshops which constituted the forum? I can make two observations which have some relevance and, I think, some importance. The first I have already alluded to, and that is that the conference was extremely well organized and was more successful from the point of view of participation and facing the problems that were before us than I could ever have expected or imagined.

The second is, to me, a much more important one. I think there was evident in the work of the workshops and the conference, and the conversations that took place at the receptions and in the corridors between sessions, and so forth, a strong conviction that it is essential that we have some national authority in relation to post-secondary education in Canada. The bickering between the federal government and the provinces must stop, and the efforts of both parties must be better coordinated. I think that that was a view that was shared by many of those who participated in this conference. That was referred to by some of the speakers in the plenary session and in what I have described as the corridor conversations.

In any event, this view was shared by even a great many of the delegates from the province of Quebec who, traditionally, have not wanted to accord any role in education to the federal government. I think there is an awakening realization in Canada that we do need some kind of national authority in respect of post-secondary education, and not only with respect to research but with respect to the whole spectrum of post-secondary education.

Some of my friends accuse me of wishful thinking in making this statement, because I have been one who, for a long time, has felt that the federal government ought to have a higher profile in respect of post-secondary education, and in respect of post-secondary education at all university levels, not just research. Perhaps you might say, "especially research," and "especially post-graduate secondary education," but I think the federal government should have a higher profile in respect of the whole spectrum of post-secondary education. If this is wishful thinking on my part, I can point to some evidence that it is shared by other people who, ten years ago, would not have thought this way at all.

One of the things which was most satisfactory to me was the sponsorship of this forum. As I said, it originated in a paragraph in the Speech from the Throne of October 1, 1986, but the conference was actually sponsored not only by the federal government, through the Department of State, but also by the Council of Ministers of Education. The Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Education, to whom I have already made reference, was in attendance and was a participator in the forum. If there could be more meetings which brought together the representatives of the provinces, either through the Council of Ministers, which seems to me at the present time to be the most logical vehicle for that representation to be expressed through, and the federal government, I believe that we might make some progress. I think Canadians do feel that if we are to have universities and research institutions of an international standard, we have to have more national involvement in the managing and financing and the statement of the goals of those institutions than we do at the present time.

In short, honourable senators, I went to the conference not expecting a great deal, and I was pleased that there seemed to be emerging the opinions and attitudes to which I have just referred.

I look forward with interest to the summation of the report of the conference, and, if I think it appropriate, will have something further to say to honourable senators when that report becomes available. In the meantime, it may be—I certainly hope it is so—that a start has been made. We shall watch with interest the growth of this seed which was sown in Saskatoon. Let us hope it will grow into a strong tree, which will add to the fabric of Canadian education and Canadian society generally.

● (1550)

Honourable senators, I was asked to move the adjournment of this debate—unless some other honourable senator wishes to speak now—in the name of Senator Leblanc, who wishes to say something about it later on, he being the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

On motion of Senator Hicks, for Senator Leblanc, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 8, 1987, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 2286)

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—
SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

---

THURSDAY, December 3, 1987

The Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on June 11, 1987, to hear witnesses and make a report on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, respectfully requests that it be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

GILDAS L. MOLGAT
Chairman

THURSDAY, December 3, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to hearing witnesses and making a report on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, as authorized by the Senate on June 11, 1987. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 49,964
Transportation and Communications	1,500
All Other Expenditures	1,000
	<hr/>
	$ 52,464

ATTEST:

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

EXPLANATION OF COST ELEMENTS

Professional and Other Services (including salaries)

1) Media Relations - The Humphreys Public Affairs Group Inc.	$10,300
2) Advertising Public notice of 1/8 of a page, for one insertion in daily newspapers (and minority press) throughout Canada (approximately 123 publications) for the purpose of inviting the submission of briefs (see attachment A)	39,664
		$49,964

Transportation and Communications

Postage, Freight & Courier Service	1,500
All other expenditures	1,000
		$52,464

APPENDIX (A) TO THE REPORT*COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE ON THE MEECH LAKE CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD*APPLICATION FOR BUDGET AUTHORIZATION FOR THE PERIOD
NOVEMBER 1, 1987 TO MARCH 31, 1988*ORDER OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Thursday, June 11, 1987:

"The Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making report.

After debate, and—
The question being put on the motion,
The Senate divided and the names being called they were taken down as follows:—

...

Therefore, the motion was resolved in the affirmative."

Charles A. Lussier
Clerk of the Senate

SUMMARY

Professional and Other Services (including salaries)	$ 49,964
Transportation and communications	1,500
All other expenditures	1,000
TOTAL	$ 52,464

The foregoing budget was approved by the Committee on the 19th day of November 1987.

The undersigned or an alternate will be in attendance on the date that this budget is being considered.

Gildas Molgat
Chairman, Committee of the Whole on the Meech
Lake Constitutional Accord

Date: November 19, 1987

Approved by:
Guy Charbonneau
Chairman, Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Date:

APPENDIX (B) TO THE REPORT

THURSDAY, December 3, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to hearing witnesses and making a report on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, as authorized by the Senate on June 11, 1987. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 49,964
Transportation and Communications	1,500
All Other Expenditures	1,000
	$ 52,464

ATTEST:

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 8, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985 BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-94, to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like to draw to your attention the presence in our gallery of His Excellency Abdalla Nasser Al-Dhorafi, Minister of State for Youth and Sports of the Yemen Arab Republic, and Mr. Taha Qirbi, Honorary Consul of this very friendly country.

We wish the minister a pleasant and fruitful visit in Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND

On the tabling of documents:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have been informed that the environmental reports dealing with the Prince Edward Island crossing are due here some time this afternoon. I know how interested some honourable senators are in those reports, so if the documents arrive, I will ask leave to table them.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

AIR CANADA

LABOUR DISPUTE—CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can the leader report to us what further developments have taken place with regard to the Air Canada lockout and bring us up to date on the situation?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my honourable friend will know that the Minister of Labour had sent a telegram to the parties to the dispute reminding them of the considerable inconvenience to the travelling public caused by this dispute, reminding them also of their responsibilities to the public under the Canada Labour Code to resolve their differences through negotiations, and noting that there have been no formal meetings of the parties since November 15.

Mr. Cadieux urged them to reconvene their negotiating committee and to resume negotiations without the setting of any preconditions. Since that time the parties have responded in the affirmative to the minister's request for the resumption of negotiations. I am informed that they are, at present, endeavouring to schedule a meeting, which will probably take place on Thursday.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I welcome that move and am pleased with what is now taking place. Can the minister say whether or not the Minister of Labour, before sending the telexes, had discussed this question with Air Canada, or was the matter of the resumption of negotiations an initiative of the minister without prior discussion with either party?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not aware of any discussions that my colleague has had directly with the parties, but I shall inquire.

Senator Argue: Perhaps there is another matter about which the minister might inquire. Could he ask the Minister of Labour whether or not the dispatches went out from his office simultaneously? My information is that apparently Air Canada knew about the request at least some time before the union received it. This might simply have been due to something that happened in the course of the normal delivery, but I would be interested to know whether the messages went out at precisely the same time or whether Air Canada was give earlier notice.

Senator Murray: I shall also make inquiries on that point.

ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

NEGOTIATION OF CANADIAN CLAIM—PARTICIPATION OF TERRITORIES

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure that there is a logical explanation for all of this, but it seems that yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Clark, conceded that we have not made any progress in the regular bilateral discussions concerning Arctic sovereignty, and then proceeded to sign agreements concerning Arctic sovereignty.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): He proceeded to what?

Senator Lucier: They are going to sign an agreement—

Senator Murray: I am sorry, but my friend has stated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs proceeded to do something. What is it that the Secretary of State has allegedly proceeded to do?

Senator Lucier: He is negotiating to sign an agreement; he is proceeding to sign an agreement—

Senator Murray: He is negotiating to sign an agreement?

Senator Lucier: Yes, on Arctic sovereignty. Perhaps there is a good reason for our spending billions of dollars on nuclear submarines to somehow show the flag through the ice to strengthen our claim to the North, and to show that the North belongs to us, while at the same time we are negotiating an agreement with the Americans that does not include submarines. Perhaps the minister could explain to us how an agreement that does not include submarines can strengthen our claim to the Arctic.

Senator Murray: Frankly, honourable senators, the question, at the moment, is hypothetical. I think it would be better put if and when such an agreement is concluded and tabled in this house.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, it seems that what we have learned from this government—with the Free Trade Agreement, the Meech Lake agreement and many others—is that by the time such agreements reach this chamber, it is too late to talk about them. All agreements seem to reach the Senate cast in stone—they cannot be touched! To suggest that we should not talk about such agreements until they are signed seems a little ludicrous. If we are going to discuss spending billions of dollars on submarines to show that we own the Arctic, and if we are going to discuss the signing of agreements with the Americans, should not the two things be related? I realize this may sound somewhat strange to the government, but I think that some people in the Arctic would like to know the answer to that question.

Senator Murray: Well, I am not sure what the question is, except that so far it seems to be quite hypothetical. As I recall, my honourable friend is against the decision of the Canadian government to proceed with nuclear submarines in the North.

● (1410)

Senator Lucier: Then, honourable senators, I guess I am not too surprised at why we are in so much trouble, if the Leader of the Government does not understand the question. If he is concerned only about whether I am opposed to submarines in the Arctic, then he is absolutely right. It makes as much sense as having an icebreaker in the Arctic to show Canada's sovereignty. As I said before, an icebreaker in the Arctic is excellent for breaking ice, but not for any other purpose. Is the Leader of the Government suggesting that the government is not negotiating to sign an agreement with the Americans on the sovereignty of the Arctic? Is none of that going on, and is the government not considering submarines for the Arctic?

Senator Murray: The answer to the last question, so far as the Canadian government is concerned, was contained in the defence white paper that was tabled some months ago. Meanwhile, I can tell the honourable senator that we have been discussing, and will continue to discuss, with the United States an agreement on Arctic cooperation.

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I have a question supplementary to that asked by Senator Lucier, which I thought made a lot of sense. He and I, and other Canadians, would like to know what is being discussed. A committee on free trade has been meeting in the other place, with a deadline for its report. But the agreement seems to have existed only as of Monday. There certainly have been other issues which the government has asked committees to study, even though the government has not finalized its agreements. Senator Lucier, representing the Yukon, is certainly justified in knowing a great deal more about what the government is proposing, and which we have seen reported in today's press, about a rather difficult-to-follow change in policy regarding Arctic sovereignty; and I, too, would like to know a little more about that.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators can hardly expect me to comment on so-called leaked documents that appear in the media. In due course, as and when an agreement is concluded, it will be brought here; the contents will be known to honourable senators, and they can address themselves to it in a rational and coherent way.

Senator Lucier: Perhaps I could ask another question of the Leader of the Government. As Northerners, we have just been taken to the cleaners on the Meech Lake Accord because of that same procedure. Is the Leader of the Government suggesting that, as Northerners, we should not discuss or ask anything about the agreement until it is signed? Once the Meech Lake Accord was signed, we were told, "Of course, you are being taken to the cleaners on it, but that's too bad, the agreement is in place. It is a seamless web." We have heard that expression used before, and it is now being used in connection with the Free Trade Agreement. We have not yet seen that agreement, but we are being told that we cannot change it. Others can speak for the rest of Canada, but is the Leader of the Government suggesting that the new way for the people of the North is that once you have done it to us you will tell us what you have done, and that's the end of it?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, questions of Arctic cooperation have been in the public domain for some considerable time; they have been the subject of discussion in this and the other place, and they have been touched upon in the reports of parliamentary committees, and so on. It is not as though anyone is foreclosing the right of the honourable senator or anyone else to express his or her views on the subject. I believe that we are well aware of his views on this matter, but it is the duty of the government to conclude agreements of this kind on Arctic cooperation, and that is what we are proceeding to do.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, perhaps I could ask one more question. Since the Leader of the Government says that negotiations on cooperation agreements in the Arctic have been ongoing for some time, I ask him if the elected people of the North have been included in those negotiations at any time since they testified before our task force that never once were they consulted with regard to the Meech Lake Accord? Can we assume, since the honourable senator has indicated, that there have been ongoing negotiations, that the government discussed this matter with the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, with the greatest respect, the subject matter of these discussions with the United States is not the responsibility of the territorial governments. The subject matter is squarely the responsibility of the Government of Canada.

Senator Lucier: But the matters concerning the Meech Lake Accord were the responsibility of the Governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, but they were never discussed with those governments. Is the honourable senator saying that the government does not discuss anything with them? I guess that is its position.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we have had very close cooperation with the governments of the territories on any number of matters in the past several years. Surely the honourable senator is aware that this government devolved to the territorial governments quite a number of province-like powers and programs. This process has been going on for some time, and it will continue.

FISHERIES

MUSSEL INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been having a hard time explaining the actions of his government, and I know that if he tried all day it would still be difficult. However, before asking my question, I want to congratulate him on his action and on what he has done on behalf of the potato farmers of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. After I brought to his attention the losses to potato farmers in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick in the 1985 crop year, he went to the Minister of Agriculture and the subsidy grants that I requested came through. For that I want to thank him. I know that it was pressure from the Leader of the Government that made the Minister of Agriculture come forth with the payments.

[Senator Lucier.]

Senator Argue: But you started it.

Senator Bonnell: I started the ball rolling here and the Leader of the Government finished up.

Honourable senators, at the present time we have another major catastrophe in Prince Edward Island. Some algae or some toxin in the water has got into our mussels. The Prince Edward Island cultured mussel industry was just getting off the ground. It was at the point where it was a $3 million to $4 million industry, and it was a real boon to our economy. This catastrophe has struck the private fishermen who culture these mussels. As a result, 20,000 pounds of mussels had to be buried in the River of Morell last week. These mussels were ready for shipment, but they could not be shipped because they had been taken off the market. In the village of Murray River 100,000 pounds of mussels had to be buried. The fishermen who culture these mussels are private enterprisers with no insurance. This catastrophe could mean the end of this industry in Prince Edward Island if there is no help.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me whether the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans of Canada and the Government of Canada are considering compensation to assist these fishermen of cultured mussels in not only Prince Edward Island but in the Magdalen Islands and the other provinces across Canada where the mussel industry can be found, because people everywhere are not buying mussels at this time? Is the Government of Canada considering assistance for these people to save many of the island fishermen in the cultured mussel industry from going bankrupt?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall have to make inquiries on the matter. In the meantime, I can tell the honourable senator that our pre-occupation these past few days has been with protecting the health of consumers, who might have been affected as a result of this misfortune. However, I shall make inquiries on the question asked by the honourable senator.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for considering the health of consumers, for they must come first. We realize that. However, I ask him to take this matter also to his government and put the same kind of pressure on the Minister of Fisheries as he put on the Minister of Agriculture in order to assist these fish farmers in Atlantic Canada and in the Magdalen Islands, and thus save from bankruptcy this very important industry for Canada.

● (1420)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend's supplementary gives me an opportunity to say that while I have no objection to his basking in the reflected credit that is due to the government for its assistance to the potato farmers, this was done pursuant to a public commitment made by the Prime Minister of Canada to the provinces concerned, and following upon extensive discussions between the Minister of Agriculture and his provincial counterparts in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

As for the economic impact on the industry of this misfortune with regard to mussels, I will have to take that question as notice. I will convey the honourable senator's representations to the appropriate minister.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT ACT CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Ethel Cochrane moved the third reading of Bill C-46, to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bazin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-90, An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I shall not take very long, since I have no prepared text. I do not enjoy the opportunity, as do some members of this institution, of having researchers who can jot down a few thoughts on paper for them. I have to do practically all of my own research, so I will speak off the cuff and shoot from the hip today, if you will bear with me for a few moments.

Last Wednesday or Thursday I was asked to handle this bill—if I may use that expression—on behalf of my side of the house—even though I sit on this side of the house. I am talking, of course, on behalf of the official opposition. However, I spent the weekend in New Brunswick, and I had little opportunity yesterday to spend much time in my office because of excessive travel delays due to the Air Canada strike. In fact, I spent all of this morning and the noon hour at meetings. I merely stepped into my office this morning to hang up my coat, and then proceeded to my other duties as a senator. Therefore, I do not have a prepared text, and I hope that honourable senators will forgive me if I err in my presentation on the legislation, on behalf of my party, this afternoon.

Bill C-90 extends for another year certain provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act to those regions or those individuals who can qualify under the variable entry requirements. I find this legislation unnecessary. The government spent millions of dollars on a commission—generally referred to as the Forget Commission—to take an in-depth look at all aspects of the unemployment insurance program and other programs in Canada. That commission tabled its report last year.

To my surprise, it seems that the government has decided not to implement the recommendations of that commission. I can understand that some of the recommendations would be rather embarrassing to the government of the day. Needless to say, action should have been taken in regard to certain categories of unemployed workers in Canada who dearly need this type of assistance to carry them from year to year and from seasonal job to seasonal job. This is the intent of this special amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Instead of carrying this section over from year to year, the government ought to have made this a permanent feature of the unemployment insurance legislation at the earliest opportunity. Where will we be at this time next year? Will we be faced with another request to extend the provisions of this particular section of the Unemployment Insurance Act for another year? I am afraid so. Unfortunately, I believe that will be the situation.

There will always be situations in parts of the country where some workers will not be in a position to accumulate 14 weeks of work in order to benefit from the generosity of the unemployment insurance legislation as it exists. There should be no hesitation on the part of the government and on the part of well-minded legislators to make that a permanent feature of the legislation, as it was for many years, until the government of the day decided to extend it on a year-to-year basis.

I come from a region where, because of the lack of job opportunities and because of the seasonal nature of many employment activities, it is indeed difficult for people to accumulate enough weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance as is so easily done in the Oshawa region, "that very high employment area of Canada." In fact, many of the people of New Brunswick expatriate themselves every summer to western Canada to help in bringing in the crops. They also go to southern Ontario and elsewhere. In that way they can accumulate enough weeks to qualify for UIC benefits. They cannot do that in New Brunswick, because the employment opportunities do not exist for many able-bodied women and men who would dearly like to work. They have to go outside of their province to find work in order to qualify for UIC benefits.

I was one of the members of Parliament from the Atlantic provinces in the mid-1970s who forced the government of the day to bring in this type of legislation. It went very much against the grain of the minister of the day, but we were successful in bringing our case to our caucus and to the attention of the Prime Minister, and he recognized the soundness of our approach. It was as a result of that intervention by members of Parliament, both senators and the elected members, that that became a feature of the act.

● (1430)

With that little bit of history, honourable senators, I certainly can find no objection that would justify delaying this amendment to the act. I think it should go forward speedily.

My last comment is this, that I enjoin the government of the day—and I am not talking here in any partisan sense, because I think such is the responsibility of any national government—to ensure that this type of provision does, in fact, become a permanent feature of the legislation, if we are to eliminate the inequities and inequalities that exist in certain parts of the country in terms of possibilities of employment.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if no one else wishes to speak, I move, on behalf of Senator Bazin, who introduced this bill, that it be referred to committee.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You should ask for second reading first.

Senator Doody: Before I do that, I would like to congratulate Senator Corbin, who has demonstrated a tremendous ability to do an outstanding job without the benefit of research or research assistance. We are very proud of him.

Senator Corbin: If I may respond briefly, I have a caveat. I had to dip into my rich background as an elected member to be able to make these few remarks today. Had I been a new senator in this chamber, I would have needed assistance to know what this legislation was all about. It is because of historical experience that I was able to perform so well today. I think of the poor senator who comes from nowhere who is plunged into this political forum and who does not have that type of background; surely he would require research assistance of some sort to perform ably.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the honourable Senator Doody, on behalf of Senator Bazin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rossiter, that the bill be read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, before we proceed further, I believe that His Honour should have given a warning that the debate was about to close so that any senator who might be interested in speaking would have had the benefit of that warning.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I should have said, "If the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of the bill."

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

[Senator Corbin.]

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Bazin, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the second reading of Bill C-254, to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence).

He said: Honourable senators, at the outset, I wish to express my thanks to Senator Macquarrie who very graciously relinquished the sponsorship of this bill in my favour.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bosa: I also want to say that it is coincidental that two bills that have the same objective were presented in the two houses almost simultaneously: My bill, that is Bill S-8, was given first reading in this chamber on April 14; and Bill C-254, which was presented by Mr. Bob Pennock in the other place, was given first reading there on April 27.

I have spoken at some length on second reading of Bill S-8 on June 16 and do not intend to repeat everything I said on that occasion, but I do wish to say a few words in order to put the objectives of this bill into perspective.

When the Citizenship Act was presented in 1977, new rules regarding that act came into force. Applicants for citizenship still had to meet residency requirements, that is to say, at least three years of residence in Canada within the four years immediately preceding the application. But, in contrast to the former law, there was no provision relating to spouses of diplomats. They were, therefore, to be treated in the same way as all other applicants. On its face, this might be interpreted as requiring continuous physical presence in Canada, making it virtually impossible for a foreign spouse to meet the residency requirements unless the Canadian public servant were posted back to Canada for three years. In actual fact, court decisions have made the situation much more equivocal than that.

In 1981 Pamela McDougall submitted a report to the government. The issue of foreign spouses was raised there briefly. It states:

Some concern was expressed about the difficulties facing foreign-born spouses of members of the Service who wish to become Canadian citizens. We are assured by the Department of the Secretary of State that these problems no longer exist: in general, foreign-born spouses who manage to become landed immigrants will no longer be discriminated against with respect to establishing Canadian residence for purposes of acquiring citizenship, simply because they leave Canada to accompany their husbands or wives posted abroad. We applaud this move and urge that the new situation be communicated clearly and rapidly to all employees. We also encourage the government to make explicit provisions to cover these cases if the occasion arises to amend the relevant legislation.

It appears that the Department of the Secretary of State was referring to the decided cases when it assured the commission that the problems no longer existed. But they still do.

In fact, I came upon this problem when I was a member of a Canadian delegation to the Inter-Parliamentary Union in Buenos Aires in October of 1986. The delegation had been invited to the Canadian embassy for a reception, where I met the second secretary and vice-consul in the embassy, Mr. R. Tanner. Mr. Tanner had married a French national. I had a conversation with them during the course of which I learned that Mrs. Tanner wanted to become a Canadian citizen, but because they were posted abroad she did not meet the residence requirements of the present Citizenship Act. It was this conversation which led me to sponsor Bill S-8.

It is a good piece of legislation; it is highly supported by members of the Department of External Affairs. I understand that there are some 200 cases which would be affected directly by this legislation—I do not know how many other cases there might be with other Canadians serving in the Armed Forces or those who are in the service of the provinces. Departmental officials are anxious that this bill be given Royal Assent so that persons affected by this amendment can take advantage of it.

I hope that honourable senators will support this legislation and that they will give it speedy passage.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I would like to commend Senator Bosa on his remarks when sponsoring Bill S-8 some time ago. I still remain convinced that this is the kind of measure which we can pass expeditiously and unanimously, because its purpose is to correct the ill effects of justice delayed.

● (1440)

I am impressed that Bill C-254 is a Private Member's bill from the other house, and having served there for a number of years I know that it is rare to see a Private Member's bill go further than first reading. A colleague, who was a member of the Liberal Party, year after year sponsored a Private Member's bill to have the likenesses of Canadian Prime Ministers appear on our paper money. He introduced that bill year after year, and then one day a minister walked in and said that the government was going to introduce such a measure. The appropriate minister did not even refer to the backbencher from his own party, but he, the backbencher, did the sharp thing and stood up and withdrew his bill. A minor satisfaction, but not a major one, I suppose one could say.

The catalyst of this measure arose from events that took place in Tehran some years ago. Honourable senators will recall that the spouses of the two people who were most active were embarrassed at a later date when Canada sought to give recognition to those two members of the embassy and their spouses. That situation has since been corrected, but it is very important that this measure go through so that such an embarrassing development shall never occur again.

In that connection, I remember that from time to time over the years the Chargé d'Affaires of Iran would say that the normalization of relations between our country and his would depend upon an apology from the Canadian government for the efforts made by those people to help the hostages. On that rare occasion when I could speak for my country, I said: "If you are waiting for that, you will never get it, because the people of Canada are very, very proud of what was done, and no government that I could conceive of would ever repudiate that effort." That is in my mind today as I reiterate my support for this useful, valuable and somewhat delayed measure.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Bosa is quite right to move that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee, and the appropriate committee, under the rules, that deals with employment and immigration matters is the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. That is the appropriate committee to refer the bill to.

On motion of Senator Bosa, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

BILL TO AMEND (QUALIFICATIONS OF SENATORS)—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Len Marchand moved the second reading of Bill S-12, to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (Qualifications of Senators).

He said: Honourable senators, the primary purpose of this bill, as I explained on June 23 when I introduced it on first reading, is to remove from the Constitution the property qualification for senators. By way of a consequential amendment, the bill would also remove from the Constitution the requirement that each Quebec senator represent an electoral division in that province.

I would like to read to you a recommendation contained in the 1984 report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform. In the chapter entitled "Reforms That Should Be Made Now" the committee makes the following statement, at page 37:

The Constitution Act, 1867 requires that those appointed to the Senate have assets totalling at least $4,000. The original purpose of this requirement is no longer valid, and the property qualification is now anachronistic. The requirement should be removed by a constitutional amendment under section 44 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

Honourable senators, at the time of Confederation the property qualification for senators was neither unprecedented nor inappropriate. It must be recalled that in 1867 there were property qualifications both for membership in the House of Commons and for the exercise of the franchise. So it was not something unusual. The property qualification was, in fact, in keeping with the political philosophy and practices of the time.

It was also in keeping with the desire of the Fathers of Confederation that the British House of Lords should serve as a model for the Canadian Senate. Since the New Canadians had no hereditary peers, it was decided that senators, in addition to being appointed for life, should also be persons of some substance, and should represent the interests of property holders. As Sir John A. Macdonald said at the time:

The rights of the minority must be protected, and the rich are always fewer in number than the poor.

This sounds, in today's more democratic world, like something said with tongue in cheek, but I believe that at the time it was said in all seriousness. In any event, the idea of a property qualification was agreed to in the conferences at Charlottetown and Quebec, and the result was that a senator, since 1867, has had to own land in his or her own right within the province for which he or she was appointed to the value of $4,000 over and above all charges and encumbrances, and have a net estate worth at least $4,000.

The property qualification, therefore, served as an essential element in creating a second chamber similar in principle to that of the British model. At the same time, it ensured that property interests and a certain class of society would be represented in the Senate.

At that time $4,000 represented a significant, if not a great, stake in the community. Today, not only is that amount totally unrealistic with regard to its original purpose but the idea of a property qualification itself is totally unrelated to the modern role of the Senate.

E. Russell Hopkins, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel to the Senate, referring to the modern role of the Senate, summed it up very well in the following words:

Like the House of Lords, the Senate was to have a dignified, secondary and largely negative role. But political institutions, and living constitutions, inevitably change with the passage of time, and so it has been with the Senate. The modern Senate, while it acts as a revising body in respect of legislation emanating from the Commons, now exercises a variety of functions of a useful, important and positive character which were not envisaged by the Fathers of Confederation.

Honourable senators, the property qualification has become so anachronistic that today it no longer has any meaning. As I said when I introduced this bill, it has become a "silly requirement." I repeat that I think we should do away with it.

When I introduced Bill S-12, a point of order was raised, I think by Senator Flynn, regarding the appropriateness of presenting a bill to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 instead of a resolution. It was questioned whether amendments such as those contained in Bill S-12 could be effected by way of a bill when other amendments to the Constitution require a resolution. My earlier quotation from the 1984 report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform makes it clear that it was the view of that committee that a bill, pursuant to section 44 of the Constitution Act, 1982, is the correct procedure. Also, as I said at that time, I was assured by the Law Clerk of the Senate that a bill was the proper way to proceed.

• (1450)

I have since then received from the Law Clerk a written opinion confirming that a bill is, indeed, the proper procedure. In that opinion, of which I have copies for any senators who are interested, the Law Clerk states that:

The normal procedure for constitutional amendment involving federal institutions is set out in section 44 of the Constitution Act, 1982. It provides that, unless another amending formula is specified elsewhere in the Constitution, the Parliament of Canada may amend the Constitution of Canada by enacting laws.

Section 44 of the Constitution Act, 1982, for those senators who do not have a copy in front of them, reads as follows:

44. Subject to sections 41 and 42, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Honourable senators, I have a personal reason for sponsoring this bill. Subsection 23(3) of the Constitution Act, 1867 is the provision of the Constitution that sets out in detail the property qualification for senators. It is worded in such a way as to provide for persons whose interests in land are of the kind that are possible under both the common law and the civil law systems.

It does not, however, and never did, provide for persons who are Indians and who lawfully possess land on a reserve. Their interests in land are of the kind described in the legal system of land holding set out in section 20 of the Indian Act.

Under this system title to reserve land is held by the Crown, and an individual's interest in such land is evidenced by a Certificate of Possession issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs. Although an Indian has a right to dispose of a Certificate of Possession by sale or otherwise, all transfers are subject to the approval of the minister, a very difficult procedure.

I am a member of the Okanagan Indian Band and own some land on our reserve near Vernon, B.C. I do not know the precise value of it in market terms, but it is certainly worth more than $4,000. Yet, when I was summoned to the Senate, my property on the reserve did not qualify me for appointment. In appointing me to the Senate in June of 1984, Prime Minister Trudeau asked me if I owned $4,000 worth of freehold property in B.C. Luckily, I was able to say, "Yes," because I owned a house in Kamloops—me and the bank!

A few months ago I was talking to some members of the family of the late Senator Gladstone. I understand that when he was appointed to the Senate in 1960, he was a successful rancher on the Blood reserve. However, he owned property only there. In order to qualify as a senator, he had to rush out and buy at least $4,000 worth of property off the reserve. Honourable senators, this is the main reason why I am asking that the existing property qualification for senators be removed from the Constitution. It discriminates against Indians who have land holdings only on reserves.

In the course of drafting a bill that would do away with the property qualification for senators it became clear that the removal of this requirement would affect the special situation with regard to Quebec senators.

As honourable senators know, the Constitution provides that each senator representing Quebec must be appointed for one of the original 24 electoral divisions of that province. In accordance with this requirement, each Quebec senator has the choice of either owning property or residing in the electoral division for which he or she is appointed.

In drafting Bill S-12 a decision had to be made with regard to this special provision for Quebec. There were three possible ways to proceed: one, to amend it by deleting the reference to owning property in an electoral division; two, to simply leave it unamended; or three, to delete it entirely.

To delete the reference to a property qualification and leave unamended the reference to a residence qualification would impose on Quebec senators a new residence qualification, since each Quebec senator would then have no choice but to reside in his or her electoral division.

To leave the entire provision unamended would be to retain a provision giving to Quebec senators a choice that would have become meaningless, since one of the alternatives, that of satisfying the electoral division requirement by owning property, would have been removed.

It was therefore felt that the best way to deal with the special provision for Quebec, which no longer seems necessary, was simply to delete it. A further benefit of the deletion of the provision is that Quebec senators who come from areas within the province that did not form part of the original 24 electoral divisions will be able to reside in their home regions, which at present are unrepresented in the Senate.

Honourable senators, ever since 1867 proposals have been advanced for Senate reform by prime ministers, politicians, political scientists and groups of concerned citizens. Nevertheless, it remains to be seen if any of the wide-ranging suggestions for change will ever take place. In the course of some of the research I have been able to do I came upon the work of Professor Jonathan Lemco in the publication entitled "The Journal of Commonwealth and Comparative Politics" of November 1986. Jonathan Lemco is a professor at the School for Advanced International Studies at Johns Hopkins University. He is also a political analyst. This is what he stated:

It is most likely that in spite of the many calls for reform, few changes of substance will actually be implemented.

However, he further stated:

... this is not to say that no reforms of the Senate are possible or that none would be creative.

One of the "modest changes" he suggests is that "the anachronistic property qualification be abolished." The Joint Committee on Senate Reform also places this proposal in the category of "Reforms that Should be Made Now." Since it was a proposal of the joint committee of the two houses, there is no reason why it should not receive the support of both houses.

I ask honourable senators, therefore, to give serious consideration to the bill in the hope that we might, as senators, show some initiative by taking at least one small, but positive, step forward in the area of Senate reform.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

SENATE TASK FORCE ON MEECH LAKE CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD AND YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT EXTENDED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hicks:

That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Tuesday, 17th November, 1987, the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be empowered to present an interim report to the Committee of the Whole no later than Thursday, 17th December, 1987, and

That the Task Force present its final report to the Committee of the Whole no later than Monday, 8th February, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Macquarrie).

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have looked over the few remarks I made at the last sitting. I hope this is not a case of incipient smugness, but I am satisfied with what I said at that time and will not add further argumentation. I can only say that we had a most excellent 8.00 a.m. meeting of the task force this morning, and it is possible that our esteemed chairman will, when he closes the debate, have some suggestions to make as to our flexibility, viability and classical structure.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if Senator Molgat speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I, too, had the opportunity in the interval to re-read the comments made by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie. I must agree with him totally that his remarks were absolutely in order and quite proper. The point that he was particularly making was that, because the task force has now returned to Ottawa, if there were other witnesses to come forward on this matter, it would be more appropriate if they appeared before the Committee of the Whole rather than before the task force. That, I think is absolutely sensible. As he said, the task force held a further meeting this morning and, on reviewing its work schedule and the amount of work that has to be done, the task force requests a further change to the motion that was presented last week. Rather than present an interim report next week and a final report in February, the task force would prefer to present just one report, its final report. In other words, there would be no interim report, but only that final report in February. We are finding that more time is being taken in the preparation of the report than we expected—namely, the translation work involved—and we therefore request that additional time. The new motion will annul the previous motion completely.

● (1500)

I therefore move, with leave of the Senate and pursuant to rule 23, that the motion be modified to read as follows:

That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Tuesday, 17th November, 1987, the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be empowered to present its final report to the Committee of the Whole no later than Monday, 8th February, 1988.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Fourteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Supplementary Estimates (C) 1987-88) presented in the Senate on December 2, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, on Wednesday last I tabled the report of the National Finance Committee on Supplementary Estimates (C). That report contains a great deal of information about these supplementary estimates and the anticipated estimates of the Government of Canada for the current fiscal year. The report also contains specific information about statutory expenditures, non-statutory expenditures, and about $1 votes. This is the kind of information found in the report of the National Finance Committee for each regular supplementary estimate. I say regular, because while this is the third supplementary estimate for the 1987-88 fiscal year, it is also the first regular supplementary estimate. The first and second supplementaries were special estimates; the first dealt with special payments to grain producers; and the second dealt with regional economic development.

[Senator Molgat.]

As honourable senators will see from our report, Supplementary Estimates (C) total $2.9 billion. Of this, $1 billion is for statutory expenditures, an additional $1.4 billion is to record the forgiveness of certain loans to crown corporations, and the remaining $500 million for unforeseen budgetary requirements.

I would like to focus now on a major issue raised in our report, namely the forgiveness of loans. When the National Finance Committee reported on Supplementary Estimates (C), 1985-86, we noted that crown corporations only may be forgiven a debt.

Private individuals and corporations may have their debt deleted, but never forgiven. Treasury Board concurred with the committee that this was not fair and agreed to change the Financial Administration Act to reflect this, whenever that act was opened for amendment. In these supplementary estimates we see another problem with debt forgiveness.

Almost all of the $1.36 billion in debts owed by crown corporations which are being forgiven by these estimates, was considered uncollectable in 1979. For that matter, an item was included in the Statement of Assets and Liabilities in the Public Accounts to reduce the value of assets of the Government of Canada accordingly. Furthermore, enterprises such as the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority were told back in 1979 that their debt of $625 million was scheduled for forgiveness. Yet it took eight years to record this loan as uncollectable and eliminate it from the books. I could understand if there were any chance of recovering some or all of the debt, but when the debtor is notified that there will be no collection action, why does it take eight years to get around to cleaning up the books? This is too long. Frankly, I do not know if there are other outstanding loans deemed uncollectable that are cluttering up the accounts, but if there are, there should be a concerted effort to sort this out in the near future.

Finally, I want to conclude my remarks on Supplementary Estimates (C) by reporting to the Senate on the way in which I believe the National Finance Committee has been, and can continue to be very effective. From time to time, we produce lengthy but very timely reports on specific subjects. For example, this spring we tabled a report on federal financial involvement on post-secondary education. Our report concluded that the role of the federal government in this field should be confined to specific areas such as research, and accessibility for the disadvantaged. We also concluded that the federal government has little role to play in the general direction and administration of our colleges and universities. That role is the responsibility of the individual provinces. It is also the role of the Council of Ministers of Education, assuming it wishes to take up this role. Unfortunately to date, it has not done so. But if what I hear from the National Forum on Post Secondary Education is correct, the Council of Ministers has recognized this deficiency and will expand their activity in this area. I will be pleased to elaborate on this later when debate resumes on the motion introduced by Senator Hicks on December 3 last.

But the major accomplishments by this committee are done in a quiet way. They are done by focusing on the books of the government and on its estimates, and by reporting on areas which are in need of improvement. For example, the Auditor General has agreed with the findings of this committee in its report on the 1987-88 Main Estimates that the accounts receivable of the government are in need of review.

Treasury Board has agreed with the committee's findings that the debt forgiveness/deletion process is inconsistent; they have also agreed with the committee that the method of displaying vote transfers in supplementary estimates may lead to misunderstandings. In fact, we expect to receive a draft revision to the form of the supplementary estimates any day now.

This is the kind of work that has made the National Finance Committee successful. It is not very visible work but it is satisfying to know that our efforts are being watched and listened to, and our advice followed.

Honourable senators, if no other senators wish to take part in the debate right now because they will naturally have an opportunity to do so when the bill is brought forward to implement those estimates, then I move the debate be concluded.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Senator Leblanc, you are not proposing concurrence in the committee's report?

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): I move that the debate on the report be concluded.

Senator Frith: So you are not proposing the report be concurred in?

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): I could move the report be concurred in, except I think we will be able to get back to it when the bill is presented in this house.

Senator Frith: Concurrence in the report by the Senate makes things easier.

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): Then, honourable senators, I move that the report be concurred in.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

● (1510)

[English]

ILLITERACY IN CANADA

ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn calling the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order has stood in my name for some time to give other senators an opportunity to speak to it. I do not intend to speak on this order. If I remember correctly, the inquiry was introduced by Senator Fairbairn, so I suggest that we stand the order in her name. She can then decide whether she wants to close the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands in name of Senator Fairbairn.

HAITI

CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat rose, pursuant to notice of Thursday, December 3, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the situation in Haiti.

He said: Honourable senators, the only way that I can describe the situation of Sunday, November 29, in Haiti is to say that it was a horrible atrocity and a crime against humanity. I do not think that there is any doubt that the people who committed the murders of that day were the Tontons Macoutes, who go back to the regimes of the Duvalier dictators. However, I do not think that there is any way that the blame should not come to rest on the present Provisional Government of Haiti. They could have prevented what happened, but they took no action. The army was not available. It was not called out, and so it made no attempt to protect the public. The police did exactly the same. The armed bands were able to roam at will anywhere in Haiti, and no attempt was made to stop them. In my view, the civilized world cannot accept this kind of activity. We must react as democratic countries.

Before I go into the details of what I saw and did in Haiti, perhaps it would be useful for me to explain why I was in Haiti. Some three years ago, I believe, the American Congress established funds for the assistance of democratic processes in the world. These funds are distributed to the two main political parties in the United States, the Republican Party and the Democratic Party. Both parties have established non-profit organizations, or institutes, that operate at arm's length from their political parties. The organizations are linked by some of their personnel, but such personnel are not people in office. For example, the Honourable Walter Mondale, who was a candidate in the last presidential election, is now the President of the Democratic Institute. So the organizations are linked in this way, but they are not operated by the political party. The role of these organizations is to assist democracy wherever they can in the world, not to interfere in political activities in those states, but to assist.

To give you an example of some of their work, it was the NDI, the National Democratic Institute, and the NRI, the National Republican Institute, that helped in the Philippine elections by sending monitor teams. I refer to the famous election when President Marcos was deposed, and which precipitated democracy taking hold in the Philippines. Honourable senators will recall that my colleague, Senator Graham, was the Canadian representative on that occasion. The connection between ourselves and the NDI is that they belong as observers to Liberal International. As a result, it is normal, when they are seeking to set up an international delegation, that they contact Liberal International. This is how Senator Graham became an observer in the Philippines and how I became an observer in Haiti.

Some may ask: Why was it that the NDI was particularly interested in Haiti? Honourable senators will recall that after the revolution which took place, I believe, on February 7, 1985, when Duvalier was removed from power, the Haitian people decided that they would attempt to move toward democracy. You must remember that there has not been a democratic system in Haiti for some 30 years, that there has been a dictatorship for that time. There were no political parties and no means of getting the democratic process going. So, the NDI arranged a number of meetings of political leaders, assisted in getting political parties developed, and so on.

Meanwhile, the Haitian people themselves proceeded to draw up a new constitution. I must say, having read it, that I find it a most interesting and democratic instrument, an instrument that should ensure, if followed, that there will be no return to dictatorship in Haiti. The bulk of the constitution deals with how the country will work once a democratic government is elected. At the very back of the document, in the last two pages, are the temporary provisions—what is to happen between the riddance of Duvalier and the election of a new government. The election of a new government, a new president, a new Senate, and a new House of Representatives was to be held and they were to take office on February 7, 1988, as approved in the constitution. This constitution was overwhelmingly approved by the Haitian people in a plebiscite in March of last year. It has the support of the Haitian people.

● (1520)

The constitution accepted that the National Council of Government—the CNG, using the French terminology—was to carry on until February 7, 1988, with the right to govern and keep peace and order.

However, the constitution also established a separate body called the CEP—Conseil d'élection provisoire. This body is a very democratic body. It is not appointed by the government. It is appointed by a series of interest groups in the province. For example, the Executive Branch have the right to appoint one person; the Episcopal Conference, one person; the Advisory Council, one person; the Supreme Court, one person; the agencies involved in human rights have the right to appoint one person; the Council of the University appoints one person; the Journalists' Association, one person; the Protestant religions, one person; the National Council of Co-operatives, one person. In all, nine individuals picked by these various groups—and not picked by the government—have the specific responsibility of seeing to it that there is a democratic election. Therefore, whilst admittedly having some difficulties with the government, the CEP has been functioning since that time to establish the election procedures.

[Senator Molgat]

In all of this, as you know, they were assisted by Canada. We were one of the countries that gave major assistance, something of the order of $1 million, I believe. The American government assisted very substantially, and there was assistance by volunteer groups such as NDI.

One of the provisions in the constitution is that the CEP must decide who can be a candidate, and again the rules are quite clearly laid out in the constitution. It eliminates for a period of ten years anyone who had a major responsibility in the Duvalier regime and who assisted that regime. In other words, anyone who promoted the previous dictatorship is not allowed to run for public office for ten years.

The CEP then rejected 12 candidates who, in their opinion, had been very closely involved in promoting the Duvalier regime. Those people were eliminated. However, that still left 23 presidential candidates. Therefore, there certainly was not an overall rejection of candidates or an attempt by the CEP to pick a candidate. They left the Haitian people with a choice of 23. Similarly, for the Senate there was a wide choice.

Nevertheless, the government felt that this was interference, and there were difficulties during the course of the summer. The government attempted to cancel the responsibilities of the CEP and take over in their stead. The Haitians reacted; the government withdrew; the CEP took up its position once more and proceeded with the electoral process, preparing the country for an election. Honourable senators will remember that this is a country where there has not been an election for 30 years; where there has been a very repressive regime. Haiti is also the poorest country in the North and South American region and the country with the highest rate of illiteracy.

Nevertheless, the election procedures went on. All was not easy. Two presidential candidates were murdered in the period leading up to the election. In many cases electoral offices were burned; the headquarters of the CEP were burned down; the main printing bureau that was printing the ballots was burned down; there was a constant lack of control by the government. The government did not protect the electoral process.

Nevertheless, the process continued, and in October the registration process was successful. Voters were asked to come and register at 6,000 locations in Haiti. Five hundred were allocated to each poll, and out of a population of something in the order of 6 million people over 2 million Haitians came to register. These people wanted to take part in the electoral process.

Meanwhile, no action that I have been able to observe was ever taken by the government to seek out the murderers of the two presidential candidates or to determine who was involved in the burnings and riots that occurred. So much for the events leading up to the election.

Honourable senators, we were part of an international delegation, and when we returned to Miami that delegation issued a statement. I will ask to have distributed to honourable senators a copy of that statement. I might point out that we were not prepared to issue the statement while we were in Haiti. This statement contains a list of the individuals and countries represented on this delegation.

Honourable senators, I do not intend to read the whole of this statement into the record since it is some two and a half pages. I hesitate to do this, because I know the Senate is reluctant, but I ask that we add the statement as an appendix to today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of statement, see appendix, p. 2316)

Senator Molgat: The delegation arrived in Haiti on the Friday night. We proceeded, first of all, with a security briefing, and I suppose that should have warned us of impending troubles. We were given a briefing on how to recognize pistol fire from machine-gun fire, and how to tell how close the bullets were to you, and what action to take in those events. We were also told never to travel singly, but always in pairs, and never to travel at night. People do not travel at night in Haiti.

During the course of the night there was intermittent gun fire in the vicinity of our hotel. The following morning we had our main briefing and divided ourselves into six teams. Two of those teams were to go by chartered aircraft to distant locations in Haiti; two were to go by car to areas somewhat closer and accessible, and two of the teams were to stay in Port-au-Prince, the capital city. The two teams that were to go by air went out to the airport. The aircraft had been hired previously, but did not receive authorization from the government to take off. Either the Haitian government or some colonel decided that the aircraft could not leave. So our teams were held there.

Honourable senators, I want to point out to you that the NDI was not there by accident. It was not in Haiti simply by its own choice. It had been invited by the Government of Haiti. On October 23 former Prime Minister Price of Belize and former U.S. President Jimmy Carter were in Haiti. They met with the President of the CNG and he welcomed the presence of observers for the election. This was confirmed in writing to the NDI at a later date by the Haitian Ambassador to the U.S.

Moreover, the NDI was not the only observer group there. As you know, the Canadian government had a three-person team in Haiti; some churches had teams there, and there were a number of observer groups who had been invited to Haiti. Nevertheless, on the Saturday afternoon we were prevented from sending out two of our teams.

• (1530)

Later that day we visited polls. We wanted to see what preparations were going on for the election—were things in place, was there security, what was happening? We were not prevented from moving about. We went to a number of different polls and observed what they were doing. The process was carrying on.

Later we went to a regional bureau—Bureau électoral de département. At that time we received a communique from the CEP. I will read the section that is pertinent:

[Translation]

A number of vehicles carrying voting material were set on fire, ballot boxes were stolen, a number of highways were cut off. People representing the BEC and such polls as those of Petite Rivière de l'Artibonite, Verretes, Chapelle, Anse à Foleur, Gressier, had to take cover because they were attacked and chased by armed individuals.

[English]

That was on Saturday afternoon at approximately 3 o'clock.

We carried on with our visit to the polls. Saturday night was worse than the previous night. There was more firing, explosion of grenades, and so on. To my knowledge, they were not aimed at us, but the purpose was to intimidate the population in order to keep a high state of tension in the country to make everyone afraid.

As we went around to the polls, I made a point to speak to as many Haitians as possible. They were very easy to speak to and very willing to discuss the election. In every case they said that they intended to vote. They were very enthusiastic, enthusiastic about the opportunity to express an opinion after so many years of repression.

The following morning our cars were to pick us up shortly before 6:00 a.m. to take us to polls. The cars did not arrive. Obviously, the drivers were not prepared to travel in the pre-dawn period; they would only travel in daylight. We made arrangements, and we were at the polls shortly after 6:00 a.m. The polls were to be open between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m.

The first polling station I went to with my team was Eglise St. Pierre. There were hundreds of people in line waiting to enter the poll. From there I went to another poll just across the street—Lycée St. Pierre—where there were four polling stations to accommodate 500 people each. At that time there were clearly more than 500 people lined up on the street. The line went around three sides of the block. The people were peaceful, quiet, no riots, no difficulties, no yelling. They were peacefully waiting to vote.

The process was slow. The first poll opened at 7:00 a.m., or thereabouts. The next three polls opened between 7:00 a.m. and 7:30 a.m., but it was proceeding. As I have said, people were very quiet and relaxed. There was no problem at all.

We left the poll shortly after 8:00 a.m. Shortly after arriving back at the hotel, firing began. It was very intense firing at that point. It seemed to be approaching our hotel. The reason for that is there was another poll closer to our hotel. The firing stopped after approximately five or ten minutes.

Then the reports started to come in that there had been atrocities in other parts of the city. By 9:00 a.m. it was reported that the election was cancelled and that we were to stay where we were. The problem was that we had no idea what the situation was—was there security, or was there no security? I can tell you that in all this I did not see a soldier or a policeman protecting anyone.

When reports filtered back from the church where we had been, the Haitians told us what had happened. The people were standing in line, and armed groups came along in a car, firing over their heads—apparently not at the people in this particular case—to scatter them. The people scattered. The car went away, and the people regrouped; they came back to stand in line so that they could vote, in spite of what they had been subjected to. There is a police station no more than half a block away. No police came out to protect the people. The car came back a second time, and at that time the people left.

At another school, which was only ten minutes away from our hotel in the other direction, one of the main atrocities occurred. Because I wanted to see for myself whether or not the reports were accurate, I went there early on the Tuesday morning.

We were hoping to leave that day. It was very difficult to ascertain whether or not one could leave. Information was, to say the least, scant. Our aircraft had been cancelled. We were fortunate enough to have an American government charter, which took us out of the country.

Before we left, I asked to go to this particular school—Ecole Nationale Argentine-Bellegarde. There were three of us who went. The taxi driver did not want to go. We finally convinced him that he should take us. When we got within approximately 100 yards of the school, he said, “J’ai peur,” and he would not go any closer. He dropped us off and said that he would pick us up later.

We went into the school and it was an abattoir. There were high stone walls around this school with one entrance. Inside this school, a two-storey building, there were four classrooms surrounded by three full concrete walls and one low concrete wall. The armed bands had arrived with machine-guns and machetes. People had run and hidden in these classrooms, and had been murdered there on the spot. The blood was all over the place. Obviously not only rifles or machine-guns were used; machetes, as well, had been used. An absolute scandal. In no case was there any protection for these people. All they were trying to do was vote.

What do we do now? I do not think that the civilized world can stand by and do and say nothing. We must show the Haitian government that all of the civilized world completely rejects this sort of action. We must, as human beings, take every step we can to prevent that regime from continuing in this way. If it means economic action, we must take economic action.

Canada, in this regard, has a particular role to play. I am not suggesting that the United States should be the one to do this. I do not think that would be well received for many reasons. Canada can play a role. Organizations such as the Organization of American States—although we do not belong to it—have a role to play. I think we can take the lead in this regard.

[Senator Molgat.]

We have a particular link with Haiti. For many years there have been a fair number of Canadians living there as missionaries and workers. There are many Haitians here in Canada. We have an association with them through La Francophonie. We must take action. However, I do not believe such action should take the form of armed force.

I do believe that we should offer to send a peace-keeping mission to Haiti in order to allow the Haitian people to proceed with their election and to achieve democracy. Immediately after this event on Sunday, the military government announced that the election would carry on in time for the new president to take his office, as provided in the constitution, by February 7. But, at the same time, the CEP—the electoral commission—was abolished. They said they would ask the groups mentioned in the constitution to name new people. I do not think that is going to happen. I do not think that those groups, seeing what has happened to this electoral commission, will be prepared to set up another one to be a puppet of that government. Quite obviously that government wants to set up a puppet president, and they will continue the same repressive regime the Duvaliers had for 30 years. I do not think that that should be allowed, because if that were to happen, I predict that the bloodshed in Haiti will be far worse. The Haitian people will simply not submit to that. They have seen an opportunity now to have a democratic country, and that is what they are going to get. However, the process will be extremely difficult and extremely painful. Many people will die in the process if there is no outside help. I think we are one of the countries which can do something about it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered debated.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE REPORT EXTENDED

Hon. Henry D. Hicks moved, pursuant to notice of December 3, 1987:

That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Tuesday, 7th of April 1987, the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence be empowered to present its final report no later than Thursday, 15th December 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, perhaps I might make a few remarks in explanation of this motion and to underline the necessity for its speedy passage.

When this committee was constituted in April of this year, it was hoped that the work of the committee might be finished by December 15, in other words, one week from today. Honourable senators will know that the summer was a disturbed one insofar as the Parliament of Canada was concerned. The committee did not get organized as quickly as it might have done and, because of pressing Senate business, we had to forgo our visits to military installations in the western part of Canada and, latterly, our proposed visit to Camp Gagetown.

The result is that while the committee has taken a good deal of evidence, its evidence is not yet complete. We think it may take another three working months, or thereabouts, to complete hearing the witnesses who have signified that they want to appear before the committee and to make the necessary visits to installations of Mobile Command both in eastern Canada and in the west.

If we could complete all this before we rise for the summer recess, we hope the committee will have resolved its main positions with respect to Canada's land forces, and that the staff of the committee can commence the writing of the report so that when we return in the autumn of 1988 we can put the final seal of approval on the report, have it translated, and I am very confident—indeed, I think it is essential that we must do so—that the report can be completed and tabled in the Senate not later than December 15, 1988.

Some other things have also caused us difficulties. The chairman of the committee, Senator Paul Lafond, due to health reasons, has resigned. The committee has not yet been reorganized, and, indeed, it was felt that before the committee reorganized and selected a new chairman we ought, at least, to extend the life of the committee beyond Tuesday of next week.

If Senator Marshall had been here—and he is absent from today's sitting for reasons personal to him. In fact, he is attending the funeral of a very good friend of mine, as well, in Nova Scotia—I would have included his name as the seconder of this motion. He is fully aware of it, and I do not think I am trespassing on his good faith to say that he supports it entirely. For that reason I named Senator McElman as the seconder of the motion.

Some honourable senators may recall that I was the mover of the motion that originally established the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence to undertake a study of Canada's land forces. If this motion passes, I think we can complete our work in the time stipulated in the motion.

In further support of the motion, I should add that we have enough money left in our budget to complete the work of the committee in this fiscal year, that is, to carry all our expenses to March 31, 1988. As a matter of fact, the initial budget of the committee was about $133,000. We have spent about $73,000 and we have about $60,000 remaining. This will carry us through for the balance of this fiscal year so that no further budget provision will be required.

I hope that the committee, which has a meeting scheduled for this evening at 6 o'clock, will be able to have a meeting to reorganize itself on Thursday morning, before we leave, so that before the Christmas recess we can instruct the staff of the committee about the work which needs to be done in the first three months, or thereabouts, of 1988.

Honourable senators, I think that the record of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence—whose predecessor started off as a sub-committee of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs—in its various forms, speaks for itself. I think that our reports on manpower in Canada's Armed Forces, on the maritime defence of Canada, and, latterly, two reports on North American air defence and the other on air transport command have been extremely well received. I think they have been a factor contributing to the reputation of the Senate and its work, and they certainly have been a factor affecting the morale of the men and women in Canada's Armed Forces, where the work of your Senate committee has, I think, been greatly appreciated.

In order to wind up the work of the committee and to conclude our study, we need to complete our analysis of Canada's land forces. We will then have dealt with manpower—sea, air and land. I hope that this may all be wrapped up and placed before you in one year and one week from today.

I urge you to support this motion, honourable senators.

Motion agreed to.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—DOCUMENTS TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, earlier today I indicated that I was expecting documents describing the studies undertaken for the proposed crossing of the Northumberland Strait. With your permission, I will revert to Presentation of Petitions so that I may table these documents.

Documents tabled.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

*(See p. 2313)*STATEMENT OF THE NDI INTERNATIONAL OBSERVER DELEGATION ON THE ABORTED HAITIAN ELECTION

The 30-person international delegation organized by the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs observed an unprecedented event on November 29, 1987 in Haiti—the cancellation of an election in progress because of rampant violence unleashed against peaceful, defenseless, determined and patriotic voters and election officials. The provisional Haitian government, the CNG, which took office promising to maintain order until a new government could be elected, failed in its self-proclaimed task.

The delegation, led by former Belize Prime Minister George Price and NDI president J. Brian Atwood, including party leaders from twelve countries, was invited to observe the November 29 Haitian elections by the Provisional Electoral Council (CEP) and by the CNG.

The President of the CNG, in a meeting on October 23, 1987, with former Prime Minister Price and former U.S. President Jimmy Carter, welcomed the presence of observers for the elections. This welcoming of international observers by the Haitian Government was confirmed in writing by the Haitian Ambassador to the U.S. in a letter to NDI.

While Haitians assumed the primary responsibility for administering and monitoring the November 29 elections, the invitation to international election observers was consistent with established practice. Such election observer missions are common among the nations of the international community which are governed democratically.

The conclusions contained in this statement are based on the delegation's observations in Port-au-Prince, Gonaives, Jacmel and Les Cayes. Our attempts to observe the process in other regions were prevented when the Armed Forces refused to clear chartered aircraft to fly to remote areas.

On election day, the delegation observed numerous incidents of shooting at defenseless and innocent people on the streets of Port-au-Prince. Two groups of NDI observers were fired upon, with three shots hitting the vehicle of one of the groups. The delegation also heard reports of the many people who died as a result of the violence which prevailed in much of the country and which was clearly orchestrated to frustrate the voting process.

The delegation also observed for several hours an election process which was operating despite intimidation and adverse conditions. It observed large numbers of voters waiting in lines to cast their ballots with democratic fervor in the first free Haitian election in more than three decades. We observed exultant election officials arriving at polling places with election materials, having survived a night of gunfire, fire bombings and grenade attacks. We saw Haitians from across the political spectrum volunteering in order to make the election successful. Indeed, in one region, we observed the election officials and the armed forces working together, with the latter providing the security essential for the conduct of a peaceful election.

From its observations both before and on election day, the delegation is convinced that the Provisional Electoral Council did its utmost to meet its constitutional mandate. As the delegation expected, on election day we did observe some deficiencies in the process: there were some administrative difficulties but most problems resulted from the lack of cooperation provided by the CNG on security and other matters. In particular, the CNG failed to secure the roads and denied the CEP permission to use helicopters chartered by the CEP with the full knowledge and consent of the CNG. This prevented the distribution of election materials in several regions of Haiti. It is our view that the armed forces and the police tolerated and in some cases abetted the violence which disrupted the elections.

Despite all the adversities sustained in the period leading up to the elections, the Haitian people wanted to vote. They were deprived of this opportunity only when the CEP found it necessary at 9:00 a.m. on election day, but hours after polls had opened, to postpone the election to prevent the likelihood of further massacres. Based on our observations, we reject unequivocally the CNG's attempt to cast blame on the CEP for the failure of the elections; this was clearly caused by the violence which only the CNG was in a position to prevent.

As an international delegation, we commit ourselves to follow closely the situation in Haiti and to urge our governments to do all in their power to prevent the further loss of life and to ensure Haitians their right to freely choose their own Government. Haiti's neighbors and the Organization of American States, of which Haiti is a member state, have a major responsibility in this regard.

We will also urge our governments and our parties to consider the crisis facing Haiti as a matter of the utmost urgency.

Finally, we are confident that the people of Haiti will ultimately prevail in conducting a free, fair and peaceful election in the future. We commit ourselves to return to observe that event and to continued solidarity with the people of Haiti as they pursue their democratic aspirations.

MEMBERS OF THE NDI DELEGATION

George Price, Co-Leader, Belize
J. Brian Atwood, Co-Leader, U.S.
Herman Alvino, Venezuela
Graeme Bannerman, U.S.
Enrique Carreras, Costa Rica
Vivian Lowery Derryck, U.S.
Neville Gallimore, Jamaica
Larry Garber, U.S.
Juan Manuel Garcia-Passalacqua, Puerto Rico
Steve Horblitt, U.S.
Julian Hunte, St. Lucia
Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, Liberia
Anthony Maingot, Trinidad & Tobago
Billie Miller, Barbados

Gildas Molgat, Canada
M. Ousmane Ngom, Senegal
Mariano S. Quesada, The Philippines
Nancy Soderberg, U.S.
Antonio Blavia, Venezuela
Roberto Tovar, Costa Rica
Casimir Yost, U.S.

NDI Staff

Sean Carroll
Ron Davidson
Leticia Martinez
Michael Stoddard
Ingrid Thomas
Geraldine Thompson

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 9, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-64, to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

FISHERIES

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table an interim report on the west coast fisheries, which is the second phase of the study on the marketing of fish in Canada undertaken by the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Marshall, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

PROPOSED STANDING COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have the honour to give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, December 10, 1987, Universal Human Rights Day, I will move:

That Rule 67.(1) of the Rules of the Senate be amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (o) the following new paragraph (p):

(p) The Standing Senate Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS FOR 1987 CROP YEAR

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have been away for a few days, and I hope you noticed.

An Hon. Senator: We missed you!

Senator Olson: While I was gone, there was an announcement about a stabilization payment, or the final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, a program that was established by the previous government, for which the farmers are very grateful. We have not yet had any response from the minister respecting a deficiency payment for the 1987 crop year—and, of course, I have asked about this several times during the year. Can the minister now tell us whether or not a payment will be made, and, if so, when the grain producers, who are having a very difficult time because of very low international prices, can expect a payment? Whether or not it is to be made immediately, they could at least take it into their financing plans for the coming months.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I believe the Prime Minister indicated during the First Ministers' Conference in Toronto a week or two ago that an announcement on that matter would be made before Christmas.

Senator Olson: Thank you very much. I hope it will be.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

EXISTENCE OF JOINT COMMITTEE—STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if he would inform his colleague, the Honourable David Crombie, Secretary of State of Canada, that a Special Joint Committee on Official Languages was created in 1980 and a Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages in 1984.

On December 3, when appearing on Peter Gzowski's program on CBC, Mr. Crombie informed all Canadians that no such committee existed. Coming from a minister who is responsible for minority groups and education protocols that are now being signed, I find that incredible.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sure there must be a misunderstanding somewhere, because Mr. Crombie is very well aware of the existence of the standing joint committee of this place and of the other house on official languages. I have not heard anything about the interview between Mr. Crombie and Mr. Gzowski. I suspect, without knowing anything about it, that Mr. Crombie was referring to references in the proposed amendments to the Official Languages Act dealing with the joint committee.

Senator Wood: He clearly said that there was no such committee. I have the tape in my office, which I could send to the Leader of the Government, in which he clearly said that there was no such committee.

AIR CANADA

LABOUR DISPUTE—CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning the Air Canada strike. I am wondering whether he has anything further to report and whether he has answers to my questions of yesterday. I would like to know how the negotiations are going.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sorry, but I have nothing to report further to what I told the house yesterday.

Senator Argue: I hope that the government will soon be prepared to accept the principle that indexing of pensions is good in its own right, and that there should be movement by Air Canada toward that end.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I hope that the honourable senator accepts the principle that the resolution of this dispute is between Air Canada and its employees. The government is not a party to the dispute.

Senator Argue: I would like to believe that, but I don't. I think the government takes sides and that the government is on the side of Air Canada in trying to weaken the union. But that is a matter of opinion—

Senator Olson: If they are, then it separates fact from fiction.

Senator Argue: —but I believe that to be the case. I think this government is always with management. I think that this government basically is anti-labour.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

An Hon. Senator: Order!

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—CURRENT SITUATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question concerning a strike that I believe went into effect today at the Prince Rupert Terminal in British Columbia. Before asking a general question on the current situation and what action, if any, the government is proposing to take, I hope I may be pardoned by my colleagues if I give a little of the background to this strike and the parties involved.

The president of the Grain Workers Union is a man by the name of Henry Kancs. I have been associated and have had dealings with Henry Kancs for many years. I think he is one of the most responsible labour leaders in this country. He not only has the welfare of the membership of his union very much at heart, but he also understands the economic position of the farmers, and he wants to be fair. That is how I have found this individual to be for many years, and I had occasion to meet with him from time to time when I was a minister a few years ago.

● (1410)

Senator Simard: The good old days.

Senator Argue: I have talked to Mr. Kancs on the telephone. He informs me that the same companies involved in the present strike at Prince Rupert settled a three-year agreement on October 10 with the terminal operators at Vancouver. The settlement was for a total increase of 5 per cent in wages over a period of three years. I do not see how anybody could be more responsible than to say, "We will take a total increase of 5 per cent over three years," knowing that that increase will likely be a good deal less than the rate of inflation over that period.

The nub of the problem here is whether or not management will be able to designate as foremen persons who are actively engaged in the operation of the terminal. In the old terminal there were 115 unionized employees and four foremen.

Senator Doody: Question!

Senator Argue: In this new union situation there are 69 employees and 45 supervisory personnel. Mr. Kancs is very much aware that in Prince Rupert the unemployment rate is 33 per cent. In Ontario the unemployment rate is 4 per cent. However, recently management went to Thunder Bay and hired, I believe, four people who have the qualifications to be foremen, brought them out to Prince Rupert, put them in positions where they will be actively engaged in the work there, and this is the action that has brought on the strike. Henry Kancs' union has either not had a strike in 31 years, or it has been 31 years since they had the last strike. I would say that this union is one of the most responsible unions in Canada, and it is led by a leader who has the farmers' interests at heart as well as those of the workers. I ask the minister to respond.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, this is a dispute that goes back to the end of 1983—

Senator Argue: Three and a half years, yes.

Senator Murray:—when the collective agreement expired. Since that time the matter has been to conciliation, to mediation, to the Canada Labour Relations Board, to the Federal Court twice, and, as of this morning, the union commenced a legal strike. I am informed that no meetings between the parties are currently scheduled. I am not sure what response the honourable senator would like me to make, except to confirm the chronology of events which I just gave. I point out that there was a conciliation commissioner's report as long ago as January 1986, which was accepted by the company but rejected by the union. I do not know where that leaves us, but at the moment it leaves us with a legal strike commenced this morning by the union.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am not sure of the accuracy of the facts the minister gave in his last statement. I am not questioning his veracity; I am simply not aware that what he has said is fact. I understand that the union accepted the conciliation report with regard to the Vancouver situation.

In any event, I think that the minister in this chamber might have a word with the Minister of Labour, who I am sure is on top of this situation, to see if there is any development that he might wish to report to this chamber.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can tell the honourable senator that the parties met as long ago as April and May of 1985 with the Minister of Labour and with the Associate Deputy Minister of Labour. However, all of these meetings and other processes that I have referred to—the Canada Labour Relations Board, the Federal Court, and the mediation and conciliation efforts that have been made—have not succeeded in resolving this dispute. The employees are without a collective agreement at this moment and the union is on strike, legally.

THE ENVIRONMENT

POLLUTION OF GREAT LAKES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the increasing number of scientific reports that Canadians living around the Great Lakes and using the water from those lakes—the greatest body of fresh water in the world—are being contaminated not only by the water but also by some paper items and others that go into the manufacturing of consumer products, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government what the government has done to date to deal with this problem. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us what government ministries, departments or agencies are involved in any studies of this problem, and when can Canadians expect some action to diminish it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there are a number of questions rolled into that one presentation. It is a rather comprehensive report that the honourable senator is seeking. I will see whether it is possible to obtain one in a form that is suitable for Question Period.

[Senator Murray.]

ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

RELATIONSHIP WITH CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate which is similar to the question that Senator Lucier asked yesterday. I hope that Arctic sovereignty is not part of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. I think it was approximately two weeks ago that the Leader of the Government in the Senate was invited to attend the First Ministers' Conference in Toronto. Following that conference, I am wondering whether, in the same way that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories suffered in the wake of the Meech Lake Accord, Arctic sovereignty will be affected by this Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am sorry, but I do not quite understand the question.

Senator Adams: Then I will try again. Yesterday Senator Lucier asked a question as to whether the question of Arctic sovereignty formed part of the Free Trade Agreement. At that time you told him to wait until the agreement was concluded before we could see what had happened.

My question is: Will Arctic sovereignty be part of the Free Trade Agreement in the future? Since the maritime fish industry is not included in that agreement, as are neither transportation nor shipping, I was wondering whether Arctic sovereignty had also been excluded, or whether that was something we would have to face in the future.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the only reply I can give to that question is that there is no relation between the Free Trade Agreement signed between Canada and the United States, on the one hand, and the desire of both our countries for Arctic cooperation and for an agreement covering Arctic cooperation.

Senator Adams: What is Arctic cooperation? Is that a new concept? I do not know what is meant by "Arctic cooperation."

Senator Murray: There are a variety of subjects that are to be covered under the general title of Arctic cooperation, including, as has been indicated, the passage of ice-breakers through those waters over which Canada claims sovereignty.

● (1420)

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—AVAILABILITY OF STUDIES—GENERAL DESIGN OR CONCEPT—SUBMISSION OF PROPOSALS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, yesterday the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate tabled studies undertaken in relation to the proposed fixed crossing of the Northumberland Strait to connect the mainland of Canada to Prince Edward Island. Some time ago I suggested to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that given the interest of fishermen in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, it might be desirable that these studies be made available in libraries in those two provinces as well as in Prince Edward Island. I would like to know if anything has been done to carry out that suggestion.

I would remind the Leader of the Government in the Senate of a question I asked earlier. My earlier question was: Who has been invited to submit proposals for this permanent fixed crossing, and when will their proposals or tenders be receivable? Perhaps the Leader of the Government can answer that question now, or perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government intends to deal with it later this day.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with regard to the first part of the question, I do not know whether these studies have been made available to public libraries other than those in Prince Edward Island. However, I shall convey the honourable senator's suggestion to my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, recognizing as I do, and as he will, that interest in this matter is not confined to Prince Edward Island.

With regard to the second part of the question, the seven consortia invited to submit proposals are: Abegweit Crossing Limited, Halifax; Banister Continental Ltd.-Trimac Limited, Toronto; Dillingham Construction Limited, Vancouver; Monenco Maritimes Limited, Halifax; Northumberland Bridge Builders, Toronto; PEI Crossing Venturers, Montreal; W.A. Stephenson (Western) Limited, Calgary.

I do not have in front of me the deadline for the submission of proposals, but I will attempt to obtain that information and inform my friend.

Senator Stewart: Perhaps when the Leader of the Government is completing the answer to that aspect of the question he will obtain the names of the persons or companies that participate in the various consortia. For example, the Abegweit consortium consists of several persons. Some of that information has already been made available through the media.

It would be most helpful if we could also be told what these consortia were asked to deal with. Is it a bridge? Is it a canal? Is it a tunnel? Is it a mixed causeway-tunnel-canal project such as was proposed some 20 years ago? It would be good to know the kind of request that was submitted to the various consortia.

I must say that I am sure the Leader of the Government is frustrated with the Department of Public Works, because he asked for this information from that department at least three weeks ago.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do have a response to the honourable senator's question concerning the general design or concept. The statement says:

The government's approach to this project is for the private sector to design, build, finance and operate a bridge or tunnel under a long-term subsidy agreement.

At this stage, the Department of Public Works is finalizing through public meetings and review by the regulatory agencies the environmental, technical and economic development guideline and criteria which the developers must adhere to in developing their design concepts. These design concepts which can be for either bridges or tunnels will be then submitted to Public Works for review. There could be up to seven different concepts [one for each consortium] and each must conform in every way to the criteria established. If a concept does not conform, the developer will be asked to revise his proposal. If he does not make the required revisions, the proposal will be excluded from further consideration. Once Public Works is satisfied that the various concepts meet the technical, environmental and economic development criteria, the developers will be asked to price their solutions. A contract would be awarded to the developer requiring the lowest level of government subsidy.

The successful concept be it bridge or tunnel would then proceed to the detailed design stage. Public Works would review the detailed design to ensure its integrity and would monitor construction to ensure quality and safety are not compromised.

The government's general design at this juncture is for a bridge or a drive-through tunnel from shore to shore.

Senator Stewart: I think that is very useful, because we now know that the permanent fixed crossing, as envisioned by the government, is to be either a bridge or a tunnel from shore to shore.

Just for greater certainty, may I ask the minister if this means that the permanent fixed crossing will not involve a segment of causeway on both or either of the ends.

The reason I ask this question, honourable senators, is that it is causeway segment or segments which will have a major effect on tidal flows and ice movements, and therefore the fisheries.

Am I correct in concluding what seems obvious from the minister's answer, that no causeway segment whatsoever will be involved in the project?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is correct in observing that the word "causeway" does not occur once in the statement I have just read. It would therefore seem to me that a causeway is excluded, as he suggested, but I will want to confirm that with my colleague and report back.

ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

RELATIONSHIP WITH CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PARTICIPATION OF TERRITORIES

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the impending agreement between Canada and the United States with respect to the Canadian Arctic.

When I asked a question yesterday, the minister said:

Honourable senators, with the greatest respect, the subject matter of these discussions with the United States is not the responsibility of the territorial governments. The subject matter is squarely the responsibility of the Government of Canada.

He then went on to say:

—we have had very close cooperation with the governments of the territories on any number of matters in the past several years.

During my recent trip to the Yukon as a member of the task force, honourable senators, Mr. Nick Sibbeston, who at that time was the elected Government Leader of the Northwest Territories—for the record, I should like to say that the person holding that office is equal to the premier of a province as far as we in the Northwest Territories or the Yukon Territory are concerned—was asked the following questions by the chairman and gave the following answers:

The Chairman: In the process leading up to the Meech Lake accord, it is my understanding that Senator Lowell Murray, the Minister responsible for Federal-Provincial Relations, was negotiating. Were there any negotiations with you; did he come to Yellowknife to discuss with you, or did he invite you to Ottawa to discuss with him?

Mr. Sibbeston: Not at all whatsoever, sir. Our letters were simply not answered by the Prime Minister and the Premiers.

The chairman then asked:

Have you ever met Senator Lowell Murray, the Minister of Federal-Provincial Relations?

And Mr. Sibbeston replied:

No, sir. And I have never met the Prime Minister.

The chairman then asked:

You have never met the Prime Minister either?

And Mr. Sibbeston replied:

I have never met the Prime Minister to discuss matters of mutual concern. I attempted to arrange a meeting with the Prime Minister last winter and when he became aware of the agenda items, which included constitutional development, the meeting was . . . It seemed as if we were going to get a meeting with him, but the meeting was suddenly not available. He insulted us by agreeing to have a meeting, just to have a picture taken of him and me. That is the closest . . . I, as Government Leader, have ever got to the Prime Minister. He offered to have his picture taken with me.

Senator Perrault: What an honour!

● (1430)

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, that is the cooperation that takes place between this government and the leaders of the two northern territories.

[Senator Lucier.]

In reply to a question from Senator Adams just now—which I thought was no reply at all—the Leader of the Government in the Senate said that there was no relationship between this agreement being signed on the Canadian Arctic and free trade. It seems to me that we were told the same thing concerning Bill C-22, the drug bill, and the Auto Pact.

Is the minister seriously suggesting that we should believe that there is no relationship between this agreement and free trade, and that it is just a coincidence that this thing is now being negotiated at the same time as the Free Trade Agreement?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the issues involved in Arctic cooperation between Canada and the United States pre-date any consideration or announcement by the government concerning free trade negotiations with the United States. I repeat, the two are unrelated.

With regard to the first part of the honourable senator's question, first of all, I stand by my statement yesterday that there has been considerable devolution from the federal government, from Ottawa, of provincial-type programs to the territorial governments. I believe that this is a positive development which is welcomed by the territorial governments and is working well. We intend to continue in that direction. I think it would be helpful to the honourable senator if I brought in a report in more detail on that matter, and I must remind myself to do that for his edification and for the information of other honourable senators.

With regard to the involvement of the territorial governments and the process leading up to Meech Lake, I have stated here before and repeat that my duty as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations was to consult with those governments that are part of the amending process, which are the governments of the provinces. It was the responsibility of the Prime Minister of Canada, in order to end the isolation of Quebec—a major partner in our Confederation—from the Constitution, to convene the provinces at Meech Lake and again at the Langevin Block, which he did.

As far as Mr. Sibbeston is concerned, I seem to believe that we have met at some point either during the ministerial or First Ministers' meetings on aboriginal constitutional reform. Obviously, for him it must have been a forgettable meeting.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, first of all, I would like to say that I want to commend this government and the previous government for the ongoing devolution of powers to both territories, which has taken place in the last 10 or 15 years. Both the present and the previous governments did a good job and have continued to do a good job of devolution of powers to the territories. The territories have both proven that the powers that have gone to them have been handled well. There have been some problems, but few in devolution of powers. I want to make it clear that I would appreciate receiving a report from the minister for the clarification of all senators. I would also like to see it. I have no problem with that, but I still have a problem with a government minister being able to stand in this place, or in any place, and say, "Because we are giving you some devolution of powers, you cannot have any discussions on something as germane to those areas as an Arctic agreement." This concerns Senator Adams', Senator Watt's and my own constituents. It concerns them directly. How can you discuss something like that without discussing it with the people of those areas? They are the ones who are going to be directly affected by it. How can you discuss the Meech Lake Accord with the premiers when you are dealing strictly with our areas?

I know that there were other matters contained in the Meech Lake Accord, and we are not arguing about those. How could you discuss with the premiers matters which are going to have a significant impact on the North without having the North represented? Surely the Leader of the Government is not suggesting to this chamber that because the government does some things for us we should accept everything else it does. Surely that is not your position.

Senator Murray: That is not our position, honourable senators.

Yesterday my friend was suggesting that there had been some considerable neglect of the North by the present government and I wanted to point to devolution of authorities as a very positive area that had been pursued successfully by the federal government in cooperation with the territorial governments.

The short answer to the question about the Meech Lake Accord, again, is that it was our responsibility to convene those parties to the amending process to try to end the isolation of Quebec, and the change in the amending formula as it would affect the creation of new provinces is a matter that we have debated here before and we will debate again. I repeat that the entry of a new province into Confederation is a matter which is and must be of interest to each and all of the other parties to Confederation. It seems to me perfectly consistent with the principle of equality of the provinces that each and every one of the partners to Confederation have a say in the process.

The creation of a new province in our Confederation would affect the workings of the amending formula, and since the amending formula itself cannot be changed without unanimous consent, it seems to me to be logical and consistent that the creation of a new province in Confederation should be subject to unanimous consent. This is not a matter on which my friend and I agree, I recognize that, but I do not think it is a matter that can be usefully pursued in the course of the Question Period.

On the question of the problem of Arctic cooperation between Canada and the United States, I can only say that the honourable senator should wait and see what is in any such agreement before he begins to speculate about it or criticize it.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, it seems to me that the last couple of times we waited to see what was in an agreement we got hammered pretty well. We waited to see what was in the Meech Lake Accord, and we got taken to the cleaners on it. We were told that it just could not be touched or it would come apart.

I certainly agree with the minister when he says that whether the Yukon or the Northwest Territories become provinces certainly would have some effect on the other provinces and they would have an interest in that, the same interest that they had when Newfoundland became a province, and the same interest that they had when Alberta and B.C. became provinces. The other provinces were interested at that time, but the decision was made by the central government. The decision was made by the Government of Canada and no one else had to agree to it. To suggest that there is any similarity between these cases I just do not think is accurate.

Again, for anyone to keep bringing up the fact that somehow, to get Quebec into the family—which all of us wanted—the give-away of the territories had to take place is just not being honest. It just is not so. This cannot be tied to Quebec. Quebec was not asking that all provinces have a say in whether or not the Northwest Territories or the Yukon could become provinces.

When the minister replied, he said that there has been a devolution of powers to the territories. I agree with that statement, and along with that devolution of powers comes responsibility. I think that both elected leaders of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have done a good job of assuming their responsibilities in dealing with the federal government on all types of issues. I have a difficult time believing that this or any government could enter into agreements of this nature without going to those elected leaders to whom they have been giving powers and at least saying, "We are in the process of doing this and we would like to talk to you about it." Surely that is not asking too much. I realize that the leaders of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories do not have to agree to it, but surely they deserve to have the matter discussed with them.

• (1440)

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, first, the honourable senator seems to prefer the situation that existed prior to the patriation of our Constitution. Under that arrangement, as he correctly observed, the federal Parliament unilaterally decided on the creation of new provinces. That changed in 1981 when the Constitution was patriated, and the creation of new provinces was made subject to an amending formula; that is, the consent of Parliament and seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population. That was a substantive change. I do not recall whether my friend voted against that matter when it was before the Senate. However, I will have an opportunity to look that up.

Second, with regard to this Arctic cooperation agreement—which, as I told the house yesterday, remains to be concluded—I am aware of the speculation he mentioned. While I cannot comment on it, I note that it suggests that under such an agreement Canada's permission would be required before ice-breakers were permitted to enter those waters over which we now claim sovereignty. Surely the honourable senator does not object to that.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, just to deal with the 1981 amending formula, I would like to point out that I was a member of the joint Senate-House of Commons committee that studied the Constitution in 1981 and 1982. I further point out that I spoke—and he is welcome to refer to the record—very strenuously against the seven-three formula with the 50 per cent. At that time I said—and I can remember this—that the seven-three formula with 50 per cent virtually removed the hopes of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to become provinces. I spoke against the amending formula when it was seven and three with 50 per cent.

Senator Murray: How did you vote when it came to the Senate?

Senator Lucier: I voted in favour of the entire agreement, yes, I did.

Senator Murray: That is what I am asking you to do on the Meech Lake agreement.

Senator Lucier: Thanks very much, but I will not be doing that on the Meech Lake agreement.

Senator Frith: But thanks for asking.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I want to point out that the amending formula of seven and three with 50 per cent was not in the original agreement presented by the government of the day. That formula was included at the insistence of the premiers when the agreement went to them for their input. I repeat that the amending formula was inserted at the insistence of the premiers, and was not included by the government of the day.

Senator Murray: The premiers minus one important premier.

Senator Lucier: Absolutely. It is ludicrous for anyone to suggest that we were in favour of the absence of one premier. That is just not so. We were very much in favour of Premier Lévesque's signing the accord, but I think the government leader will recognize as well as anyone else that there was no accord Premier Lévesque would ever have signed at that time.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, if I may, I shall ask a supplementary question. The Leader of the Government in the Senate has insisted that Canada has sovereignty over the Canadian Arctic. He now states that there is forthcoming an agreement with regard to cooperation in the Arctic. Would he tell us why, since Canada is the sovereign power there, a special agreement with the United States is necessary? Would he tell us whether this potential agreement implies that there is a kind of bidominium of Canada and the United States over the Arctic, or is this a concession to the United States view that these waters are outside the ownership and legislative jurisdiction of Canada?

Senator Murray: I think the honourable senator knows the answer to the first part of the question as well as I do. We claim sovereignty over those waters, and that claim to sovereignty is disputed.

[Senator Murray.]

The rest of the question, as it affects the agreement that is yet to be concluded between Canada and the United States, is, for the moment at least, hypothetical.

Senator Stewart: Then, honourable senators, the negotiation of the agreement recognizes that our claim to sovereignty is at least questionable.

Senator Murray: No, it is disputed.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

FINAL TEXT OF ENERGY PROVISIONS—DELAY IN RELEASE OF FINAL TEXT

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have one more question of the Leader of the Government with respect to the text of the proposed Free Trade Agreement with the United States. I do not intend to ask when the text will be available, unless he is willing to volunteer that information, because apparently even the House of Commons committee is unable to obtain it for yet another few days, and I can understand that.

My question is this: When the final text was drawn, were any changes made to the section dealing with energy? I think that is a fair question, because people like the U.S. ambassador to Canada, Mr. Niles, has said that under the heading of the dispute settlement mechanism there were some changes. He went on to describe them, claiming that Canada won some great victory, or words to that effect. Have any significant changes been made to the energy section of the final draft of the agreement?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think it would be quite hazardous for me to try to answer the last part of that question. Indeed, I cannot offer much satisfaction on the first part of the question. My information is not as current as it should be. We had hoped to release that text before the end of this week. I may say that that will be followed shortly by a meeting of the committee on trade negotiations, a group of federal and provincial officials who have been meeting throughout the free trade negotiations, and then by a First Ministers' meeting.

Senator Olson: Is the delay in the release of the text simply due to the proof-reading of it by legal experts, or are there other negotiations that will take place, depending upon the interpretations of what is now in the text? I ask that question because the reason for the delay could make quite a lot of difference in the amount of time prior to January 2 we will have to examine the text.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the delay is due to legal phrasing and, as a matter of fact, the translation into both of our official languages that is now taking place. The document that was initialled or signed the other night was initialled ad referendum. The government has taken note of it and has approved the written text as it was and as it is now being refined. There appear to be no more substantive questions to be resolved, which I believe is the question my friend has raised.

ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

PARTICIPATION OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLES IN CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question on the matter of Arctic sovereignty. I understand that he is trying to differentiate between what falls under the Constitution and what falls under the question of Arctic sovereignty.

The question I would like to put to the Leader of the Government is: How could the government deal with the question of Arctic sovereignty when the aboriginal peoples are not even part of the Constitution of this country? This question is a very important one and I would like to have it answered. If the Leader of the Government cannot give me an answer today, I would like an answer in the very near future, because I have to take a reply to my people in the North.

• (1450)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I know what my honourable friend means when he says that the aboriginal peoples are not part of the Constitution of Canada. Nevertheless, I would remind him that in 1982 aboriginal rights were reaffirmed in the Constitution of Canada, and I also remind him that a number of First Ministers' conferences, constitutionally mandated, were held to try to define those rights in our Constitution. Those conferences did not succeed. We are now seeking actively through discussions with representatives of aboriginal peoples a new process, one that would have some prospect of success.

Meanwhile, the honourable senator surely does not suggest that the Government of Canada should not exercise its responsibilities concerning our sovereignty in that area and our responsibility for that area as a government.

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I am fully aware of what is in the Constitution and what falls under section 35. I was one of the key players in the constitutional process practically from day one. On top of that, we, as aboriginal people, have spent a large amount of our money on research in relation to the Constitution, so I am fully aware of what is contained in the Constitution. Before the Constitution was patriated, I was fully aware of what was contained in it and of the liabilities and obligations of the Government of Canada as a trustee for the aboriginal peoples. However, the Prime Minister, the leader of this country, has relinquished his responsibility in that trusteeship of the rights of the aboriginal peoples, as far as I am concerned. Under the amending formula the Prime Minister must seek the consent of the provinces to determine what can be put on the agenda of a First Ministers' conference. To me, this indicates that the Prime Minister has relinquished his responsibility. Quebec was left out of the Constitution, and it was felt important to Canada that that province sign the Constitution. In a sense, we, the aboriginal peoples, are in the same situation, because we, too, have been left out in the dark.

With regard to the question of Arctic sovereignty, I do not think the Government of Canada has any business whatever to negotiate with the United States rights to that part of the world without the participation of aboriginal peoples. I feel strongly that these negotiations are a constitutional matter.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can only tell the honourable senator that he is wrong on the question of the agenda for future constitutional conferences. The Prime Minister of Canada does not need the consent of the provinces to convene a constitutional conference at any time on any subject. As a matter of fact, the honourable senator will be aware that the question of aboriginal rights is not on the agenda for the conference that would be convened in 1988—if the Meech Lake Accord is ratified.

Senator Watt: If one province says, "No, there will not be a conference!" it is as simple as that!

Senator Murray: I am telling the honourable senator that we have had discussions with representatives of aboriginal peoples to see whether we can agree on a new process to deal with aboriginal constitutional rights.

Senator Lucier: If the provinces do not agree, you can do nothing!

Senator Murray: My honourable friend is totally wrong on that point. I think that that is the answer he would get from most people who have some responsibility for the matter.

Senator Lucier: I know the honourable senator helped write the accord, but he had better go back and read it!

Senator Murray: I know what is in the accord. I am saying that with regard to aboriginal constitutional rights, we have begun discussions with a view to finding a new process, the previous process having failed. If we can agree on such a process, we shall enter into it with a view to crowning it with a First Ministers' conference that would agree—not fail—but agree on a definition of aboriginal constitutional rights and, in particular, on the question of self-government—which item has been on the agenda.

Senator Lucier: If the premiers agree!

Senator Murray: That process can be, and obviously will be, separate from the 1988 conference and from the conferences that are spoken of in the Meech Lake Accord, where Senate reform and the roles and responsibilities of fisheries are specifically mentioned.

So, I am correcting my friend and others who say that the Prime Minister of Canada cannot call a conference at any time on aboriginal rights or any other subject.

Senator Lucier: He can call one, but no one has to come!

Senator Murray: It is his prerogative to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, there is before the house an order that on Wednesdays the Senate resolve itself into Committee of the Whole at 3 o'clock.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Your Honour, may I speak to that subject? Honourable senators are aware, as Mr. Speaker has just pointed out, that we have an order to resolve into Committee of the Whole at 3 o'clock. Honourable senators may also be aware that we have reached agreement with regard to Bill C-64, which is a piece of legislation that, for a number of reasons, requires that it be dealt with today. I wonder if it would be possible, at least in the parliamentary sense, to consider the clock stopped at 3 o'clock so that we may deal with Bill C-64 for the 15 or 20 minutes that it will take, and then go into Committee of the Whole. It would, I think, be very helpful for the senators who intend to deal with Bill C-64 to deal with the matter now and refer it to the committee that will deal with it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am sure that that would not affect—

Senator Stewart: Order! Senator Watt has the floor!

Senator Watt: Honourable senators—

Senator Marchand: Senator Watt wants to finish his questioning.

Senator Frith: I understand that, but there is a house order that requires this interruption.

Senator Marchand: But he will be allowed to finish his questioning?

Senator Frith: Of course, he will be allowed to finish his questioning.

Senator Nurgitz: Do you fellows get along?

Senator Frith: I merely want to raise the question about Senator Doody's comments as to whether or not such a change would inconvenience any of us. I do not think that it would. Perhaps Senator Molgat could tell us whether the change would inconvenience witnesses. If not, perhaps we could come to such an arrangement.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, two very distinguished witnesses will appear before us today. They are here now waiting to be heard. One of them has come from outside Ottawa purposely to meet with us. The witnesses were advised that we would begin at 3 p.m. That is the situation we are in.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I can appreciate the situation, and I am familiar with the position. However, we agreed informally to try, wherever possible, to accommodate the passage of government business where it would not conflict with the operations of this Committee of the Whole. I suppose it would be unfair to suggest that the affairs being dealt with by the Committee of the Whole could perhaps be better dealt with in a standing committee, as that is beside the point at this stage of the game. Obviously, I am at the disposal of the Senate. If it wishes to go ahead with Committee of the Whole at this point, the house order would certainly facilitate it.

Senator Frith: I hope there is no misunderstanding here. If we proceed now with Committee of the Whole, we will stay on afterwards to deal with government business. It is just a question of why we cannot deal with the legislation after the Committee of the Whole.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

● (1500)

Hon. Duff Roblin: Perhaps, as an interested party, I might inquire as to what our timetable is, because it is my heavy responsibility to introduce this bill. I was expecting to do it quite soon, and I would like to know when the house would be disposed to hear me. I hope it would at least be today.

Senator Frith: Oh, yes.

Senator Roblin: If so, what time today?

Senator Frith: That would depend on how long it takes for Committee of the Whole.

Senator Roblin: How long will that be?

Senator Frith: I cannot predict that any better than anyone else can. However, our experience has been that each witness takes from half an hour to an hour.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I certainly appreciate the inconvenience caused to people who are appearing before the Committee of the Whole. However, I would suggest to honourable senators that if Bill C-64 is to be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, we intend to have a meeting tomorrow morning of that committee and must arrange to summon officials and others to that meeting to deal with this very important legislation. I might further suggest that it is getting fairly late in the day for us to set those kinds of things in motion. Therefore, I hope that there will be some accommodation to allow Senator Roblin to deal with this bill, and, on behalf of the people on this side of the house, I will undertake to speak only two sentences.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, Senator Doody has suggested that we stop the clock. What is your wish? Are we to proceed with Question Period? It is your decision.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators—

Senator Watt: I have a question I would like to finish, if I may.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Molgat?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, in fairness to the witnesses whom we have invited to appear, I remind the Senate that we agreed that we would have a set time. Otherwise, I think it is unreasonable to ask distinguished Canadians to prepare themselves to appear before us, to give them a time, and then to change that time. We have done it previously for a matter of half an hour, but to postpone the hearing of these witnesses indefinitely is not reasonable on the part of the Senate, in my opinion.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Le Moynes: Honourable senators, I suggest that we should sit tonight.

I do not think it is going to exhaust us and I feel it is necessary under the circumstances. Therefore, I move, seconded by Senator Corbin, that we should sit tonight.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the question of having to sit this evening has not yet arisen. There still seems to be some misunderstanding. Senator Roblin wanted to know if we intended to deal with the bill today, and perhaps he had not been told about the understanding that we had. It is exactly that: that we will deal with the bill today at second reading and refer it to the committee. Therefore, that is not an issue. The issue is purely one of time, and the question of whether or not we sit this evening might very well arise. However, it seems to me that at the moment it has not yet arisen. I agree with Senator Le Moynes that if it is necessary to sit this evening, that is what we should do. However, we do not know yet whether it is necessary.

Senator Le Moynes: I merely wanted to open the door to the possibility, that is all. I will take back my motion, if necessary.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, in view of what has just been stated, namely, that Bill C-64 will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce today, then, as chairman of that committee, I will arrange to have witnesses available for our meeting tomorrow.

Senator Frith: In that event, I think we had better proceed with the Committee of the Whole after Senator Watt finishes his question.

Senator Watt: Thank you, honourable senators, for allowing me to finish my question.

In regard to the Meech Lake Accord, I do read, and I understand what I read. If I do not understand what I read, I seek advice, not only from one person but from several sources. The wording in the Meech Lake Accord to me is quite clear, honourable senators. With respect to a matter that is supposed to be placed on the agenda to be agreed upon, to me, it requires the rest of the provinces to agree before that item goes on the agenda.

I do not agree with the response I received from the Leader of the Government in the Senate, saying that the Prime Minister of Canada, by himself, has the right to place an item on that agenda. I do not agree with that; that is not the way the Meech Lake Accord reads, and I wish to point that out to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps he does not agree with you.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think I should again insist that while the Meech Lake Accord covers an annual meeting on the Constitution and provides for an agenda, there is still nothing in the Meech Lake Accord to prevent the Prime Minister of Canada from convening a constitutional conference on any other matter at any time.

As I have said before in this place, it would be undesirable to convene a conference on aboriginal constitutional rights until we know that we have some real prospect of success. We have already had at least three or four failures. This is why I speak of a separate process that we are trying to invent between the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples and, in time, the provinces that will take us ultimately to a

First Ministers' conference that would have a realistic prospect of succeeding in defining aboriginal constitutional rights and, in particular, that of self-government.

Senator Watt: Honourable senators—

Senator Molgat: I remind honourable senators of our commitment to proceed with the Committee of the Whole. Perhaps further questions can be dealt with tomorrow.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS— CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we await the arrival of our first witness.

Pursuant to order adopted on June 18, 1987, Dr. Marguerite E. Ritchie, Q.C., and Professor Theodore Geraets were escorted to seats in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Dr. Ritchie, may I welcome you to the Senate and tell you how pleased we are to have you with us.

Honourable senators, I might tell you briefly that Dr. Marguerite Ritchie is a distinguished member of the legal profession in Canada, with long experience here in Ottawa both in and out of government. She is the founding president of the association which she represents here this afternoon, the Human Rights Institute of Canada.

• (1510)

Dr. Ritchie, before you begin, would you identify the person who is with you?

Dr. Marguerite Ritchie, Q.C., President, Human Rights Institute of Canada: I would like to present to the honourable members of the Senate Professor Theodore Geraets, who is a professor of philosophy. He will later introduce himself in more detail. May I just say that he is also a member of the Human Rights Institute of Canada. His presentation will complete what we, on behalf of the institute, are presenting.

The Chairman: Thank you, Dr. Ritchie. I presume you have an opening statement. Will your colleague be speaking immediately following your presentation, or do you wish to proceed to questions following your presentation?

Dr. Ritchie: Subject to the procedure of honourable senators, I suggest that I make my presentation, then Professor Geraets will deal with his presentation, and then we will both be available to the members of the Senate for questions to be directed in whatever way they wish. Would that be acceptable?

The Chairman: That is quite proper. Dr. Ritchie, would you like to proceed?

Dr. Ritchie: Thank you.

[Translation]

First of all, I wish to thank the senators for inviting us to come and discuss a matter that is of such vital importance to all Canadian citizens.

As you may have noticed in your copy of our presentation, for us the fundamental issue is simply what is going to happen to Canadian citizens. We have indicated our concerns in our formal presentation. Later on, Professor Geraets will elaborate on how Canadians are to express their views.

[English]

I would like to ask that our brief be taken into the record. However, I would like to comment upon it. As you may note, it is entitled: "We, the Governments." Originally it was entitled, "We, the People," because that is what people tend to look for when they look at the Meech Lake Accord. One of our members said, "But what you really mean is 'We, the Government,'" because the Meech Lake Accord does not deal with the rights of the people. The Meech Lake Accord is a division of powers among governments. The Meech Lake Accord is concerned with the rights of governments and not with the rights of people. For that reason I decided that the title that he had proposed was actually more appropriate. Instead of the title, "We, the People," we have the title, "We, The Governments" because of what the Meech Lake Accord deals with.

In the introduction to our brief I express the gratitude of the institute to this honourable house for holding its own hearings to look into this tremendously important document and the importance we attach to that fact. I set out there, not because senators are not fully aware of it, but plainly and simply for the record, the fact that this, I believe, will be the first open hearing by the Parliament of Canada. This house, as many people in Canada do not know and are therefore unable to appreciate the work that you do, is a very important part of the houses of Parliament. We believe that the position of the Senate in opening these hearings is one that must be brought to the attention of more people across Canada.

On page 2 I set out in general terms the position of the institute. I note two of the eminent members of our honorary board of governors: the Honourable Eugene Forsey and the Honourable Muriel McQueen Fergusson. Senator Fergusson was the first woman Speaker of the Senate and was a most distinguished person in the Senate. Senator Forsey's briefs and his work on the Meech Lake Accord are so well done that instead of redoing them, I have relied upon them. You will understand that I adopt them absolutely.

I have also noted the protests that have been made against the Meech Lake Accord by many different groups concerned with the problems they foresee for themselves: women, over 50 per cent of the population; native peoples, the first peoples of this country; Francophones outside of Quebec, who have made protests very much against the accord in many circumstances; Anglophones inside Quebec, who are fighting a long and difficult battle; multicultural groups, who are not particularly reassured by the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord. These people say, "What does that mean? Does that mean that we will be allowed to have our dances and sing our songs? But what does that mean from the point of view of real rights?" I have also heard that protests have been made by representatives of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. We are shocked that any proposal should actually involve the destruction and the taking away of rights from any other part of the Canadian peoples.

Long ago in the United States there was a man who said that anyone who asks for himself rights that he will not recognize for others is—and he was speaking over 100 years ago—a savage. That term, which is no longer acceptable, still expresses the meaning that anyone who demands for himself or herself rights that that person is not prepared to recognize for others really has no claim to the support of anyone who is concerned with justice or equality. Justice and equality are one and the same for all.

We also note the origin of the Human Rights Institute. We do not represent any individual group. The institute is intended to do research that it will be able to make available to the citizens of Canada on a non-partisan basis. Therefore, when we come in support of a particular situation, that is not because we started from that position but, rather, because we have ended with that position on the basis of research.

On page 3 I deal with the seamless web. In speaking to organizations I have distributed countless copies of the official blue document, "Strengthening the Canadian Federation," subtitled "The Constitution Amendment, 1987," to the public. They have opened it expecting to see something that is dramatic, something that they could put up on the wall, something like the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, something like the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights that people framed and are still on the office walls. What they find is a document that starts off by leaving off the flags of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. It proceeds through public relations statements and it ends up with a motion and a schedule of amendments, whose meaning no one can agree upon.

Far from being a seamless web, it is a hodgepodge of provisions and references to other documents. It is a patchwork. It contains no vision of Canada and no call to Canadians to be proud of their country. It leaves them with the question of whether, in fact, they will have a country at all if this confused document comes into effect. It is concerned with governments, not with people.

I then deal with the background of the Meech Lake Accord. I deal particularly with the fact that although there is a repeated statement about Quebec's having ceased in one way or another to be part of the Canadian family, or having ceased to be part of the Constitution, in actual fact that is not true. I quite understand that for psychological purposes and historic reasons Quebec has not cooperated in areas in which others expected that it would, but it did not cease to be part of the Constitution.

● (1520)

It seems to me that in a document that is going to be part of the historic records of Canada—if it goes through—it is important that there be clear and precise and accurate statements.

I have targeted in this brief the fact that there are repeated misstatements in that document. Those misstatements will be read by future generations of students, and they will find it very, very difficult to understand what was done at this time.

I also question whether what is intended to be remedied by the Meech Lake Accord can justify what was actually done to take away the rights of others, and I also question whether or not the statements that have been made with respect to the leaving out of Quebec in 1981 are correct.

I point out that, in our view, the answer is no. Our research reminds us that the situation in 1982 was so dynamic that many provincial leaders may have felt left out or insulted. Tempers ran high, and different provinces were jockeying for position with massive media campaigns. We have attached a summary from the Canadian Encyclopedia (1st ed., vol. 1, pp. 406-408) indicating the atmosphere. It is sometimes very refreshing to look back and see what actually did happen, because one often tends to forget in the flow of events.

I question also whether Mr. Lévesque, who was committed to separatism—as he was right up until the time of his death, regardless of what he may have said—would have accepted anything except sovereignty-association or some form of separatism. I quote Mr. Trudeau's statements to the joint committee in Ottawa on August 27, 1987, as compelling evidence in support of the fact that Mr. Lévesque would have accepted nothing. Responding to a question whether the then Government of Quebec would have accepted anything, even the Meech Lake Accord, Mr. Trudeau replied:

Of course it would not have accepted. It would not have accepted anything, let alone a new Constitution, a patriation, a charter that would bind everybody. From what we see, even this Quebec government is hoping the Charter will not bind them, so we can safely assume that the then government would have accepted no accord whatever.

I point out that that same point was made by Mr. Gordon Robertson when he testified before the same joint committee on August 5, 1987. Mr. Robertson then stated:

—the problem in 1980 and 1981... was that one really never knew whether there really was a bottom line with Mr. Lévesque. He had objections to a variety of things. He did subscribe to an amending formula...

And then Mr. Robertson went on to say:

But I do not think at any point one could be certain that one had a position on which Mr. Lévesque would say yes.

I raise on that basis, and on the basis of other remarks made there, the question of what is it that the Meech Lake Accord is supposed to be making up for, what is it that other Canadians are paying for, when it appears that there was really nothing that could have been done at that time, so far as we are aware, that would possibly have brought Mr. Lévesque on side other than, essentially, sovereignty-association.

As you will note later on, I raise the question of whether or not they have, in fact, received sovereignty-association via the Meech Lake Accord. It is, to my mind, a question that one must consider.

Then I deal with the question of whether Quebec lost by the constitutional changes in 1982, and I go through the situation legally and point out the gains that were actually made for French-speaking persons living in Quebec who had been opposed to ties with the United Kingdom. The French-speaking persons gained, and this was enormously important, and a very high price was paid by persons living in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and in the other provinces. English and French were incorporated into the Constitution as official languages of Canada, with absolutely equal status, now guaranteed and protected. I suggest it is impossible to disregard these changes in considering what Quebec gained by the 1982 Constitution Act.

Then I deal with aboriginal and treaty rights. I point out that aboriginal and treaty rights were, of course, matters historically within the federal jurisdiction, but the provinces gained a new voice in deciding the future of the first citizens of Canada. That, of course, is a matter that the native peoples of this country find difficult, and you can understand, very difficult to accept.

I deal also with the fact that women were excluded and had to fight to get back in so that there would be an equality provision enacted, and, still, that all of the provinces, of course, have their right to use the "notwithstanding" clause overriding the rights in sections 2 and 7 to 15, and Quebec has used that power.

Then I deal with the right of Quebec, like other provinces, to opt out of constitutional amendments transferring powers, rights or privileges. If the amendments relate to education or culture, they are entitled to reasonable compensation.

This is basically a legal paper, but it is only proper to record that these events probably were not seen within Quebec by everybody in the same way, because there were promises that were made by Mr. Trudeau and other federal politicians at the time of the Quebec Referendum, but those promises were vague. They were essentially, I think, a promise of heaven on earth. One can understand that that, of course, leaves up to the persons who are concerned with the question of whether they have received what they expected and what was never spelled out.

Then I go on to point out, though, that this is really our bottom line. It is the institute's position that no agreement is entitled to dispose of the rights of others in order to reach some accommodation. Some form of agreement must be found that does not sacrifice other groups or break up Canada, and in our view the accord does both.

Some recognition must be worked out that will recognize, officially, if necessary, what all Canadians understand as a fact; that is, that Quebec certainly has a distinct identity and it is historic and continuing, but the question is the price that is to be paid. I point out that the institute does not consider that the Meech Lake Accord is the answer. Although Quebec's refusal to participate in specific matters does create problems, the Meech Lake Accord will increase those problems far more.

I also point out that it is our position that Canadians must have full information about how the accord will affect them as individuals and as citizens in Canada.

Basically, we see the accord as a kind of lobster trap that is easy to get into and impossible to get out of. I think that the ratification of the legal text will put us into that position.

The following pages deal with what the accord will do, and point out that the unqualified statement in the preamble that the amendment recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces is absolutely opposite to the truth. This is the kind of thing that should never appear in a constitutional document. A constitutional document should state facts and should be correct.

I then deal with a number of areas of inequalities, specifically the linguistic duality and the distinct society and distinct identity provisions.

I assume, then, that this document having been taken into the record, it is not necessary for me, honourable senators, to remind you of all the points or to set them out in detail, because you are well aware of them.

● (1530)

On page 7 I question the morality as well as the historic error in denying recognition to the native peoples in any rewriting of the Constitution of Canada. I also query whether it is necessary to ignore the existence of peoples who have come from all corners of the world to become Canadians. If this is to be a document that appeals to Canada, let it appeal to Canada; let it appeal to all Canadians, not just a few. These changes are the seeds of trouble.

I then refer to the superb analysis that was made by the Honourable Eugene Forsey of the situation that will result if these provisions are accepted. I point out that although the linguistic duality, for example, appears equal at first glance insofar as the different provinces are concerned, the provision for the legislature and Government of Quebec preserving and promoting the "distinct identity of Quebec" is not equal.

As Dr. Forsey has pointed out, French-speaking people in other provinces may be able to assert rights under the linguistic duality provision, but the legislature and Government of Quebec may be able to deny similar rights to English-speaking people in Quebec under the "distinct identity" powers that have been given to Quebec alone. Regardless of the solemn official statements, there is no equality.

Further on that page I point out that it is not anti-Quebec to suggest that it is totally wrong in a democracy to hand over absolute power to any government whatsoever. There are no guarantees that a government will not abuse power. I refer to the fact that historically Quebec actually did exist as a province in which the rights of people were abused.

As you know, at the present time within the province of Quebec, which is generally so liberal and now has probably some of the most advanced legislation in Canada in general terms, the English-speaking people are having a difficult time. That will not get easier.

On page 8 I quote from Mr. Trudeau, who warned that:

Anyone who thinks that the "distinct society" provision does not include special powers is in for some nasty surprises later on. Because you just have to read what the representatives of the Quebec Government have said to their constituents publicly, in the National Assembly and in the newspapers. They see things differently;—

That, of course, is part of the problem. It is a matter of record in the newspapers as well.

The Premier of Quebec announced that the Meech Lake Accord was the greatest political victory for Quebec in 120 years. This is not the language of cooperation; it is not the language of an agreement that ends problems; it is a language that recognizes that there is a problem, and that that problem will be increased.

I also raise another point. When I appeared before the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, I had thought that it was possible that Quebec would wind up as a province in which there were fewer rights for others, but on further thought I realized that that will not happen, and that there cannot be a wall erected around any part of Canada. Essentially, it will be the signal to other provinces that they also do not have to live up to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and that they should use the "notwithstanding" clause. In my view, the Meech Lake Accord puts at risk the rights of all Canadians, every place. Of course, we are seeing that starting now, as you can see from reading the newspapers.

We also ask for an opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada as to whether those undefined words will give Quebec governments the power to override the Charter with respect to women and other groups and whether the rights of the native peoples will be affected by the same broad words, because there will be conflict there.

We also ask for an opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada as to whether those same undefined words will give the Quebec government the power to override those powers that have belonged to the federal government since Canada was formed in 1867. We urge that the time to find that out is before the accord is ratified, and not afterwards.

The next pages deal with the Supreme Court of Canada. This is a matter that has not been dealt with by others. The defenders of the accord have said, "Leave those questions for the court." But as we have pointed out, the court itself has only nine members; it is now overloaded with legal questions; and there is no way in which it could possibly deal with a further overload without delays that would last for years, and governments would not wait for years for legal decisions. If those decisions are not obtained ahead of time and the accord is not clarified, Canada will be in enormous trouble.

I also deal there with the proposals for the appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada and the way in which that would destroy the independence of the Supreme Court. At the present time the court consists of a chief justice and eight judges, three of whom must come from the civil law in Quebec so that they understand the law of Quebec, because they have been trained there. But they do not represent the Government of Quebec.

Now, if the three members appointed are chosen from lists submitted by the Government of Quebec, there is no earthly doubt that they will represent the views of Quebec in all possible disputes. It is a warning of what will happen, and there is no doubt about it. After the Meech Lake Accord is ratified, only Quebec will have three members in the Supreme Court to represent its views.

On page 10 I draw attention to another point that no one else has noted, and that is that there is no provision for increasing the number of judges beyond the present nine. So what will happen there? I deal with the fact that it is essential that a change be made before the accord is adopted. If the accord is adopted, then at least the Supreme Court of Canada should be expanded so that it can deal with the issues that will be brought before it. I point out the problems which will certainly exist—which exist already—in the expansion of the Supreme Court, because there will have to be discussions about the judges to which Quebec is entitled. It is not a problem that can be put off.

I then deal with the “people problems,” in other words, such things as provisions for immigration and aliens, and for the shared-cost programs. We point out the tremendous heartache and the problems that people in Canada are now beginning to face as a result of their realization that they will be losing and will be at risk. They do not know what they will be giving up. In Dr. Forsey’s analysis, it is also a touching matter that, as was stated by Professor A.W. Johnson, who has a superb knowledge of shared-cost programs, the Meech Lake Accord will not only raise the problem about whether those shared-cost programs will survive but also that it will, in reality, destroy the unifying factor of common services across Canada which has helped bridge this enormous country.

● (1540)

I remember a time when where I was living, and then, later, in Ottawa, there were reports of ill people who died on the doorsteps of hospitals. That time could come again. I also remember the feeling that Canada was a country that was so vast that in Ottawa they did not care about what happened to people in the west and in the east. That time could come again. I urge you to look at this accord.

In my brief I then deal with a subject which is quite relevant, of course, to this honourable house, and that is appointments to the Senate of Canada. For your convenience, I have set out four important provisions regarding the Senate.

The first provision is that appointments to the Senate shall be chosen from persons whose names have been submitted by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates, and must—apparently that grammar slipped through somehow—be acceptable to the Queen’s Privy Council for Canada.

The second provision is found in section 9 of the schedule. It deals with the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting senators. These are matters that can only be amended by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of each province as well as resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons.

The third provision is that, henceforth, there shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988, a constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the First Ministers of the provinces. It states that such conferences shall have included on their agenda Senate reform.

Last, the fourth provision is that even before the proposed amendment relating to appointments to the Senate comes into force, any person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen’s Privy Council for Canada.

I have run through those because I think they are crucial to the understanding of another aspect of what is going to happen to Canada and to this house, which has such an honourable history.

The appointments to the Senate, I think, would be chosen, eventually, from lists submitted by the government of the province to which they relate. As others have pointed out, that will, of course, mean that those honourable senators will owe their loyalties to the province to which they owe gratitude for the appointment. In many respects, it is either a misunderstanding of the functions of this house or else it is an insult to those who sit here, as though those who sit here do not now take into account the concerns of the areas from which they come. In my experience, that is simply not true. Honourable senators have always been concerned with the areas from which they are appointed. That seems to me certainly insulting to the Senate as it exists. It is also a provision which will introduce into this house the discordant voices of the different provinces, unmitigated by any national perspective of what this country is about.

The powers of the Senate and the method of selecting senators, and so on, can only be amended by unanimous resolutions. However, strangely, the Prime Minister is going ahead and discussing Senate reform as though, regardless of those other considerations, it can happen tomorrow.

Oddly enough, yesterday there arrived in the office of the Human Rights Institute the document that was prepared in 1985 in Alberta dealing with Senate reform. It seems to me that the 11 men who met in that room were not briefed about what actually was going to happen. If the Province of Alberta honestly and genuinely believes that after the Meech Lake Accord is ratified it can ever get the Triple-E Senate, then, in that event, there is certainly a gap in the explanation.

I understand why this misunderstanding arose, because you have the third item which requires conferences of the First Ministers, starting in 1988 and continuing forever. Those will do nothing, of course, because, as the Honourable Eugene Forsey has pointed out in very precise terms, it only takes one province to say that it does not agree and, in that event, nothing will happen.

I have taken the liberty of having photocopied and attached an extract from a speech that Senator Forsey gave to a section of the Canadian Bar Association on August 19, 1985, that is, after the 1982 amendments, when he told lawyers that they were essentially blowing bubbles, and that it was smoke dreams when they were talking about reform of the Senate, even then. I would recommend that you read that. It is not very often that one gets a chance to see someone talk down to lawyers. Senator Forsey would deny it, I am sure, but, in actual fact, I think it is absolutely delightful, and I speak as a lawyer, and I know that they would have loved what he had to say. I hope they also listened to it and understood it.

The last provision is that even before the proposed amendment relating to appointments to the Senate comes into force, appointments will be made on that basis. Then they dare to tell this honourable house that this house is not democratic! They propose to put through something so that the Prime Minister can act before something becomes law. In my view that is something that anybody who is concerned with the law and with Canada as a law-abiding country should rise up and protest against. Before it becomes law it will be treated as though it is law, in terms of the appointments that will be made to this house. This is something that shocks me.

I deal with the fact that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories were excluded, something that has caused them enormous not only heartbreak but disillusionment as well.

I point out the fact that the situation for the west will be much worse than it is now. I deal there with what will happen when provincial appointees, who owe their seats to the provinces, are sitting here.

I would request, honourable senators, that you read this very carefully at your leisure. The Human Rights Institute of Canada has been seeking since long before the Meech Lake Accord a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada as to whether the Government of Canada is in breach of international agreements under which the women of Canada are entitled to appointment to the Senate of Canada on an equal basis with men.

That claim arises from two bases. One of them is international agreements that Canada has signed and ratified, and the other one is the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Both of those are important and are very different from anything else, because we are dealing with appointments that not only do not require a law to be passed by Parliament but that cannot be dealt with by a law passed by Parliament. We are dealing with the executive, the same executive that ratifies the international agreements and says, "We guarantee the rights of women to equality," and then goes ahead and ignores women in the appointments to the Senate except for token numbers.

We asked for a reference. As I said, this was some considerable time before the Meech Lake Accord. I have here set out a summary of the replies that we received. Those replies did not deny that we have a legal basis. The original reply that we received from the Deputy Minister of Justice, which was confirmed by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Hnatyshyn, and then reconfirmed by the Prime Minister, himself—and this senators will find on page 16—informed us that the Supreme Court was too busy, and that references should be reserved for important legal issues where government policies are not involved. In other words, we were informed that the government would be above the law.

● (1550)

I should think that in a democracy it is important that references involving government policies should be made to the Supreme Court of Canada, and before those policies become law.

We were also informed that the role of women in the Senate is "evolving"—evolving, as though it were a third arm, as though women were creatures at the bottom of the sea—and that women should rely on government promises of equality.

Just after that was sent to us by the Deputy Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister, who had not received a copy of it, proceeded to appoint four men to the Senate, without appointing any women. Obviously he did not read the correspondence. What also shocks me is the fact that the Yukon Territory has tested in the court what the government will do about its promises. That, I think, is very important. When the Yukon Territory pointed out the many ways in which successive governments had indicated that the Yukon and Northwest Territories would progress towards provincehood, the argument made by my old alma mater, the Department of Justice, speaking for the Government of Canada, was that governments are not bound by political promises. That is a terrible thing to say. That, I think, is the reason why not one of the premiers is prepared to rely on promises from one another—they all want everything down in writing. Well, the citizens of Canada would also rather like to have everything down clearly in writing.

We were also informed in the original reply received from the Deputy Minister of Justice that changes to the Senate in its present form were "under consideration"—that was a little indication that they had plans to dispose of women's rights—and that women should not seek their rights in the present Senate. In other words, women should wait until after the Senate has been changed, but, meanwhile, women would be denied the rights that they have—a very strong legal case, also a moral one, to present.

Honourable senators, we are asking for your support for women's claims to appointment to the Senate on an equal basis with men. It is obvious that that will have to take place in the future; this does not refer to the present in any possible way.

I should like to pay tribute here to the fact that, as I have indicated in the brief, this house has a very honourable role in many respects. I have set out one instance in particular, where this house provided support to the Honourable Muriel McQueen Fergusson when she used a Convention on the Political Rights of Women many years ago to ensure that women would obtain the right to sit on juries in criminal cases on an equal basis with men. I am asking senators to use that same convention, and others that have been formulated since then, to ensure that the government now—not next year, but now; not five years from now, but now; not after the Meech Lake Accord, but now—should start living up to its international agreements and to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in terms of those appointments made by the executive alone. It seems to me to be hypocritical for the Prime Minister to tell South Africa what it should do under international law when this government itself is not living up to international law.

Last—

The Chairman: Dr. Ritchie, I hesitate greatly to interrupt you, but, as you know, we have another witness who will appear after you. We had allocated one hour, and I believe that Professor Geraets is with you. There may be no time for Professor Geraets or for questioning.

Dr. Ritchie: May I just finish up with one sentence? I would simply like to ask that senators look very carefully at the suggestions we have made. I would like to thank honourable senators very much, indeed, for their invitation and for their attention.

Could Professor Geraets have five minutes?

The Chairman: Yes, of course.

Professor Theodore Geraets, Professor of Philosophy, University of Ottawa: I am grateful to the Senate of Canada for this opportunity to present my views. As a citizen of this country, my point of view is not so much a legal one, but I am profoundly concerned with the legitimacy of the process of constitution making. Instead of trying to summarize what I would like to say within the few minutes I have, let me just whet senators' appetites by saying that the basic question I would like to deal with is the following: Does the Constitution truly belong to the people of Canada where executive federalism takes over?

I would not like to take any more of senators' time, but, rather, would like to give them an opportunity to ask questions. I would not want Professor Bliss to wait in the wings too long. I would beg for leave to appear at another opportunity to present briefly those views. They would be difficult to summarize in just two minutes, and I believe that Professor Bliss has come here from Toronto. I will make a request to the committee chairman to appear on another occasion. I would not want to abuse senators' patience.

The Chairman: Thank you, Professor Geraets. I note your request and I understand it. I have to warn you, however, that I cannot at this time promise that we will be able to hear you at a later date. The steering committee had agreed to hear all persons who had initially requested to appear. I believe the cut-off date was October. Since that time we have received many more requests, which we will try to fit in, but I cannot make any promises. If it is possible, however, I will assure you that we will do so.

At the moment, I have only two questioners. If that is the case, you could proceed to make your presentation for ten minutes.

Senator Hicks: I think we should hear him.

The Chairman: Yes, please proceed, Professor Geraets.

Professor Geraets: The most fundamental aspect in the debate about the Meech Lake Accord is the following: Canada's Constitution does not belong to our First Ministers, not to Mr. Mulroney, not to Mr. Trudeau, not to our provincial legislatures, but to the people of Canada.

Honourable senators, I will try to shorten my presentation. Certainly all premiers, or at least most of them, are happy with the Meech Lake Accord, with the weakening of the federal powers and the strengthening of the provincial ones. I cite Premier Getty. Even a Triple-E Senate is hardly needed any more where there is already a Triple-E First Ministers' conference, to be enshrined in the Constitution. Fundamental structural change is now in the hands of 11 men, provided they have comfortable majorities in their legislatures.

I quote from the report of the joint committee:

So-called "executive federalism"—developed because of the fact that the Prime Minister and the premiers can usually make binding commitments on behalf of their respective governments. Executive federalism of course relies on political party discipline "back home."

The basic question, as I said, is: Does the Constitution truly belong to the people of Canada where "executive federalism" takes over? To come back to the particular accord: Could it not be that a majority of Canadians do not agree with Canada's extending so much of its "lead" over all others as the world's most decentralized federal state? It is indeed possible that the premier or even the provincial legislatures do not represent on these matters the people of their respective provinces.

Naturally, our politicians are elected, and most of them want to be re-elected. But everyone knows that an election is based on many local and provincial considerations that have little or nothing to do with the Constitution. In any case, how many "average" Canadians are really interested in this seemingly most abstruse of all laws?

This is exactly what has to change. Constitutional matters are too important to be left to politicians alone. A Constitution is the self-image of a country and an expression of its ideals, and it is only meaningful if it is recognized as such and accepted by the majority of the people. Without a clear and unequivocal acceptance by the people, a Constitution is weak and fragile. This is all the more the case when it is a "deal," the result of a series of trade-offs between the country's politicians.

All Canadians should realize—and many have not yet done so—that the 1982 Constitution was accepted only implicitly, and that in virtue of it, amendment by popular vote has become illegal. In signing the November 1981 Accord, the federal government abandoned the right to give the people of Canada a final say over future constitutional change. This was part of that “deal.” The Constitution and changes to it can now only become “our” Constitution by implicit acceptance—that is to say, by the absence of forceful and widespread opposition. Is this good enough?

The report of the joint committee says that “most of the witnesses agreed . . . that the legitimacy of a constitution rests on the willing assent of the governed.” Is the absence of widespread and forceful opposition a sufficient ground for such legitimacy?

Any collective agreement needs to be ratified by the members of the trade union. Ought this not to apply much more to the Constitution? The people of Canada ought to be able to accept or send back to the drawing board any of its major parts, in particular the amending formula, that conditions all future change.

Nobody can deny that we are faced right now with two competing conceptions or “visions” of Canada. It is true that proponents of each of these tend to present the other in extreme terms: Ottawa is seen as either dominant and oppressive, or as totally impotent. But in spite of these exaggerations, there are two conceptions of Canada. Who will choose among these? Our First Ministers have already chosen one. But do they express the choice of the majority of Canadians? It is true, as the report says, that “the question of which view represents the better philosophic understanding of Canada . . . is a matter of political judgment.” But whose judgment ought to be final? That of the First Ministers, or that of the people of Canada?

We have to realize that nobody, and I stress but nobody, knows what Canadians want. The question always was: What does Quebec want? We now have to start asking about our Constitution the question: What do Canadians want? Nobody has the answer if the question is one of choosing between those two visions of Canada, and nobody can know until Canadians are asked to ratify or not each of the major parts of the Constitution, especially the amending formula. Does the majority of Canadians want all provinces to have the power to use their veto to extract further concessions from the federal government? The principle of equality of all provinces seems appropriate among partners in Confederation. But is not its application in the principle of unanimity an invitation to blackmail? And what about the other partners, our native peoples and people of the territories? Of course, public hearings have been held, or will be held, but where is the prominent politician with the guts to propose and fight for a restitution to the Canadian people of the right to ratify or not the fundamental law of the land?

It is said, of course, that a referendum is divisive, but whatever divisions would appear—those that are already there, but go more or less unnoticed—is this not better than running the risk of imposing on a majority of Canadians a Constitution, major parts of which they would reject if they were asked for their opinion? Of course, their rejection of any major parts—for instance, the amending formula itself—would send our politicians back to the negotiating table. But would that not be a very healthy exercise in democracy for those who now seem to “own” the Constitution? It is not theirs. It is ours, and they ought to recognize this formally and explicitly. Only then will the Constitution (and the First Ministers), as the report says, “be the servant of the people, not their masters.”

Basic choices should be submitted to the people. They are able to understand these choices, and not only, as some politicians seem to think, to choose the people by whom they want to be governed. Former Premier Hatfield wrote to me on January 28, 1982, the following:

I am opposed to a referendum at any time for any purpose. Any referendum is an attack on our superior system and should never be encouraged. I believe our Constitution should prohibit referenda ever being used in our country. The Canadian Parliamentary system is the best organization in the world of politics.

What a fall from grace for Great Britain to confirm by referendum its decision to join the Common Market! Of course, only a country just trying to return to a democratic system, like the Philippines or South Korea, could think of submitting the Constitution to a ratification by popular vote! I ask you, shall we continue to let the very nature of our country be decided by politicians that think in this paternalistic way?

The report of the joint committee recommends the establishment of a Standing Joint Committee on Constitutional Reform. The reason is interesting, and it is:

—such a committee would orchestrate a level of public involvement in the constitutional process that is vitally necessary to confer legitimacy on constitutional change.

In conclusion, I maintain that the only way to obtain the necessary legitimacy is by providing all Canadian citizens with the opportunity to exercise fully their democratic rights by approving or rejecting in a non-equivocal way each of the major parts of the Constitution. The finest legacy of our appointed Senate to the people of Canada would be the introduction of a bill providing for a reasonable ratification procedure, giving the Canadian people a final say over the Constitution of their country. Only in this way will it truly be the people's Constitution.

The Chairman: Dr. Geraets, you have stayed within your ten minutes. In view of the timing, I shall have to cut off the list of questioners now. I have two senators on my list, and I ask them to keep their questions brief. First is Senator Stollery, followed by Senator Marsden.

● (1610)

Senator Stollery: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and to our witnesses today. It is difficult to be brief on such an important topic. I read Dr. Ritchie's brief to the joint committee on Meech Lake in the proceedings of that committee and I was surprised at the reaction it seemed to have caused at the end of the hearing. It seemed that either the people who were listening to you did not get your message or they did not want to understand your message. I must say that I thought your brief to the joint committee and this one, which you have presented today, were both terrific. I agree with much of what you say.

I notice in the report of the joint committee that one of the witnesses made a comment which received some prominence. On page 22 of that report Professor Ronald Watts is quoted, and I read from the text:

In most federations, he said, the different levels of government see their relationship as one where everybody wins through intelligent co-operation.

When I read that comment, I made a list that came to mind of countries that were federations. On my list I have China, the United States, Mexico, Argentina and Colombia. In each one of those countries, of course, they have had a terrible civil war in which a huge percentage of the population lost their lives because of their inability, in fact, to establish a relationship between the parts of the federation and the central government. In fact, in many of those countries it is an offence even to promote any kind of regionalism because of the tradition. Even France, if I am not mistaken, comes into that category. I remember when I lived in Algeria during the civil war we had a couple of important referenda on whether or not to end the war and, at the same time—

The Chairman: Senator Stollery, your question, please.

Senator Stollery: Very well, Mr. Chairman, but it is a fairly difficult issue, and something that has so many implications cannot be easily dealt with.

In France they even have a list of official names. On that list there are 1,000 names, and if you do not give your child an approved name, then, of course, your child can lose his civil rights and be put out of school, and this sort of thing, because of the problems of separatism in France.

Dr. Ritchie, how can someone who is a professor possibly make the statement that in most federations the different levels of government see their relationship as one where everyone wins through intelligent cooperation, given the history of federations in the last 100 years?

Dr. Ritchie: I think that essentially you have answered your own question. The only other thing I might add is that, of course, Alberta has shown what it is doing when it ratifies the Meech Lake Accord, but, at the same time, proceeds to deprive French Canadians of their rights both in the legislature and in the courts.

At the same time, of course, Quebec, on the other hand, has presented before the Supreme Court of Canada its opposition to English-speaking Canadians having their rights within Quebec.

I see the same kind of thing as you have described occurring, and I do not know how anyone can close his eyes to it. I think you have added to our knowledge.

Senator Stollery: That is my question, and in particular I refer to the response you received when you gave your evidence before the joint committee. At that time eyes were closed and, in fact, you were certainly not treated very well. How can that be? Do these people not know what happens in federations? Do they, in fact, understand the implications of what they are doing?

Dr. Ritchie: I have asked myself the same question, and I really have no answer. However, in my view, it emphasizes the importance of persons such as the members of the Senate educating the population about what is involved here. Now that the spirit of the accord is disappearing, one finds that the "disaccord" is arising. Perhaps that is the kind of question you might very well put to Professor Bliss, who I understand is the next witness, because I think he might have some very interesting responses to it. I can only say that I am puzzled and astounded; I have no answer.

Senator Stollery: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the other witness?

The Chairman: Yes, very quickly.

Senator Stollery: I ask because the other witness has touched upon a very important issue, the issue of referendum and the legitimacy of a system where 11 individuals can fundamentally change the direction of the country without in any way consulting the people who live there. I would like to hear him expand on that topic, and whether or not there is something realistic that we in the Senate can do to possibly bring that state of affairs to an end.

Professor Geraets: I would like to make two remarks. First of all, when someone is elected first minister or premier of a province, this person changes. He may have considered himself Canadian first and then Albertan, Ontarian or a citizen of whatever province he becomes the premier of. However, once he has been elected premier, I think his first allegiance necessarily is to his province. Therefore, I think it is extremely dangerous for our country to have ten players out of eleven who have this attitude of: "First, my province, then the whole of the country." It may not be their attitude in all cases, but it probably is in many cases.

The second part of my remark is that I am not a constitutional expert. I have written on the Constitution in Le Devoir and in the Globe and Mail and in other newspapers. In April I wrote an article on the reform of the Senate. I think this is a question that senators themselves are better equipped to answer as to what kind of reasonable procedure there would be. I think it would make an enormous impact upon the country if the Senate, itself, took this initiative, in a sense of giving back the Constitution to the Canadian people.

How to do that is a complicated matter and would require an answer that would take much more than a few minutes. I could make my contribution, but I do not think I could make any sensible suggestion within the very limited time that is allowed here. If you wish me to be part of the consultation process, I am quite willing to be part of that process.

Senator Stollery: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you. Senator Marsden is next.

Senator Marsden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank both of the witnesses for appearing before us today, for the points you have made this afternoon, and also for the work that the Human Rights Institute is doing by holding public hearings. I think those are very important.

Senator Watt had to leave the chamber and asked me if I would, on his behalf, ask you two brief questions. Dr. Ritchie, we heard in your presentation this afternoon that it is your view that getting an item on the constitutional agenda for consideration requires the agreement of all of the premiers and the Prime Minister. Is that correct?

● (1620)

Dr. Ritchie: That is correct, except for those that are specifically listed there. The point that I was making with respect to the Senate is not that it cannot be included forever, but, rather, having been included, nothing will be done about it.

With respect to the fisheries, the same thing occurs, except that we understand that there is likely to be pressure to divide up those resources.

With respect to new items that are anticipated by the wording of that provision, Senator Forsey's view, which I share absolutely, is that since those must be agreed upon, it takes only one premier or prime minister to say, "I do not agree that it should be discussed," and those will not be discussed. Does that answer the question?

Senator Marsden: Thank you. You will appreciate that Senator Watt is concerned in particular with the discussion of aboriginal rights.

Dr. Ritchie: Absolutely, and the aboriginal peoples have a right to be deeply concerned.

Senator Marsden: Senator Watt's second question is: If a constitutional conference should be called with respect to aboriginal rights, would it require unanimity in order for whatever provisions were made to be taken further in the constitutional process?

Dr. Ritchie: I have not had time to look into that in detail. If I recall correctly, I believe it would. The problem was that in 1981-82 it took two-thirds of the provinces, plus a majority of the population, plus the resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons. That has now been tightened up to unanimity. I believe that is true. I would really have to look at that again—because I have looked at a great many things—but they will be in trouble.

Senator Marsden: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, if we had the time, it would be a pleasure to ask the witnesses further questions about the role of women in the Senate. However, I hope to have that discussion on a later occasion.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Marsden. I am sure there could be many more questions asked. Dr. Ritchie and professor Geraets, I would like to thank you very much for the work you have done in preparation for your appearance before us. I am sorry that I had to act as timekeeper, but I believe you know the constraints under which we must function.

[Senator Marsden.]

Dr. Ritchie: I appreciate that, and may I add our very deepest appreciation. Thank you very much, indeed, Mr. Chairman and senators.

The Chairman: Our next witness is Dr. Michael Bliss. He is a professor of history at the University of Toronto. He is a noted author—both books and articles—on historical matters in Canada.

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, Dr. Michael Bliss was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Professor Bliss, we are delighted that you can be with us this afternoon. I apologize for the delay that has occurred. I believe you were listening to the events so you know how these things happen.

I presume that you will, first, proceed with your brief, and then senators will have an opportunity to ask questions.

Dr. Michael Bliss, Department of History, University of Toronto: Mr. Chairman, honourable members of the Senate, I have prepared a submission which I believe has been distributed. However, I will summarize it in less than ten minutes, and then I will be happy to respond to questions.

Let me say that I am not speaking as an expert on the law. I am not a lawyer; I am not an expert on constitutions. I am one of the modern breed of Canadian historians who are more interested in the behaviour of people in history than in the evolution of our political structures. I do not enjoy this study of constitutional history, and I am not at all sure that I understand all of the fine points of constitutional documents. In fact, it was because of the difficulty that I had understanding the text of the original Meech Lake Accord that I became interested in it, and then alarmed about it. It seemed to me to be full of ambiguities; it seemed to have some quite drastic implications in some sections; and, above all, it seemed as though it was going to be rammed through without significant public debate.

For these reasons I joined the chorus of the accord's critics. Perhaps it was partly because of these criticisms that the government agreed to slow things down and hold the public hearings conducted by the special joint committee. I was interested in those hearings, of course, because I wanted to see what the real constitutional experts thought about the accord, and I looked forward to the committee's judgments.

We now have the committee's report and we can now talk about Meech Lake after six months of debate. Unfortunately, nothing in the joint committee's hearings or its report changes my view that the accord has the potential for drastically disrupting the balance of our federal system.

I base my comments on an historian's perspective, a perspective that has been utterly lacking, incredibly lacking in the joint committee's considerations. Its report has only one historical reference. It cites Eric Kierans, suggesting that Meech Lake fulfills the original spirit of Confederation. This is a foolish, ignorant remark, which has been properly characterized by Senator Forsey as sheer rubbish.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Dr. Bliss: Although everyone seems to talk about Meech Lake as an historic accord, no one seems to have a sense of Canada having a history before about 1980. The essence of the balance of the federation we created in 1867 was a recognition that we had a nation, on the one hand, and that we had distinct societies or communities that composed the nation, on the other hand.

The whole point of the creation of two levels of government and of the division of powers was to recognize that Quebec and each of the other provinces were and are distinct societies. This recognition has been in our Constitution for over 120 years. It seems to me incredible that we have forgotten this, apparently because these days we have such a dim understanding of the meaning of federalism.

First, the Meech Lake Accord will upset the balance of our federalism in several ways. Perhaps the "distinct society" provision will, perhaps it will not. Clearly everything depends on judicial interpretation of those words. This, itself, is likely to upset the balance inasmuch as it means an elevated role for the Supreme Court of Canada, a role that will almost certainly lead to unintended consequences. This has happened in the past. It happened in the 19th century when the rulings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, then the final court of appeal, promulgated a decentralist interpretation of the Constitution, which greatly surprised all the living Fathers of Confederation. If anyone doubts the capacity of the Supreme Court to give us surprises, they should simply read the first page of today's Globe and Mail where it is clear that the court is busy redefining the concept of murder in Canada. If it can do that, surely the court has the potential to upset any of the easy assumptions of experts who testified before the joint committee.

Second, the accord upsets the balance of our federation by putting a premium on cooperation and harmony in federal-provincial relations. It constitutionalizes various arrangements such as joint appointment of senators and Supreme Court justices, which will break down without such cooperation. Well, the joint committee tells us that we are to make love, not war, in our federation. The trouble is that there is no evidence in Canadian history that such cooperation is attainable. The kind of conflict that is inevitable, normal and natural when provincial politicians represent the interests of their distinct societies has characterized Dominion-provincial relations throughout Canadian history, is characterizing it right now, and certainly will characterize it in the future. That means, however, that the potential for deadlock and breakdown under the accord's provisions is very high.

● (1630)

Third, through the expansion of the amending formula, the accord creates new blockages regarding issues which have been traditionally sticky enough for us to handle. Senate reform will be much more difficult under Meech Lake, and yet those of us concerned about the anachronism of an appointed body having the broad legislative powers that the Senate possesses are greatly worried that the Senate is now virtually beyond or above change.

We all know the problem Meech Lake creates about the admission of new provinces. Let me speak as an historian, though, because I have been struck by the virtual certainty that the Canada we have today could not have been created had the Meech Lake provisions been in effect after 1867. Manitoba, for example, would not have been admitted to the Dominion of Canada in 1870, because Ontario would have objected because of its concerns over Riel's actions. Alberta and Saskatchewan would not have been admitted in 1905, because Quebec was objecting to the compromise reached on language and schools. Quebec would surely have vetoed Newfoundland's entry into Confederation in 1949 because of its concern with Labrador. Prince Edward Island and British Columbia probably would not have made it in either, because the other provinces would have objected to the financial settlements. For that matter, I doubt that we would have had any significant national programs if we had to operate according to the Meech Lake Accord in the past. Cooperation could not have been achieved.

Similarly, I believe that nationalist governments of Quebec, the Mercier government in the 1880s and the Lévesque government in the 1970s, would have used the "distinct society" provision as well as their role in Senate and Supreme Court appointments to create a condition close to national paralysis.

It ought to give us pause, I think, to wonder how this nation could have functioned under the proposals we now plan to implement. There is a very alarming Pollyanna-ish note running through all the assumptions of those supporting the accord, a Pollyanna-ism which is explicable, I think, only because of their total, pathetic, irresponsible ignorance of the history of the country they are trying to govern.

I could say much more if time permitted. As historians, we worry about getting our facts right. Many of us have been outraged by the use of dishonest tactics to suggest that Quebec was somehow outside of the Canadian Constitution before the Meech Lake Accord, or even to suggest that separatist sentiments have been given great impetus by the Quebec government's failure to sign the 1982 Constitution. The empirical evidence, of course, is that they had not. There is no evidence that two Canadas were created as a result of 1982, but it may well be that we are creating two Canadas with the Meech Lake Accord. Certainly we are no longer going to have one Canada.

My strongest feeling about this whole process, the one that I find difficult to express as clearly as I should, is that these exercises in overnight constitution-making represent a betrayal of the Canadian people by their politicians. It is a betrayal in this sense: Canadians, especially the young Canadians I teach, who believe fervently in our democratic process, have a right to expect that their legislators will carry on all functions of government with care, statesmanship and a grave sense of responsibility to the living, the dead, and Canadians yet unborn.

I do not think Canadians deserve the constitution-making we are seeing in 1987. First Ministers treat the Constitution like a collective bargaining agreement, with parliamentary committees that pull alleged constitutional experts on and off the shelf like so many ventriloquists' dummies, with MPs and party leaders who put party discipline and short-term electoral calculations before the interests of the Canadian people.

As someone else has said, we are trivializing constitution-making in Canada, and that is very wrong.

We already have high enough levels of cynicism and contempt in Canada for our political process and for the good people involved in it.

I fear that because of Meech Lake and the way it is being implemented this public cynicism and contempt is going to fester and increase, and I believe that in the long run this is the worst menace to the health of our body politic than any of the clauses of the accord.

Canadians have a right to expect more from their politicians: Can we expect more from the Senate of Canada?

I would be happy to answer any questions.

The Chairman: Thank you, Professor Bliss.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I have several names on my list. We will begin with Senator Hicks, followed by Senator Flynn.

Senator Hicks: Professor Bliss, generally speaking, I am not in disagreement. Indeed, I am in agreement with what you have said, but I cannot resist the temptation, since you come before us as an historian, and were careful to point that out in the remarks you made, and in your paper at the bottom of page 7, that the Fathers of Confederation were immediately dismayed or surprised at the effect of judicial interpretation on their document, which used to be called the British North America Act.

I suggest to you, as an historian, that you ought to acknowledge that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council during most of the 19th century found in favour of increasing the power of the central government, and it was only when Viscount Haldane came to exercise such a great influence on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the interpretation in favour of the property rights devolving upon the provinces began the process of decentralization.

This is not important to the thrust of your paper, but since you come before us as an historian, I think you ought to acknowledge that for the first few decades after Confederation the judicial interpretations all tended to reinforce the central government, and it has largely been only in the 20th century that the process to which you refer has become so effective.

Dr. Bliss: My own mentor in constitutional interpretation, Professor Donald Creighton, I think, would perhaps disagree with you, but I will not. My point simply is the capacity of these final courts to surprise us. As you suggested, it seems to depend on the membership of the court.

I point out in my formal paper that we may well find ourselves moving towards the position the Americans are almost in now, that the elected politicians' most important decisions will have to do with the judges they appoint.

[Dr. Bliss.]

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Hicks. I now call upon Senator Flynn, followed by Senator MacEachen.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of putting questions to the witness. I did not put any questions to the previous witnesses, because I think we have never before heard exaggerations of the kind that we have heard today. I am referring to the previous witnesses as well as to the present witness. It shows that they have only contempt for those who support the accord. Therefore, I just want to put on the record that I would find it absolutely useless to argue or put any kind of disagreement in specific terms with what we have heard today. It would only put me in the position of having to reply in kind, and I don't think I want to do that.

The Chairman: Professor Bliss, do you wish to make a comment? I have listened carefully to what Senator Flynn has said. There was nothing unparliamentary in what he said; therefore, I did not interrupt him.

The previous witnesses obviously cannot respond now, although they are in the public gallery.

If you wish, Professor Bliss, you may make a statement.

Dr. Bliss: Honourable senators, I think all of us who are engaged in public debate of any kind distinguish between contempt for persons and contempt for contemptible arguments.

● (1640)

Senator Flynn: You should tell Mr. Kierans the way that you treated his arguments.

Senator Hicks: He only treated them the way they should have been treated.

Senator Flynn: I would like to ask Senator Hicks if he heard what the witness said about people who become premiers changing their perspective. I would be interested to have him reply on that point.

Senator Hicks: I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether that is relevant to this discussion.

Senator Flynn: That was not relevant either.

Senator Hicks: But, as a former provincial premier, I do not think that I adopted that attitude. Indeed, I came close to quarrelling with my predecessor about this very thing.

Generally speaking, I think a lot of heads of provincial governments behave exactly the way Professor Bliss said they did.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: But you accused the others of not being as good as you are!

The Chairman: Order!

Dr. Bliss: I emphasize my point, Mr. Chairman, that it is perfectly natural and legitimate for provinces to disagree and to fight with Ottawa. I believe that part of the responsibility of elected provincial politicians is to represent the distinctive interests of their constituents. That is why, in our kind of federation, that conflict between Dominion and provinces is as natural as conflict between members of different political parties.

Senator Frith: And healthy.

Dr. Bliss: And healthy.

The Chairman: You see, Professor Bliss, conflict arises in this chamber as well.

The next questioner will be Senator MacEachen, followed by Senator Stewart.

Senator MacEachen: I tried to take down one sentence which Professor Bliss used, but failed to do so, because he was moving rather quickly. It was a sentence in which he used the expression "dishonest tactics." I think it is in his text. Perhaps he might refer to it and illuminate on that point a bit more.

The second point I want to raise appears on page 11 of his submission and deals with his discussion on the Senate. I found it quite interesting when he stated that:

The government's acceptance of the Accord means the appointed Senate is now functioning with less check on its anachronistic legislative power than has existed at any time in our country's history—

If that is the case, which I dispute, I would regard it as a welcome development, from my point of view, and one which should be accelerated; and if that benefit floated from the Meech Lake Accord, then I think it is one unexpected dividend that we have received in that we have seen a Senate that may be exercising legislative powers. I wondered what you meant, because you said that "the appointed Senate is now functioning with less check." What was the "check" in the past?

Dr. Bliss: The issue of whether or not responsible government could operate in the context of a functioning bicameral system was aired during the Confederation debates, with many of the critics of the Quebec resolution suggesting that the Senate would pose a problem.

Throughout Canadian history we have been able to make our responsible government function, because, while the Senate has many times quite properly exercised its function of forcing second thought on the House of Commons, there have always been implied sanctions which, in the event of conflict, can bring the Senate into line and guarantee that the Senate will carry out the government's will. Those sanctions include elections and the possibility of constitutional reform of the Senate to limit its powers. In that respect, the Canadian Senate is in the same position as the House of Lords.

It seems to me that recent events, senator—and I believe that you understand this very well—make it more difficult for the majority in the House of Commons to feel that they have a check on the Upper House. The events of the last few months—indeed, the events in our papers almost daily suggest that the government, which commands a majority in the House of Commons, is not sure how easily its legislative program will be accepted. I believe that this raises serious issues involving our responsible government and democracy. Of course, I have no answers, but I believe that the Meech

Lake Accord has done this. It has frozen the powers of the Senate, barring an eventuality which few of us believe can happen, in which all of the provinces agree to Senate reform.

Senator MacEachen: Well, Professor Bliss, I do not disagree with the difficulties that may be created by the adoption of the Meech Lake Accord in bringing about Senate reform—personally, I would regret that, because I am a strong advocate of Senate reform—but may I ask you another question? As an historian, you seem to imply that somehow the exercise of legislative powers by the Senate is a violation of responsible democratic government. How did the Fathers of Confederation make such an error in the original constitution-making?

Dr. Bliss: Partly because the Fathers of Confederation themselves had a tendency to work quickly, to stick to their resolutions as though they were binding treaties, and to not slow down and accept reconsideration. The Fathers of Confederation were caught in an historic moment of time when an appointed chamber still seemed to be politically legitimate. Sir John A. Macdonald and Cartier, as you know, were not believers in the kind of democracy that we have now. They accepted the appointive principle in an upper house. Within 20 years of Confederation the world had changed and the appointive principle seemed to be more and more anachronistic. I believe that in the 20th century it is very anachronistic.

You, sir, are a better expert than I on the behaviour of the Senate in the 20th century. It does seem to me that at most times the Senate has been extremely responsible in realizing that constitutionally there are questions about an appointive chamber with such great power.

I do believe that there have been times—and, in any case, there should be a residual possibility—when, in the event of conflict between the houses, there should be a way of forcing the Upper House to give way. That should be seen to be part of a functioning democracy in the 20th century.

Senator MacEachen: Well, I would not disagree with that at this point, at any rate, but I take it that in response to my question, the "check" that in your mind has historically existed on the legislative powers of the Senate is the fear instilled in the hearts of senators that if they do not behave they will be reformed.

Dr. Bliss: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: It has no modern application, I assure you.

Senator Hicks: There is no historical evidence in relation to it either!

Dr. Bliss: Of course, the ultimate sanction would seem to be an election. But let me point out to you that if we had an election on the abuse by the Senate of its power, under the Meech Lake Accord we still would not be anywhere, because the Senate could still continue to block legislation until its power was taken away.

With the Meech Lake Accord, we are creating a situation in which, in the worst case, the people of Prince Edward Island can come to the defence of the Senate no matter what the rest of Canada thinks. That is, of course, an absurd worst-case scenario, but those of you who are lawyers surely understand the importance of thinking about worst-case scenarios.

• (1650)

May I go back to your earlier question, senator?

Senator MacEachen: Yes. I think we are at an interesting point in our discussion on the Senate. You have said that the Fathers of Confederation really did err in giving the Senate these legislative powers, and that subsequent opinion was correct. I appreciate that historical insight, and if I had more time I would press that point. Perhaps you could go back to my first point about the dishonest tactics and how they were exhibited.

Dr. Bliss: When the history of these events is written, as it will be—and there has been much talk of how this will look in the history books—I think there will be a good deal of concern about what the real situation was in Canada after the 1982 constitutional changes were made. Did the refusal of the Government of Quebec to sign these changes create some kind of crisis in the country, as some of the accord supporters have said it did? Historians will ask themselves: How can we measure this empirically? Where is the evidence of a crisis? Did the implementation of the 1982 changes cause a great upsurge in separatist sentiment in Quebec? Of course, they defeated the separatists. Separatism continued its decline. The PQ government collapsed. Constitutional change was not effectively an issue in either Quebec or in national elections.

Historians who remember the 1930s know, and know well, the impact that people can have, especially if they are first off the mark, in spreading lies. Those of us who look at the rhetoric that was initially used to defend the Meech Lake Accord, by people who are all recorded on video tape, I think, will comment on the distortions of fact that were present, at least in the early days. I believe these have now faded as Canadians begin to understand this process, and it was important that time go by.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator MacEachen. Before I call on the next questioner, I note that the two previous witnesses are in the gallery, and I point out to them that there is audio equipment available if they are having difficulty hearing our proceedings.

The next questioner will be Senator Stewart, followed by Senator Marsden.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I happen to be one of those who do not feel that the Fathers of Confederation committed an error, egregious or otherwise, in 1867 when they included the Senate in the Parliament of Canada.

Professor Bliss has made several remarks bearing on responsible government. Sometimes we are told that responsible government means that the House of Commons is responsible to the electorate. That, of course, we can dismiss, because it often happens that ministers of the day do not intend to run in the next election. That was the case before the election of 1984. It would be very difficult to argue that Mr. Trudeau or his ministers were responsible to the electorate in the sense that they could be defeated at the polls. What we are really talking about when we talk about responsible government is the relationship between the executive government and the House of Commons.

I was brought up on an historical interpretation which said that responsible government, particularly in the Canadian context, meant that the executive government was responsible for its executive activities to the body elected by the people in the province or the Dominion. That interpretation was not one which said, as I think Professor Bliss implied, that the ministry of the day can protest that the principle of responsible government has been offended if one or more of its bills has been defeated. I wonder if he will tell us if there was a change in the meaning of the expression “responsible government,” and, if so, when that change took place. Or is this one of these myths or misconceptions to which he was just now referring?

Dr. Bliss: No, senator, I agree with your interpretation. I understand by “responsible government” the notion that the executive is responsible to the legislature.

Senator Hicks: The House of Commons, the elected legislature—not responsible to the Senate at all?

Dr. Bliss: May I finish, senator, because I do agree with you. I am just going to take a bit to get there.

I think that, strictly speaking, we simply mean the responsibility of the executive to the legislature, but if we try to apply that doctrine in the context of the kind of bicameral legislature that we have, we find that we create insoluble problems. Do we really want to say that responsible government means that the executive will have to command the support of a majority in both houses before it can get its legislative program through?

If we say that, what is the implication, particularly when one of the houses is appointed, and we can have a situation in Canada, which we have often had, in which the political persuasion of the majorities is different? I do not believe that that kind of, strictly speaking, responsible government could function. It would be a recipe for paralysis as was a similar kind of double majority situation in Canada before Confederation.

It seems to me that the only tenable notion of responsible government in practice has to be that the elected body of the legislature has the final say and that the executive is responsible to it. When we have a kind of a wild card in an appointed Senate that is responsible to nobody, we subvert our system of responsible government.

I would add that one of the appalling things about this whole process of constitutional reform is that, to my knowledge, we have rushed ahead with these things without any consideration of the whole question of how to reconcile responsible government with a functioning bicameral system. Everyone talks about Senate reform. No schemes of Senate reform that I know of have come to grips with that very real problem of responsibility.

If the Senate is going to exercise power under any scheme, even an elected Senate, what will we do about a situation in which there is a deadlock between the House of Commons and the Senate? What will we do?

[Dr. Bliss.]

Senator Frith: That happens in Australia.

Dr. Bliss: I think we will have to go over to an American system and put a president above them both.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): It is clear that the witness did not comprehend my question, because he has bulked legislative activity with executive activity. However, I will not pursue that, because probably my efforts at clarification would be vain.

I speak now to Professor Bliss as an historian, because Canadian history is the field in which he has great authority. He refers at pages 11 and 12 of his submission to the establishment of new provinces, and he proposes that certain provinces of Canada would not have been erected as provinces under the proposed Meech Lake requirements.

I draw to his attention the provision in the Meech Lake Accord about the extension of existing provinces into the territories, and I ask him if he would refresh our minds as to what would have happened to the demands of Quebec and Ontario for new boundaries if the Meech Lake requirements had been in effect after the 1911 election?

● (1700)

Dr. Bliss: Senator, I believe you know the answer better than I do. My recollection is that the other provinces would have blocked the expansion of Ontario and Quebec.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Could you tell us how valuable that expansion was to Quebec and Ontario? Could you give us a rough notion of how much extra territory Ontario and Quebec acquired out of the territories and what was the implication of that in making these two provinces, particularly Ontario, "have" provinces as distinct from poor provinces like Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, which, given their location, could not be enlarged and enriched by extension into the territories?

Dr. Bliss: Yes, senator, I believe that we would be talking of Ontario and Quebec growing on an order of magnitude of 100 to 200 per cent. Perhaps I am wrong, but that is the ballpark figure. The addition to the wealth of these provinces was enormous. People spoke of "empire Ontario". Of course, these territorial additions to the existing provinces were very instrumental in creating the imbalance that exists in terms of resource distribution in the Confederation of today.

The Chairman: If I might ask a supplementary question on that point, were the other provinces consulted on the extension?

Dr. Bliss: My belief, and I am subject to correction, is that they were not consulted. They may have expressed opinions, but their views were ignored.

Senator Frith: What was the date of the expansion?

Dr. Bliss: We are talking about the extension of boundaries in 1911.

The Chairman: It was a unilateral decision made by the federal government?

Dr. Bliss: Yes, I believe so.

Senator Hicks: And the two provinces concerned.

The Chairman: Yes. Senator Hicks has mentioned the two provinces concerned, but the two provinces concerned had a common boundary. Were they involved in the discussion as to that boundary?

Dr. Bliss: I do not believe that one province had a voice in the expansion of the other.

Senator Marsden: Professor Bliss, I wonder if you would comment as a historian on the issue of what is described as "executive federalism." I have not had a chance to read in detail the brief we received this afternoon, but we did receive earlier your comments, which were published, I believe, in the Globe and Mail. You referred to "constitutionalized conferencing" as a "ridiculous new institution", and by "constitutionalized conferencing" I assume you mean the same thing as executive federalism. I also assume that you did not like it at all, that quite apart from this accord, you think it is the wrong way to go about doing constitutional business in this country.

You may have heard the previous witness recommend referenda. Could we have your views on that device as an instrument with which to express the will of the people in constitutional change?

Dr. Bliss: We have had only two referenda in Canadian history, one on conscription and one on temperance in the 19th century. Even so, referenda are not foreign to our system. I am trying to express a position to the effect that we Canadians believe that these are serious matters, that our legislators have a grave responsibility, and that we will behave legislatively according to the magnitude of the issue at stake. It seems to me that executive federalism, as it has evolved, makes a great deal of sense on many matters which are of joint concern to the Dominion and the provinces, matters on which there is an ongoing need for consultation in working out details and in implementing measures.

I believe that constitution-making is a different order of business altogether. I believe that it is the most serious thing in which a community can engage and that constitutions are not changed lightly. You do not make constitutions lightly, nor do you hold a constitutional conference as a matter of course, simply because you are supposed to. It strikes me, and we have already seen this with some of our annual meetings, that the process is trivialized, because people are forced to meet whether or not they have legitimate business to do. At these meetings the media are concentrated, and they are bound to create issues whether or not any exist. This system increasingly draws the political process into disrepute, because ordinary Canadians see the cynicism of the reporters who come down to conferences where they know that nothing is going to happen, and this feeds their own cynicism. It is something that we ought to be greatly worried about.

Senator Marsden: You do not rule out referenda, then?

Dr. Bliss: No, ideally I think that a referendum on grave matters is appropriate, but we are at a stage now where we have so many procedures and are so caught up in time that it is hard to specify practical alternatives.

Senator Marsden: You suggested in both of the papers we have received that the people who formulated the Meech Lake Accord have confused politics with constitutional activity. You have also suggested there, and again this afternoon, that there has been distortion of historical fact, exaggeration of points of view, and propaganda in the worst sense of the word. I have two questions to ask you about that. First, is that any different from what has happened in the past? Second, would you characterize it as authoritarianism; that is, as asking people to accept the will of those in power without question?

Dr. Bliss: No, I do not think I would go so far as to characterize it as authoritarianism. We are following constitutional procedures. I believe that people are asking us to trust our governments, and it is the responsibility of citizens to ask themselves if they should trust legislators. I do not follow the extreme views of people who feel that something unconstitutional is going on, but I have used strong language because I believe that there is something more fundamental going on. I believe that our political procedures are letting us down as a people, that we are getting an approach to legislation on constitutions that trivializes them and belies the dignity of them.

It would take a lot of thought and consideration, however, for me to answer the first part of your question. I am not sure that the language used in 1987 is significantly different from that which was used between 1980 and 1982. One of my beliefs about this whole process we have gone through in recent history is that we are now, in 1987, paying the price for what the government did in 1981 and 1982, which I believe was almost equally a violation of the bonds of comity that ought to hold a community together to what we are seeing now. I believe that the government of the day used, or threatened to use, tactics which were difficult to justify, and they are now rebounding in terms of a successive government determined to undo what it believed the previous government did.

Senator Marsden: Could you expand upon that a little so as to put some boundaries around what you are thinking of?

Dr. Bliss: I am trying to draw very careful distinctions. I believe that if I were to write the history of these events, I would begin by saying that the comity of the Canadian community was upset by the government that was elected in 1980 when it violated the spirit of federalism in its treatment of western Canada, in the National Energy Program, and then again with its use of the tactics that it announced would be necessary to force constitutional change. I believe that the contempt shown by the government of those years for the spirit of federalism has created a rebound effect in the replacement government, which was the victim and represents the victims. The First Ministers represent the victims of that contempt, being determined to take the pendulum back, to undo what that government did.

[Senator Marsden.]

My fear is that these are fundamentally political battles. It is fine to have these political battles every five or ten years, but what we are doing is playing with the Constitution of Canada for all time to come, particularly in this case where we are putting in place an amending formula that will lock it up. As an historian, what has happened is that people have got carried away in the short-term events and short term perspective, and they are using those reactions to affect our future in the long term. I am trying not to use occupational arrogance and say that we should have a sense of history, but I think we desperately need a sense of the long-term history of the country, that we cannot think of the history of Canada as having started in 1980. It is because we have such a short-term perspective that, for example, it is believed that our pre-Meech Lake federal system meant Ottawa's aggrandizement at the expense of the rest of the country. That was a brief moment in time which appalled many people, but to undo that moment in time by changing our Constitution for all time to come seems to me to be an over-reaction.

• (1710)

Senator Marsden: I have yet to meet an historian who is in favour of this accord. Do you know of any?

Dr. Bliss: There are some French-Canadian historians in Quebec who favour this accord. I know of no English-speaking historians who are in favour of it. I have never before seen historians agree as substantially as on this accord.

Senator Marsden: Especially those in your department.

Dr. Bliss: I am referring to every university in the country outside Quebec.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I want to pursue what seemed to me to be a bit of a ragtag ending during the discussion on responsible government. The answer of the witness was to the effect that the answer to the situation is to put a president over the two houses. The implication is that that is the best way for a federal state to work. I wanted to explore with Dr. Bliss the Australian situation. They have there a parliamentary system which they consider an example of responsible government. Both houses are elected. Since 1949 the Senate has been elected by proportional representation, and the government has very seldom controlled both houses, as proportional representation usually results in no majority.

However, in view of the time, the discussion would be a bit esoteric. I shall pursue the matter personally with Dr. Bliss, but I did want to get on record the point about two elected houses in a parliamentary system and still having responsible government, although the government does not control both houses.

The Chairman: Do you wish to comment, Dr. Bliss?

Dr. Bliss: No, but I appreciate the point.

Senator Adams: Aboriginal rights have been left out of the Meech Lake Accord. Do you see aboriginal peoples being able to bargain with the Prime Minister and the premiers in the future?

Dr. Bliss: It strikes me that the problem for the future is the problem that is being expressed now when people propose re-opening the Meech Lake Accord. We are told that the accord cannot be re-opened to deal with aboriginal rights or with the Charter, because there will not be unanimity if it is. Then we are told that we should re-open it after it is passed, because there will be unanimity. That strikes me as illogical. In my brief I indicate that people who are suggesting that we go ahead with the accord and then try to amend it are people who would say that we should let the patient die and then try to cure him. This, of course, is the terrible fear that so many of us have, that after the accord is passed there will not be any more talking, because it will be final.

Senator Adams: But what will happen to section 35? Is there any future for section 35, or will it be wiped out?

Dr. Bliss: I cannot predict what will happen. My view from the beginning has been that I am not sure that I will understand what finally happens, but that our courts will tell us.

Senator Adams: Of course, as the Meech Lake Accord now exists, any bargaining on aboriginal rights will require the consent of the ten premiers.

Dr. Bliss: In a way, the ten premiers have said that they will not re-open the accord unless they find egregious errors in drafting. On the other hand, only one premier has to refuse to put the accord through his legislature.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I want to enter a disclaimer at the beginning and say that I accept no responsibility for the assertions made by Professor Bliss about the former government, particularly with respect to the National Energy Program and constitutional change. I suggest that when an historical perspective is taken on these events, as will happen in the future, even Professor Bliss, who is now speaking more as a journalist, might take a different view, but that is just by way of editorializing.

I want to go back to the matter of the Senate. It is not that I am obsessed with the Senate, but I happen to be a member of the Senate. Earlier you lamented the absence of any present check on the legislative powers of the Senate. I accept your reasoning fully, but you ended your statement by saying:

Canadians have a right to expect more from their politicians. Can the Senate of Canada give us wisdom, perspective, and guidance on this most vital of all issues, and help us avert a national tragedy?

Earlier in the summary there is the sentence:

Will Canada's Senators contribute the perspective, wisdom, and statesmanship to our deliberations that [we] have a right to expect from our upper house?

I take these words seriously, as the Senate did act seriously, in my view, when it decided to undertake this study of the Meech Lake Accord. It was a serious decision, particularly to conduct matters in Committee of the Whole.

I would appreciate it if you could tell us how you think in the course of our work we can exhibit all these qualities. Would you approve, for example, of our exercising the legislative power we have under the Constitution; namely, we could fail to pass the constitutional amendment? We could defeat it or amend it, which would require its being repassed by the House of Commons.

Dr. Bliss: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: Are there any ways you can think of that we could contribute this "wisdom, statesmanship and perspective"? It may be that all of these qualities are more important than the ability to exercise legislative powers. If we could have them without legislative powers, then perhaps, in your mind, that is a real gain.

● (1720)

Dr. Bliss: But, senator, I believe that is what you have on the constitutional issue, because you only have a delaying power, and in my view you have been appropriately limited on constitutional matters. However, now that we have a grave constitutional issue, you ought to use this limited power to its full. I am sure you know better than I the most effective tactics for giving this measure the kind of consideration that you are giving it. Believe me, I very much appreciate the kind of hearings that you are holding, and I hope that the debates that the Senate holds on this matter will reach a level of perspective that perhaps is not present in other legislative bodies. My answer is yes, you do have a right to hold it up, but that right is limited, as it should be.

Senator MacEachen: Would you favour our having a constitutional amendment repassed by the House of Commons?

Dr. Bliss: I believe, sir, that that might be consistent with the idea of forcing sober second thought on the House of Commons. You cannot eventually stop this process, nor do I think you should. I myself believe that it would be important for this matter to go before the people. You may decide to use your powers on other matters in order to make sure that they are put before the people, and I understand that.

Senator MacEachen: Perhaps I am misreading your comment, but are you saying that we should act at certain times in a way that would precipitate an election?

Dr. Bliss: Yes, sir, on vital national matters I believe that is proper within the Constitution. If you want me to make a concrete reference, I wish that you would spend your time debating the Constitution, telling Canadians about the Constitution and its implications, and not spend your time on matters of specific legislation such as drug patents.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator MacEachen: You would ask us to use strategic weapons rather than tactical weapons? In other words, we are too much statesmen to be tacticians.

Dr. Bliss: Yes, sir, but I do believe that—

Senator Frith: He wants us to eliminate our short and medium-range missiles.

Dr. Bliss: Sir, from the perspective of people who are outside of Ottawa and outside of the political process, I think that Canadians believe that politicians indeed ought to gauge their weaponry to the seriousness of the issue. Sometimes our perception of Ottawa is that politicians are dropping bombs on one another over trivial matters. This is not a trivial matter.

Senator MacEachen: I agree with you that it is not trivial. However, I am somewhat uplifted at the end of your presentation by your willingness to endorse any action that we took that might precipitate an election on a grave national issue, even though you would not endorse us on Bill C-22. You have given us a higher role than I had hitherto wished to attain. For that I thank you.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, that concludes the list of questioners. Professor Bliss, I want to thank you very much for the time and trouble you have taken to come to us from another part of the country to share your views with us. As you see, they have elicited a fair amount of questioning.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee adjourn, report progress, and ask for leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake Accord and texts subsequently agreed to were referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the Committee of the Whole be given authority to sit again on Wednesday, December 16, 1987, at 3 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Duff Roblin moved the second reading of Bill C-64, to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

He said: Honourable senators, my task today will not, I hope, detain you too long, but, at the same time, will do justice to the importance of the subject matter of this bill. It is an act to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada

Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. I think I could encapsulate what is in this bill by saying that by and large it incorporates the tax policies and the tax changes which were proposed in the budget of February 1987, plus a variety of other measures of the same general nature.

I think I should also point out that, as members of the Senate have probably noticed, the copy of the bill that is before us is the copy that was presented to the Committee of the Whole in the other place, and not the ultimate document that will be coming from the printer in very short order. I hope that the Senate will accept this document.

Senator Argue: I think we have it here.

Senator Roblin: Do you have the final copy there?

Senator Argue: The date is December 4.

Senator Roblin: No, I think you will find that the December 4 copy was the copy that was presented by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to the Committee of the Whole in the other place.

Senator Frith: But including all of the amendments?

Senator Roblin: The only change between the two documents is one amendment, namely, on page 4 of the bill, line ten, a date is changed from 1990 to 1987. Other than that, the documents are the same, so I trust that the Senate will allow me to proceed on that basis.

Senator Frith: What page, senator?

Senator Roblin: Line ten on page 4. It is just a change of dates.

I must admit that this is a substantial document that we have before us. It consists of 140-odd pages containing numerous clauses, to say nothing of the convoluted and arcane detail that one always finds in a taxing statute. For the most part, it is a bill in which technicalities abound, and where it is difficult to discern a particular principle that one would normally be expected to discuss at second reading.

• (1730)

Without claiming a perfect knowledge of all the clauses of this piece of legislation—I think that would be asking too much—I would like to bring to the notice of the members of the house some highlights that point to a number of significant and interesting proposals in the bill, and which perhaps give some idea of the general tenor of the legislation and what we will find in it.

One of the interesting proposals in the legislation is a speed-up of the tax remittances which are made by employers through the payroll deduction system. This speed-up affects large employers which are defined as those who have a monthly payroll of over $15,000, and they concern the income tax deductions, the unemployment insurance deductions, and the Canada Pension Plan deductions. These deductions are now to be remitted to the Treasury on a two-week basis instead of a four-week basis. The aim of this measure is to improve the government's cash flow, but I would be less than candid if I did not say that, by the same token, it reduces the employer's cash flow. All things considered, I believe that this is a tolerable measure for us to accept.

A second large portion of the bill has to do with changes dealing with tax avoidance and tax avoidance provisions. They are extensive. They deal, for example, with the measures to limit the powers of corporations in dealing with tax loss allocations and with allocations to the capital dividend account, which might have the effect of unduly reducing the tax they pay. The distribution of corporate surpluses to the shareholders, in certain cases, is also governed by the provisions of this act, all in the hope of eliminating undue tax concessions which apparently are available to companies as the act stands at the present time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): These are tax avoidances, not evasions.

Senator Roblin: Did I say "evasion"?

Senator Frith: No, you did not; you said "avoidance."

Senator Roblin: I thought I said "avoidance." I am glad that my friend has mentioned that, because they are not evasions. They are tax avoidance measures. Nevertheless, they are to be looked at in this bill.

Another clause of this bill deals with the federal power of garnishment, which has to do with its priority in demanding payment with respect to its claims on income streams, et cetera, as opposed to other creditors in the case of commercial difficulties. This strengthens the position of the federal government in its status in asking for priority with respect to garnishment. I confess that to a good many people this particular measure will cause some heartburns. Some of us have always wondered about the priority accorded to the federal power of garnishment. It is probably legally and theoretically sound, but at the same time it does rub some of us the wrong way. That is in the bill, and I thought I would let you know about it.

Another portion of the bill, and this also occupies a good deal of the content of the bill, has to do with resources successor rules—the resource expense allowances and their transferability to successor companies and successor organizations. This bill broadens the possibility of carrying forward to resource successors resource expense allowances when there are company organizations, reorganizations, purchases, buy-outs, and whatnot, which are very often found in natural resource development situations. This clause will be of particular interest to people who are in that business, some of whom are in western Canada.

There are also some tax effects dealing with unregistered pension plans that individuals may have. Right now people have been in the habit of deferring some of their tax obligations through the use of an unregistered pension plan. This is thought to be untidy or, at least, undesirable. The tax deferral is now limited with respect to these unregistered plans in order to bring them into line with the facilities that are made available to registered pension plans.

There is another interesting clause in the bill. This has to do with people who are late in paying their tax installments. This was the subject of some interest in another context. Under this bill, if you are late paying your tax installments, and therefore incur interest costs, you could compensate for this by the prepayment or the overpayment of the tax owing by the taxpayer at a later time. This is a new concept to me, I must confess, but it is one of the interesting sidelights in this particular bill.

There is also a change made in the obligation on certain investors with respect to reporting interest that has accrued on their investments, that is, interest that has been earned but has not been received. The clause in this bill that has to do with that concept goes to the point of extending the time for reporting this deferred interest to 1988. This clause has been put in, I think, with particular thought to the Canada Savings Bond holders who are sliding them over for another year, which has apparently been considered to be a proper concession to be made to these people who have to deal with this question of deferred interest.

Perhaps the most titillating part of this legislation—certainly the aspect that has attracted the most public attention as far as I can tell—has to do with the concept of an international banking centre. This has been the subject of much debate in the other place and in public circles as well. It has provoked wide interest.

Senator MacEachen: Not for Winnipeg.

Senator Roblin: I guess I am just jealous. I will try not to overstate the significance of this measure, because there has been a tendency to accord more importance to it than it deserves. It seems to me to be a very modest measure to help Montreal and Vancouver in their development as financial centres.

I acknowledge that this idea was studied by a former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, and his colleague, Mr. Lawson. When they looked at it they were not exactly enthusiastic about the idea, because they thought perhaps there was the possibility of considerable revenue losses being incurred by the Treasury in this respect, with no very substantial benefits to the cities in question.

Senator Frith: The proposal was not considered modest in that sense.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps not, but perhaps it is a little more modest to say that the observations of these gentlemen have been taken into account to a very large extent in the actual proposal that is before us in this bill itself.

The aim of the policy of international banking centres is to attract new foreign business to Canada without disturbing activities already established in Canada and without serious prejudice to the revenue. The means by which this is to be done is through the use of tax concessions. The tax concession, however—and this is quite important to note—is limited to certain transactions. In fact, it is rather limited. Basically it deals only with arm's-length foreign banking and deposit services, which is certainly a very limited activity. Its aim and focus is to attract business from foreign tax havens which we hope will come to Canada. The limitation of the transaction that I have described to you goes a great deal of the way in making it clear that the effect on the revenue will not be substantial, because it deals with business which at the present time does not come into Canada, is not taxed in Canada, and therefore the tax losses to the Treasury will be minimal.

The international banking centre is designed to attract new offshore business without jeopardizing the existing activities of bankers in Canada and without jeopardizing the tax flow to the Treasury. That is my view of the international banking centre's operation and significance. It seems to me that it might be of some assistance in developing new business for Canadian financial centres, business which does not come here at the present time and which would be advantageous to that industry in this country.

● (1740)

I am not sure how the banking industry will look at this. They may have views that do not coincide with my own. I am not in a position to report on that. But it seems to me that it is an idea that should be sympathetically examined by the committee which will be attending to this bill in due course.

Honourable senators, that is a brief overview of some of the measures that are contained in this bill. I make no effort to explain to you the rather involved technical nature of some of the clauses, which cover some 140 pages, because it takes a more expert tax mind than mine to bend itself around the complexities and the implications of these things. I think we would be well advised to ask the experts from the Department of Finance to enlighten us on any of these clauses which we find difficult or which we believe require further elaboration.

On that basis, I would like to move the second reading of this bill. If approval is given today, it could be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to be examined expeditiously.

From the government's point of view, there is some merit in having the bill handled as fast as is practicable. I acknowledge that it was a long time in the House of Commons, and we would have been happier had the bill reached us sooner, but it did not.

Some of the clauses of the bill call for implementation on January 1, 1988, so the advantages of having it dealt with by this house as soon as can be conveniently and expeditiously arranged are manifest.

I commend the bill to honourable senators' attention.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, first of all, I believe that all of us would want to compliment Senator Roblin on his analysis of Bill C-64. As he pointed out, it is a very technical bill in some of its aspects; in others, it is not technical, but causes one to wonder whether the language, for instance, in clause 66 of Bill C-64, the garnishment section to which Senator Roblin made reference, really is restricted to operational funds or whether it goes beyond that.

That is a matter that will bother all of us if it goes beyond operational funds and attaches, in a priority way, on behalf of the government, to property that was not involved in the situation at the time it was entered into, for instance, a mortgage.

[Senator Roblin.]

With regard to the other point Senator Roblin made, I could not help but wonder. We hear a great deal about how actions have been taken to simplify our income tax system. Senator Roblin referred to a clause of the bill that was of interest to people in the oil and gas business.

Just to show you how simple this is, honourable senators, let me refer you to clause 66.7. Under subparagraph (3) the following appears:

Subject to subsections (6) and (7), where after May 6, 1974 a corporation (in this subsection referred to as the "successor") acquired a particular Canadian resource property (whether by way of a purchase, amalgamation, merger, winding-up or otherwise), there may be deducted by the successor in computing its income for a taxation year an amount not exceeding the aggregate of all amounts each of which is an amount determined in respect of an original owner of the particular property that is the lesser of—

And then it goes on.

Senator Frith: Dispense!

Senator Sinclair: I am pleased that Senator Roblin brought that to our attention. It does not strike me as being very simple, but I guess I am not reading it right.

In regard to his suggestion that we would want to ask questions of officials, I think we should. On the garnishment issue I think we should ask questions, as well as on some of the language and on the international banking centres.

Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Roblin's remarks when he said that this may have been escalated beyond where it might ordinarily be, because it is a long way from the international banking centres that were first conceived and discussed. This is a limited operation in a particular field, and it is a balancing of deposits and loans "ex Canada." The problem is that it designates areas where they can be set up that are not within the most significant banking parts of Canada.

● (1750)

Let us be frank about it. Every country has a major banking centre—it does not have two. In the United States it is New York. You may like to think that San Francisco or Chicago are banking centres, but they are satellites to the single banking centre. In Germany it is Frankfurt; in Great Britain it is London, and so on. Canada has a banking centre; it is Toronto. That is recognized by the banking community and the financial community, but for some reason—and maybe this will be explained to us by Senator Roblin later—Toronto was not chosen. For some reason—and I cannot understand why—they chose Montreal and Vancouver. But we can look forward to that after it comes back from the committee, and I am sure that he will be able to tell us—I hope that he will—why these two cities were chosen whereas the obvious choice, Toronto, was left out.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I rise only to make a complaint to Senator Roblin. I know that he said that he would not make any effort to explain a number of things—some of which Senator Sinclair just referred to, such as the ones dealing with resource expense allowances regarding transfer successors, and that sort of thing—but I ask him now if he could at least tell us what is in the bill.

As has been pointed out, you can read the bill over—and I will not do it—so carefully and as slowly as you like, but you cannot even understand what it is saying. Could he at least tell us in some kind of layman's language—without all of the “whereases” and “buts” and “lesser of this and that,” and so on—the intent of the bill so that we could at least understand what the change to the resource allowances would be after they have made some of these transfers?

I have a couple of other things that I would like to raise also, but I made a bet with one of my colleagues that I would be through in two minutes, so I should stop now.

Senator Roblin: I was just congratulating myself—if I may close the debate—on the fact that Senator Sinclair—

Senator Frith: We had better put the warning on the record.

Senator Roblin: —did not ask me to explain section 66, because with its hanging clauses, dangling participles, all of the “whereases” and references hither and yon, I confess that I have some trouble even explaining it to myself, let alone to anyone else.

I can tell Senator Olson, however, that—

Senator Frith: You are closing the debate?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I assume, honourable senators, that Senator Roblin is answering the question posed to him. Are you closing the debate?

Senator Olson: No, he is not closing the debate.

Senator Hicks: I wanted to ask a question, too, so he is answering the question.

Senator Roblin: Go ahead and ask the question and then I will finish it.

Senator Hicks: I want some reference to the sections which change—

Senator Sinclair: Do I take it that he cannot answer Senator Olson's question?

Senator Hicks: I want to have some explanation of and reference to the section that deals with the handling of the taxation of charitable donations, and so on. If I understand them correctly—and I have been frantically searching through the bill and I cannot find them—they will adversely affect all kinds of charitable institutions, particularly with respect to any substantial gifts which they might obtain. At present, if a person is roughly in the top income tax bracket, he can make a $5,000 donation and can save something like $2,500 in tax. Under this legislation, I understand that he will only be able to save 17 per cent of the $5,000. In my view, this may cause real hardship to many charitable institutions, universities, churches, hospitals and all sorts of institutions like that. At some time—either now, or later if Senator Roblin prefers—I would like to have some comment on the application of these sections.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, could we ask the Speaker not to see the clock, because it will probably take only a few minutes more?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Roblin: If there are no further questions, I will try to answer them and close the debate on this matter.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if Senator Roblin speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Roblin: In reply to Senator Hicks, fortunately for me, this whole question of charitable donations is not in this bill.

Senator Frith: I did not think it was.

Senator Roblin: It is not here at all, so I do not have to tell you what clause it is in or comment on the point that you have made. But I will observe that this whole issue was discussed at some length before the Banking Committee when it made its report on the white paper on finance in the last little while.

Their conclusion was that, on the whole, they would do nothing about it, because they thought that it would probably adjust itself—if I may express my interpretation of their view—as time proceeds. Although the amount of benefit to the taxpayer is less, that is because his tax rates are less, too. There are two factors working in there. But I do not want to get into that debate. I will simply say that you will have to wait for another bill, which we may get some time in the spring, which will deal with this issue.

Dealing with Senator Olson's inquiry, I have a thumbnail answer for his inquiry about successor corporations, as follows. The successor rules pertaining to unused resource expense deductions are made more flexible with third and subsequent successor corporations treated in the same manner as first and second. The existing rules stand in the way of normal business reorganizations. I think that that is clear, and although it takes the report many pages to say it, that is the effect.

Dealing with the points raised by Senator Sinclair, yes, I have sadly to admit tax simplification is like the Holy Grail: It is always in front of us and we never reach it. I have a firm conviction that we never will, because the more complicated our economic and financial system gets and the more ingenious the operators of the tax advisory services and tax lawyers get, the more requirement there is for further legislation, which becomes so horribly complicated.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce offered a suggestion as to how we might deal, at least in part, with this question, which I will not deal with here, but it seemed to me to be a promising initiative, and I hope that it is taken up.

Now, coming back to the situation of Toronto, I think that we could say without the slightest exaggeration that Toronto is the financial centre of Canada. There is no way that that will be changed. But equally, there is no way why Toronto needs any assistance to maintain its position; it is going great guns and will continue to do so. What is being done here is to offer a relatively small measure of inducement to financial people into other cities.

I regret that my town is not in there, because I think that I could make as good a case for Winnipeg, but it is not there. However, in order to reinforce my view of the position of Toronto as a natural financial centre in this country, I can tell honourable senators that over the past few years—over my lifetime, I guess, which is more than a few years—there has been a steady haemorrhage of financial operations from Winnipeg to Toronto, whether it is insurance, trust companies, financial organizations or, indeed, banks. We had some of those at that time. We find an ineluctable, an absolutely inevitable flow, I guess, of those financial operations to the centre in Toronto. I am not envious of Toronto—that would be an improper sentiment—but I regret that the natural course of events has apparently made this inevitable.

● (1800)

Senator Frith: It is unCanadian not to be envious of Toronto!

Senator Roblin: I would be sad if you called me “unCanadian.” However, I am willing to risk it in this particular instance.

Senator Doody: It makes me feel like a real Canadian!

Senator Roblin: All I can say is shed no tears for Toronto as a financial centre. It can manage on its own very well. It does not need any help, but some of the rest of us do.

Senator Frith: There will be a small amendment in due course to change it.

Senator Roblin: I do not think we are giving much help to Vancouver and Montreal, but we are giving them some. I think that in this house, with our particular concern for regional affairs, we can be concerned about the regional interests of Toronto and say to ourselves that it is not being damaged in any perceptible way by this measure, and it is possible that it might do some small good in Montreal and Vancouver.

My conclusion is that I will support this particular aspect of the bill. I hope that if you agree with me you will give second reading to this bill, and I shall use my influence to have it referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for further consideration.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for its usual kind attention.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Except that the “kind attention” is not a condition.

Senator Roblin: I will not back away from that.

On motion of Senator Roblin, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 10, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 10, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

TENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-90, An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, December 8, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following recommendation:

Your Committee recommends that the Government refrain from asking Parliament every year to extend the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 governing the variable entrance requirement (VER) by introducing a bill to make the requirement a permanent feature of the act.

Respectfully submitted,

M. LORNE BONNELL
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 10, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-254, An Act to amend the Citizenship Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, December 8, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

M. LORNE BONNELL
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bosa, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT PROPOSALS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 10, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

FOURTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the document intituled: "Proposals to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors and to deal with other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Statutes of Canada", has, in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, October 28, 1987, examined the said document and now reports it with the following amendments:

Proposed Clause 37:

Delete proposed clause 37.

Proposed Clauses 12 and 39:

Proposed clauses 12 and 39 should be deleted in accordance with the undertaking given by the Senior Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice to the Committee on December 10, 1987.

Proposed Schedule I, item 8:

Proposed schedule 1, item 8 should be amended in accordance with the undertaking given by the Senior Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice to the Committee on December 10, 1987.

Proposed Schedule I:

Add new items 43 and 44 and renumber, in accordance with the undertaking given by the Senior Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice to the Committee on December 10, 1987.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that this report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: May we have an explanation?

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, this is a proposal for a bill which is presented periodically to both houses of Parliament. It is designed merely to correct errors, as it says, archaisms and matters of a non-substantive and non-controversial nature in existing legislation.

The usual procedure is to present this document to both houses for examination and any kind of correction. Those parts that are accepted must be adopted unanimously and then the bill will be presented. That is to happen next week. That is the reason I am asking for your permission to allow me to speak to it today.

The document really had very few errors that we were able to find. There were a couple of corrections such as changing the word "or" to "and." There was also some coordination required between the French and the English versions of the text, and you will notice that there was only one item that we proposed be deleted. We did that on the grounds that the amendment was of a substantive nature and should be considered by Parliament in a separate bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

AMENDMENT OF ACT—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, December 16, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the urgency of amending the War Veterans Allowance Act in order to remove the restriction that requires a Canadian veteran who served overseas in World

[Senator Neiman.]

War II and who chose to take up residence outside Canada to return to Canada for 365 days in order to become eligible to receive the allowances under the act and other benefits available thereunder.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, December 15, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate will recall that in October and previously a number of questions were asked of him about the situation in Fiji, the government's attitude to it, and so on. On October 15 he was asked what arrangements the Government of Canada was making for people who might wish to leave Fiji and come to Canada, either temporarily or on a long-term basis.

This week we received a press release from the Minister of Employment and Immigration informing us that over 2,500 people have come to Canada over the last three months and that a great many of them are planning not to be visitors but to stay in the country. We are informed in the newspapers that 200 of these people are seeking refugee status.

Could the minister tell us whether the government formulated those provisions in October, or whether the policy now is only to act in an ex post facto manner with respect to the movements of people in these situations?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am not quite sure of the import of the honourable senator's question. She is relating it to some statement, which I do not recall, made in October. In any case, I do not see the connection between it and the present situation. As the honourable senator knows, Fiji has returned to civilian rule, following several coups. A new interim government is in place there, and I trust that she agrees that this is an important step towards the return to full democratic rule in that country.

Senator Marsden: Perhaps I should make myself more clear. I welcome, of course, the return to democratic rule in Fiji, but my question related entirely to Canada's immigration policy and the fact that this movement of people from Fiji—or any other part of the world where there is political upheaval of the kind that generates refugees and the movement of people—could have been anticipated. Not only could it have been anticipated, but the government was asked questions here—and, no doubt, in the other place as well—about the movement of people. Now we find that as of December 4, after at least 2,500 people have arrived in Canada, visitors' visas are going to be required, and now 200 people have claimed refugee status. It would have seemed to me, especially given the government's concern over immigration—we are dealing with legislation specifically on that matter—that some kind of arrangement could have been put in place much earlier in anticipation of this situation.

My question is: Were those arrangements put in place? Are we seeing the result of some sort of complexity which is not clear from the press release, or is this a failure to act until the situation has become complicated and difficult for at least 2,500 people?

Senator Murray: I take it that my honourable friend is suggesting that the visitor's visa requirement should have been imposed earlier. Let me tell her that the increase in the volume of visitors from Fiji became significant. It began in September. I can put the situation in context for her by advising her that while over 400 visitors from Fiji arrived in September, over 1,100 arrived in October and over 1,300 in November. Over 600 of these visitors have already indicated their intention to make refugee claims. Therefore, I think the action taken by the government on December 4 was timely under the circumstances.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, let me be absolutely clear. I welcome Fijians coming to Canada. I simply wonder why it is that the process has to be so complicated. It is very complicated to claim refugee status. Could the Government of Canada have anticipated that a great many people would have wanted to come to this country, and could it have put in place in Fiji the facilities to make it reasonably easy, in Canadian immigration terms, to come to Canada? The claim for refugee status is not a simple one.

● (1410)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it was extremely easy to come here. No visitor's visa was required until December 4.

Senator Marsden: Now it is extremely difficult. Visitors have to leave in order to gain entry into the country. It seems to me that what we have done is complicate the lives of people whose lives have already been complicated by the situation in their own country. Had we been unable to foresee this, it would have been understandable, but this situation was so apparent, and it involves such a small number of people, that I wonder if the Leader of the Government will be good enough to get a fuller explanation from the Department of External Affairs or from the Minister of State (Immigration) as to exactly what was done in the interim period.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am informed that legitimate visitors from Fiji to Canada are normally granted up to three months to visit Canada. Following expiry of their initial visit, they can request an extension of their stay at a Canada Immigration centre. So I do not understand the point which the honourable senator is making to the effect that those who are here already would have to go back to Fiji to obtain a visitor's visa.

Senator Marsden: I am sure the Leader of the Government will understand that I am not suggesting that they have to go back to obtain a visitor's visa. Those who wish to stay permanently in Canada—and we read in the press that there are a great many who do wish to stay permanently in Canada—in order to immigrate will now have to leave the country.

We have been through this many times before in connection with Uganda, Chile and many other parts of the world where there have been political upheavals. It would seem to me that by this time an orderly process could be in place.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not sure that the situation in Fiji today is comparable to that in the other countries just mentioned, because, as I said in answer to the first question, in the last few days there has been a return to civilian rule. There is a new interim government in place to replace the Council of Ministers that had been installed by the military. So it may well be that her concerns—and those of many of the Fijians who might otherwise have wanted to stay in Canada—will have been allayed by the apparent restoration of political stability in that country.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED STATES-U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS REDUCTIONS—STATEMENT BY CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO UNITED NATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, believing as I do that senators, along with peace-loving Canadians and people of like mind all over the world, rejoice at what so far has taken place at the summit meetings in Washington—and having in mind the most excellent statement made on national television this morning by our Ambassador to the United Nations, His Excellency Stephen Lewis—can the Leader of the Government indicate that the articulate gentleman, in his expression this morning of realistic hope and confidence at what had taken place so far, was not speaking only for himself but was expressing and reflecting the views of our own government on this most important issue and this most auspicious occasion?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am glad to inform the Senate that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Clark, today expressed on behalf of the government his great pleasure at the signing of the agreement between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. to eliminate all ground-based Soviet and American intermediate range nuclear missiles globally. Mr. Clark said in part:

This agreement is an unprecedented breakthrough in efforts to reverse the nuclear arms spiral and engage in actual reductions in nuclear arms rather than just their limitation.

The INF Accord will result in the complete elimination of an entire category of nuclear missiles and is therefore the first nuclear disarmament agreement in modern history.

The minister went on to say:

The outcome of the INF negotiations has reaffirmed the validity of NATO's December, 1979 "double-track" decision. It underlines the important role Alliance unity and solidarity have played throughout. The difficult decisions taken over the past 8 years on the issue of the INF have had a direct bearing on the successful outcome of these negotiations. Canada is satisfied with the results and looks forward with anticipation to similarly successful conclusions to other arms control negotiations currently underway.

MARITIME PROVINCES

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY UPGRADING—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. The premiers of the maritime provinces met in my home town of Grand Falls, New Brunswick, yesterday. As a result of that meeting they are unanimous in their determination to seek help from the federal government in rebuilding the Trans-Canada Highway from the Quebec border near Edmundston to Cape Tormentine and the Tantramar Marsh. A great deal is being said and done with respect to the linkage of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick by way of a bridge, tunnel or whatever. However, at the rate the Trans-Canada Highway in New Brunswick is being torn apart, it will be difficult to get to the bridge or tunnel in good shape. Truck traffic has increased tremendously in New Brunswick, and I suspect that it has resulted in a decreased use of the excellent rail facilities in the maritimes.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

To sum up, the premiers of the three maritime provinces have decided to put their shoulders to the task—

Senator Murray: And ask us to write a cheque!

Senator Frith: That is pretty heavy-duty work.

Senator Corbin: —and ask for the assistance of the federal government. They are prepared to share in the costs of this enterprise, but for obvious reasons, well known to the Leader of the Government, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia cannot go it alone. Furthermore, as one who travels that highway quite frequently, I am prepared to call it a "killer highway." Traffic on it is at the point where Sunday drivers cannot go out on a leisurely drive any more; the truck traffic has taken over totally. Premier McKenna has not yet come to Ottawa with a request, but it is obvious that this is a matter of great importance to all maritimers and, indeed, to all residents and road users of the Atlantic area. I simply want to know whether the minister and his colleagues from the maritime provinces would be well disposed to such a request and, indeed, see that the request receives speedy approval when it does come to them.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am well aware of the state of the Trans-Canada Highway in New Brunswick, having travelled it quite frequently. Premier McKenna and I met in Ottawa several weeks ago and, as a matter of fact, he mentioned the Trans-Canada Highway in New Brunswick as one of his priorities for future federal-provincial cooperation. Of course I made note of that in my capacity as the minister responsible for most of the ERDA subagreements in the Atlantic region. Having said that, I think I would be remiss if I did not mention that the federal government has committed about $1 billion to various ERDA subagreements, including highways agreements, in the Atlantic provinces. There is a highways agreement in force in New Brunswick. I do not recall at the moment the amount of money involved, but it is considerable. My honourable friend will know that the Government of New Brunswick has for some time attached great priority to the completion of Route 11 in that province.

• (1420)

We have recently signed a highways subagreement with the Province of Nova Scotia in the amount of $100 million, if my memory is correct. A few of these subagreements expire at the end of the present fiscal year. Many of them will expire at the end of 1988. I will be discussing with the provinces in the next little while what federal-provincial instrument might be put in place following the expiration of these subagreements, and we will take it from there.

However, for many years the federal government has been quite forthcoming with regard to sharing the cost of highways construction in the Atlantic provinces.

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—SETTING UP OF SEPARATE PROCESS FOR ENTRENCHMENT

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate following upon my question of yesterday. From a reading of the Meech Lake Accord, which deals with the other matters that are to be agreed upon by the First Ministers when dealing with constitutional matters, and particularly from what is stated on page 7 of that accord, it is quite clear to me that unanimity is required in terms of placing the aboriginal rights concept on the agenda of matters relating to the Constitution to be discussed by the First Ministers.

Yesterday, Senator Murray, you began to enlighten me on this matter. However, when you talked about a separate process, I did not fully understand what that meant. Therefore, my question today is in that regard. When you talk about a separate process, are you talking about setting up a process to deal strictly with aboriginal rights and related matters that will be separate from the system that has already been agreed upon, namely, the Meech Lake Accord? If that is the case, which amending formula would apply? Would it be the new amending formula which requires the unanimous consent of all the provinces, or would it be the old amending formula which, under the present Constitution, requires the agreement of seven provinces plus 50 per cent of the population? Is this what you meant by establishing a separate process to deal with aboriginal rights and to work towards the entrenchment of the defined rights in the Constitution?

If that is the case, then I would like to have some clarification in that regard. If you are talking in terms of setting up a separate process, there are a number of things I would like to know. You made it clear to me yesterday that at the next First Ministers' Conference in 1988 there is no intention to place aboriginal rights on that agenda. However, it seemed to me that you were implying that you were prepared to establish another process, parallel or completely separate from the process of the First Ministers' conferences. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate can enlighten me on that matter.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The answer to the first part of my honourable friend's question is yes. This is a separate or parallel process that we would like to set up in collaboration with the representatives of the aboriginal peoples and with the provinces. We have been discussing the matter with the representatives of the aboriginal peoples to see if the federal government and the aboriginal peoples can agree on a process. That process, of course, would end with a First Ministers' conference, which would be called when there was a realistic prospect of such a conference succeeding.

Aboriginal rights are not on the agenda for the 1988 conference, because we believe that at this point it would be futile to put that matter on the agenda. I see no evidence that a constitutional conference on aboriginal rights called today for whatever date would succeed.

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, I do have clear information now, which I appreciate. However, I do not think that you have answered my question regarding the unanimity aspect. Is a province required to agree in order to place the matter of aboriginal rights on the agenda, even though it is a separate process? Would the old amending formula—seven out of ten provinces plus 50 per cent of the population—apply to the native peoples?

Honourable senators, I am not at all clear on this. Let me phrase my question again. I know that you would like to establish a separate process, but what does it take to establish that? How is that going to be handled? Would the old amending formula apply?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is not a matter of there being an old amending formula and a new amending formula. There are a number of amending formulas in the Constitution. It would depend on what amendment you are trying to make to the Constitution whether it required unanimity or whether it required the consent of Parliament and two-thirds of the provinces having 50 per cent of the population, or, indeed, only the federal Parliament or the federal Parliament with a given province. Those are all amending formulas that are contained in the Constitution.

If we were discussing the kind of amendment that was proposed by the federal government at the First Ministers' conference last March, then that would take the consent of Parliament and two-thirds of the provinces having 50 per cent of the population.

Senator Watt: I would like a further clarification. If I understood you correctly, the setting up of this process would be done prior to the proclamation of the Meech Lake Accord.

Senator Murray: What does the Meech Lake Accord have to do with it?

Senator Watt: The Meech Lake Accord has a lot to do with it.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as a practical matter, I would say, as I have said before in this place, that until the Meech Lake Accord is ratified we do not have ten provinces at the table. As a practical matter, the chances of achieving agreement, even agreement involving two-thirds of the provinces with 50 per cent of the population, is more difficult in the absence of one important major partner in Confederation—Quebec. That is the only relationship that I see to the Meech Lake Accord in my honourable friend's question.

We can begin a process of consultation and discussion now. We are seeking to establish that kind of process in very informal discussions that we have been having with representatives of the aboriginal peoples. Mr. McKnight, Mr. Hnatyshyn and I met with them last summer. They have also had discussions with some of our officials in the meantime. I, myself, have spoken very informally—as recently as a couple of weeks ago—with representatives of two of the aboriginal groups. I emphasize that that was a very informal meeting.

The object is to try to establish a new process that will have a better chance of success than the previous process realized.

• (1430)

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, if that is the case, I should like to ask another question.

As Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, will the leader formally call upon the aboriginal peoples in the near future to begin to establish the process? When can we expect a public statement from the Government of Canada respecting its relations with the aboriginal peoples?

Senator Murray: My honourable friend is asking, as I understand it, when we will have an announcement regarding a new process. I do not have an answer to that question today. I can only repeat that within the past week representatives have met with my officials in the government, and we are continuing our discussions.

We attach a great deal of importance to this. We would like to succeed, but we have to have a process in place that has some realistic prospect of success.

I am not in a position to put a deadline on any announcement. Frankly, the deadlines that were established in the past for constitutionally-mandated conferences on this matter were counterproductive.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

INCREASE IN MARINE ATLANTIC FERRY RATES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, following on Senator Corbin's question regarding roads, I understand that Marine Atlantic is going to increase the ferry rates to Prince Edward Island by 4 per cent on January 1. I suspect this is another way to penalize Islanders for joining the rest of Canada. I say that because I noticed that they are not going to increase the rates on the Newfoundland, Gulf and Argenta service with respect to cabin charges, and that there will be made available a return fare rate on the Saint John to Digby crossing which will probably be cheaper.

Would the leader speak to the Minister of Transport and, through him and through Marine Atlantic, see if this increase can be held off until we have the permanent link with the mainland?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall certainly see if I can complete the partial and selective record that the honourable senator has just conveyed to the Senate, because I am sure that there is other information available not only as to the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick ferry but the other services the honourable senator has mentioned. I shall obtain a report from the minister who reports for Marine Atlantic.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—UPGRADING OF HIGHWAYS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, while the leader is digging up that information for us, I wonder if he could find out—because, apparently, there will be no rails on this permanent link that we have been promised by the Minister of Public Works, but there will be many 18-wheelers and other big trucks on our highways—if the Government of Canada is anticipating doing something to assist Prince Edward Island in acquiring stronger and better highways to carry the loads of potatoes so the people of Canada can benefit from those good crops?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I refer my honourable friend to the answer I gave to Senator Corbin a few minutes ago concerning highway construction in the Atlantic provinces.

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—DISPOSAL OF ICEBREAKING FERRIES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: One further question. When looking into that, would the leader look into one other matter? I understand that when we get this permanent link, which we are all looking forward to with great anticipation—

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Then you are voting "yes" in the plebiscite!

Senator Bonnell: As soon as I get the information the leader is to table, I can answer that.

When we get this permanent link, what will happen to the icebreaking ferries that carry all of those Islanders abroad and all Canadians to Prince Edward Island? Will the Province of Prince Edward Island be given an opportunity to buy those at a mortgage sale?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice.

HEALTH

TAINTED MUSSELS—SPECIAL INQUIRY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the unfolding tragedy relating to the P.E.I. mussel poisoning of 75 Canadians, 16 of whom are hospitalized—and one of whom died earlier today—would the Leader of the Government in the Senate determine if it is the intention of his government to set up a special inquiry into the whole affair in light of the accusations made by members in the other place that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was tardy in warning Canadians about this matter, and in light of the call by the Leader of the Opposition in the other place for the resignation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, this question is one that has certainly exercised members of the other place. There have been a great many questions put, and answered in the other place by the responsible minister.

My intention on a matter as serious as this is to take questions on the subject as notice and undertake to bring in replies from the responsible minister as quickly as possible.

Senator Haidasz: Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate not think that it is advisable, since so many Canadians have become sick and since one has already died, that he ask his government to set up a special inquiry to investigate the whole matter?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there has been an enormous amount of information already conveyed to Parliament and to the public by the minister and the Department of National Health and Welfare on this matter.

If the honourable senator believes that this information is inadequate, or seeks further information, I will be happy to try to obtain it for him and bring it to the attention of the Senate.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. I think this is an urgent matter and, for the protection of the health of Canadians, and the protection of the Canadian mussel industry, I think the Leader of the Government in the Senate should undertake to ask his government to set up a special inquiry to investigate this whole matter.

Senator Murray: I cannot see how that would expedite information. I think the process that I have suggested would bring information to the attention of the house and the public much more quickly.

As I have said, if the honourable senator feels that the information already conveyed by the minister is inadequate, let him indicate what information he believes is lacking and I will try to obtain it.

TAINTED MUSSELS—DATE OF AVAILABILITY OF EVIDENCE AND DATE OF WARNING

Hon. John B. Stewart: I have a supplementary question. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate find out when the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the department first decided that there was sufficient evidence to suspect that the sickness was attributable to Prince Edward Island mussels, and by that I mean sufficient evidence to ask one or more retailers to stop selling the mussels? Could he get that date? May we also have the date the minister or the department advised restaurateurs and consumers not to serve and not to eat mussels?

● (1440)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Yes, I will obtain that information.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

STATUS OF INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT DIVISION

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I would like to direct my question, which refers to the Industrial Development Division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I realize that we have in place the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which, to my mind, is doing an excellent job, and that we have Enterprise Cape Breton, which is also doing an extremely good job. I commend the minister and the government for what they have done.

Recently the minister, Mr. de Cotret, was in Sydney and questions were posed to him by members of the media with reference to the Industrial Development Division of Devco, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and he did not say whether it was going to be retained or disposed of.

No one knows Cape Breton better than the Leader of the Government, despite the fact that he is now an Upper Canadian.

Senator Frith: You can have him back!

Senator Muir: We are proud of him wherever he is.

Senator Frith: I should not say that.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, this is my lead-in to asking him what he is going to do for us.

I would like him to find out if Mr. de Cotret will make a statement by the end of December whether IDD will be retained within the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It has done, and is doing, a great job, and we would hate to lose it because these other agencies are now in place. Time is of the essence, and, who knows, we may adjourn by December 23 or 24 and we will not have an opportunity to get the answer. I would appreciate it if the minister could use his considerable influence within the cabinet and with the Prime Minister and Mr. de Cotret to try to get an answer as soon as possible. Despite his brilliance, I do not expect him to carry all of this information around in his mind, and I would like to receive an answer as soon as possible.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments of Senator Muir concerning the Industrial Development Division of Devco, which, as he knows, is the responsibility of my colleague, the Honourable Robert de Cotret.

The problem that arises is that, potentially at least, we would have two agencies, that is, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency with Enterprise Cape Breton and the IDD, which would have virtually identical mandates. The question is how to rationalize this situation.

I have said to those responsible and to other interested people in Cape Breton that whatever is done, we will ensure that all the flexibility that is present in the IDD will be retained in whatever reorganization is arrived at.

The short answer to the question, however, is that we will be bringing in legislation—and I hope and expect that will be done before the Christmas break—to create the agency, and at that time my honourable friend will have a full answer to his question.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I also have a supplementary question. As everyone knows, the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. What is concerning me is the fact that we may lose IDD, which has done quite a good job. Is the minister aware that the business community, the municipal authorities, the unions, and every segment of society on the Island are most interested that we should retain IDD within the Cape Breton Development Corporation, despite what he has said regarding the legislation which will be introduced?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as I have tried to indicate, I do not believe that the status quo can be preserved completely, because we would then have the Industrial Development Division of Devco and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, of which Enterprise Cape Breton is now a part, with virtually identical mandates.

What we are trying to do is to arrive at a reorganization that will protect all the excellent features that the Industrial Development Division now has and that will contribute to the further development of the economy of Cape Breton. We have made some pretty important progress in the past couple of years. The new incentives that were brought in in the first couple of budgets of Mr. Wilson are only now beginning to bear fruit. There is a very remarkable rate of take-up of these programs such as the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit and the topping-up assistance, and so forth. I am most encouraged by what has been happening in Cape Breton, and I want to assure my honourable friend and all those who are interested in this subject that the steps we will be taking with the legislation will be such as to continue this progress and enhance it.

Senator Muir: I agree with the minister completely that quite a bit of progress has occurred on the Island. However, as a further supplementary question, does he not think that IDD, which has been operating for some years, with its expertise, vast experience and background, would be able to contribute that experience to ACOA and to Enterprise Cape Breton and that by all joining forces, and not limiting any of them, more progress would be made in Cape Breton?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think it is very difficult to have this discussion in a vacuum.

I recognize the contribution that the Industrial Development Division has made. I recognize the flexibility that it has to operate on a great many fronts in Cape Breton. I also recognize the important contribution that Enterprise Cape Breton has made in the last couple of years. I think it would be much more helpful if we could discuss the matter in light of the legislation that I trust will be introduced before the Christmas recess.

COMMUNITY REPRESENTATIONS RE RETENTION OF INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT DIVISION

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: I have a question for the Leader of the Government supplementary to that asked by Senator Muir.

Has the Leader of the Government received written representations from the Joint Expenditure Board or from the mayors of municipalities in industrial Cape Breton with respect to the future of the Industrial Development Division?

[Senator Muir.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I cannot say for certain that I have the correspondence, but I am aware of the position that the Joint Expenditure Board and others have taken on these matters, because I continue to be an avid reader of the Cape Breton and Nova Scotia media.

Senator Graham: I know that the government will take into consideration the very strong, positive representations that I understand have been made by various community representatives directed towards retaining the Industrial Development Division.

I must say, honourable senators, that I am one of those who would be very much in favour of retaining that division, as I am sure is Senator Muir and as I am sure are Senator MacEachen and others such as Senator John M. Macdonald. I may be anticipating Senator John M. Macdonald's support for the very important work and the great accomplishments that have been achieved by the Industrial Development Division. But we certainly will await with great anticipation the legislation that the minister has indicated will be forthcoming before Christmas. Presumably, that legislation may come forward early next week. But in anticipation of the ACOA legislation, is it also the intention of the government to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act?

● (1450)

Senator Murray: I ask my honourable friend to be patient for a few days yet, but I expect that, yes, the legislation coming forward will also deal with the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IN SENATE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask, on the matter of the pending legislation on the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, whether, in view of the responsibility of the Leader of the Government for the legislation, it will be introduced in the Senate? I encourage that.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I encouraged it as well, but I have been given the opinion that my friend might expect I would have been given, which is to the effect that the legislation requires a royal recommendation. It will therefore be brought into the House of Commons under the name of the Prime Minister.

Senator MacEachen: That is unfortunate, because we would prefer to have it amended here rather than in the other place.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I commend to the Leader of the Opposition the technique of pre-study.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on another subject, may I ask the Leader of the Government whether the trade negotiations with the United States are still continuing or whether they have been completed?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as I indicated the other day, the drafting of a legal text is continuing. I think I informed the Senate the other day that it was a matter of days rather than weeks before this would be completed. I believe I can say with some confidence today that it is a matter of hours rather than days.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the government leader for that information, but my question was somewhat different. Are the negotiations still carrying on between Canada and the United States?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have no reason to believe that these are negotiations. These are meetings to refine a legal text.

Senator MacEachen: Is the minister saying that the legal text between Canada and the United States has not yet been agreed to?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can only say that as of noon today my information was that there was still a very little bit of work to be done, but that the release of this text is not many hours away.

Senator MacEachen: I suppose I will try the question another way. Is it a fact that when the announcement was made on Monday morning, or whenever it was made, by Mr. Reisman and Mr. Murphy that an agreement had been reached, that was not the case? Were there still outstanding items which were under negotiation and which are still under negotiation between the two countries?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I must say that I have no reason to believe that there are any matters under negotiation, as the honourable senator puts it, between the two countries. There may be some drafting still taking place, but I would have to verify the impression I had a couple of hours ago that, for whatever reason, the text could not be released immediately but that its release is a couple of hours away. I take that to mean that some drafting is still going on.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The text of an agreement?

Senator Murray: The legal text.

Senator Frith: But of an agreement?

Senator Murray: What else is there?

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions. Following the usual procedure, I will read any answer that an honourable senator asks me to read; otherwise, I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA, AND PORT OF THUNDER BAY, ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL GRAIN CARS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on October 13, 1987, by the Honourable Joseph-Philippe Guay, regarding Transport—Port of Churchill, Manitoba, and Port of Thunder Bay, Ontario—Request for Additional Grain Cars.

(The answer follows:)

Port of Churchill

Total exports for the 1987/88 crop year equalled 568,800 tonnes of barley, slightly greater than the 558,000 tonnes shipped in the 1986/87 crop year. Both years are higher than the ten year average exports of 530,000 tonnes. The entire Canadian Wheat Board (C.W.B.) commitment was shipped from the port.

In fact, a larger amount of grain than originally forecast was shipped through the port, and resulted in an estimated operating profit of $236,000 for this year. It should also be noted that the operating cash flow following this year's program is forecasted to be $1.01 million.

Due to pre-shipping the elevator was filled by the time the first vessel arrived. As at week 1, August 9, 1987, total stocks of grain at Churchill equalled 109,300 tonnes. Total stock at the end of the season, October 25, were estimated at 10,000 tonnes.

Grain supplies at the port were adequate throughout the season and it should be noted that no vessel had to wait due to shortage of grain even during and after the strike.

Given the problems encountered in this year's program such as the rail strike, the lack of grain stocks in the Churchill catchment area, and the delayed harvest, all parties involved in the Churchill program displayed a tremendous effort to reach a program of 568,000 tonnes.

Thunder Bay

Through the middle of September, sales projections for October/November at Thunder Bay stood at 2.2 million tonnes, and the railways had planned for sufficient locomotive power and rolling stock to meet the projected demand.

Major sales by both the C.W.B. and the non-Board trade during the latter part of September almost doubled requirements for that period to 3.9 million tonnes, up some 40%.

It is not insignificant that, system-wide, the grain handling and transportation participants are moving grain at a record breaking pace.

As of November 23, the increase in total Canadian exports over this same period last year is up by 18.4%. As well, farmer deliveries are up over last year by 56%, and, Thunder Bay shipments east are up 7% over last year.

It is estimated the CP has approximately 7,000 cars in service to Thunder Bay. The total fleet is 13,500.

CN has approximately 6,000 cars in service to the port as well. This includes the 3,000 from the Churchill route. (Total fleet 14,750).

It should be noted that the procurement of additional locomotives and rail cars and placing them into grain service takes time. In the past, the railways have indicated that under normal operating conditions it takes four to six weeks for leased equipment to be brought into full service.

A full review was undertaken by the minister and identifies several contributing factors:

- unusually sudden demand for grain arising from new sales by the C.W.B.;
- some of 1,000 cars full with specialty crops were unable to unload at Vancouver, as well, approximately 1,000 cars were dedicated to Churchill as the season was extended for two weeks; and
- difficulty of the railways to lease U.S. cars due to a very tight market.

The minister is continuing to monitor the situation carefully.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—RAILWAY LINK

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on November 17, 1987, by the Honourable M. Lorne Bonnell, regarding Prince Edward Island—Proposed Fixed Crossing to Mainland—Railway Link.

(The answer follows:)

In 1979, there were 391,870 tonnes of freight moved in rail cars, while in 1985, this had declined to 213,140 tonnes, a 45.6% decline. All indicators are that rail traffic will continue to decline and is assumed to disappear by 1993 under all scenarios. For this reason, there is no plan for a railway on the fixed link.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

STATUS OF FRENCH IN ALBERTA—STATUS OF FRENCH IN PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on December 1, 1987, by the Honourable Norbert Thériault, regarding a court case on Official Languages in Alberta.

(The answer follows:)

[Senator Doody.]

The Alberta Court of Appeal has recently rendered two judgments in the Paquette case. In the first of its decisions, rendered on September 11, 1987, the Court upheld the position of the Attorney-General of Canada that the French language can be used in criminal proceedings in Alberta by virtue of section 110 of the former Northwest Territories Act.

In the second judgment, rendered on November 27, 1987, the Court of Appeal decided that the non-proclamation in Alberta of Part XIV.I of the Criminal Code does not violate the equality rights of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. (Part XIV.I gives an accused person the specific right to be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak the official language of the accused). The Court confirmed the position of the Attorney-General of Canada that the language-of-trial provisions and the scheme for implementing those provisions are not discriminatory, because their object is to extend language rights and the Charter specifically authorizes this advancement of the status and use of the two official languages.

The Minister of Justice has actively pursued consultations with the provinces to ensure that Part XIV.I is brought into force throughout the country. These consultations resulted in the proclamation of part XIV.I in September of this year for Saskatchewan and—with respect to summary conviction offences—Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Furthermore, the Official Languages Bill, which was introduced in the House of Commons on June 25, 1987, will ensure that Part XIV.I of the Criminal Code will be in force no later than January 1, 1990, in all provinces across Canada, including Alberta. The government has thus taken all necessary measures to correct this problem and has done so in a spirit of federal-provincial cooperation and collaboration.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT AND REVIEW

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on December 1, 1987, by the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, regarding Prince Edward Island—Proposed Fixed Crossing to Mainland—Environmental Assessment and Review.

(The answer follows:)

Public Works Canada (P.W.C.) has completed a comprehensive Initial Environmental Evaluation (I.E.E.) as described in the Federal Environmental Assessment and Review Process.

The I.E.E. is a compilation of nine studies covering the fishery, winds, waves, currents, tides, ice climate, and other environmental factors. Each of the component studies commissioned by P.W.C. has been reviewed by an interdepartmental/intergovernmental working group consisting of scientists from the various provincial and federal regulatory agencies. The draft I.E.E. which was prepared from the studies is currently being reviewed by the working group and the general public.

In addition to the ongoing reviews, P.W.C. has engaged the services of a consulting firm selected by the fishermen to review the Fisheries report and the Initial Evaluation. The consultant is to work directly with the fishermen on both sides of the Strait to ensure that the information contained in the reports is consistent with their experience and adequately addresses their concerns. The consultant will then report any discrepancies to Public Works. When finalized, the I.E.E. will form the environmental guidelines for developers and will assist in the screening of specific proposals.

Public Works Canada also announced to fishermen early this year that it will establish a committee consisting of representatives of Fisheries and Oceans, Public Works and the various fishery sectors to protect fishermen's interests and provide compensation where appropriate. The committee will be patterned after the one established for the Miramichi project and will be put in place early in 1988.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING TO MAINLAND—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION—INVITATIONS TO TENDER FOR CONSTRUCTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on December 2, 1987, by the Honourable John B. Stewart, regarding Prince Edward Island—Proposed Fixed Crossing to Mainland—Availability of Information—Invitations to Tender for Construction.

(The answer follows:)

Public information sessions have been or are being held in Bayfield, Shediac, Moncton and Sackville, New Brunswick, and in Tatamagouche and Pictou, Nova Scotia as well as on Prince Edward Island. The studies will be available in public libraries in Moncton, Port Elgin, Shediac, and Sackville, New Brunswick, and in Pictou, Nova Scotia.

On the question of proposals for construction, Public Works has indicated that proposals will not be called from the seven developers until early next year.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

CONTRACTS FOR CONSULTANCY WORK

Question No. 33 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Lorna Marsden.

14th September, 1987—Has any of the following—each of whom has been a witness before the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord—been a consultant to and/or received remuneration for contract or consultancy work with the Department of Justice, the Prime Minister's Office, the Privy Council Office or any other department of the Government of Canada between September 1, 1986, and September 1, 1987: (a) William R. Lederman, Professor Emeritus, Faculty of Law, Queen's University; (b) Richard Simeon, Director, School of Public Administration, Queen's University; (c) Peter Leslie, Director, Institute for Intergovernmental Relations, Queen's University; and (d) Gordon Robertson, former Secretary of the Cabinet, now of the University of Western Ontario?

Reply by the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada:

I am informed by the Department of Communications as follows:

Peter Leslie, 1 contract, dated March 31, 1987.

To provide consulting services to the Minister and members of the Advisory Committee on Role of Communications and Culture.

All other departments have submitted a nil response to this question.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

APPLICATION OF TRADE-REMEDY LAWS—BINDING DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Question No. 34 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès.

28th October, 1987—Concerning the Free Trade Agreement being sought with the United States, how does (i) the position of the Prime Minister (as given by him to the New York Times on April 2, 1987) that “the trade-remedy laws cannot apply to Canada, period”; and (ii) references by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to the existence of a binding dispute settlement mechanism, concord with extracts from the Government document entitled: Preliminary Transcript Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement: Elements of the Agreement, found at page 19, lines 26-32; page 20, lines 13-15 and 22-32; page 21, lines 17-20; page 26, lines 6-11; and page 28, lines 1-9?

Reply by Minister for International Trade:

The extracts cited must be read in conjunction with the whole text of the Elements of the Agreement dealing with dispute settlement and institutional provisions (pp 19-31) in order to gain a full understanding of the nature of the dispute settlement provisions of the FTA. The text provides for supervision of the implementation of the agreement by a new body, the Canada-United States Trade Commission. The Commission shall refer all disputes under the Safeguard Chapter and may refer any disputes under any other chapter to binding arbitration. Furthermore, if a dispute has been referred to the Commission and has not been resolved within a period of 30 days, or has not been referred to arbitration, the Commission, upon request of either party, shall establish a panel of experts to consider the matter. For countervail and antidumping cases, a binational panel with the power to issue binding decisions will review final antidumping and countervailing duty orders. There are also restrictions on the amendment of existing antidumping and countervail duty law as applied to the other party. The agreement clearly provides for mandatory binding dispute settlement by impartial panels in key areas of the agreement dealing with trade remedy law and for binding arbitration by mutual consent in other areas.

Owing to the limited time available for negotiations, the two parties were unable to reach agreement on a substitute system of laws governing subsidies, countervail and antidumping. Such laws, which would replace current trade remedy laws in both countries, are to be developed over the next five to seven years. The agreement provides for the establishment of a working group to develop a substitute regime and report back as soon as possible.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

BILL TO AMEND (QUALIFICATIONS OF SENATORS)—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill S-12, An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (Qualifications of Senators).—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Corbin.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, on Tuesday, December 8, my good friend Senator Marchand explained the contents and the objectives of Bill S-12. He defended the course he has chosen to modify the Constitution Act, 1867 as it relates to the qualifications of senators, particularly the real property provision of $4,000 net value. Of greater interest to himself, and of particular concern to all fair-minded Canadians, he pointed out the discrimination against Indians who have land holdings only on reserves, inasmuch as those Indians might be candidates for the Senate.

I would accord the particular problem raised by Senator Marchand the highest priority, inasmuch as it sins against basic decency in this day and age. I am sure nothing further need be added in that respect. Therefore, I want to congratulate Senator Marchand on raising the issue and providing to Parliament an opportunity to correct the inequity. Indeed, I can see no reason why the bill could not be referred to a committee for thorough examination and further action, now that the possible objection which Senator Flynn had raised with respect to the amending procedure has, in my opinion, been clearly, if not definitely, dealt with by Senator Marchand, with the assistance of the Law Clerk of the Senate. Naturally Senator Flynn would have to be satisfied in that respect.

One aspect of the bill, or, if you wish, of the current qualifications and requirements, that Senator Marchand did not develop in his speech has to do with the status of those senators who are already here. Would they be allowed to dispossess themselves of their present qualificative requirements if the bill eventually became law? I am led to understand, if I read the bill correctly, that that would indeed be possible. In other words, the bill, if assented to, would have a retroactive proviso which would allow a senator to sell the $4,000 worth of swampland, for example, scrapland or abandoned sand pit—because you can't buy much more for $4,000 these days—which he now holds in the province of his designation. I do not think it would make much difference one way or another if a senator were required to maintain that qualification, or if, indeed, he were allowed to simply sell that holding. I would think, however, that it should definitely apply to new senators as of the day the bill was assented to. What small inconvenience we who sit here have already incurred under the $4,000 proviso is so insignificant that we can live with it until the date of retirement, or whatever else comes first. We who are here at present accepted that condition, and surely we can survive with it.

● (1500)

The other concern is, of course, how one remains linked to one's province of designation if one does not own real property there. The property qualifications on the surface, and for the sake of appearances, are, as already recognized, insufficient in terms of the amount of money involved. But how does one remain a senator for Prince Edward Island or Saskatchewan, for example? Must one have one's principal residence there when one is expected to be in Ottawa most of the time when Parliament is in session?

That may not be a problem for some senators—or, indeed, for a good number of senators, if not the majority of senators—but it is a problem for senators with young families. Not all senators are grey haired, bald or crippled, as the press would have the Canadian public believe.

Senator Argue: Or even fathers.

Senator Frith: Let's leave personalities out of this!

Senator Corbin: I am not naming anyone.

Senator Roblin: It's a pretty good description.

Senator Corbin: I could use other criteria, if honourable senators wished, but I want to remain decent.

Senator McElman: All those who qualify will please stand!

Senator Corbin: Anyhow, not all senators are in the position of having raised a family and of being rather free souls in terms of heavy family responsibilities.

The current constitutional provision creates some very real problems which have not been adequately debated or dealt with and which are just left on the back burner.

I understand Senator Marchand's concern, and I certainly do not wish to fault him for not addressing that specific question, because he has set his own priorities; but, again, I believe that I am raising a real problem, and one which has grown in importance as younger Canadians are appointed to the Senate. Some, indeed, were so young when they were appointed that they only married after they entered the Senate. We had a recent case of that.

Unless senators with young families are within commuting distance of Ottawa—by “commuting distance” I can extend that, I suppose, to Quebec City and Toronto with good air links—they will run into grave and difficult family problems and tensions not too far down the road.

I believe that the reform should go a step further and that it should follow very practical and pragmatic considerations. That is what Bill S-12 seeks to accomplish. It has my support. However—and I raise this realizing that it is against parliamentary tradition and practice to deal at second reading stage with clause-by-clause consideration of a bill—there is a general matter which I should like to bring to the attention of honourable senators, which is spelled out in clause 3 of the bill. Briefly it says:

(5) If he . . .

I suppose that should read “he or she”; but, of course, in the Interpretation Act “he” means “she.” At any rate, the clause says:

(5) If he ceases to be qualified in respect of residence; provided, that a Senator shall not be deemed to have ceased to be qualified in respect of residence by reason only of his residing at the seat of the Government of Canada while holding an office . . .

I repeat, “while holding an office”:

. . . under that Government requiring his presence there.

So that is a very limiting consideration. Only senators who are ministers of the Crown are dispensed from the residency requirement in their province of designation, and other senators are expected to continue to maintain and reside in their respective provinces. That is the way I read it and that is the way it is written in the present Constitution.

That puts senators who are ministers a cut above all other senators, and I do not believe that is fair in any way, shape or form in this day and age. If it can be a consideration for one class of senator, then I think it should apply to all senators equally, because what we are talking about here is “senators,” and not those senators who are cabinet members of the government.

With that comment, honourable senators, I express the hope that the bill will find its way to committee where it can be examined in detail and modified or amended in such a way that it would accommodate all points of view.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, I will take the adjournment.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985 BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill C-94, to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985.

He said: Honourable senators, not a great deal needs to be said about Bill C-94, to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985. Should any honourable senator be wondering, this is a revision of all of the Statutes of Canada as they were at December 31, 1984—which is why the bill is called “Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985 Bill”. This is the first time it has been done since 1970, and it is the sixth time that it has been done in the history of our country.

It is considered to be an important matter for several reasons. One is that this is an excellent opportunity, particularly with the current new technology, to upgrade statutes. There are two items of some significance which should be mentioned. Apparently in a great many statutes the translation between French and English is not of the highest quality. It is my understanding that in this revision some 200 statutes, in which there was considered to be inadequate French translation, have been upgraded. The other item concerns the removal of sexist language and constant reference in the older statutes to “he.”

Those are but two of the items. There is a general cleaning up—if I might use that term—of statutes, but I want to assure honourable senators that the revision does not in any manner change the substance of any existing law. I have one small point. Beginning with these statutes, all statutes will be published in loose form for the practical purpose of facilitating their upgrading from time to time.

● (1510)

I am sure that all honourable senators read the House of Commons Debates with some regularity. They will, therefore, know that on December 7, just this past week, this bill received all-party approval, was read three times and passed in one day.

I would like to describe the process that will be followed. There exists the Statute Revision Commission which consists of senior members of the Department of Justice and other government departments with an interest in these areas. The commission meets on an ongoing basis and reports to the Justice Committee of the House of Commons and the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee of the Senate. Bill C-94 will come into existence only after it has been approved and recommended by these two committees, the Commons committee and our own Legal Affairs Committee. Indeed, I am pleased to say that our own committee, under the able chairmanship of Senator Neiman, has had a very close look at the material and has spent some considerable time with the Revision Commission on the subject of this legislation. In fact, it proposed several changes which are now included in Bill C-94 and which, I am sure, were the subject matter of a previous report of the committee.

I have had a brief discussion with the Deputy Leader of the Opposition about the passage of this bill, and he indicated that since the subject is of interest to members of the committee, they may want to have a last look at the legislation now that it is in bill form and hear from officials as to whether or not the various items raised by the committee were implemented. For that reason, at some point we would ask that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. Otherwise, I would urge the passage of this bill as soon as possible.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the sponsor of the bill has said, he and I discussed it. It seems clear to me that the Senate would want assurances by the committee that the previous concerns of the committee had been looked after, that, indeed, this is the end of the process and that the bill should receive approval. I think it should go to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, and I see no reason why it should not go there right now.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

FISHERIES

CONSIDERATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries entitled: The Marketing of Fish in Canada (Interim Report II), tabled in the Senate on December 9, 1987.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to comment on the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, which I tabled yesterday and which addresses many of the key issues concerning the marketing of west coast fish. I wish to compliment the members of the committee for their tireless support in the examination of this subject during the second phase of the committee study on the marketing of fish and all the implications thereof. I might say, while Senator Perrault of B.C. is present in the chamber, that he was a very interested and faithful member of the committee and that he asked many questions on the subject while we were on the west coast. He travelled with the committee throughout. He got lost on occasion due to bad weather, but he tried very hard to catch up with us, which shows his interest and support. Senator Bell, who is from that part of Canada, also joined us for one meeting. Besides the members of the committee, I would also like to pay tribute to the research and clerical staff for their efforts.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

I am sure that I speak on behalf of all members when I say the committee is indebted to the individuals and organizations which appeared before us in Ottawa and in such places as Whitehorse, Prince Rupert, Nanaimo, Campbell River and Vancouver. It was most gratifying to note the appreciation expressed by the people in those communities for being given the opportunity to put forward their views before a parliamentary body. I must say that I found a dedication on the part of most fishermen on the west coast to their fishery, particularly on the part of a group of 7,000 volunteers who are helping to restore the salmon through the Salmonid Enhancement Program.

The report outlines the resource, the harvesting and processing sectors, current market conditions and trends which affect the marketing of west coast fish. It identifies a number of issues and makes some 32 recommendations. The proposals put forward are broad in scope, and they require profound deliberation by both industry and government.

Let me give honourable senators a brief background. The west coast fishery is relatively small as compared to that of the east coast. It contributed about 30 per cent of the wholesale value of total marine production in Canada in 1985. Commercial fishing and processing in B.C. is the fourth largest primary industry, employing approximately 20,000 people full-time and part-time, and contributing 1.4 per cent of the provincial gross domestic product in 1985. According to 1984 statistics, there were 4,500 vessels in the commercial fleet and they took up 92 per cent of the salmon. There are 144 processing plants in 92 communities, so the industry plays an important part in the economy, particularly in the smaller areas in the north. Some communities are very dependent on fishing, especially along the northern coast where demands are being made for more local processing to create more jobs.

Salmon is the backbone of the industry, accounting for over 66 per cent of the total landed value of some $370 million in 1985. The commercial fishery, made up of various gear types, harvests about 90 per cent of all salmon landings, with the balance being almost equally divided between recreational and native subsistence fisheries. Herring, which represented 17 per cent of the total catch value in 1985, is the species in second place in terms of importance. So it is not surprising to note that most of the testimony submitted to the committee concerned these two fisheries.

The subject of the Pacific Salmon Treaty arose on many occasions. Obviously, prosperity in the west coast fishing industry begins with a secure resource base. Salmon, however, have the annoying habit of swimming from the territorial waters of one country to those of another. In 1985 Canada and the United States signed a bilateral treaty on the management of all five Pacific stocks. The so-called "equity principle" which underlies the Pacific Salmon Treaty is that each country is to receive benefits in proportion to the amount of salmon originating in its own waters. Salmon interceptions favoured the United States last year, the first year of the treaty's implementation. Canadian officials should therefore vigorously pursue negotiations with the United States to reduce further interceptions of salmon of Canadian origin by the Americans so as to ensure that Canada gets its rightful share of the harvest.

● (1520)

The subject of the Yukon River was raised on many occasions before the committee. Unfortunately, the Pacific Salmon Treaty failed to address the issue of equitably apportioning salmon stocks on a number of the so-called transboundary rivers—that is, rivers which originate in Canada and flow through U.S. territory. At this moment Canadian fishermen on the Yukon River obtain a much smaller share of salmon than do Alaska fishermen, even though it is generally accepted that the Canadian portion of that river produces 50 per cent of the fish. Tremendous interest was expressed in broadening the economic opportunities of the fisheries in the area, but fish stocks could suffer from an increase in Canada's catch without a corresponding decrease in the U.S. harvest. We heard evidence that even though Canada is producing 50 per cent of the fish, they are only retaining 10 per cent for their own use while the U.S. is getting approximately 90 per cent.

It is the committee's considered opinion that Canadian native, subsistence, sporting and commercial fisheries are entitled to more of the in-river catch of the Yukon River salmon. The committee believes the issue should be moved up on the political agenda. The fishermen of the Yukon expect the Canadian government to do this.

Canada has also encountered great difficulty in having the U.S. accept the equity principle on other waterways. On some rivers Canada receives no benefits under the treaty. While a relatively small number of fish are involved, these irritants must nevertheless be quickly resolved. In addition, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans should provide more funding to increase its data base on transboundary river salmon stocks.

Also, in the Yukon we heard evidence on the irritants pertaining to freshwater fisheries. The Yukon's freshwater fish stocks would appear to have undergone a decline. The committee believes that the transfer of management authority to the territory, as it exists at the provincial level elsewhere in Canada—and here I am referring to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and also to the Northwest Territories—will result in a more responsive and effective management regime. The federal government should also include sufficient budgetary support in effecting such a transfer.

The A-B Line is an important irritant. The A-B Line controversy is equally important to the fishermen who ply the waters of the Pacific coast. The federal government should reaffirm Canada's long-standing position that the A-B Line between the southern limit of the Alaska panhandle and the province of British Columbia is the international boundary for both land and water inside the Dixon Entrance, and it would be most regrettable if Canada were to accede to U.S. demands to shift the boundary line southward. It would deny Canadian fishermen access to an area on which they have long depended for their livelihood.

Natural stocks of salmon in the region are estimated to have undergone an annual decline of 1.5 per cent over the years. Some point to overfishing, while others claim environmental damage brought on by logging, mining, urban and industrial development, et cetera. An emphasis on conservation is therefore vitally important. The report urges that in pursuing its new policy on fish habitat, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans disallow developments which impinge on fish habitats, unless it can be shown, after extensive public input, that such developments are clearly in the interests of Canada. Research programs on fish habitat should also be expanded.

The Salmonid Enhancement Program, now in its tenth year, has delivered outstanding results. Even more significant returns are expected by the early 1990s. Although the report highly commends the federal government's recent commitment to provide new funding of some $40 million a year over the next five years, some modifications to the program are suggested. Those suggestions are contained in the recommendations. To make fuller use of enhancement and to ensure that program costs will be recovered from the fishing interests which benefit most from enhancement other means of financing the SEP should also be investigated. According to what the committee has seen in Alaska, private non-profit hatcheries appear to be viable and worthy of further study.

I noted in an article from a west coast newspaper just a few days ago that someone had suggested that the government should charge one dollar per piece of fish towards the Salmonid Enhancement Program.

On the matter of consultation, Pacific salmon are among the most valuable of all Canada's aquatic resources in economic, social and aesthetic terms. Because those resources are limited, however, their management is complex. Witnesses in this investigation expressed a litany of grievances with respect to the consultative process.

Consultation between all key players in the fishing industry should be an ongoing and valued aspect of fisheries management. There should be increased dependence on their advice. Recreational, native and commercial fishermen want more consultation; they want the minister's ear, so to speak. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans should periodically review consultative bodies to ensure that all groups are equitably represented. I think the minister has shown over the past year or so that he is willing to use his restructuring committee and advisory committees to glean knowledge that will enhance the management of the stocks. However, it is worth while to keep reminding the government that this should continue.

Introduced this year was a new structure for Pacific fisheries consultation to replace the patchwork of advisory groups which had developed over time as ad hoc responses. This is a step in the right direction.

However, the committee was puzzled to find no long-term plans or strategies to guide government and the fishing industry in the region. For example, government and industry will need to wrestle with the issue of the present overcapitalization of the fishing fleet if the industry is to become more economical and the seasonal nature of its marketing patterns is to be evened out. "Too many boats chasing too few fish," is a cliché often heard to describe the fishing activity out there.

With respect to fish allocation, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has the authority to allocate the resource among competing users. It controls harvests in the interest of resource conservation and of maintaining the economic and social benefits of the fisheries. Salmon allocation between commercial, sport and native fishermen is particularly contentious.

The report calls for a comprehensive study of the per capita economic returns generated by the various commercial gear types in order to aid policymakers in deciding who ought to get what, when, where, how and why. More information is also needed to determine the relative economic and social importance of the sport and commercial fisheries.

The importance of sport fishing was brought to our attention most strongly, and the matter of recreational or sport fishing, which focuses on chinook and coho salmon in the Pacific region, deserves special mention. Often emphasized during the committee's hearings was this sector's contribution to the region's economy and quality of life. The report agrees with the government's position that sport fishing is a qualified user of the resource. In an industry which is now contributing $4.7 billion on a national basis, $402 million is contributed by the west coast.

More important, fish marketing should not just entail a conventional commercial orientation to the resource; it should include recreational fishing which can be developed and marketed as a "product" much like tourism. Government should endeavour to improve promotion of this activity. Again, the minister is paying attention to that.

Honourable senators, the native fishery is very important. Fish is not only important to the deep social and cultural roots of the people, it also constitutes an important food source. In recent years natives have demanded more fish as a means of redressing historical wrongs and promoting economic self-sufficiency in their communities. The issue of native fishing rights has many different dimensions, for example, land claims, some of which are before the courts. The federal government should move to clarify the rights of native people to participate in and manage the fisheries in the region.

Aquaculture, as everyone must be aware, is shaking the fishing industry around the world. When we were on the west coast there was an explosion of applications, and things seemed to be running out of control. Many factors have spurred on the growth of aquaculture, such as the dwindling stocks of some ocean fisheries, the effects of pollution on natural habitats, technological advances in fish nutrition, disease control and genetics, as well as the steady rise in demand for fish products, along with corresponding price increases.

Aquaculture is also emerging as a potent factor in expanding the resource base on the west coast. Although it is based primarily on Pacific oyster and chinook and coho salmon, experimental operations are being undertaken on other species as well. The activity is bringing in new opportunities and challenges for entrepreneurs and government alike. In the future, honourable senators, government will have to consider the impacts of both aquaculture and recreational fishing.

Backed by a considerable amount of capital funding, salmon farming in particular has entered a period of rapid and dramatic growth in B.C. Many see this as a means of creating new jobs and revitalizing local economies. But however great the good effect of fish farming could be on the west coast, a number of concerns are being raised about its possible adverse effects on such things as the current uses of the shoreline, tourism, recreational and commercial fishing, and on the health of wild stocks of salmon and other marine life.

The report proposes that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans undertake an assessment of the effects of aquaculture operations on the environment. Government must also develop a clear policy toward aquaculture based on careful planning, regulation, and public and industry consultation. Jurisdiction on regulatory frameworks should be clarified. As a matter of fact, when we were there, the explosion of applications to start farms was so great that they had to put a moratorium on the issuing of licences in order to make some sense out of regulating and managing the industry. One of the applicants brought us a map to show that explosion in real terms. He blotted out a whole section of B.C. which was directed towards aquaculture.

With respect to farmed salmon, competitively priced fish such as Norwegian farmed Atlantic salmon are already making impressive inroads into North American fresh fish markets. Government support in the form of cost-shared market studies should be provided in the initial stages of the Canadian industry's development, and, as well, government should encourage the processing and marketing of B.C. farmed salmon to be complementary to that of the conventional fishery.

With regard to markets and competitors, markets for seafood have never been so good. However, they are characterized by supply shortages, unprecedented demand, and high prices. This high trend should continue as seafood's nutritious and healthful qualities become better known. Moreover, through more efficient handling and transportation, fish can now be delivered to markets more quickly and in better condition.

I might say, honourable senators, that at the moment there is not much of a disposition on the west coast for marketing boards or other potential forms of direct government involvement in marketing. Issues relating to supplies, rather than marketing or selling, are the industry's main concern. It must not, however, be blinded by bright markets. Historically, the fishing industry in Canada is vulnerable to market fluctuations. High prices could also weaken consumer demand, given that fish and seafood are often in direct competition with other equivalent or substitutable foods.

The west coast industry, which sells most of its salmon in canned and frozen form to export markets with high per capita incomes, ranked fourth among the world's largest salmon-producing countries in 1985. West coast producers are not generally regarded as being a force in setting world market prices.

Salmon production is also expected to increase in a number of countries, which should bring marketing and competition very much to the fore.

An important competitor, as everyone knows, is Norway, which was the first country to export significant numbers of farmed Atlantic salmon, and is currently a leading producer, exporter and master marketer in fresh fish markets.

The State of Alaska is another. The members of the committee visited Alaska and many aspects of their fishery were brought to bear, which we could learn from. Its production of wild Pacific salmon rose from approximately 44 million pieces of fish—they count their fish by pieces and not by pounds—in 1976 to nearly 147 million pieces in 1985. Cited as a major reason for this phenomenon was the supplemented production from state hatcheries and private non-profit hatcheries practising salmon ranching, a technique which promotes the return of adult salmon, like that of wild stocks, after hatchery releases of fry.

The domestic market is very important and brought some revelations which surprised us. Perhaps the most important finding is that Canadian imports of fish and shellfish have grown substantially in recent years. An alarming 82 per cent of fishery products now consumed by Canadians are imported. About 60 per cent of these imports, worth some $616 million in 1986, came from the United States. This should be of concern since some of these imports are undoubtedly of Canadian origin. It seems that Canadian producers, especially those on the east coast, find it more profitable or convenient to deal with large buyers in the United States, leaving Canadian fish wholesalers and retailers to obtain their supplies from American sources. The committee intends to pursue this issue in more depth when it examines fish marketing on the east coast early next year.

The committee heard from many people from supermarket chains and brokers in Canada. We asked them the question, "Where are you getting your supply of fish?" We thought they would say Newfoundland or Nova Scotia. The answer was, "From the United States. We are getting 60 per cent of our supplies from the U.S. and other countries".

Senator Frith: How much of that was Canadian fish?

Senator Marshall: A lot of it is Canadian fish. Canada has to bring in large shrimp and other exotic species, but it has never been determined how much is Canadian fish. There must be quite a lot of fish that is going into the United States raw and being processed. When you take into account the U.S. exchange rate, the processing cost, and then the sale back to Canada, the Canadian consumer is suffering.

Senator Doody: Free trade will remedy that.

Senator Marshall: While relatively little is known about market demand in Canada—its size, nature and potential—there are undoubtedly opportunities yet to be exploited domestically, which should be of interest to processors on the west coast. Our research people are continuing to monitor that market demand, and from the results of that monitoring for the first three months of this year it appears that by the end of the year domestic sales of fish will be something of the order of $750 million. Deeper market penetration in Canada could be a strong ballast against protectionist measures such as exchange rates, tariffs and import quotas when we compete in foreign markets. If we are going to look forward to that happening, then it is natural that we should be developing our domestic market. In fact, substituting domestic products for imports should be a major objective not only for west coast producers but for the entire Canadian industry.

Improvements in packing, merchandising, new promotions, innovative fish displays, especially displays for fresh fish in the retailing chains, will likely continue in Canada. But despite these developments, it is generally believed that our domestic market is underdeveloped. Witnesses from the trade sector stated that an unfamiliarity with seafood seems to be a key reason why Canadians are not eating more fish.

With regard to promotions, while generic advertising is now managed by the private sector, the federal government still assists with funding on a shared-cost basis. Contributions of $275,000 were made in 1986-87 to the Fisheries Council of B.C., representing nine west coast processors. The government should in the future enlist the wider support of the fishing industry in funding generic promotions both in domestic and foreign markets.

As you are aware, fish teem with nutrients that keep us healthy. Researchers are discovering even more benefits from eating fish than had previously been suspected. While important, the health angle in promotion is not enough.

Consumers are increasingly demanding higher-quality products. The industry should seek further ways to improve fishing methods, fishing techniques, processing and marketing in order to maintain the region's reputation for producing top quality seafood. An emphasis on quality is a good way to increase the socio-economic returns of the resource. We point out the danger of complacency because everyone is buying our fish. It is easy to sell, and there may be some complacency in quality-grading at the docks and at the plants.

With regard to unharvested species, future promotions should also include new species and new product forms.

In the United States the inevitable consequence of supply shortages and strong consumer demands has been the introduction of previously unknown, sometimes exotic-sounding, species of fish from around the world. It may be said that following the extension of Canada's fisheries jurisdiction to 200 miles, the west coast fishery has yet to exploit the resource fully. It has an abundance of opportunities to develop commercially new species of groundfish and shellfish which are currently underharvested. More effort must be directed towards expanding the variety of cultured species as well, which is important, and was brought out by Senator Le Moyne, not only to meet market demand but also to generate more jobs in the region.

I might add that surimi, a fish paste used to make simulated crab legs and other seafood substitutes, could be manufactured from non-traditional, unutilized or underutilized species of fish. That is taking place now throughout Canada. It is now in the markets and is being purchased at an increasing level.

With regard to new product development, an important trend in North American seafood markets has been to move toward value addition. When a product is highly processed, its marketability increases and the pricing can be administered more flexibly. It is hoped that market demand will further encourage fish harvesting and processing where they were discontinued on the west coast following poor industry returns in the early 1980s. It is also hoped that the range of product forms will be expanded.

Pacific herring is fished mainly for its roe, which is destined almost exclusively for the Japanese market. Not only should new markets for this product be found, more effort should be exerted to find uses for the fish carcasses, which might have some nutritional residual value. To explain that further, when they sell the roe, they throw away the rest of the herring. Senator Petten has pressed the point time and time again that we should use technology to develop the taste so that it can be used as food, or consider using the product in other ways. When a fish is cut, only one third is saleable. More stress should be placed on developing methods to utilize the carcass of the fish, and researchers on the west coast are doing some valuable work in that regard.

● (1540)

Being very dependent on exports, the west coast's prospects perhaps rest on too narrow a base. New markets should be aggressively pursued. The more market intelligence undertaken, with the assistance of the Department of External Affairs, and the more promotion and market development, the more positive will be the future of this industry.

With respect to the issue of trade protectionism, it occurs in current export markets and it assumes many forms. The federal government should move to improve the trading conditions for the regions' fishery products in such important markets as Europe, Japan and the United States. It should, however, continue to pursue its policy of separating tariff issues from issues concerning allocations of fish to foreign countries.

Finally, honourable senators, allow me to comment on the controversy surrounding a recent preliminary ruling by a panel of the Geneva-based General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Canada's bilateral fisheries relationship with the United States was the subject of much discussion during the committee's hearings on the west coast. In the spring of 1986 American fish processors filed a trade complaint against Canada in the form of a petition under the provisions of section 301 of the United States Trade Act. That ruling was just recently released, but we heard about that last year while we were holding meetings on the west coast.

It is alleged that Canadian regulations which prevent B.C. fishermen from selling unprocessed salmon and herring amounts to unfair practices in trade. Canada's rationale for having export restrictions on unprocessed salmon and herring is to recover some of the costs incurred by Canada in managing these stocks and their habitats. Economists refer to this concept as "economic rent." The Americans took the issue to a GATT panel which, in a preliminary ruling dated November 16, 1987—the one I just referred to—decided against the Canadian policy.

The report notes the concerns expressed by west coast fish processors and fishermen—for example, the unions and the Fisheries Council of British Columbia—with respect to possible repercussions and a final ruling against Canada that might have an effect on employment in B.C. According to the Fisheries Council of Canada, the recent GATT decision, if upheld, might adversely affect Atlantic seafood trade flows as well.

The report urges that the federal government defend in bilateral and multilateral forums Canada's right to have its fish resources processed in Canada. The Canadian government should also make clear its position during trade discussions with the United States as these relate to the fisheries.

These are some of the major points put forward, honourable senators, in this interim report to ensure a prosperous fisheries industry on the west coast in the years to come. The time available has been enough for me to merely touch on this. The report is too large to go through it in detail.

Dealing with the salient issues facing the Pacific coast fisheries was a formidable challenge, and many questions remain unanswered. Accordingly, the committee is looking forward to completing its study on the marketing of fish in Canada, and hopes in the near future to visit the east coast and then produce a final report. We hope that the recommendations contained in that final report will help the fishing industry, the government, the consumer and, most importantly, the fishermen.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak at length. I thank Senator Marshall for the interesting and perceptive report he has brought to the chamber this afternoon. As well, I, as a senator from British Columbia, want to commend him for the competent and intelligent leadership he has given to the Fisheries Committee. It was a very useful experience for all of us who served on the committee on the west coast to see the way in which people of varying political persuasions could bring their attention and perceptive abilities to bear on a very real problem. There were members on the committee from the Atlantic provinces and from other provinces across Canada, and they performed a tough job, an arduous job at times. I was caught up in the air in fog and was unable to attend one or two of the meetings, but the members of the committee conscientiously fulfilled their Senate responsibilities. The process very much enhanced the reputation of the Senate on the west coast. I can assure you of that.

I want to give this commitment to members of the committee, and particularly to the chairman, that as we look forward to conducting a review of east coast fish marketing, I hope to play a role, as a west coaster, in helping to solve the problems of the Atlantic provinces.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

TAX REFORM 1987

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Sinclair, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough), for the adoption of the Twentieth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Tax Reform in Canada), tabled in the Senate on 1st December, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Everett.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, in looking over the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on tax reform in Canada I was struck by the fact that this enormous undertaking by the Government of Canada involves, as senators will recall from the books they have received, several volumes and the widest possible change in the methodology and philosophy of taxation in Canada to date, including the 1971 reform.

I have to congratulate the standing committee, because in the interim report the members have dealt with this subject in a comprehensive manner in some 50 pages. I commend an easy reading to honourable senators who wish to understand in a precise and succinct way what tax reform is all about. It is far too broad a subject for me to stand here and go through the entire ambit of reform, but I do want to deal with one or two subjects that I feel are important in the reform package.

As honourable senators know, this package proposes a reduction in the number of personal taxation brackets from ten, I believe now, to three. It also proposes a substantial reduction in personal rates at the federal level and in corporate rates.

This is a two-stage reform; the first stage is dealt with here, but we are promised a second stage in which the manufacturers' sales tax, which now exists in Canada and is somewhat modified by this reform document, will be replaced by a multi-stage sales tax which will be much broader in its application to the Canadian economy and thereby produce a much greater revenue than the present manufacturers' sales tax.

• (1550)

In reducing the number of brackets and rates the government has also done away with most of the deductions that are used to reduce our income from gross income to taxable income so that, in effect, our gross income under the new act will become the taxable income. Some of those deductions, and those that have not been eliminated by this act, have been replaced by tax credits which, incidentally, are largely based on the lowest rate of tax. So that even if a person is in the middle and upper bracket—and, if I recall correctly, the rates vary from 17 per cent in the lower bracket to 26 per cent in the middle bracket and 29 per cent in the upper bracket—the tax credit that is received will be the tax credit that is available to the lowest bracket—that is, at the 17 per cent level. In effect, the government is saying, “We will not give a benefit to higher taxpayers that is any greater than the benefit that exists for lower taxpayers.”

For the most part I think that that is a fair compromise. The rates have gone down; we have stopped the seeking for and the distortion of tax deductions. It is true that many of the tax deductions that have been given in the past have been proposals by a government to cause people and businesses in the economy to do certain things. But that in itself creates a distortion. What is being said here is that the tax regime will attempt to be neutral; the rates will attempt to be low; and we will leave it to the marketplace and to individuals to decide how best to spend their money.

There are, however, a couple of areas that bother me, and which I mentioned when Senator Sinclair presented his report.

First of all, there is the question of charitable deductions. As honourable senators know, at the present time, if an individual makes a donation to a registered charity, that individual is allowed to reduce his taxable income by the amount of the donation.

Now, it is true in Canada—and I think elsewhere also—that a large number of the donations are made by people who are in the higher tax brackets. Under this legislation the donations made by people in whatever tax bracket will only receive the tax credit which is available to those in the lowest tax bracket. So there will be a penalty to a higher tax bracket taxpayer that I believe will reduce the amount of personal charitable giving. I do not think we should be slavishly attached to the concept of tax credits. It seems to me that there is a perfectly good case there to continue the present regime and to say, where someone is making a charitable donation to a registered charitable institution, that a full deduction may be made from income.

Further than that, we have the question of medical expenses. Under the old regime medical expenses paid by a taxpayer above 3 per cent of his or her income were deductible from income and thereby reduced the taxable income. Again, as in the case of charitable donations, above the 3 per cent the tax credit involved is the tax credit that applies to the lowest taxpayer.

I can think of a friend of mine whose wife has multiple sclerosis. He looks after her, with help, in their own home. The first 3 per cent of his income is not a deduction for the purposes of looking after her, but beyond that he does receive a deduction for maintaining her in their home at his cost. What this act does is say to that person, “Even though you cannot afford to keep her at home, you will only get a partial tax credit.” I am informed by this fellow that the difference in his case is about 50 per cent more in his cost. That is a substantial and significant amount. It seems to me again that we do not have to have any slavish attachment to the concept of tax credits where it makes sense to encourage people to look after chronically ill people within their own homes and at their own expense rather than sending them to an institution where the whole cost devolves upon the government.

Another area that I am concerned about is the taxation of capital gains. As honourable senators will recall, up until 1971 capital gains were tax free, because we wanted to encourage people to take risks with their money. Under the 1971 tax reform capital gains were brought into income to the extent of 50 per cent. I remember at that time that there were several people, and in particular I remember Senator Hays' father, who thought that if that kind of taxation was imposed on capital gains we would reduce substantially risk-taking in Canada. I agreed with his position, but I think we were quite wrong; I do not think that occurred. In this paper we are talking about increasing the inclusion rate for the first couple of years to 66 2/3 per cent, and then after that it will go to 75 per cent. That 66 2/3 per cent, as the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee says, is a fair compromise between the lowering of the tax rate and the increasing of the gain. But as this paper points out, it is the judgment of the committee that to go beyond that to 75 per cent will seriously interfere with risk-taking in Canada.

Prior to the 1971 reform, we had what was called the Carter commission. The theory of their report on taxation was "a buck is a buck is a buck." They were saying that no matter how someone derived their income, that income should be taxed at the same rate and should be included whether it was employment income, dividend income or risk income. I think that suggestion was probably not acceptable then, and that it is no more acceptable today.

● (1600)

Again, on the questions of dividends, in the past we have attempted in the Income Tax Act to integrate corporate taxation with individual taxation if an individual receives dividends. In other words, we have tried to avoid the concept of double taxation. If I understand the process correctly, it has been that where a corporation is paying the small business tax, it can pay the tax, flow the money out to shareholders, and the result would be one single tax.

It was accepted that corporations that were paying the higher corporate rate would have some sort of double taxation penalty, that is, that the corporation would pay a rate, there would be a deduction for the dividend, but the two combined would be higher than the single rate paid by the corporation. That was acceptable.

Originally, by virtue of grossing up and applying the tax dividend credit, one arrived at a situation where there was integration, that is, no double taxation if the corporation were paying a tax rate of 33 1/3 per cent. In 1987, I believe, that was reduced so that there was double taxation where corporate rates were above 25 per cent. Under this paper the double taxation will take place at 20 per cent.

What is the effect of increasing the capital gains rate and increasing or decreasing the amount of integration of corporate tax and dividend tax? I believe that taxation goes a long way towards a country's efficiency. People invest on the basis of the kind of tax they are going to pay, and if you get a very expensive tax regime and one that penalizes people, then I think you pay a price for it in the long-range efficiency of your economy.

In our study of the Canadian economy by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance in 1971, the report which we entitled "Growth, Employment and Price Stability", we recognized that the main levers of economic policy were monetary policy, fiscal policy and exchange rate policy. But we also recognized that the long-term viability of the economy rested very much on tax efficiency and on a tax regime that encouraged people to invest and to take risks. I am somewhat concerned that the thrust of this act, especially in those two areas of capital gains and dividend taxation, will have a restrictive effect on our investment and, over a period, on our economy.

There are one or two other points I would like to make quite quickly. First, in reforming the Income Tax Act there had been a hope that we would achieve some sort of simplicity in our taxation legislation, and I think this report points out graphically that, if anything, this new act is going to be more difficult to deal with and more difficult to administer than the former act.

Second, there is one particular provision proposed, and that is an anti-avoidance provision which, if I understand it correctly, is a global provision giving Revenue Canada the right to disallow any transaction if it feels that its purpose is to avoid tax. Now, as I understood tax law, the taxpayer was allowed to minimize the amount of tax that he or she paid. If I understand the original common law on tax, it was that in order for a subject to be taxed, the transaction had to come clearly within the four corners of the act. There could be no implication of taxation unless the act was clear on the subject. There has always been a preclusion in the tax act against evasion of tax, but the taxpayer has been welcome to attempt to minimize the tax and to avoid tax as much as possible so long as he does not evade it. That comes from the common law concept that taxation was an interference with the rights of property of people.

That has been eroded over a period of time, but to go this far, to put into operation a global and general provision that says "anything that Revenue Canada feels is tantamount to avoidance can be disallowed" is really not good law and should be removed. If I recall correctly, Mr. Walter Gordon, when he was Minister of Finance, in I believe, the 1963 budget, brought in a similar provision that eventually was taken out by the same government that put it in.

People should have some sort of certainty about what kind of tax regimen they face, and they should not be put in a position where they either have to get a ruling from Revenue Canada on every transaction or they have to gamble that the transaction will be disallowed without reason and without appeal, as I understand it, to any court.

Honourable senators, I have really only talked about very little in both the reform package and this very succinct report. Once again I want to congratulate the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and most especially its chairman, on a superb report that I think anyone could read and, as I say, in some 50 pages have a very good understanding of what tax reform is about and what its effect is likely to be.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

● (1610)

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE AND MOTION TO REFER MOTION TO COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment,

And on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.:

That this motion be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology with instructions to review the following matters and to report thereon to the Senate:

- (a) To establish the general program called for in the terms of reference of the special committee.
- (b) In relation to this program, to provide an opinion on the relative ability to implement this program compared to that of a Royal Commission.
- (c) To provide an estimate of the costs and the duration of the committee's study.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the wording of the motion in full appears at page iii of our Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate. It deals with the establishment of a committee to examine Canada's health care system and to report upon the role that preventive medicine and other preventive measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians, and to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever-increasing costs of health care.

The motion in amendment suggests that this motion be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, with instructions to establish the general program called for in the terms of reference and, in relation to this program, to provide an opinion on the relative ability to implement this program compared to that of a royal commission. Further, the motion in amendment suggests that an estimate of the costs and duration of the committee's study be provided. The motion in amendment would involve a reference of the motion itself to a committee. I understand, however, that Senator Argue, the sponsor of the motion, and Senator Flynn, the mover of the motion in amendment, have discussed this matter.

I suppose that Senator Argue will tell us, if I agree to yield to him, as I do, the state of those negotiations, if I can call them that.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not want to see this debate completed if we can avoid that. Senator Flynn mentioned to me as he was leaving that if the matter arose I should adjourn the debate for him.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, that was not my understanding of my conversation with Senator Flynn yesterday. This motion has been on the order paper for a long time—it is soon to have its six-month anniversary. There is a good deal of interest in having it moved forward.

I discussed with Senator Flynn yesterday his motion in amendment. I said to him that I felt that there was no need to have this motion referred to another committee for assessment and report. As to the membership of this committee, there is a good deal of interest in it on this side of the chamber. Some 14 senators have indicated their interest in serving on the committee. While Senator David raised some questions, I felt that the committee itself, when established, could deal with the scope of the inquiry, with the hiring of staff, and with any money that would be spent. Of course the matter of the budget would have to be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and would have to be approved by the Senate.

In our discussion Senator Flynn said to me that he was not going to make a big issue out of it, and that he would ask that I make a brief explanation of my position. He said that it was not his intention to call for a vote. I think that we have had a good deal of discussion on this matter. I would envision the committee's having a very broad inquiry, initially, receiving evidence from a wide range of groups, after which the committee would have to decide where it might concentrate its study.

This field is not brand new. It is a field on which there has already been a great deal of consideration. One commission was set up recently in Ontario, chaired by Judge Thompson, to report on environmental hypersensitive disorders. Another commission was recently set up by the Government of Ontario looking into the whole health care question and making what I think are some pertinent recommendations. An excellent study was made on preventive care by Dr. Ray Jackson and was published as a report of the Science Council of Canada. All of this material is available. I think it can and should be examined. In my view, this would go a considerable distance towards facilitating the study and enabling the committee to conduct its affairs in an expeditious manner.

If the motion goes forward, as I hope it will, and if I should happen to be the chairman of that committee, its operation will be in the hands of the committee members. The chairman will not dominate the committee.

Honourable senators, as I see it, this study would be of great importance to Canada. It can be broad; it does not have to take an interminable length of time; it certainly does not require the sort of large research staff that was referred to by Senator David when he spoke of a commission on health established by the Government of Quebec.

For all of those reasons, honourable senators, I hope that we can bring this question to a conclusion and take a decision today.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have no objection to that. It is just that I am in a rather awkward position. If Senator Argue can assure me that he and Senator Flynn have an arrangement that is mutually satisfactory, obviously I will do nothing to delay the matter.

Senator Argue: I believe that I can give that assurance. Certainly Senator Flynn and I had a talk. I explained to him my position, as I have explained it to the Senate today, and he shrugged his shoulders, as he sometimes does. Even when he moved his motion in the Senate he said that he could live with whatever decision was taken, or words to that effect. He also said that it was not his intention to call a vote.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the shrug is rather difficult for me to interpret as to whether he meant yes or no.

Senator Argue: I would say that he said yes to the procedure's going forward today.

Senator Doody: Would it be possible to adjourn this matter until Tuesday so that I have a chance to speak to Senator Flynn about it?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am usually an agreeable person, but we are going to adjourn next week. I think decisions should be made, and that this committee should be given a chance to organize, although it cannot hold hearings. I think we have been at this long enough. I ask that a decision be taken now.

[Senator Argue.]

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, considering our small numbers right now, is it opportune to take such a decision today? I do not think it is worth it inasmuch as in this project I am afraid that the very principle of science will be discussed and put into question. I do not agree with that at all. I am sympathetic to the intentions of Senator Argue, but I do not agree with that. As a symbolic member of the rationalist union, I am afraid that I would vote against this motion.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in fairness to Senator Argue, this matter has been on the order paper for a long time. In addition to the problem Senator Le Moyne mentioned regarding the number of senators here, I think the difficulty is that if we force a vote now, we will be forcing a vote refusing an adjournment, which is something we do not very often do. I understand that Senator Flynn, the mover of the motion in amendment, will be here next week, and we do have the three days in which to deal with the matter. I think, however, that we should understand that Senator Argue really would like the matter settled one way or the other before the Christmas break.

Senator Doody: That is perfectly acceptable.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am not happy with that decision. I think I have been patient. This matter has been on the order paper for six months, and I think it is time we made a decision on it. But I guess I am an agreeable guy, and I guess I am not bloodthirsty enough, or whatever the word would be, to push it. I will not call for a vote, although I think I should; but I hope that the decision can be made next Tuesday. Will we try to agree to that?

• (1620)

Senator Doody: It is already agreed.

Senator Argue: Is it already agreed that we have a decision next Tuesday?

Senator Doody: It has already been agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Argue was not listening when I said that I believe it is reasonable, in view of the length of time that this item has been on the order paper, for him to give notice now, and for it to be understood that he would like the motion dealt with before the Christmas break, so that if the motion passes the organization aspect of the committee can take place during that period. He would like to know how the matter stands before the Christmas break. I think that is a reasonable position on his part.

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

MOTION FOR PROPOSED STANDING COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Stanley Haidasz, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, December 9, 1987, moved:

That rule 67(1) of the Rules of the Senate be amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (o) the following new paragraph (p):

(p) The Standing Senate Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Haidasz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:

That rule 67(1) of the Rules of the Senate be amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (o) the following new paragraph (p):

(p) The Standing Senate Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. William J. Petten: On a point of order, Your Honour, I did not second the motion.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I mentioned Senator Petten as seconder of the motion. Would somebody on this side of the house second the motion? Would somebody on the right second the motion? Honourable senators, it is my information that if there is no seconder the matter will have to be dropped.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I apologize, but I did not hear the motion in its entirety. Could it be read again?

[Translation]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Haidasz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin? No?

[English]

Senator Corbin: Your Honour, I want to hear the motion before I am a party to anything.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker:

That rule 67(1) of the Rules of the Senate be amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (o) the following new paragraph (p):

(p) The Standing Senate Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to find a seconder?

[English]

Hon. Jean Le Moyné: Another time. I do not think that we will go with this decision at the last moment when we have only 16 or 17 senators here. I do not agree with that. This house has to be serious. It's not. It's a farce, like that.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I will read in both languages rule 24 of Rules of the Senate of Canada—it appears on page 9—as follows:

A motion made in the Senate, but not seconded, shall not be debated or put from the Chair.

[Translation]

Une motion proposée au Sénat ne peut être débattue ou mise aux voix que si elle a été appuyée.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Your Honour, as I understand it, the motion cannot be put. It has not been defeated. It can be reput with a seconder, but it must not be put without a seconder. Therefore, Your Honour should not put the motion. Because notice was given, as I understand it, the motion still stands on the order paper under "Motions", but it cannot be put until it has a seconder.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, may I be allowed to speak briefly on this point of order, this dilemma? I believe that Parliament is the place for debate. I believe that the Senate is the place for debate. I would be prepared, having heard the motion and recalling that the matter had been explained to me at a certain time in certain quarters—and not necessarily agreeing with the necessity or the opportunity of setting up this particular committee, because I feel that there is already a committee which is capable of dealing with such issues—and because I believe strongly in freedom of speech, I would not want to deny to a colleague an opportunity to put a matter before the house. Therefore, I will second the motion.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Haidasz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin:

That rule 67(1) of the Rules of the Senate be amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (o) the following new paragraph (p):

(p) The Standing Senate Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, in thanking Senator Corbin for seconding my motion I would like to state that today I am particularly pleased to move again a motion of which I gave notice yesterday, that a standing Senate committee be formed to inquire into any matter relating to human rights and fundamental freedoms.

As you know, today we celebrate Human Rights Day commemorating the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on December 10, 1948, by the United Nations General Assembly. Following the World War II holocaust, which consisted of the genocide of millions of Jews, Poles and others by Hitler's Nazi murderers and their collaborators, this declaration outlined a comprehensive framework of rights and freedoms for all people. Human rights were further elaborated on in the Helsinki Final Act of 1975.

● (1630)

Today's commemoration coincides with important discussions on human rights by President Reagan and Secretary-General Gorbachev at their summit meeting in Washington, where they signed the historic treaty reducing their intermediate nuclear arms, thereby diminishing the spectre of nuclear war, in a major effort to preserve peace. The inevitable link which exists between human rights and peace is highlighted in the first paragraph of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that the recognition of the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family are the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.

In its Constitution, and in its accession to international conventions, Canada has committed itself to the adherence to and protection of human rights domestically and internationally. Therefore, both its domestic and foreign policy should at all times be guided by these principles and commitments. On this day, as we commemorate the proclamation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, I think it is fitting that we celebrate the many progressive actions that Canadians and their governments have taken over the years to respect and enhance human rights at home and abroad.

Unfortunately, even today many human rights are still violated and fundamental freedoms repressed. An important fundamental human right is the freedom to worship according to the dictates of one's own religion. In many countries freedom of religion is denied or repressed. Earlier this year Canadians of Lithuanian origin, in celebrating the 600th anniversary of the Christianization of the Lithuanian nation, reminded us not only of the illegal forced occupation of Lithuania but also of the Russification of Lithuanians and the persecution of worshippers, priests, and in particular the forbidding of religious education in that country. They appealed to us and to other people of the free world to pray for the persecuted church and to leave no stone unturned in publicizing the plight of their brothers and sisters in Soviet-occupied Lithuania. In saluting Canadians of Lithuanian origin on this historic anniversary, I hope that their appeal will not fall on deaf ears, but that Canadians, led by their parliamentarians and their government, will give this appeal their concrete support.

Honourable senators, at this point I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Haidasz, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 15, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 15, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

[Translation]

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1987-88

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-95, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

[English]

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-88, to amend the Judges Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-87, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-97, to amend the Canada Labour Code.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

[Translation]

HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING CO., LIMITED

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-98, an Act to amend an Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

[English]

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-100, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, to repeal the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act and to amend another Act in relation thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

FINAL TEXT AND TARIFF APPENDICES—REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

On the tabling of documents:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, one of the documents tabled by the Deputy Leader of the Government was the text and appendices to the agreement with the United States of America on the subject of trade and tariffs. I have been unable to lay my hands on the wording of the motion that referred this subject matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, so I do not know whether this will automatically be referred to that committee. We should be assured that it will be referred to the committee.

If a motion is necessary, I will move that motion tomorrow, and, if not, let the record show that at least we are all agreed that the text and appendices should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the subject matter is certainly before the committee already, and we will take every step necessary to ensure that the texts and appendices are also before the committee.

● (1410)

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED, PRINTED AS APPENDIX AND ADOPTED

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fifteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting Bill C-84, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 2402.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Murray: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Neiman: I thank honourable senators for their permission to allow me to comment on the report. Senators will notice from the copies of the report which are now being distributed that it is of considerable length. I realize that there is a long agenda this afternoon, and I shall try to make my comments as succinct as possible.

The members of the committee feel that they have been involved in a very important process in examining Bill C-84. I would first like to pay tribute to the members of the committee who worked so long and so assiduously in helping to prepare and agree upon the report that is before us. We had our last meeting with the Minister of Employment and Immigration just a week ago today. At that time he asked us to proceed as quickly as possible to make our report. I can assure honourable senators that after our final meeting last Thursday, the staff of the committee and the Senate staff worked all weekend long. I also want to pay a special tribute to them. They worked several hundred hours to prepare this report.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Neiman: Senators will see that the report is divided into two sections, the first containing the actual amendments that we are proposing, with explanatory notes in the margin. There are some 13 amendments in all, several of which have several subsections. I would like to point out that the amendments we are proposing fall into broad categories, but I think the majority of them have to do with what we in the committee perceived, as did our witnesses, to be violations or potential violations of the Charter of Rights and of our Constitution. There are also objections to certain parts of the bill which apparently, in the view of many people and, I believe, in the view of the members of our committee, violate the spirit of our commitments to international conventions regarding human rights and the protection of refugees.

Part II contains the observations of the committee. I will try to go through the various sections very briefly. Senators will see that this begins at page 7 of the report with the background to the bill, and sets out the number of witnesses from various organizations and agencies, as well as individuals, who appeared before the committee. I may say that we did not have the opportunity to hear more than a quarter of those who asked to appear before our committee, but we are satisfied that we had a fair representation of opinion from all across Canada.

Senators will note that because of the fact that the amendments proposed by the committee involve constitutional questions, the committee was pleased to have the support of the Supreme Court of Canada in what the committee was attempting to do. The Supreme Court pointed out that the Senate had a role and a right to make amendments involving constitutional matters which it thought appropriate. The committee felt, therefore, that it was not only empowered but obliged to suggest the amendments it has put forward.

Senators will note in the committee report that a couple of judicial decisions have commented on the duty of legislatures in examining legislation. The first was in the Ontario Court of Appeal, where it was stated that:

The judiciary is not the sole guardian of the constitutional rights of Canadians. Parliament and the provincial Legislatures are equally responsible to ensure that the rights conferred by the Charter are upheld.

Mr. Justice Dickson, as he then was, in another case heard in the Supreme Court of Canada, made the following comment:

It is the Legislature's responsibility to enact legislation that embodies appropriate safeguards to comply with the Constitution's requirements. It should not fall to the courts to fill in the details that will render legislative lacunae constitutional.

Based on those views put forward by the Supreme Court of Canada, the committee accepted its responsibility in that area. It heard and agreed that there has been abuse of our immigration laws and that the abuse must stop. However, I believe that most of the committee members came to the conclusion that many of the provisions contained in Bill C-84 went too far. The bill would give significant new powers to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and his officials, and those powers will be discussed as I go through the report.

The first amendment is more of a housekeeping amendment. It simply deals with the term "smuggling," which really pertains to the illegal importation of goods, and the committee has suggested a rewording of that clause.

One of the most important areas is that dealing with security certificates. I will not take the time to go through the history of this matter, but I would ask honourable senators to read the background to the system that is now in place. The Security Intelligence Review Committee was established in 1984, and under this bill it is proposed to change both the procedures and the powers with respect to SIRC. Most of the witnesses who appeared before the committee felt that the changes proposed in the bill were unwise. They felt that SIRC had built up its own specialized expertise in the area of security matters.

However, the government presented its own argument in this area, and the committee felt that it should respect the government's decision that the oversight for security matters in respect of non-permanent residents should be given to the Federal Court.

Bill C-84 contains provisions which the committee felt were most unfortunate and which, in fact, would violate various sections of the Charter. They are listed for you on pages 10 and 11 and following, and I would refer briefly to them. Bill C-84 would provide that the certificate issued by a federal court judge must exclude from the hearing the person concerned when the government presents its case. We had a great deal of comment from legal experts and constitutional experts on this matter. The bill provides no test for exclusion and leaves no discretion to the judge. Exclusion would leave no opportunity for cross-examination, and the subject of the certificate would have less understanding of the case than he or she would need. It was argued—I think persuasively—that to deprive people of the fundamental right to hear the whole case against them is to violate section 7 of the Charter, which states:

● (1420)

Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

On that basis the committee has proposed an amendment to the effect that the right to exclude people from a hearing should reside with the presiding judge, a process which would be comparable to the one followed by SIRC at the present time.

Another provision would make detention mandatory for all nonpermanent residents who would be subject to a security certificate, regardless of whether or not they are actually a danger to public safety and regardless of the sex, age or physical condition of the person. The current detention provisions are not nearly as stringent, and the decisions that are made thereunder are reviewed regularly by an independent adjudicator. Again, it was argued that this proposal violated certain provisions of the Charter. We recognize the government's position on this matter, but we feel that these provisions should be modified. The committee has proposed, therefore, that the judge of a federal court, who, unlike an adjudicator, is not only permitted but required to hear all the evidence, should perform the detention review at an early point in the hearing. Because the hearing must commence within seven days, it will mean that the period of mandatory arbitrary detention will be greatly diminished.

The third point is one that we brought to the attention of the minister and the government. It concerns the issuance of a security certificate by a judge. It is based on whether the minister and the Solicitor General's decision to sign and file a certificate was reasonable on the basis of the information available to them. This means that the judge has no discretion to alter that certificate. When we pointed the matter out to the departmental officials, they agreed that it was probably an oversight on their part. I do not think there will be any objection to the amendment the committee proposed to cover that situation.

The next general section covers provisions regarding the precluding from the refugee system of people found to be security risks. Bill C-84 would provide that people who are security risks and who have been certified to be a danger to the public in Canada on criminal or war crimes grounds will not be permitted to make a refugee claim. At the present time such people are permitted to make a claim, and, if their claim is successful, then, and only then, is the decision made as to deportation.

However, our international commitments do not require that we give protection to all people who are found to be refugees. We have signed the Convention relating to the status of refugees in which Article XXXII provides that we may deport refugees on grounds of national security or public order. We had a number of witnesses who argued that the proposed provisions were far too harsh and would be in contravention of our obligations under the Convention. We felt that there were constitutionally valid grounds to believe that the forced removal of persons to a country where their persecution would be feared was a violation of section 12 of the Charter.

On those grounds, we felt that we would be justified in suggesting changes to Bill C-84, because, as various witnesses pointed out, to leave it in its present form would lead to some surprising and perhaps unwanted results. The chairman of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee pointed out that the clause as it is presently drafted is very subjective, and the description it contains would include such people as journalists, parliamentarians, social workers and academics. It would cover a number of people today whom we, as Canadians and the government itself, would not want to be included. As the chairman of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee pointed out, it would by definition exclude from Canada such people as Nelson Mandela, who is in prison because he will not renounce the use of force to overthrow a tyrannical government. We are not sure that the government really intended to draw up such a broad provision that would include all of those people.

For those reasons the committee proposed an amendment that people should not be precluded from the refugee determination system for security reasons. People convicted of crimes and people who are war criminals should continue to be excluded. This would be much more in conformity with our present practice.

The next most controversial section has to do with the proposals regarding the turning around at sea of ships that are suspected to be carrying illegal refugees; that is, those who are not in genuine need of aid or protection. We had innumerable representations with regard to this section. We canvassed it very carefully with almost every witness who came before us. We discussed how the procedure would work as far as the minister and the department are concerned, and I believe it is fair to say that we really could not figure out how one could possibly offer the protection under the Charter and under the Convention and still have the authority to turn a ship around at sea.

In the final analysis, we really felt that what the proposed changes to the Immigration Act were attempting to accomplish was to punish those offenders who were illegally aiding and abetting refugees for profit, and that the best way of accomplishing this, and the best type of deterrence, would be to bring the ship ashore, impound the ship, and deal with the captain and anyone else who was found to be an offender. We felt that to try to make a decision at sea to turn a ship around would involve grave dangers not only to the people concerned; it could mean ignoring our obligations under international conventions regarding refugees, some of whom might, in fact, be quite genuine.

Therefore, our proposal is that such ships be brought ashore and that the alleged offenders be dealt with on land. We were reminded of the positive example that Canada set for the rest of the world in 1979 and 1980 when Canada urged the countries of southeast Asia not to turn away boatloads of refugees. I recently visited Thailand with the Interparliamentary Union. That country is still receiving boatloads of refugees on a weekly, if not a daily, basis. The people there listened to the remonstrances of Canada and other concerned countries, and they have ceased that kind of practice. From a personal point of view, I would very much deplore Canada being party to any such similar action.

Bill C-84 proposes some significant changes with regard to the provisions relating to the aiding and abetting of people who come into Canada and who might not be genuine refugees as defined by the Geneva Convention. We had innumerable representations regarding these proposals, because, in fact, the act would catch, and presumably would have the power to punish, a number of agencies and organizations that are actively helping those they perceive to be refugees in need of protection. The minister and some of his officials argued that there was probably that kind of provision in the present act and it had never been used to punish or prosecute organizations such as church groups that are working in genuine good faith to help refugees. However, they felt that they wanted to add this extra wording for what they considered to be additional protection and as another deterrent. At the same time, they argued that they would not prosecute church organizations or refugee aid groups. The committee felt that if they were not going to do that, there was no point in putting into an act provisions that were not going to be implemented.

The committee has therefore changed slightly the wording of that clause to provide that the sanctions shall be imposed only against anyone who knowingly aids or abets a person to come into Canada in a clandestine manner. The committee agrees that that should be an offence.

The other provision regarding the aiding and abetting section that the committee felt was important was in its amendment number 6, that the law should apply to those who encourage people to come to Canada and make refugee claims, knowing that the individuals in question are spurious refugees. Therefore, the committee is very much in agreement that those two particular types of offences should be contained in the bill and should be implemented.

The clauses of the bill regarding search and seizure and forfeiture in certain circumstances received a great deal of attention from the witnesses, particularly those in the legal field. It was pointed out there again that some of those clauses obviously contravene provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We have to pay special tribute to the committee's legal counsel, because they were able to determine that the provision on which one proposed amendment was based—which the drafters of the bill had taken almost directly from the Customs Act—in fact had been invalidated some time previously by a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. Therefore, the department itself, when this was pointed out, agreed that the appropriate amendment should be made. We felt that, again, many of the provisions in the bill were far too extreme, and we have provided, as honourable senators will see on going through the report, ample arguments regarding the perceived violations of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. On that basis, the committee proposes three amendments to that particular area of the bill. The committee believes that there should not be warrantless searches, or that they should only be permitted when the necessary delay would result in danger to human life and safety.

There is a provision in the bill to the effect that peace officers or immigration officers could break into homes and wreck the premises in their search for illegal refugees. Again, that provision goes much further than any similar provision in the Criminal Code of Canada or any other act that we are familiar with, so the committee amended that area of the bill to make it conform to searches under the Narcotic Control Act or the Criminal Code of Canada.

Throughout the committee's study of this bill the members of the committee felt the problems of trying to deal with illegal refugees were certainly not any more difficult or dangerous than dealing with an alleged murderer or someone who violates the Narcotic Control Act. They have tried to make all of the amendments concerning remedies and recourse conform to what they consider are equally serious or even more serious crimes. The amendment therefore proposes that searches of premises, even under warrants, should be carried out by day only, and not by night as was provided for in the bill. That amendment conforms to the provisions of the Customs Act and the Criminal Code of Canada.

The following amendment concerns detention for identification or security purposes. As the law now stands, it provides that people may be detained if they pose a danger to the public or likely would not appear for future immigration hearings. The claimants can be detained under this provision if their identity is unknown, but the detention order must be reviewed every 48 hours. Bill C-84 goes much further than that in providing for detention for up to 28 days. Many legal experts argued that this would not only violate the Charter but it would not really address the problem of containing a perceived security threat, as some of the officials argued. They pointed out again that the clause appeared to violate sections 7, 9 and 10 of the Charter, and perhaps section 1 as well. Therefore, we have proposed to limit by amendment the powers under this particular section. The committee agreed that any provision that would allow for pre-trial detention should not be used simply for deterrent purposes.

● (1440)

Rabbi Plaut, who appeared before our committee, and who had written a special study for the government on the determination and processing of refugees, deplored this section. He said that it endangered bona fide refugees who may not have access to proper documentation, or who could only secure it at great peril. Therefore he asked, as did many other people, that this section be deleted. We have tried to amend it to reach a compromise between what the government proposed, on the one hand, and what was suggested by many of our witnesses who wanted it removed, on the other hand.

Honourable senators, the final section deals with testimony that we heard from transportation companies. They had serious concerns about some of the proposals in the bill. We have not made any amendments in those sections, but we recommend that the department and the minister seriously consider trying to harmonize some of these sections in this bill with what they have proposed in Bill C-55, another bill containing amendments to the Immigration Act, which we will have to deal with shortly.

The transportation companies pointed out that they are financially responsible for holding on to illegal immigrants who arrive in this country—something I had not realized—and then taking them back. With the other provisions in the act, it could involve a great additional expense as far as the transportation companies are concerned. We have recommended that a simple amendment could obviate that possibility.

The other area of great concern to the transportation companies is the requirement that they hold on to the passports of perceived immigrants coming to Canada. They pointed out to us that the airlines, in particular, were gravely concerned with this, because a passport is the property of the issuing country and not of the individual. They could not reconcile how they could do this and still avoid possible liability or problems with the issuing countries. As we all realize, some of these airlines travel through several countries before the passengers arrive in Canada, and there is a possibility for passports to be lost or mislaid at any point and at any stop along the way. The airlines could be held responsible for this—something that they do not think they should be required to be responsible for. Furthermore, there is the question of security. If they lift the passports of passengers on a plane, for example, these are often used to identify people in hijack cases. They felt that they should not be responsible for this type of action and have to account for anything that might happen to their passengers as a result of having to hold their passports or having to relinquish them to a hijacker.

Basically, that is the broad scope of the proposed amendments which you have before you. The minister, when he appeared before us last Tuesday, pointed out that he was deeply concerned that in the absence of a well managed immigration program, public support would be seriously jeopardized. He went on to say:

The risk of erosion of public support for immigrants and refugees is too serious to ignore.

Honourable senators, the committee supports the minister in those views. It believes sincerely that the adoption of the amendments it has proposed will ensure a better managed immigration system and far greater support of the initiatives of the government in Bill C-84, since, as the minister also stated, it is "committed to continuing to ensure that Canada remains open to immigrants and refugees."

I move that the report be adopted.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, at the outset of my comments I would like to commend the committee chairman, Senator Neiman, the deputy chairman, Senator Nurgitz, and all members of the committee and the staff for working so constructively and assiduously in a bipartisan effort to harmonize Bill C-84 with our existing Constitution and international Conventions.

Honourable senators, the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee report on Bill C-84 recommending amendments was passed with the support of senators on the committee. Why, honourable senators, was the report passed without dissent? Minister Bouchard, in his evidence before the Senate committee reporting Bill C-84 on December 8, stated:

Charter compliance was foremost in my mind..I was unequivocally determined to do so within the full application of the Charter. I rejected any suggestion that the Charter should simply not apply to persons who are not Canadian citizens or permanent residents of Canada. Most Canadians do not know that the Charter applies equally to all people regardless of their status in Canada. However, that is now the law of the land and this bill is consistent with the law.

Honourable senators, I believe that there was support for the committee's report and agreement with the minister's statement, save his last phrase, which states that "the bill is consistent with the law." All of the evidence tendered before the committee, except that given by the minister and his officials, demonstrated beyond a peradventure of a doubt that Bill C-84 is flawed, because we were told by all witnesses from all groups and regions across the country that it does not conform with our Charter and our international obligations respecting refugees.

● (1450)

Therefore, honourable senators, Bill C-84 presents the Senate with a profoundly different issue and raises a fundamentally different question, particularly since the passage of the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1982, recently affirmed by the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, which question I trust will be answered in the same generous spirit as the minister's comments before the Senate committee.

The roots of this issue can be traced to England over 760 years ago. The first celebrated fight took place there for the supremacy of the rule of law. You will recall from your constitutional history that King John abused the customary laws of the land. The barons, supported by the people and the church, revolted. Finally, in 1215, King John yielded at Runnymede and signed the Magna Carta, which document was designed to gain the king's promise, the king's covenant, not to abuse customary rights, not to abuse the law of the land.

One provision, one clause, from the Magna Carta catapulted into historic consciousness and was transformed into a lasting symbol of the supremacy of the rule of law. This one provision, this one clause, became the seeds of constitutional government in England and in our country. Let me quote briefly from that clause. The Magna Carta says this:

No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned or disseized or exiled . . . nor will (the King) go upon nor will we send upon him except by the lawful judgment of his peers or the law the land.

The words "the law of the land" planted the powerful idea that the king himself must respect the law. Later King James I tested his supremacy before Sir Edward Coke, the great English judge, who suggested that even the king's judges must follow the law, to which the King exploded, "Then I am to be under the law?" Coke replied, in an exchange that has echoed down through the ages, "The King ought not to be under any man, but under God and the law."

[Senator Grafstein.]

Now, with the passage of our Charter in 1982, the notion of the supremacy of Parliament has given way to the principle of the supremacy of the Constitution, of the Charter, a charter which reflects our fundamental principles of law, which states clearly our fundamental principles of law. To command the allegiance of the minority and the majority in a democratic state, even judges agree that the law binds judges as well as the judged. It is certainly no less a fundamental principle of responsible government that lawmakers have a paramount duty to conform to the Charter, to maintain democratic respect for the rule of law.

Our own courts assume that all law is constitutionally valid, constitutionally correct. The courts put every claimant to the test. Every claimant who contests a law must show and demonstrate that the law is unconstitutional. The courts assume that the law is valid and constitutional. Therefore, the courts expect that legislators will pass laws that are constitutionally valid to support that assumption in the courts.

As to the role of the Senate, surely senators, as parliamentarians, have a duty equal to that of the members of the House of Commons to ensure that all legislation that passes the Senate conforms to the Charter. Otherwise, do we not weaken the rule of law? Otherwise, do we not erode democratic support for Parliament, both the Senate and the House of Commons?

Our own courts, as the committee report so eloquently points out, have made it abundantly clear that parliamentarians must not approve legislation when they are convinced by the evidence before them that the legislation is constitutionally flawed. The Supreme Court of Canada does not believe it has a duty to perfect legislation that is constitutionally flawed. That, they have told us, is the proper role for the legislatures, for Parliament, for the House of Commons, for the Senate.

Accordingly, the report of this committee received approval without dissent. Senators on all sides, I believe, were satisfied, based on evidence which would satisfy any reasonable observer, that Bill C-84 was flawed and that the evidence was balanced, cogent and convincing. It convinced me and, I believe, many of my colleagues that Bill C-84 must be amended in order to conform with both the Charter and the international obligations respecting refugees, which the Government of Canada has previously adopted as the law of our land.

Finally, honourable senators, William Blake, the greatest of English poets, once wrote, "Every human being is holy." So, Canadians have a devout belief in our courts and in the rule of law to protect each individual in Canada. Young Canadians have been taught in our schools to believe that individuals can only be fully protected with justice under the rule of law in a free and democratic state which, itself, is governed by just and valid laws. Canadians are, and want to be, a law-abiding society.

We therefore commend this report to the minister in the honest belief, in the bipartisan belief, that he will affirm the responsibility of responsible government to pass only legislation that is in and of itself lawful and constitutionally valid and to perfect Bill C-84 so that it conforms to our Charter and to our international obligations. Canadians demand no more. Canadians expect no less!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the committee has been most diligent and expeditious in dealing with this bill. It heard some 37 witnesses, received 400 briefs, and held 20 meetings, according to the report of the chairman, Senator Neiman, who quite properly expressed the appreciation of the committee and of the Senate to members of the staff who always bear a disproportionate, it seems, burden for the diligence of honourable senators. I join with her in expressing our appreciation to the staff and, on behalf of the government and of all senators, I express my thanks to her and to the members of the committee for their diligence.

Honourable senators, this is not a unanimous report, and the Senate will not be surprised to hear me say that it is unlikely in the extreme that all of these amendments would be accepted holus-bolus by the government. However, I am not in a position at this moment to say which, if any, of these amendments would be acceptable. I will come to that in a moment.

The difference in perspective that we have in a matter of this kind is illustrated by Senator Neiman's remark about Canada turning boatloads of refugees away from Canada. This bill is not about turning boatloads of refugees away from Canada. This bill is about dealing with bogus refugees who are abusing our system and who are, for the most part, economic migrants who are typically coming to this country from some country in western Europe where they have made arrangements with people who are in the business of transporting illegal immigrants to obtain passage to this country. As I say, they are abusing the system and they are making it extremely difficult for valid refugees and for legitimate immigrants who want to come to this country and who respect the laws and the procedures that we have put in place.

The difficulty is also illustrated by Senator Grafstein's comments about the constitutionality of this measure. He has, I think quite accurately, pointed out that the weight of the evidence from various people who appeared before the committee was that this measure would contravene the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, indeed, that it runs counter to our international obligations. That, indeed, is the weight of the evidence from the witnesses who appeared as opponents of this bill.

• (1500)

This is the kind of bill that brings out opposition from various groups. There is no organized lobby in favour of the bill as there is an organized lobby opposed to it. The government is bringing in this bill because it perceives a serious problem that has to be addressed, and the government believes it has a responsibility to address it. It seems to me that the honourable senator should not brush off quite as casually as he does the considered opinion of the law officers of the Crown, the people in the Department of Justice who advised the government on this matter, their opinion being that this bill does not contravene the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and does not infringe any of our international obligations. However, I will leave that matter.

I do not intend to deal with the bill or with the proposed amendments in any substantive way today. I am not in a position to indicate which of these amendments might be acceptable to the government and which might not. I cannot indicate that today. I observe that my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable Benoit Bouchard, has appeared on two occasions before the committee. At his most recent appearance on December 8 he indicated his willingness to consider amendments that did not negate the principle or frustrate the purpose of the act. It is obvious to me that it is now up to him, in consultation with members of the cabinet, to decide whether and to what extent the amendments proposed by the Senate can be accepted.

Honourable senators, there is some urgency to this bill. It was to deal with this problem that Parliament was recalled during the summer months. Therefore, I am concerned, as a member of the government, that the Senate and Parliament deal with it in the most expeditious way possible.

Therefore, in view of Mr. Bouchard's statements, in view of the openness that he has expressed to consider some amendments, in view of the invitation that he extended to the Senate committee to propose such amendments as would not frustrate the intent or the purpose or the principles of the bill, I believe that the most expeditious way to proceed at this moment would be to get the bill out of the Senate and over to the House of Commons. There, the minister, the government and, indeed, that House can address the Senate amendments in a formal way.

Therefore, while I certainly have reservations about some of the amendments proposed by the committee—reservations which I believe are shared by my colleagues who are supporters of the government—I am prepared to set those aside for the moment, and, without prejudice to any position I may wish to take later as a member of the government on this matter, I propose that we let this bill pass through the Senate as amended. In that way the minister, the government and the House of Commons can address themselves formally to these amendments.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I bring all honourable senators warm Yuletide greetings from Senator Sinclair, who is involuntarily spending the day in the Toronto airport. In his absence, and on his behalf, I have the honour to present the twenty-first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, respecting Bill C-64, to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, without amendment but with observations.

(For text of report, see Appendix "B", p. 2431.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Roblin, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

AGRICULTURE

NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE FINANCIAL SUPPORT PROGRAM FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, December 17, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the need for a comprehensive financial support program for agricultural producers, especially cereal grain producers, to compensate for the drastic lowering of cereal grain market prices.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I was overtaken by events.

Senator Olson: Yes, but the problem with being overtaken by events is that the background information is not available. Therefore, I give notice of this inquiry so that my honourable friend can appear here Thursday with the necessary background information and we can explain it to the producers.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT ON FARM FINANCE EXTENDED

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

That, notwithstanding the order of the Senate adopted on Wednesday, May 6, 1987, the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which was authorized to examine farm finance, be empowered to present its report no later than Thursday, March 31, 1988.

Hon. Senators: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1510)

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, by way of explanation, the motion is put simply because the committee has not had sufficient time to hear all of the witnesses and prepare its report in the time originally envisioned, which would have ended on January 31, 1988.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Efsthios William Barootes, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources have power to sit at four thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wish to raise a question or two with the Leader of the Government concerning the very important announcement that was made earlier today by both the Minister of Agriculture and the Prime Minister. I believe the announcement was made in the name of the Minister of Agriculture, but I understand that the Prime Minister made the announcement at the Outlook Conference that is being held in Ottawa today.

I was under the impression that one could enter the lock-up some time ago and find out about this. Some people did, but I did not. I was under the impression that the details would be available when the Prime Minister began his speech, but I could not find anything. However, I have some photocopies of details that were sent to some members of Parliament, but nothing came to me—and I understand that nothing was sent to any honourable senator.

I believe that to be a legitimate complaint, and I hope sincerely that the Leader of the Government will try to see that we have copies of these things so that we can deal with them as they come up.

I would say also that the payment is not as much as was expected by some people, but I think it is a very significant contribution to the financial support of those who need it most, namely, the cereal grain producers throughout Canada, but particularly those in some parts of western Canada.

I gave notice of an inquiry for Thursday, and I believe that there are some details that the minister can obtain. Whether he assigns that task to Senator Barootes, Senator Balfour or another senator from the grain-growing area, it makes no difference to me, but there are some matters which I think Canadians, particularly the grain producers, should know about.

For example, I would like to know the basis on which the payment will be made. There is a sort of formula, which appears to be very complicated, but which deals with some of the problems that were included in the formula last year, such as the summer fallow portion. That is normal practice in western Canada, but last year anyone who happened to be on the high side of summer fallow in his crop rotation was short-changed that much in the payment. I now understand that that has been corrected or dealt with, but I am not sure that it is fair even now, and I would like the Leader of the Government or someone to come prepared on Thursday to deal with that matter.

In the announcement it was stated that the government is prepared to increase the producer levy rate. But by how much? I have no idea; it doesn't say. I believe it is now between 1.5 per cent and 2 per cent, and it was announced that it is going to be increased upward as much as 5 per cent of gross receipts. If that is true, then that is an enormous amount of money.

The government—and I wish to give it credit—is going to reduce the deficit by writing off $750 million of the deficit in the Western Grains Stabilization Fund this year, and by a similar or another amount next year.

I believe that we have a right, after all these months, to hear the details. I do not wish to be critical, because I believe it to be a good announcement in many respects. Even though it falls a little short of some of the expectations, it is still very welcome and helpful.

The government has also announced an extension of the Farm Fuel Tax Rebate Program. One of the problems that we have always had with that is that it is defined as "off-road" rebate; but in Alberta it is legal to put purple-dyed gas in a farm truck and it is not illegal to drive that truck on the road. Therefore there will be a different interpretation between what the Alberta government does with respect to farm fuel and what the federal government does. Surely they can get together so that by complying with provincial law one is not breaking the federal law.

I do not know of any other way of dealing with these matters other than by raising them now. I am hopeful that one of the government supporters, perhaps Senator Bielish, will be prepared on Thursday to answer my questions. Senator Barootes looks as though he knows all about this background, and I wish he would share it with the rest of the senators on this side.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Senator Olson is obviously getting warmed up for his speech on Thursday. I thank him for giving me notice of some of the matters that he wished to raise. I undertake that I or one of my colleagues, speaking on behalf of the government, will be in a position to deal with these and other matters that he may wish to raise in connection with today's announcement.

I have been informed since I came into the chamber that the Prime Minister was due to speak at 1.45 p.m. today. While I am familiar with the broad outlines of his announcement, I do not have a copy of his speech. The deficiency payment, of course, is the major item in financial terms. There is also the Farm Fuel Tax Rebate Program and the Western Grain Stabilization Fund as well as some action concerning the Farm Credit Corporation.

Senator Olson: And potatoes.

Senator Murray: And potatoes, as my honourable friend observes. There is also an invitation issued to provincial governments to join with the federal government in respect of certain possible programs.

In any case, this is a matter for discussion on Thursday, at which time we will be prepared to deal with the questions and concerns of the honourable senator. Meanwhile, I note his positive reaction to the announcement made today by the Prime Minister, a reaction which I am sure will be shared by many in that sector. After all, it is a fact that in the past few years, since this government took office, direct government assistance to that sector has increased by almost 400 per cent.

Senator Argue: That is not correct.

Senator Olson: Perhaps the Leader of the Government would check his facts. I wanted to give credit for a good announcement. However, I have brought along a chart that was published by the Minister of Agriculture today and which indicates that the increase with regard to farm receipts came far more from the Western Grain Stabilization Program that was established by the previous government rather than this government. So why does the Leader of the Government not stick to the facts and, when we on this side are being generous and charitable, accept that what we are saying is true?

Senator Argue: The farmer is getting his own money.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, I should like to respond to Senator Olson's laudatory and kind remarks and congratulate him on the very fine programs which today he has taken time to praise. We are all very grateful for that, no matter how unusual it is. As a matter of fact, the more rare these things are, the more we appreciate them. I do know that should he raise an inquiry on Thursday, it would be so helpful if some of those questions to which he wishes answers were put in writing; then one could ensure that the appropriate answers could be given.

● (1520)

Senator Olson: All the honourable senator need do is read Hansard. That is why I put these points on the record today.

REPRODUCTIVE TECHNOLOGY

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, a number of women's organizations and a number of well-known researchers in Canada have called on this government to appoint a royal commission to study new reproductive technology. Has the government taken a decision on this request yet?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I must say that to the best of my knowledge the government does not have that matter under consideration at the present time.

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, it will be an interesting time on Thursday. I am not as generous as my colleague, Senator Olson.

Senator Doody: Oh come on! You are so!

Senator Argue: Not when it comes to dragging up a program that provided $1 billion last year and has only increased to $1.1 billion this year. The farmers lost much more than that increase when the initial price was lowered. The government says that the Western Grain Stabilization Program is a government program. I thought it was the farmers' program. It is the farmers' money that is in there, but now it is the government's program.

Senator Murray: There are those who would say that it is a Liberal program.

Senator Argue: The program was put in by the Liberal government, but, to me, it is an insurance program, a joint program between the government and the farmers. I do not know of any case where the insurance company is given great credit after paying out the money involved in the policy for the house having burned down. If the government had not put up the 400 per cent, it would have broken the law. That law was there when the government came to power. The prices have collapsed so much since they have been in power, and they have so little influence with the President of the United States, that farmers have to look for these bail-outs. My goodness, I know that all farmers would like to make their earnings in the market, but they cannot.

On another subject, but a related one, can the minister report any developments in the grain handlers' strike at Prince

[Senator Barootes.]

Rupert? It has been going on for some time now, and it puts grain producers in a serious situation. The Minister of Labour has taken certain initiatives with regard to the Air Canada strike, and there appears to be some progress, at any rate, in that situation. I am wondering whether the government has taken any similar action or proposes any action with regard to the grain handlers' strike at Prince Rupert.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, about a couple of hours ago my colleague, the Minister of Labour, the Honourable Pierre Cadieux, instructed Mr. J.M. Collins, the mediator assigned to the dispute, to reconvene the parties for further mediation meetings.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I can say that that announcement is a welcome one. So sometimes I am on your side.

Senator Doody: I knew that you were generous.

Senator Argue: I have my moments.

AIR CANADA

LABOUR DISPUTE—CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I am wondering if there is anything further to report on the Air Canada situation. I am aware from news reports of what has been going on. Does the minister have anything to add at this time? Do things look pretty hopeful for the resumption of air service soon?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, when we entered the chamber almost two hours ago my information was that the parties were still talking. Negotiations continue, and the government is hopeful that there will be a resolution of the dispute today.

Senator Argue: I would take an even bet that there will be.

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Jean Bazin moved that Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the third time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion, honourable senators?

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, I believe this bill was referred to the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. The Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology did not make any amendment to the bill and reported it without any comment. Still, would it be relevant to ask the committee chairman or another senator if any consideration was given to the advisability of making the provisions of this bill permanent next year instead of going through the same exercise every year? Did the committee debate this aspect of the bill? Was there official reaction from the government, a minister or an official saying why this provision is not made permanent in the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Jean Bazin: Honourable senators, I was not present when the committee sat. I believe the committee was chaired by Senator Bonnell on that day. I do not know whether Senator Bonnell wants to respond directly to the question concerning what happened at the committee meeting. I can, however, provide a general answer.

[English]

Senator Corbin: Senator Bonnell was not paying attention to what I was saying. Therefore, I will ask him, in his capacity as chairman of the committee which considered the bill presently before us, which deals with the extension of variable entry requirements for another year, whether the matter of the extension of these requirements was discussed in committee; whether or not the minister or high officials of the department addressed the matter, and whether, indeed, in years to come we can expect this feature to be a permanent feature of the legislation, or, on the contrary, whether the government intends for some time yet to come to Parliament year after year for approval of that particular provision of the legislation?

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have to advise the Senate that neither the minister nor any high officials appeared before our committee to give a commitment as to what would happen in the future. However, the committee felt that it was important to pass this bill before the first of the year so that people on unemployment insurance would not lose any of their benefits. We agreed to the bill without amendment, but made the recommendation that the government of the day consider passing legislation so that this provision will not have to come before Parliament every fall in the future.

Senator Corbin: I thank the honourable senator for his answer. It is not exactly exciting news, but I find it satisfactory.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the third reading of Bill C-254, to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, as one who made some remarks on Senator Bosa's bill earlier this year, I must again register some—I shall not call it “displeasure” but regret, that the provisions of this legislation, as I understand it, apply only to spouses of people in the Public Service of Canada.

• (1530)

Senator Bosa: And of people in the service of the provinces and of those in the armed services abroad.

Senator Corbin: Yes, those employed in the service of the Government of Canada, of provinces and some of their agencies. However, it does not apply to the spouse of a person in private enterprise who serves abroad and who may marry abroad and whose spouse does not have extended to her or to him credit for the time spent abroad as the spouse of a private Canadian citizen.

Therefore I find that the legislation does not apply equally across the board. I am not sure whether or not it sins against the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I suppose in a sense that a spouse who is not a Canadian citizen does not have any rights.

However, we are extending such privileges to certain spouses to allow them to become Canadian citizens sooner than other spouses who find themselves in pretty much the same circumstances, so again I wanted to register this caveat.

I am sure we are doing the right thing for spouses of persons in the service of the governments of Canada and the provinces, but I think that we ought to have extended the same privileges to spouses of other Canadian citizens who find themselves in similar circumstances. Otherwise, the saying that the law applies equally to all has no meaning in these particular circumstances.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1987-88

SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-95, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill before us today, Appropriation Bill No. 4, provides for the release of the whole of Supplementary Estimates (B) for 1987-88, amounting to $693 million, and the whole of Supplementary Estimates (C) for 1987-88, amounting to some $1.881 billion. The total spending authority requested by this bill is just over $3.588 billion, the difference representing statutory items.

Supplementary Estimates (B) included $466 million for the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, with the balance covering funding for two new agencies, namely, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Western Diversification Office.

Supplementary Estimates (C) covers $1.4 billion for forgiveness of debts and $350 million for Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive contributions, with the balance being distributed throughout a number of government programs.

Honourable senators, Supplementary Estimates (B) were tabled in the Senate on August 28, 1987, while Supplementary Estimates (C) were tabled in the Senate on November 19, 1987. Both were immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. These estimates were discussed by the National Finance Committee with Treasury Board officials, and the committee presented their reports on November 17 and December 2 respectively.

Honourable senators, I would like to assure the Senate that this bill is in the standard form as we usually see it and there are no surprises that I am aware of. I also would like to table at this time the list of the estimates tabled to date for 1987-88 and the supply to date for 1987-88 and ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

I would also be prepared to supply additional information if honourable senators should require it. However, as I have said, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has examined both sets of estimates and has reported same, and the reports have been accepted by the Senate.

(See Appendix "C", p. 2439.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as Senator Doody has pointed out, the estimates that are the subject of this appropriation bill have been studied by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance and reported by that committee, and the chairman of that committee, Senator Leblanc (Saurel), has put on the record his comments on those estimates. I have consulted with him and he has assured me that the members of the committee have made their comments and have no other reservations with respect to this supply bill. Of course, it is only in most unusual circumstances, it seems to me, that the Senate should consider denying the government supply. For that reason I believe that we should give this bill second reading now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It is moved by Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Argue—

Senator Frith: I am sorry, who is the mover of the motion?

Senator Doody: Your Honour, I moved second reading, seconded by someone on this side of the house. I appreciate very much the cooperation of the honourable gentlemen across the way, but I do not believe that they would be willing to move supply for the government.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I am sorry, the motion was moved by Senator Doody and seconded by Senator Roblin. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Michel Coggier moved that Bill C-88, an Act to amend the Judges Act, be read the second time.

He said: In 1981, honourable senators, Parliament established a process whereby a commission appointed every three years would inquire into the adequacy of the salaries, benefits and other amounts payable to judges appointed by the Federal

[Senator Doody.]

Parliament and make recommendations to the Minister of Justice.

The purpose of these triennial reviews is to enhance the independence of the judiciary and to provide judges with sound financial security.

In September 1986, the Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn, the Minister of Justice, appointed a triennial commission chaired by Mr. H. Donald Guthrie, Q.C., which included such other members as Mr. Edward Crawford, Maître Jeannine Rousseau and Mr. Eldon Wooliams. The commission submitted its report to the Minister of Justice in February 1984 who, in turn, tabled it in the House of Commons on March 11, 1987.

The commission had been appointed to inquire into the adequacy of judges salaries and other benefits. Its report contained 27 recommendations dealing with the salaries, pensions, benefits and income tax related matters.

The commission had recommended that the proposed salary adjustments became effective retroactively as of April 1, 1986. The commission had also recommended that the level of 1975 be the benchmark for the new judicial remuneration. The commission found that the 1975 base had been adequate, but that it had lost some of its relevance over the past twelve years.

The House's standing committee to which the bill had been referred and which considered the same issue last April reported on the commission's recommendations suggesting that the proposed salary adjustments recommended by the commission become effective April 1, 1987, rather than April 1, 1986.

The government has accepted the proposed salary adjustments recommended by the commission, but has decided to phase them in over a three year period. Accordingly, the first increases will become effective April 1, 1986, the first year, then April 1, 1987, and then April 1, 1988, the last year.

Under the provisions of this bill, all judges appointed by the federal government will see their salaries increased retroactively as of April 1, 1986, again on April 1, 1987, and a third time on April 1, 1988.

In the current legislative provisions, the salaries of district and county judges in Ontario, British Columbia and Nova Scotia are $5,000 lower than those of justices at corresponding levels in the Superior Courts, as of the three salary adjustment dates. The salary levels of judges of the Canadian Tax Court are the same as those of district and county judges as of July 1, 1987.

Since the proposed salary increases are to be phased in over a three-year period, the salary adjustments that were already provided for under the Judges Act, that is the indexed salary adjustments will have their application deferred while the increases under Bill C-88 are implemented.

Honourable senators, the government feels those are significant changes in a number of respects, but more specifically in that they emphasize and strengthen the all-important principle of judicial independence. Moreover, by providing for salaries that come closer to the fees being paid in private practice, the legislation will make it easier for the government to attract the top quality people we need for the good administration of our courts.

Thank you, honourable senators.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at the outset I would like to commend Senator Cogger for his very clear, straightforward and even limpid explanation of the aims and provisions of the bill. As he was saying, the bill follows on the Guthrie Commission's findings and recommendations. Certainly the principle of the bill deserves our support. At second reading we deal with the subject matter of the bill, and therefore I suggest again that we pass this bill at second reading stage.

I hope indeed that Senator Cogger will move reference to the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs before third reading is moved.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable Senators, Senator Cogger in his speech on two or three occasions referred to "judicial independence".

Could he tell me whether that judicial independence is in any way similar to Senate or senatorial independence? Is there a connection?

Senator Cogger: No connection.

Senator Corbin: Could you explain why, in your opinion, there is no connection?

Senator Cogger: I am quite willing to get into a debate with Senator Corbin on this subject. However, I do not see how the dependence or independence of senators in this matter has anything to do with Bill C-88 or at the very least its subject matter.

Senator Corbin: This answer, honourable senators, gives me no satisfaction. I have always thought that Parliament was the highest court in the land. It is a phrase which is on everyone's lips and which is constantly being used in the other place.

It is true that I have hardly or perhaps never heard it in this house. I cannot remember.

However, can we really say that the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, the justices of the Federal Court, and the justices of provincial courts are totally independent? We know for instance that some of them were Members of legislative assemblies, federal or provincial, that they get a pension from those assemblies on top of their salaries. Can we say that in such a context the judiciary authority is totally independent? I think that there is always an umbilical cord, however thin it may be.

Now when I am reminded of the "independence of the judiciary", I think that a rather vivid term is used. I know that I am deeply hurting the feelings of some of my colleagues who consider judges, whether they are sitting in the Supreme Court, in the Federal Court or in any other court, as individuals who are beyond reproach. I do not think so. They are as human as anybody else. Besides, I think they are very well paid. The committee which studied the whole matter was very generous to judges and rather over generous in all the consideration given to them. I am eagerly awaiting the day when senators, for instance, will be dealt with the same consideration as shown to judges. We are legislators and judges are asked to interpret the contentious points of legislation.

That is why I find a bill such as this one insulting for our institution, the Senate. I hope the Government will realize the disparity between salaries granted to judges and senators, regardless of all the arguments they can come up with, particularly about senators' pensions. We periodically hear promises that a solution will finally be found to the problem of disparity between pensions granted to members of the Commons and to senators.

Some of my colleagues will certainly be offended by my remarks, but this is the only opportunity I have to make them, and a certain amount of digression may be in order in a debate—on the principle of a bill. I look forward to the day when the government will recognize that senators, whether we like them or not, deserve some consideration.

The poor guy who loses in Federal Court or a provincial Superior Court may not like the judge who decided against him. I do not expect everybody to like the Senate or like me as a senator, but I would like to see an end to those problems that are brought to the attention of the government year in and year out. They should be quickly addressed.

I do not see why senators, who are constantly ill-treated, should be willing to grant generous salaries to judges. I do not think of the rough time we are given every day in the media, because I do not care. A few things should be put in order in terms of salaries, of resources for research, of equipment and pensions for senators.

I wanted to take this opportunity to raise those problems since cooperation may not be as good in different circumstances.

I will conclude by saying that the remuneration formula we are about to pass for judges is greatly enriched and very generous. I hope their Lordships will remember.

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I would like to point out to Senator Corbin that, precisely because of the independence of the courts, judges are not supposed to remember it. If the honourable senator finds the bill a bit offensive for the Senate, I am sorry for him. I would like to draw his attention to the fact that, proffered outside these walls, some of his comments would nearly amount to contempt of court, and that the courts might be offended by them.

Senator Corbin: I believe that Senator Cogger forgets the fundamental rights we have as legislators . . .

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I said if his comments had been made outside these walls . . .

Senator Corbin: That is why I make them here, because it is not only my role, but also my duty to say what I think of a bill like this one, which is extremely generous toward the judges.

I believe it is a pretty good Christmas present we are giving them, and one not very many other Canadians will be getting. That is all I have to say.

Naturally, I can vote against the bill, but I will first explain my stand.

The message I tried to put across this afternoon is not directed to the judges whom I must respect like any other Canadian outside these walls, and even within. I do not think I said anything basically nasty against them. I do not believe I said anything which might prejudice their integrity or independence.

I just said to the government "please consider also the Senate and the senators". The situation here has been going on for too long. Some senators are irritated and hurt because of such a bill that shows no hesitation to bring about very comfortable and longlasting settlements in favour of judges.

If judges are entitled to such generosity, that doesn't mean that senators are asking for an equally generous treatment, but at least we expect some action regarding the grievances that for years we have been bringing to your attention.

Consequently, the moment was well chosen to make this kind of representations.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Cogger, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

● (1550)

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the second reading of Bill C-87, respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

She said: Honourable senators, Bill C-87 will replace the current Customs Tariff and incorporate the Duties Relief Act into one piece of legislation. I wish to take this opportunity to comment on the benefits which this new legislation will provide to Canadian business, and in particular the importing and exporting communities all across Canada.

As honourable senators are aware, our country is one of the great trading nations of the world. Since our very beginnings we have built our economy on international trade. Today exports provide one of the major engines of growth for the Canadian economy. Imports also play a vital role in the functioning of our economy, providing the inputs, machinery and equipment necessary in many sectors to complement the Canadian sources of supply. It goes without saying that a great trading country such as Canada needs up-to-date trade legislation. While it may not be obvious to the casual observer, the smooth flow of international trade depends very much on the underpinnings provided by such legislation as the Customs Tariff Act and the Duties Relief Act.

[Senator Corbin.]

Of course, I do not have to make that point to Canadian producers who in their daily activity are engaged in import and export operations. Those people know that their very ability to produce and compete in markets both here and abroad depends on the efficient functioning of the framework of laws and regulations put in place by the federal government to regulate trade.

Honourable senators, our import tariff legislation is in desperate need of updating. While it has served the country well over the many years since its inception, today we are faced with new needs and new opportunities. Essentially what the business community requires is an easily understood, straightforward system of classifying goods for import and for export so that rates of duty and other tariff-related regulations affecting trade in goods are easily determined and clear in their application. Uncertainty can lead to delayed decisions, loss of business opportunities, or unexpected costs. We also require a system which can lend itself to computerization so that import and export transactions can be recorded and transmitted electronically. Business and government are more and more relying on machines to transact their business. Our current system for processing imports is woefully inadequate in this regard.

● (1600)

Because we maintain a separate tariff and commodity classification system, importers are required to be familiar with two systems. Consequently, our trade data is imprecise and lacking in accuracy. In addition, with the current tariff system, which is different from that of every other country, we are unable to make a direct comparison of our tariff rates and our trade statistics with these other countries.

The proposed legislation is intended to correct these deficiencies and to meet new requirements. It is an entirely new approach to the classification of goods for customs purposes. The harmonized system, on which it is based, is a new standard international method for classifying goods. Canada's adoption of a harmonized system-based customs tariff is timed to coincide with similar moves by all of our major trading partners.

This international initiative to standardize tariff systems will assist Canadian producers by making their determination of the rates of duty on imported and exported goods easier to determine. The greater predictability in customs classification, both by Canadian authorities and in other countries adopting the harmonized system, will benefit Canadian business. For example, once a Canadian maker of ice skates knows where ice skates are classified in the Canadian tariff, he will also know where to look to see where they are classified in the U.S. tariff, in the tariffs of the European Community or the Nordic countries.

The logical approach of the harmonized system is also designed to facilitate automated processing of import and export transactions. Canadian business has been gearing up to adapt its reporting of import and export transactions to the new tariff system. A key incentive in adopting the new system will be the increased efficiencies and cost savings that will be realized by the private sector in this area. Once a system is up and running, it is expected to save millions of dollars a year to the importing community.

Revenue Canada is in the process of implementing its new customs commercial system, and as of January 1 of next year it will be based on the harmonized system. This means that importers and customs brokers will be able to provide accounting data directly to Revenue Canada from their own offices and to receive confirmation of such data directly in return. This is a great step towards a paperless work environment.

The new tariff will also facilitate the conduct of trade negotiations. As evidence of this, the Canada-U.S. trade negotiations were conducted on the basis of the harmonized system. In fact, this is the first time international trade negotiations aimed at trade liberalization have been conducted under the new tariff system. It is expected that similar positive results will be possible in multilateral trade negotiations as well, such as the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations currently under way.

Finally, under the harmonized system, Canada will be able to reconcile its trade statistics with other countries more easily. As honourable senators will be aware, the question of the U.S. trade deficit is a matter of urgent concern to the U.S. authorities. Each year Statistics Canada undertakes an exercise with their U.S. counterparts to try to reconcile the trade statistics kept by our two countries. In the past the U.S. has produced statistics showing the U.S. trade deficit with Canada as being much higher than it is according to our calculations. Much detailed discussion and analysis are required to try to reconcile these differences. While this may appear to be a technical exercise to many, such is not the case at all. The perceived trade deficit or surplus between the two countries can have many effects, including effects on currency fluctuations and protectionist pressures. Accurate trade data is also a major benefit to the business community. It is therefore important that we will now have a better way of comparing our trade statistics with other countries.

Honourable senators, if I have gone on at some length to detail the benefits of introducing the new customs tariff, it is because this is an important and landmark piece of legislation. While on the surface the bill may appear to be technical and complex, it is certainly worthy of senators' attention and will be of vital interest to the business community.

Honourable senators, I therefore commend Bill C-87 for your consideration and approval.

Honourable senators, I do not know how you want to handle the bill. If you wish to debate the bill on the floor, the minister is quite willing to come to a Committee of the Whole; or perhaps you wish it referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. However, it is a technical bill, and I assume that honourable senators will have questions for the minister and senior bureaucrats before moving to third reading. I am at your disposal.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Hicks will be speaking on our behalf about this bill.

With regard to the question raised by Senator Robertson, before we adjourn the debate to enable Senator Hicks to speak to it I suggest that if Senator Robertson is able to persuade the Senate that there is an urgency to have this bill passed before we adjourn for Christmas, then we should proceed to Committee of the Whole. However, if there is no such importance to passing it this week, then I think it would be better to refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration and study, because it is the kind of bill that the Senate and its committees usually examine closely. As Senator Robertson has said, it is rather technical, and the tradition has been for Parliament, and to some extent the country, to rely on the Senate to study technical bills. Unless there is an important reason for us to pass it this week, I think we should follow the usual procedure and refer it to the committee.

That just deals with the procedure. Senator Hicks will be speaking for us on the substance and other aspects of the bill.

Senator Robertson: Concerning the urgency of passing the bill, as some of you know, the discussion on this matter started in Brussels in 1981. Some 58 countries have agreed to the harmonized system.

Generally those countries have been working steadily toward this type of legislation since then. About 20 have already passed this type of legislation in their countries, and there are another ten or so who expect to have their legislation in place by January 1.

There are areas of the bill that establish some retroactivity. So, on first blush you might not think there is an urgency. I suppose the world could live without it, but it would be quite difficult.

I am advised that the staff would have between now and January 1 to draft most of the remission orders in section 17 of the Financial Administration Act if this does not pass by January 1. Certainly the government would like the bill by January 1. It has been long and tedious in its coming and has meant a lot of hard work for the staff who have been involved. There seems to be nothing very controversial in the bill, and I am sure that questions from honourable senators will be answered by the minister.

● (1610)

Honourable senators, there was a list of some 700 petitioners who presented a petition in regard to this bill. I assure you that the first petition received opposing this legislation has now been withdrawn, and there no longer seems to be general opposition to the bill.

From the evidence of those who came forward to discuss the bill it appeared that the parts clause may result in some increases in tariffs. However, there is a provision in the bill whereby a departmental committee will be given authority to resolve a situation where anyone feels that their circumstance has not been properly appraised and that they will be adversely affected by the change. It is felt that that will be an infrequent occurrence. Those who have a grievance may go to this interdepartmental committee and, at the committee's recommendation, the minister may take remedial action so that no one suffers as a result of any change in tariff.

From all of the information I have received and from my knowledge of the work that has been done, it seems to me that the bill is uncontroversial. If the bill could be passed so as to come into effect on January 1, it would be most appreciated by the minister.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not want to be at all provocative, in fact, I would like to point out that having had the obligation at one time to try to get government legislation passed and to explain how the government would like it by a certain time, I have a certain amount of empathy for the government on this question. However, one is certainly tempted to ask: Why, if it is so important, does it come here so late?

I want to emphasize that we must remember our role in legislation, and we should not encourage the government, of whatever party, to say, "Well, one way of getting something done quickly is to leave it to the last week before Christmas. We want it by the first of January." The Senate thereby would allow something to go through which is, admittedly, complicated and which, admittedly, has probably had, as Senator Robertson has said, a lot of the controversy wrung out of it in the long process that it has gone through up to this point. We have to remember that a corollary to that is to say, "Therefore, if the House of Commons studies it and if other countries pass it, then, of course, the Senate should pass it in a matter of a day or two." Honourable senators, that is the aspect I am concerned about.

Senator Robertson: I certainly appreciate the honourable senator's comments in this regard, and I would not want to be a party to urging senators to rush a piece of legislation through if I felt it deserved much longer treatment.

The history of this bill is as follows: There was the tabling of a notice of ways and means motion back in February of 1986 during the budget debate; there was the tabling of a notice of ways and means motion on February 18; there was the tabling of a detailed notice of ways and means motion on October 2; there was concurrence on October 14; introduction and first reading were on October 15; the debate on first reading started on October 15; and the debate on second reading took place on October 29, 30 and November 2. The bill was referred to committee on November 2. Many associations directly concerned with tariffs and import and export have been working on this with the officials and they have given evidence before the committee, so they have had their input. The committee tabled its report on November 26. The debate at the report stage was held on December 1, 3 and 4, the vote was held on December 7, and third reading was given on December 8.

I am at the pleasure of honourable senators.

[Senator Robertson.]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps I might just add a word of support to what Senator Robertson has said and allay the fears that may be in some senators' minds regarding the government's intention or attempt to try to jam this piece of legislation through in a day or so towards the end of the session.

The subject matter of this bill was brought to our attention, or at least to my attention, by the minister, the Honourable Tom Hockin, around mid-November. At that time he outlined to me in a letter the importance of the bill and the necessity of getting it through before the end of the year. I conveyed those sentiments to the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Senator Sinclair, who, as usual, was most cooperative and undertook to get the bill into his committee just as soon as it could reach the Senate and be dealt with here.

Unfortunately, for whatever reason, it never did reach the degree of urgency on the order paper in the other place that the content of the bill seems to suggest it should have, and it has only now reached us.

It would be very much appreciated if a way could be found to expedite the passage of the bill, but I fully appreciate the reluctance of senators not to get into that rut, which is one with which we are not completely unfamiliar.

Senator Frith: And we do not want to get back into it.

Senator Doody: Having struggled out of it, I can appreciate the reluctance to climb back in again.

However, in this particular case, if honourable senators could see their way clear, it would be most appreciated.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I want to ask a question of Senator Robertson and then I shall adjourn the debate.

The bill before me is in the form in which it was introduced for first reading in the other place on October 15. Is that the form in which the bill was passed by the House of Commons?

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Hicks: None of the proposed amendments was carried by the House of Commons.

I wish to say a few words about the bill, and I shall do so at the next sitting of the Senate. Honourable senators, I am prepared to do that as soon as the order is called tomorrow.

Honourable senators, we have been making more use of the Committee of the Whole in this chamber during this session than has happened previously in my time, and if it were agreeable to honourable senators generally to have the minister come here sometime tomorrow, I would undertake that my remarks could be gotten out of the way and would not impede the process. I think that a Committee of the Whole might not be an unreasonable way of dealing with this bill.

Of course, we really ought to know today how we shall proceed, and I realize that until I have spoken Senator Robertson cannot make her specific motion regarding what should happen to the bill. If we could agree to have arrangements made for the minister to come before a Committee of the Whole tomorrow sometime, that would seem reasonable to me. I do not know whether we can make any further comments or test the wishes of the house further at this time. Perhaps the two leaders could confer and decide what they want to do.

In any event, I want it clearly understood that I will not hold up the bill. However, I do want a little more time to consider the material that has just recently been updated and handed to me. I will be prepared to deal with it expeditiously tomorrow. With that statement, honourable senators, I move that the debate on Bill C-87 be adjourned.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I should like to ask Senator Doody why it is that we still receive bills from the House of Commons the text of which is, in fact, the text of the first reading of the bill. The text of the first reading of the Commons bill which was given to us today is dated October 15, 1987. Ought we not to have in our hands the text approved by the House of Commons on third reading, as amended? Is this the proper bill we should be dealing with?

I understand that no amendments were made in the House of Commons, but, nonetheless, that is not my principal point, because I guess the answer to that is obvious. Why is it that we do not receive bills in the Senate with marginal notes, as do members of the House of Commons. We receive bills on which the left-hand page contains both the English and the French texts and the right-hand page is blank. There are no explanatory notes. We do not know if there have been amendments to the original texts, what those amendments were and what the original text meant.

● (1620)

It seems to me that it would greatly expedite our understanding and, indeed, the passage of legislation in the Senate if we were afforded the bill in the same form as that in which the commoners are privileged to obtain it. In addition, senators do not have the research assistance that members of the House of Commons have. They benefit generously from the work of their research assistants. That seems to me to be an additional reason why we ought to have explanatory notes and amendments, which we are now deprived of, on the right-hand page of the text.

Honourable senators, I thought I should make this comment now, because this is significant legislation. I always pay attention to this type of legislation, because I come from an area which shares its border with the State of Maine. I know a good many people who bring to my attention problems that have to do with customs duties, tariffs and immigration. I make a point of paying special attention to this kind of legislation. It would indeed facilitate my task if we were given more material with which to work. It may be that Senator Hicks benefits from advice from departmental officials. I do not know. I believe that Senator Robertson is certainly in a position, being a senator sitting on the government side, to benefit from the advice of departmental officials. We backbenchers, if I may refer that way to myself and colleagues who have no specific functions around this place, do not benefit from the same kind of advice and information. I hate like heck to have to pronounce myself blindly on legislation about which I am not entirely satisfied. I would hate like heck to have it put under my nose two years down the road that, after all, I did support the legislation when it passed the Senate. I want to know what we are talking about. I want to know what we are dealing with.

On the surface of it, I do not have any reluctance in supporting this legislation. However, to satisfy myself and to allay the concerns expressed to me by some of the people from New Brunswick, I would like to be better equipped to deal with this type of material. Perhaps Senator Doody, who will recall that I raised this same point with him a few years ago, could tell me whether he has had an opportunity to look into what seems to me to be the standard practice of presenting in the Senate bills without marginal explanatory notes. Why is it done that way, and why can we not improve on that practice so that our task would be facilitated?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I do not have that material with me now, although I remember the question being raised. Obviously this question affects the entire Senate, and, as such, it can be raised in the Internal Economy Committee. That committee can deal with it one way or the other. The Senate has within its power the rights and abilities to equip itself with any tools it wants in order to do its job. If it is the wish of senators that the process outlined by Senator Corbin be implemented in the chamber, then I suggest that the appropriate place to bring the matter up would be in the Internal Economy Committee.

This is another one of those situations where something directly affects the operation of the government's business in the house. But the operator of the government's business does not have the authority to put into effect the idea that Senator Corbin has put forward. Obviously I have no quarrel with the idea; it is probably an excellent one. I have no way of knowing at this time how logistic and other problems might present themselves, but, as I say, I would be only too happy to discuss it in committee and there, together with our colleagues, come up with some solution.

Senator Robertson: Further to your comments, Senator Corbin, and to help you with your concerns, I notice from my notes that the Tariff Board held nine public hearings before the appointment of the committee. They were widely publicized hearings. It was the Tariff Board, not the joint committee, which received over 750 representations, both written and oral, from the general public. I suppose that every organization having anything to do with exportation and importation was heard. These groups are now lobbying the government to get this bill passed. These people are distinctly on side. In addition, this is a revenue-neutral bill. When it is passed, the same revenues will be generated.

As I have said, the people involved in export and import have had the opportunity to work with the Tariff Board in having their concerns expressed. I found some comfort in that.

On motion of Senator Hicks, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul David moved that Bill C-97, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time.

He said: Honourable senators, it is a pleasure to introduce Bill C-97. All three stages were adopted yesterday in the House of Commons, with the unanimous consent of all three parties.

The bill will affect conditions of work for several hundred thousand Canadian workers.

It remedies a problem that remained in the Canada Labour Code after a series of changes were adopted in Parliament in June 1984. The amendments before us today concern maternity leave (up to 41 weeks), sick leave and pension plan contributions to be made during that time. In such cases, the Canada Labour Code required the employees concerned to make their normal contributions in order to continue accumulating these benefits. However, the Canada Labour Code did not require employers to continue their contributions. In the absence of such a legislated obligation, some employers have required employees to assume most of the cost of these contributions and sometimes even the entire cost. This practice, which is contrary to the intent of the law, has led to many complaints by both individuals and unions.

The sole purpose of both clauses of Bill C-97 is to amend the Canada Labour Code and make it compulsory for employers to continue payment of contributions to pension, health and disability plans for employees who are on child care or sick leave, such contributions being at least equal to those paid when the employees are at work. Employees do have the option of deciding not to contribute to the plans while on leave, and in that case the bill provides the employer's obligation would cease.

The proposed amendments to subsection 59.52(2) and (3) concern maternity or child care leave and the amendments to subsections 61.4(2.2) and (3) concern sick leave.

Since this bill remedies a problem arising from the legislation passed in 1984, I move that the proposed amendments be approved by the Senate with the same celerity with which they were passed in the House of Commons. I am convinced that the passage of this bill will be warmly welcomed by the workers concerned, and I think it would be appropriate, at the beginning of the holiday season, to extend to these workers, on your own and my behalf, our best wishes for a happy and prosperous 1988.

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, could senator David tell us whether there is any urgency about this Bill? Perhaps he has already done so, but I did not hear him.

Senator David: Honourable senators, the House of Commons certainly dealt with this Bill with some urgency as it went through its three readings with the unanimous support of all parties yesterday. The Minister of Labour, the honourable Pierre H. Cadieux, has assured me that, if we want any clarification, he will be available today or tomorrow to reply to the questions of the honourable senators.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, can Senator David inquire to verify the urgency of this bill? In my opinion, the fact that the House of Commons went through the three readings of this bill on the same day is not enough to establish its urgency. I shall adjourn the debate in the name of Senator Marsden who is now absent, but in the meantime, Senator David could perhaps inquire about the urgency of this bill and about whether or not there is any reason why this bill should be passed this week or before the Senate adjourns this week.

Senator David: I believe that the main reason, Senator Frith, would be to give a well-deserved Christmas gift to the thousands of workers, especially women, who are now deprived of fair employer-employee contributions and who would certainly be very happy if the Senate acted promptly to correct a situation which has, unfortunately, existed for some time and which involves certain large crown corporations.

Honourable senators, I believe that the urgency comes from the fact that the Bill corrects two very simple provisions. The text is so easy to understand that it was not even referred to a committee. An evidence of this, I was able to summarize it very easily in one hour this morning in my office.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I accept what Senator David has said as being the main reason for the urgency of this bill, but there might be others. He could perhaps verify whether or not there are other reasons and tell us what they are tomorrow.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of Senator David. When does this bill come into effect? Usually, we are told whether it will be after it receives Royal Assent or at a date to be set by the Governor in Council or at some other date. There is no mention of the date this amendment to the Canadian Labour Code will come into effect.

Senator David: Honourable senators, a member of the House of Commons asked exactly the same question. Mr. Murphy asked the following:

Mr. Chairman, I have one question. When does the Minister intend to have this Bill proclaimed?

Here is the answer of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Cadieux:

Mr. Chairman, hopefully as quickly as the Senate is prepared to look at the legislation. We should proceed as quickly as possible.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, another short question. What is the cost of the amendment? Will the employer or the employee have to make additional payments? Will the cost remain unchanged?

Senator David: As I recall, honourable senators, I think the cost of this measure to the industry involved, that is almost 300,000 employees, amounts to $600,000 all told.

Senator Corbin: Will this legislation apply to employees of the Senate and the House of Commons?

Senator David: The bill does not make that very clear. Perhaps you might direct this question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Cadieux, next time you see him.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, if it were to apply to the Senate and the House of Commons, it would mean a corresponding increase in budgetary expenditures of the House of Commons and the Senate.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Marsden, debate adjourned.

● (1630)

[English]

HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING CO. LIMITED ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard moved the second reading of Bill C-98, to amend an act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Limited.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise in support of Bill C-98, which amends an act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Limited. I strongly urge all honourable senators to support the bill, since the proposed amendments will make an important contribution toward protecting the lives and well-being of employees of the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company in the Flin Flon mineral area.

[Translation]

Under this bill, Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting workers will get the protection of a single standard set of provincial occupational safety and health rules.

[English]

The following are the reasons for the amendments: As honourable senators are no doubt aware, the labour jurisdiction in Canada is divided between the federal and provincial governments, depending on the type of industry involved.

While most of the Canadian mining industry falls under provincial jurisdiction, both federal and provincial labour laws govern such matters as conditions of work, collective bargaining, and occupational safety and health.

[Translation]

The Flin Flon mineral area is situated mainly in Manitoba, but it extends into Saskatchewan, with the majority of employees and mining operations being located in Manitoba.

Because of the interprovincial nature of the enterprise, mining operations in the area were brought under federal labour jurisdiction by the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Act of 1947.

[English]

However, mining is an occupation that has very particular and specific dangers and hazards that require special regulations expressly suited to the industry. Therefore, all the operations of the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. are under federal jurisdiction. For many years each of the two provinces concerned has tried to apply its own occupational safety and health legislation to mining.

[Translation]

This has resulted in a duplication of efforts and some confusion, so that protection of the occupational health and safety of company employees was not effective in the Flin Flon mineral area.

● (1640)

[English]

In order to eliminate all possible confusion and to give the workers the benefit of a single, uniform set of rules in the all important area of occupational safety and health, the following measures are proposed: first, amendment of the act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Limited to provide that all Manitoba occupational safety and health statutes and regulations will apply to all Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. operations in the Flin Flon mineral area on both sides of the boundary between Manitoba and Saskatchewan; second, the Flin Flon mineral area will be defined in a memorandum of understanding between the parties involved; third, inspection and occupational safety and health services will be provided by the Manitoba inspectorate. It should be noted that Saskatchewan is prepared to accept this arrangement because only a small number of the employees involved work solely in Saskatchewan. The vast majority of Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting operations and employees are in Manitoba, as I have already said.

[Translation]

Finally, I should add that Manitoba has recently enacted a new set of mining regulations. These regulations are the result of a tripartite consultation process and provide good protection in terms of occupational health and safety in contemporary mining operations.

The Act will come into force after the Province of Manitoba has ratified a letter of agreement embodying the technical measures that are necessary for its enforcement.

[English]

This bill, which has the support of the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan as well as the support of the company and the unions, provides an effective resolution to this long-standing problem, ensuring a high standard of occupational safety and health protection for this company and its employees.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, while the amendments that are being proposed today only affect a small percentage of Canadian workers, the spirit of cooperation between the unions, the employers and the government that resulted in these amendments is part of a trend that can easily be perceived in the area of labour, especially in the area of occupational safety and health. As an example of the important and concrete achievements made possible by this new spirit of cooperation, let me mention the information system on dangerous products used on the work place and the employee/employer safety and health committees that are set up by the Canadian Labour Code.

[English]

Therefore, I would ask all honourable senators to support this bill and to allow its expeditious passage so that together we continue this spirit of cooperation and contribute to better protection for the safety and health of Canadian workers.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the debate is adjourned, may I ask what has become of my usual question today: Would Senator Simard make some inquiries as to whether there is any urgency for this bill to pass, and, if so, give us some detail between now and tomorrow as to why it is urgent, or tell us that it is not urgent?

[Translation]

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, I inquired about this. The world is not going to come to an end next January if the bill is not passed before Christmas. As in the case of Bill C-97, the House of Commons decided to adopt all three stages the same day.

All parties concerned have been working on this bill since January, when an agreement in principle was reached. I imagine we could let it go until February. I think the minister would have no objection if the bill were passed in February, although I do not claim to speak on his behalf. There does seem to be a consensus. There is not the slightest hint of an argument from Canadians or non-Canadians. Nobody is objecting to the bill. Everybody wants this uniform legislation.

Manitoba was taking care of it before, but there was still the federal legislation that could be enforced. The federal government will retain the right to monitor compliance.

Practically speaking, not much has changed, except for the fact that from now on, inspection and compliance will be under the sole jurisdiction of Manitoba.

I do not think there is any real rush, but I think it would be appreciated if Opposition critics, after examining the bill, and I think you have the same notes I do, if they realized that there is really no problem here. These are things everyone wants.

Even if it takes another month to pass the bill, there is really no problem.

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, I can't help asking Senator Simard, who just referred to Senator Frith or another senator having certain notes, whether they are the same notes he has.

Senator Simard: Yes, Senator Corbin.

Senator Corbin: What kind of notes? As a junior senator I don't have a research staff, and it would certainly make things a lot easier if I had access to the same information that is available to you and some of my party colleagues.

Senator Simard: The department informed me it was customary to provide the opposition critic with the same notes I received, except perhaps for the page of questions that might be raised. I can give you that as well. There is really no problem.

[Senator Simard]

I could make 100 copies if you wish. I think the Senate leadership must know who already has the questions. I should be glad to give you my book, there is no problem.

Senator Corbin: I am delighted—I think we do not use the word often enough in the Senate—to accept your offer.

Not that I find the bill terribly interesting, but before speaking to the substance of this bill, I want to make sure I can live with it for the months and years to come.

I would appreciate it if Senator Simard would send me just one copy.

Senator Simard: With pleasure.

Senator Corbin: Thank you, Senator Simard.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to Senator Simard.

I noticed you referred to Saskatchewan several times. I am quite familiar with the site of the mine in question, Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting in Flin Flon. There is as important a part of the mine in Saskatchewan as in Manitoba, as you would know. Do they have the same laws for Saskatchewan as the one we are debating today?

Senator Simard: They do not have the same laws, but in this case the Government of Saskatchewan has decided that residents of Saskatchewan, who work for that company would be subject to similar laws. That is what I was told.

Senator Guay: In that case the same law applies in both Saskatchewan and Manitoba, that is what you are telling me?

Senator Simard: Yes, to all the employees of Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to Senator Simard. Since he has agreed to make a copy of the notes for Senator Corbin, I wonder if he would be kind enough to make a copy for me because I did not get any notes on this subject.

Senator Simard: I would be pleased to make as many copies as honourable senators may require. I hope I am not creating a bad precedent, but I have never been afraid of precedents. In this case, I will have them within 20 minutes.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay moved the second reading of Bill C-100, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, to repeal the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act and to amend another Act in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I am very sensitive to this welcome and I will proceed with my presentation.

Essentially, Bill C-100 does two things.

First, it repeals the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act so that former prisoners of war and their dependents are from now on protected under the Pension Act, or the Veteran Pension Act as it is sometimes called.

Hon. Fernand Leblanc: Is this the general Act?

Senator Tremblay: The exact title is: an Act to provide pension and other benefits to or in respect of members of the Canadian naval, army and air forces and of the Canadian Forces.

The short title is Pension Act. It provides for veteran pensions.

From 1971 to 1976, there was only one act to provide pensions for veterans and former prisoners of war. For reasons which I did not seek and, of course, did not manage to identify, perhaps in the light of experience with this one act, it was felt that it would be better or more practical to have separate acts for veterans and former prisoners of war.

But then experience once again showed that the previous situation was somewhat better and that it could be worthwhile to combine both acts again. This is what the bill does essentially, by inserting in the Pension Act a new part entitled "Prisoners of war".

The second thing this legislation does is bring in amendments to two acts which will now become one. It introduces amendments that will enhance both. Among those amendments are a number of changes of an administrative, home care nature.

One clause corrects a mistake that crept into the French text of the Veteran's Act. There are other provisions of a similar administrative nature.

On the other hand, there are changes that are clearly more important, more substantive ones that in fact respond to representations made to the Minister of Veterans' Affairs over the last three years by a number of veterans' groups. They are aimed at improving matters of a number of concerns to those groups, such as the National Prisoners of War Association, the National Council of Veterans' Associations and the Royal Canadian Legion.

Therefore, further to these representations, the minister has included in Bill C-100 amendments that improve matters in areas that were brought to his attention.

No doubt you already knew it. I must very simply confess that I learned this in the course of my own cursory study, no doubt more cursory still than that made by Senator David when he received the legislation this morning. I got it early this afternoon. So I learned what no doubt all honourable senators already knew, that compensation is paid to former prisoners of war for time spent in captivity. It is the same for veterans for what I would call their period of service. Former prisoners of war can get compensation for any incapacity incurred during their period of captivity.

Parliament has always wanted to recognize that double eligibility in the computation of benefits to surviving dependants. In fact, such had been the policy of the Canadian Pension Commission up until 1986, when it was ruled that legislative provisions in their current version did not include former prisoners of war who were not getting any invalidity pension.

By repealing the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, and by including its substance into the Pensions Act, that is the administration of benefits to war prisoners, that situation will come to an end. Accordingly, benefits that will be provided in the future to all applicants, dependents and surviving spouses, will again be at the same level as had always been desired, but which that Pension Commission decision actually changed in 1986 through its interpretation of the existing legislative provisions.

Furthermore, it was noted that the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act gave the Canadian Pension Commission no authority to combine the rates in computing survivor benefits. The compensation for war prisoners and the invalidity pension must now be figured out separately. This in effect reduces the benefits to a number of widows. The proposal in the legislation will give the Canada Pension Commission authority to revert to the usual practice and set the maximum to a full survivor pension. That proposal in particular will benefit widows of prisoners of war who were getting a pension, a compensation which added to it comes to a total 48 per cent or more.

I will attempt to explain to you as clearly as possible how the whole thing works. For example, a widow of a POW who had been receiving 25 per cent compensation and 25 per cent pension will currently receive a survivor benefit of half the 25 per cent compensation and half the 25 per cent disability pension. This amendment will permit the commission to add the two percentages and pay the higher full widow's pension instead of two separate proportionate pensions. I was as clear as I could be. Besides, we could exchange views on this.

Another provision of this bill will make it possible for the commission to continue paying the pension at the married rate for a full year, and not only for a month, following the death of a spouse. Under this amendment, these benefits will continue to be paid in full for a full year following the death of the POW or his spouse thus giving the surviving spouse an opportunity over a longer period to adjust to the new circumstances; this puts our POW benefits in line with those already in effect for disability pensioners.

Finally, together with all the proposed amendments, the Canadian Pension Commission will have the discretion to grant POW compensation in especially worthy situations such as in the case of war veterans held prisoners in North Africa. These veterans had been unable to receive prisoner of war compensation because there was doubt as to whether they had been detained in enemy territory. From now on, the commission will have the discretion and flexibility to resolve these matters. This flexibility already exists in the case of disability pensions and has enabled such deserving people as the veterans exposed to nuclear radiations in the 1950s to apply for pension.

Those are essentially the clauses and the effects of Bill C-100.

The information which I will give to you is similar to that given by Senator David and Senator Simard. I take the liberty of telling you that in the other place the bill was unanimously passed yesterday after the three readings in that same day. I am aware that this argument is not absolutely persuasive in this chamber of sober second thought, but it can be valid information. We could take it as we like. The essential point of course is that those individuals subjected to those new provisions will be dealt with more fairly in comparison with other similar groups such as prisoners of war and other survivors. There is some sort of equity involved and the provisions for the legislation which would prevent such inequity have been throughout the years the subject matter of demands and representations from groups concerned with those problems after having experienced them. The Minister of Veterans' Affairs is answering to those valid and indisputable demands through this bill. This is the reason why I am pleased to move second reading of the bill.

[English]

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs on bringing this bill forward. We on this side of the house are more than pleased to see this legislation come before us. It is a piece of legislation which ties up some loose ends and clears up some misunderstandings of the previous pension legislation. We will agree to have it pass its three stages on this day. If there is any legislation that should be passed quickly, it is this legislation.

There are a few things regarding this legislation which I do not quite understand. I do not understand why it says the legislation will come into effect when it is proclaimed. That seems to indicate that the government is not too anxious to pass it and have it come into effect. I would like to see this legislation come into effect the minute it is passed so the widows of the prisoners of wars can have the benefit of this legislation almost immediately, and not have to wait for it to be proclaimed by the Governor-in-Council at some later date. Obviously the members in the other place felt the same way, because third reading was given on the same day the bill was introduced. It seems ridiculous to have to wait for the government to sit back and decide when they might proclaim it.

I notice that by this legislation the number of commissioners has been changed. I do not know if there are more or fewer commissioners than there were previously, but under the present legislation a commission is defined, and forming part of that commission there are three different types of commissioners. Subclause 3(1) says:

There shall be a commission to be known as the Canadian Pension Commission, consisting of not fewer than eight and not more than fourteen commissioners, not more than ten ad hoc commissioners and such number of temporary commissioners as the Minister considers necessary.

The next subclause says that each commissioner shall be appointed by the Governor in Council.

Subclause 3(4) states:

[Senator Tremblay.]

Each temporary commissioner shall be appointed by the Minister to hold office during pleasure for a period of six months.

It looks as if there is a commission consisting of up to 14 commissioners, which is appointed by the Governor in Council. Then the minister can appoint as many ad hoc commissioners as he wishes to serve during pleasure. The minister should advise when there will be a vacancy so if anyone wishes to get a job they can let the minister know. In that way we could eliminate part of the backlog of applications from veterans who are seeking pensions.

Perhaps we could ask the minister to appoint people who understand veterans and who understand their suffering. Perhaps we can then rush some of these applications through, and not hold them up for six months or nine months or two years before a hearing takes place.

This is a worthwhile piece of legislation, because it will give consideration to former prisoners of war in Africa who were not considered in the past. However, those former prisoners of war will only be considered if the commission decides there are extenuating circumstances. If the commission feels there are extenuating circumstances, then they can be considered for a pension because they were prisoners of war. In the past they could not be considered, because Africa was not considered a war zone. One of the most beneficial aspects of this amendment is that the disability pension and the prisoner of war pension are being amalgamated so that on the death of a pensioner receiving 48 per cent or more of the two pensions combined the widow can get a full pension. On the death of a pensioner receiving less than 48 per cent, the widow will receive only half the pension.

• (1710)

This legislation also provides that on the death of a prisoner of war the widow will continue to receive benefits for one year. Prior to this, the benefits carried on for one month, forcing the widow to find cheaper accommodation during a time of stress and heartbreak. Now the pension will continue for one year after the death, as though it were a disability pension, which is another great benefit.

But, honourable senators, there are other amendments that could have been made to this legislation. There is no reason in the world for a veteran, who happened to have married an English girl, a French girl, or a Dutch girl, and who lives outside of Canada, to have to come all the way back to Canada and reside in Canada for one year in order to qualify for a pension. The veteran served overseas and was disabled overseas, so I see no need for that veteran to have to live in Canada in order to qualify for a pension. The legislation should be further amended so that there is no residency requirement required for a veteran to qualify for a disability pension.

The promoter of the bill has said that veterans will now be able to receive pensions if they suffered radiation burns. I believe that that was possible all along if a veteran could get some doctor at the Pension Board who would say that the cause of the veteran's cancer was exposure to radiation. But no doctor would ever admit that, yet a high percentage of veterans who were down in Nevada and who were exposed to radiation, or who were involved in the clean up of explosions of nuclear reactors here in Canada, end up with leukaemia and die. Many are still sick but cannot prove that that is the cause of their leukaemia, and so cannot receive a pension. This legislation should make it easier for those people who were in Nevada and other places where they were exposed to radiation to obtain pensions. Those Canadians who served in Japan on the clean-up crews, and who were exposed to radiation after the atomic bomb, should be able to receive pensions. They were certainly exposed to radiation. We now know the dangers of that radiation exposure. Such provisions should be in the legislation, but they are not.

I believe the day has come when all war veterans who receive a disability pension, or who have served overseas or in Canada and are unable to support themselves and their family, and who are 60 years of age or over, or under 60 years of age and disabled and unable to support their families, should receive the War Veterans Allowance. As it is today, if a veteran did not serve overseas or receive a disability pension or did not travel in dangerous waters, he does not qualify. I know people in Prince Edward Island who are war veterans and who joined up in Charlottetown and went across the Northumberland Strait to Halifax, and because they crossed the Northumberland Strait they crossed "dangerous waters" and get the War Veterans Allowance. Those veterans who decided to join up in Charlottetown, but went over to Halifax to get their medicals and sign the papers, cannot receive a War Veterans Allowance, because they crossed the dangerous waters before they signed up. There is discrimination here against certain veterans. All veterans, regardless of where they lived in Canada, should have something in this legislation to protect them. They served to give us the freedom that we have today.

Honourable senators, each year the Minister of Veterans Affairs goes to Dieppe, Korea, or some other place, to honour the great Canadian soldiers who served in the two World Wars and the Korean War. I suggest that the minister, when going on those trips with a planeload of veterans, also take some of Canada's young people so that they will see first hand and understand what our Canadian soldiers went through, and see the appreciation on the faces of those people who lived in Holland and France during the war, so that on every November 11 Canada's young people will remember our veterans. If we do not show our young people what our veterans did for us in both World Wars and the Korean War, it will not be long before we will not be singing O Canada or God Save the Queen in this country. I think it is time that we showed more respect for our veterans and a little honour for our country.

I have had people approach me in support of this legislation from the Royal Canadian Legion, the Council of Veterans, the War Amputees, and other veterans' organizations. They support this legislation, but are looking forward to other legislation to support the veterans of this country. I will support the government in getting this legislation passed as quickly as possible.

To show the promoter of this legislation that it has the support of both sides of the chamber, I propose that the bill receive third reading today so that it can receive Royal Assent as quickly as possible.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I have one brief comment to make in response to the remarks made by Senator Bonnell. He referred to the desirability of adding to the groups who visit war graves, battlefields, and so forth. He suggested that young people accompany the minister and the veterans.

I had the good fortune of representing the Senate at the 40th Anniversary of the Dieppe Raid in 1982 and at the 45th Anniversary of the Dieppe Raid in 1987. On the first occasion there was a substantial and extremely attractive group of Canadians of high school age, both boys and girls, who accompanied the delegation. They were extremely well received everywhere we went. I thought it was a practice of the Department of Veterans Affairs to include young people generally. I was very disappointed when I attended the 45th Anniversary of the Dieppe Raid in August of this year to see no young people had been included.

I merely rise to emphasize the desirability of implementing the suggestion that Senator Bonnell has made in his remarks.

204 [Translation]

Hon. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a short question for Senator Tremblay. Like all my other colleagues, I support this bill. Many things remain to be done, but I shall not take up the time of the Senate by listing them today.

I would like to ask Senator Tremblay whether the information he received from the department shows how many people in Canada will benefit from Bill C-100 and at what cost.

Senator Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, if I rise once more to speak at the second reading stage, am I not in effect closing the debate?

Hon. Eymard Corbin: No, if it is only to reply to a question asked by a senator.

Senator Tremblay: Shall I reply first to the question asked by Senator Thériault?

The Hon. the Speaker: Yes, Senator Tremblay.

Senator Tremblay: I cannot provide the figures requested by Senator Thériault. However, I can assure him that I shall ask for them and communicate them to Senator Thériault as soon as possible.

Senator Thériault: Very well, Senator Tremblay.

Senator Corbin: Will the honourable senators allow me to ask a question of Senator Tremblay? Will the commission still have its headquarters at the same location?

Senator Tremblay: After reading the bill, I have the feeling that it will. However, as I read it very quickly, I cannot be positive.

● (1720)

[English]

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I would like to make a few brief remarks.

Every year I am invited to one of our Legion branches in Newfoundland. This bill was mentioned on my last visit there. I know that the veterans down there were looking forward to it and hoping for quick passage of it. When I go back home I will be happy to be able to tell them that it was passed in this house, and that this house did all three readings in one day in order to expedite the matter.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Tremblay: I am sorry, maybe I do not quite understand the procedure to be followed in the circumstances. I would have liked to make a few comments after those of Senator Bonnell.

Do I make them now or when I move third reading, with leave of the Senate?

The Hon. the Speaker: Yes, Senator Tremblay, at third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move this bill be now read the third time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, I just have a few comments to add to those Senator Bonnell made on second reading.

About the coming into force of this legislation, the impression I got from my conversations with the minister and his officials is that, as far as he is concerned, at least, we can be sure the language used does not mean it will be postponed indefinitely but that it will really occur as soon as possible and that Senator Bonnell's wish will come true.

I can understand Senator Bonnell's questions about the membership of the commission if he has before him the bill as passed by the other place yesterday which does not show what changes have been made to what was there before.

There are no fundamental changes to the membership of the commission. I have the text of the existing legislation that says exactly the same thing, at least in French: "est établie". The word "établie" is changed.

The act as it stands now says that there should be not less than eight commissioners and that the Governor in Council may appoint up to fourteen at his discretion.

Instead of "not less" the clause reads "consisting of not fewer than eight and not more than fourteen", which means essentially the same thing. Another phrase already present in the act is also found in the bill: "not more than fourteen ad hoc commissioners".

I do not see any substantial change compared to the act, which I must say may be open to criticism from that point of view, but there is no change.

Finally, concerning Senator Bonnell's remarks on the absence of amendments to make benefits for veterans even better, I will transmit his suggestions to the minister. This is made in the same spirit as Bill C-100 which is a great step forward. Since everybody agrees, I am deeply convinced that the minister will try and get better benefits at a later date.

I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[English]

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment,

And on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.:

That this motion be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology with instructions to review the following matters and to report thereon to the Senate:

(a) To establish the general program called for in the terms of reference of the special committee.

(b) In relation to this program, to provide an opinion on the relative ability to implement this program compared to that of a Royal Commission.

(c) To provide an estimate of the costs and the duration of the committee's study.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Flynn.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I was not here last Thursday when my amendment was briefly discussed by Senator Frith and Senator Argue.

I agree that I have always said that I would not insist on my amendment if there was a general agreement in the Senate to have this committee set up. However, that does not mean that I am satisfied with the explanation given by Senator Argue. All of my objections, and those which arise from the speech made by Senator David, remain.

However, if the Deputy Leader of the Opposition indicates that on their side they favour the setting up of this committee, I would just say that my amendment will be defeated on division and the motion will be carried on division. If that is the wish of the Senate, then I do not insist on my motion, but I would like to know if this is the sentiment of the majority of senators.

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, it might be, but on division.

● (1740)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my understanding was that the Liberal caucus has discussed this on many occasions, and I understand that it supports Senator Argue's motion. Senator Le Moyne's comments encouraged me to say "was" instead of "is." As far as I understand the situation, it is in support, but perhaps Senator Le Moyne has some explanation as to why he says, "on division," which, I assume, means that he is not in favour of this motion. I did not quite understand his comment.

Senator Le Moyne: Just for the reason, honourable senators, that I gave the other day. I am afraid that this puts into question the fundamentals of science. For me, medicine put into question, as are for example, tensorial calculus and stochastic calculus and probabilities and matters like that. I do not agree. I will vote against the motion, because I do not think it is opportune and justified.

We can have an inquiry on the way medicine is distributed and provided, but not on the fundamentals.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, does the honourable Senator Flynn wish to withdraw his amendment?

Senator Flynn: No, I want it on the record. I want the question put, and it will not carry, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

An Hon. Senator: On division!

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.:

That this motion be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology with instructions to review the following matters and to report thereon to the Senate:

(a) To establish the general program called for in the terms of reference of the special committee.

(b) In relation to this program, to provide an opinion on the relative ability to implement this program compared to that of a Royal Commission.

(c) To provide an estimate of the costs and the duration of the committee's study.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt Senator Flynn's motion?

Senator Argue: No.

An Hon. Senator: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea?"

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay?"

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion the "nays" have it.

An Hon. Senator: On division!

Motion negated, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those in favour of the motion by Senator Argue please say "yea."

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, before we proceed to vote, I would like to ask a fundamental question of Senator Argue.

I have the feeling that since we do not have any detailed information on such a wide ranging subject as that which Senator Argue's committees want to tackle, we do not have any idea—unless that has been said in my absence, Senator Argue, in which case I regret not having read the transcription, which has not been forwarded to me—in any case I do not have the slightest idea of how much such an investigation would cost. Moreover, and I refer again to the health inquiry in the province of Quebec which is to table its report on December 18 next, I mentioned a figure of $6 million, but I am told that the cost is actually more than that. It is an inquiry that is quite similar to that proposed by Senator Argue. That commission of inquiry, which was to sit for eighteen months, eventually lasted 24 months. This is to show that for a single province, an inquiry as far reaching as the evaluation of the health care system that includes the study of alternative medicines, which are not yet part of the official medicine in many cases, as well as the impact of such factors as stress, unemployment and new technologies, implies in my view a staggering scope of investigation. Dozens of researchers might be required to answer questions as precise or as imprecise as that mentioned by Senator Argue.

I suggest that we are taking on an enormous responsibility today by authorizing in effect such a commission without knowing as fully as we would like what the parameters are of what ultimately amounts to practically a royal commission on health care services and paramedical services, as well as on prevention factors, then on to the treatment and finally the mortality causes among the Canadian people.

[English]

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments of Senator David, and I think I did, at least in some way, endeavour to deal with this when I was making my remarks last Thursday.

I would have no idea in my mind—and when the committee is set up, I would speak as one of the committee members—of making such a broad, thorough and in-depth study as obviously is being made in the province of Quebec with all of the researchers that Senator David has talked about.

I would look at this study as one that would examine the health care system and certain principles in a very broad way, but once having made, shall we say, a broad assessment, then it would bring that broad assessment together to concentrate or focus on certain particular aspects. Perhaps, after due consideration, the committee would make certain general recommendations.

The more I look into this whole matter, the more I believe that a great many excellent scientific papers are now available. Some of them are as a result of commissions and some are as a result of studies. Some of them have been prepared by a professor emeritus of one university or another and by doctors who have different practices. There is a great body of scientific material available that could be gathered together by the committee, and with a very modest number of research people who are competent to look at the area of concern to the committee, we could do some useful work.

It seems to me that the Senate can undertake studies of this magnitude for a lot less money than could royal commissions. We would have the benefit of the views of those senators who are medical doctors and of senators from both sides of the chamber. I would think that we might all cooperate and take into account Senator David's important views and try to make a broad assessment, but concentrating on particular aspects and, hopefully, use good judgment and reason. I hope that we could make suggestions that could result in a greater emphasis on, if we decided to do so, preventive medicine and, perhaps, certain other health practices, which would, in total, show a direction which, if followed by governments, might have a beneficial effect on Canadians and which might be more in keeping with the budgetary provisions available to governments.

I think we could do some practical, good work in this field.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps, for the sake of order, we should have something on the record to indicate that we gave leave or special leave to have a mini debate launched in the middle of a vote so that this will not be turned up ten years from now, or at any other time, as a precedent for starting a debate while we are in the middle of a vote. I did not want to interfere with the legitimate concerns of Senator David and with Senator Argue's response, but I do not think it is a good idea to start a debate in the middle of a vote.

● (1740)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I do not feel there is any difficulty. There was no agreement that the two questions be put consecutively. We did have a vote on Senator Flynn's amendment. It seems to me that debate on the main motion simply continues. There was no agreement or deal to have the two questions put consecutively, so I think that it is quite right and proper to have a debate on the main motion at this time, now that we have disposed of the motion in amendment. We have thrown aside certain suggestions; therefore, we still have to debate the contents of the main motion. I might mention that I also want to participate in that debate; I have just risen on a point of order.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not agree at all with that point of view. When the question is called, any motions in amendment should be put, after which the motion should be put. I do not think we need a special agreement to do that. As far as I understand it, the debate was closed on the main motion and has now been closed on the motion in amendment. In any event, I disagree with the proposition that in the normal course, if a motion is put and a motion in amendment is put, we must then have some special agreement not to have them dealt with in sequence but to have the amendment dealt with, debated and put, and then have the debate opened again on the main motion.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, having regard to the time, could we finish this matter or agree to come back this evening?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I regret that I do not agree with the Honourable Senator Frith. We had a motion, and an amendment was made to that motion by the Honourable Senator Flynn. That motion in amendment was defeated. We are now back to the main motion, and, indeed, we could entertain another amendment to it if that were desired. Each stands on its own. When a vote is called, we must call the motion in amendment first—if there is a subamendment, that would be called first—and then we deal with the main motion. Once we have dealt with the motion in amendment, we return to the main motion and the process can start again. I think we should really get this clear in our rules, if it is not clear; otherwise, it could lead to confusion. My impression is that we are back to the main motion, subject to further amendment if anyone wishes to move one, and that the only thing that would terminate debate on the main motion would be the mover's rising to speak. The mover of the motion would effectively then close the debate.

[Translation]

Senator David: Honourable senators, I think Senator Molgat helped me a lot to clarify my own thoughts about Senator Argue's motion. I wonder whether Senator Argue would agree to an amended version of his motion that would establish a committee, with the twelve members that he wants, to examine the feasibility of a health care study in Canada. The committee would define the parameters of the study Senator Argue wishes to conduct, establish specific limits as to its scope and prepare estimates of its cost and duration. In essence, it would be a feasibility study of the kind that is made before very big projects are undertaken, when you do not know exactly where you are going.

Under these conditions, I would be very willing to co-operate, after we know precisely what is to be done, how much it will cost and how long it will take. Otherwise, the budget of the study may be modest, but then its report would be modest too and would not add anything to what we presently have, in terms of a sophisticated assessment of the practice of medicine and paramedical sciences. I am certain this is not what you want. Your goal is to improve health care, but since I have been in this field for quite some time, I have a very good knowledge of its parameters. I do not think it would be done in the time frame mentioned in your motion, particularly without knowing how to do it.

So I am wondering whether you would agree to such an amendment which would provide you within three to six months with an appropriately designed and well structured plan showing exactly where to go. All of this could be done here in Ottawa and no travel would be involved. The travel you were thinking of could take place in a second phase as a result of comments or recommendations made in the first feasibility phase. If you agree, then I would be more than willing to co-operate.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, if I may, I will make one additional remark on this point of order on procedure. I understood, and the record might show it, that the sequence was not as was described by Senator Corbin or Senator Molgat. I understood that the motion in amendment had been put and defeated, and that the main motion had been put. If the main motion had been put for a vote, then I do not think debate is in order. If, on the other hand, the main motion had not been put, that is a different question.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I want to disagree in a friendly way with Senator Frith. How can one have an understanding of the amendment if one does not put it in context? That is why the main motion is put and the motion in amendment is read. It does not mean that once the amendment is defeated we must immediately put the question on the main motion.

Senator Frith: No, we do not have to, but in this case that is what happened.

Senator Corbin: I suppose that Senator Frith misses my point entirely.

Senator Frith: Apparently we miss each other's points.

[Translation]

Senator Molgat: I have a different point of order which could be considered a response to Senator David's suggestion.

The concern you have raised is one that the Senate has had for a long time. That is why the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders suggested some eighteen months ago, I believe, an amendment requested by the Senate. Senator David should go to page 77 of our rules where procedural guidelines for the financial operation of Senate committees are found.

Today, we are simply approving the principle. Once the principle is approved, the committee must be established and it will decide on its own operation and budget. It cannot spend money before the budget is approved by the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. This committee reports to the Senate which makes a decision on expenses. In the meantime there will be a debate in committee once it is set up. This is precisely what he intends to do. The membership will have to draw up a budget which will be restrictive.

You will note that in the proposal before you, there is a 12-month time frame, according to the guidelines of that committee. Then, that will thus be doing a little of what you are asking. Perhaps it will not be done in depth as much as you wished, but surely it can be done under those guidelines.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: The principle will have been approved.

Senator Molgat: The principle will be accepted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Under the motion of Senator Argue, the principle will be agreed to.

Senator David: I apologize, honourable senators, because as a result of my inexperience I am probably asking questions for which I am not used to readymade answers. Does that mean that Senator Argue's committee will be able to carry out everything that is provided for in the motion or, once the budget is drawn up, will it have to come back to the Senate to obtain leave to carry on with the work which it will be asked to do?

Senator Molgat: No, the principle will be approved if we pass the motion. What has not been passed yet, is the funding needed to proceed. That funding of course will control what will be done in committee. The committee can only spend the amount approved by the Senate Committee on Internal Economy and finally approved by the Senate. The work plan will be based on the budget and vice versa.

Senator David: Yes, but what happens first? Is it the budget or the objectives pursued by Senator Argue? If the Committee on Internal Economy says: "That's fine, we give you a budget of $300,000" then we will work for $300,000.

But if we set objectives which, to the best of our knowledge, call for one million dollars, what will the committee do? Refuse it or accept it? Is this the procedure? Just to know how much it will cost, we will need well prepared researchers to assess the major objectives.

Then, which comes first? The budget or the objectives? I would have thought that we should assess the objectives and the budget together, refer them to the Committee on Internal Economy, which would then decide to give or not to give approval depending on the amount requested. I am under the impression that we are now confusing the two things.

● (1750)

[English]

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, perhaps I might say a word in response.

Senator Guay: Close the debate!

The Hon. the Speaker: I think, Senator Argue, that if you speak now, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Is the honourable senator closing the debate?

Senator Argue: Yes.

Senator Robertson: Before the honourable senator does so, may I say a few words?

Senator Argue: Yes.

Senator Robertson: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with Senator David's remarks. For some time now—because this item has been on the order paper for a while—I have read and reread the preamble to Senator Argue's motion, and I do not know what in the world we are getting into. It is such a very broad subject. The provinces, of course, deliver the services and are living up to the principles of the Canada Health Act.

A lot has been done provincially on preventive health care and a lot has been published—I am sure that professional people would support me in this regard—by recognized scientists; and, of course, a lot has been published which is not recognized.

I do not know how we would begin to start this study unless we had some very strict guidelines. Senator David referred to a Quebec study involving $6 million. If we are looking toward a national study, I would hate to see a committee of the Senate begin a study that was not useful or which could not be considered as being a worthwhile study. If that were so, the results could be questioned.

I have no hesitation in saying that if we set up a committee to do what I am reading and rereading here, we would be multiplying the $6 million to which Senator David referred. I really have grave reservations about this.

I would like to support Senator David's recommendation, which I believe was in the form of a suggested amendment to the motion. Surely we could then explore in some detail the purpose of this committee and nail down the limitations—because unless we are able to do that, we will not achieve our purpose and we will end up with a piece of work that is not worthy of the Senate. I really have some very grave misgivings about this.

One person's interpretation of prevention is not another person's interpretation, and I for one would not want to be a member of that committee unless it were nailed down very solidly. I am sure that we could get 12 interested senators who would work very hard on the committee; but I am terribly nervous about it, honourable senators, and I really would like to support Senator David's amendment to the motion.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, in view of the hour and of the comments that have been made in the past little while, I believe it would be fair and in the interests of honourable senators not to put the question. The subject seems to have generated a great deal of concern and interest, and in fairness to other honourable senators who have no way of knowing that we would be sitting here at 10 or 12 minutes after 6, and who might want to express an opinion, it might be more appropriate to hold the motion over until tomorrow and try to deal with it then.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have endeavoured to cooperate. The motion has been on the order paper for six months. I do not know how much longer it should be required. There was quite an interchange in the course of the debate last Thursday, and I was under the impression that the decision was going to be made today.

I do not mind making a strong defence of the broad terms as they now exist, and I do not believe that honourable senators on the committee would undertake any unnecessary wide ranging discussion that would involve a budget of $6 million. There is a great body of scientific evidence out there, and we would not be groping in the dark. The Canada Health Plan has some problems. I think we can all agree on that. There is a large volume of evidence, including that from royal commissions, and so on, and I would think that the 12 senators who would constitute the committee—there would first be a steering committee—would decide on the objectives and the details of this inquiry.

As Senator Molgat has said, the money to be spent can only be determined after the Senate has given its approval. The commitment was that the question should be settled this week. Tomorrow we will be in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, and on Thursday we may have Royal Assent. I think that a decision should be made by the Senate.

On motion of Senator Corbin, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, dare I suggest that all remaining orders stand?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Then I so dare. Honourable senators, I realize that Senator Cochrane had intended to give us her views on her inquiry this afternoon, as her maiden address; but I wonder if she would bear with us for another day when she will have a larger and more receptive audience, and when we can all receive the benefit of her words of wisdom.

With that small caveat, I would ask that all inquiries stand, as well as the two motions.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

APPENDIX "A"(See p. 2374)IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976*BILL TO AMEND — REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

TUESDAY, December 15, 1987

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

FIFTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, September 16, 1987, examined the said bill and now reports the same with the following amendments and observations.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN NEIMAN
Chairman

PART I

AMENDMENTS

Amendments

Explanatory Notes

1. Page 1, clause 1: Strike out lines 22 and 23 and substitute the following:

"(c) to deter those who assist in the clandestine entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the"

2. Pages 4 and 5, clause 4:

- (a) Strike out lines 29 to 50, on page 4, and lines 1 to 3, on page 5, and substitute the following:

"(a) examine within seven days, in camera, the security or criminal intelligence reports considered by the Minister and the Solicitor General and hear any other evidence or information that may be presented by or on behalf of those Ministers and may, on the request of the Minister or the Solicitor General, hear all or part of such evidence or information in the absence of the person named in the certificate and any counsel representing the person where, in the opinion of the Chief Justice or the designated judge, as the case may be, the evidence or information should not be disclosed on the grounds that such disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons;"

Purposes

This amendment would replace the word "smuggling" with the words "clandestine entry." The word smuggling is a term applicable to goods, not to people. This change mirrors the change to the "aiding and abetting" offences for which the Committee recommends concentrating on clandestine entry. (Para. 12)

Security Certificates

This amendment would safeguard the fundamental right of a person to be present to hear the case against him or herself. It would permit a person who is the subject of a security certificate to be present during the presentation of the government's case to the judge, except where there are very compelling reasons for exclusion. The compelling reasons would relate to national security or to the safety of persons. This change would ensure respect for the principle that people have the right to know the case against themselves and would bring this aspect of the procedure into compliance with section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (the Charter). (Paras 13-19)

As a consequence of permitting the person to be present during much of the government's case, it would no longer be necessary to provide the subject of the certificate with a written summary of the government's evidence. (Para. 20)

"(b)determine forthwith whether or not the person named in the certificate is a danger to the public in Canada, and if not, subject to such terms and conditions as the Chief Justice or the designated judge, as the case may be, deems appropriate, order that the person be released from detention;"

The new paragraph (b) would provide for a review by the Federal Court judge of the detention of the person who is the subject of the security certificate. It would remedy the arbitrary nature of the detention so that only those who pose a danger to the public would be detained. It would thus bring the provision into compliance with section 9 of the Charter. (Paras 21-23)

3. Page 5, clause 4: Strike out lines 7 to 12 and substitute the following:

"(d)determine whether the certificate filed by the Minister and the Solicitor General is reasonable and, if found not to be reasonable, quash the certificate; and"

This amendment would clarify that the Federal Court review is concerned with the reasonableness of the security certificate itself and not just the reasonableness of the original decision to issue the certificate. The amendment would ensure that the person's case would be taken into account, a principle of fundamental justice guaranteed by section 7 of the Charter. (Paras 24 and 25)

4. Page 7, clause 5: Strike out lines 13 to 20 and substitute the following:

"subject of an inquiry, is a person
(a) described in paragraph 19(1)(c) or (j), or
(b) who has been convicted in"

Precluding from the Refugee System People Found to be Security Risks

This amendment would ensure that people found to be security risks would not be precluded from making a refugee claim. People convicted of serious criminal offences and war crimes would continue to be precluded. This would bring Canada into compliance with the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees (the Convention) with regard to security cases. (Paras 26-35)

5. Pages 8 and 9, clause 8:

- (a) Strike out lines 13 to 30, on page 8, and substitute the following:

"91.1 Where the Minister believes on reasonable grounds that a vehicle within

(a) the internal waters of Canada, or

(b) the territorial sea of Canada is bringing any person into Canada in contravention of this Act or the regulations, the Minister may direct that the vehicle be escorted to the nearest port of disembarkation and any such direction may be enforced by such force as is reasonably necessary."

Turning Ships Around

This amendment would remove the power to order a ship not to enter or to leave Canadian waters and would provide for it to be escorted to port. This would provide the best deterrence for organizers of irregular boat arrivals because it would ensure that they would be fully punished. It would also ensure that Canada could meet its commitments to refugees under the Convention by dealing with passengers in the same manner as all other refugee claimants. Further, the amendment would ensure compliance with section 7 of the Charter. The Committee notes that in international meetings Canada has urged other nations to accept ship arrivals. (Paras 36-47)

- (b) Strike out lines 38 to 41, on page 8, and substitute the following:

"(a) the internal waters of Canada,
or
(b) the territorial sea of Canada"

- (c) Strike out lines 2 to 7 on page 9.

This amendment is consequential on the removal of the reference to "twelve nautical miles of the outer limit of the territorial sea of Canada" above.

This amendment would remove the definition of "Convention." It is no longer necessary because the reference to the Convention would be removed by the amendment set out in paragraph (a) above.

6. Page 9, clause 9:

"Aiding and Abetting" Offences

- (a) Strike out lines 21 to 28, on page 9, and substitute the following:

This amendment would target criminal prosecutions specifically at those who intentionally encourage false claims (a) and at people who assist clandestine entry (b).

"95.1 Every person who

- (a) knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or knowingly attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet a person to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent refugee claim, or
- (b) knowingly brings or attempts to bring or otherwise knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or knowingly attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet any other person to come into Canada in a clandestine manner

The amendment responds to the concerns of many witnesses and would permit humanitarian organizations to continue their work without fear of prosecution. Abuse of the system by those who knowingly assist people to make fraudulent refugee claims and who assist people to enter the country surreptitiously would be clearly punishable. (Paras 48-54) is guilty of an offence and liable"

- (b) Strike out lines 37 to 45, on page 9, and line 1, on page 10, and substitute the following:

This amendment would deal with organizers of larger groups, in the same manner as proposed above, i.e., targeting the offence to provide for prosecution only of those who knowingly aided, abetted, etc., manifestly unfounded or fraudulent claims, or who encouraged entry in a clandestine manner. (Paras 48-54)

"95.2 Every person who

- (a) knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or knowingly attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet a group of ten or more persons to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent refugee claim, or
- (b) knowingly brings or attempts to bring or otherwise knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or knowingly attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet any group of ten or more persons to come into Canada in a clandestine manner is guilty of an"

7. Page 10, clause 9: Add, immediately after line 6, the following:

"95.21 No proceeding for an offence under section 95.1 or section 95.2 shall be instituted without the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada."

8. Page 11, clause 11: Strike out line 39 and substitute the following:

"grounds to believe that there will be found"

9. Page 12, clause 11: Strike out lines 46 to 48 and substitute the following:

"warrant exist but the delay necessary to obtain a warrant would result in danger to human life or safety."

10. Page 13, clause 11: Strike out lines 1 to 7 and substitute the following:

"(6) Where an immigration officer or a peace officer believes that the grounds for a warrant exist under subsection (1) but that it would be impracticable to appear personally before a justice of the peace, the officer may submit an information on oath by telephone or other means of telecommunication to a justice designated for the purpose by the chief judge of the provincial court having jurisdiction in the matter, and the provisions of section 443.1 of the Criminal Code, modified according to the circumstances, shall apply."

This amendment would provide an additional safeguard by requiring the personal written consent of the Attorney General of Canada before a prosecution could be launched under the aiding and abetting sections. (Para. 54)

Search, Seizure and Forfeiture

Amendments 9 to 13 are proposed in order to ensure that the wording of the search and seizure sections clearly complies with section 8 of the Charter. (Paras 55-57)

This amendment would provide that a search warrant would only be issued where there are reasonable grounds to believe evidence will be found. This change is made to reflect the holding of the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter v. Southam, where the wording "evidence may be found" was rejected. Departmental officials agreed to this proposed change. (Paras 58-63)

This amendment would restrict the power to search without a warrant to situations involving human life or safety. Search without warrant has been held to be prima facie unreasonable under section 8 of the Charter and thus should be available in only the most limited circumstances. Prevention of loss or destruction of evidence is not a sufficient reason to override Charter rights. (Paras 64-67)

This amendment would authorize the use of telewarrants where it is not practicable to appear personally before a justice to obtain a warrant. This would permit immigration officials or peace officers to act quickly, but still retain protection of the fundamental rights of citizens and all others in Canada. (Para. 67)

11. Page 13, clause 11: Strike out lines 8 to 15.

The lines struck out would have provided broad powers to immigration officers or peace officers to break open doors, windows, locks, etc., in their search for vehicles or evidence, similar to powers in the Narcotics Control Act and Customs Act. Such powers are excessive in relation to immigration matters. (Para. 68)

12. Page 13, clause 11: Add, immediately after line 7, the following:

"(7) A warrant issued under subsection (1) shall be executed by day, unless the justice of the peace, by the warrant, authorizes execution of it by night."

This amendment would further safeguard the right guaranteed by section 8 of the Charter to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure, by requiring that warrants be executed by day except where there are valid reasons for carrying out the search by night. (Para. 69)

13. Pages 20, 21 and 22, clause 12:

- (a) Strike out lines 42 to 44, on page 20, and substitute the following:

"detention for a period not exceeding forty-eight hours from the time the person was first detained under this Act."

Detention for Identification or Security Purposes

These changes would bring the detention provisions into conformity with existing practice and with the guarantees in sections 7, 9 and 10 of the Charter, by providing for independent review of the reasons for detention within forty-eight hours and weekly thereafter if detention continues. (Paras 70-84)

- (b) Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

"(2) At the expiration of the period set out in subsection (1), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator who may make an order for

The amendment contained in paragraph (a) states that new arrivals could be detained up to forty-eight hours on the basis that their identity was not established or that there is reason to suspect they may be a security risk. (Para. 85)

(a) the release from detention of the person, subject to such terms and conditions as the adjudicator deems appropriate in the circumstances, including the payment of a security deposit or the posting of a performance bond; or

Under the amendment provided for in paragraph (b), the detention of new arrivals could be continued after review by the independent adjudicator on identity or security grounds or on the grounds already provided in the Immigration Act, 1976 (that they pose a danger to the public or would not appear for immigration proceedings). Alternatively, they could be released. (Para. 85)

The Minister's certificate process is eliminated, since the government would be called on to establish the grounds for detention in the course of the review by the adjudicator.

(b) the continued detention of the person where, in the adjudicator's opinion

(i) the person's identity has not yet been established,

(ii) there is reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraphs 19(1)(e)(f)(g) or (j),

(iii) the person poses a danger to the public, or

(iv) the person would not otherwise appear for examination or inquiry or for removal from Canada."

- (c) Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

"(3) Where a person is detained under subsection (2), that person shall be brought before an adjudicator at least once during each seven day period thereafter, at which times the reasons for continued detention shall be reviewed."

- (d) Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

"(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) is not satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(b)(i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection (2)."

- (e) Add, immediately after line 32, on page 22, the following:

"(9) Every person detained under this section shall be informed that the person has the right to retain and instruct counsel and shall be given a reasonable opportunity to obtain such counsel."

This amendment would provide for weekly review of detention.

If, during the weekly review, the adjudicator is not satisfied that officials are making reasonable efforts to investigate the case, the adjudicator may order the release of the person detained. This puts a duty on the government to pursue its investigations diligently. (Para. 85)

This amendment would require officials to inform persons detained of the right to counsel, and permit them to obtain such assistance. (Para. 85)

PART II

OBSERVATIONS

---

1. Bill C-84 was presented to Parliament in the summer of 1987 in apparent response to the arrival by boat of 174 refugee claimants in Nova Scotia. The Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Benoît Bouchard, emphasized the importance of this bill in stopping abuse of Canada's immigration and refugee policies. Before the Committee on 8 December 1987 the Minister maintained that passage of the bill is needed to enable Canada "to control organized abuse of our immigration laws, deter the smuggling into Canada that jeopardizes human lives, and respond to security concerns." He stressed that these measures were necessary even though another bill - C-55, presently before Parliament - would reform the refugee status determination process.

2. Parliament was recalled on August 10 to deal with the legislation. The bill was passed by the House of Commons and referred to the Senate in September. Since our Committee began its consideration of the bill, over 400 individuals and organizations have sent comments and many also asked to appear before the Committee. We heard 37 witnesses who provided us with a comprehensive review of the issues involved.

3. Our witnesses included church and humanitarian groups from all regions, the Canadian Bar Association (Immigration Law Section), the Criminal Lawyers' Association, professors of constitutional and international law, experts in civil liberties and private citizens. Their views were forcefully expressed and virtually unanimous on the necessity of substantial changes to the bill. The only support we heard came from the Minister of Employment and Immigration and his officials. We were told by witnesses, and in written submissions, that various provisions in C-84 would, if enacted, be found to violate the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We were also told that several provisions would either violate, or seriously undermine, our commitment to human rights and to international refugee protection.

4. The Committee knows that we must approach constitutional questions very cautiously. We have given considerable thought to what our role should be as legislators now that the Charter is part of Canadian law and now that laws of Parliament which do not conform to it will be adjudged to be of no force and effect. After careful consideration of the evidence, the Committee is of the opinion that where major portions of a bill as it stands appear to be constitutionally defective, we, as legislators, must recommend change.

5. We are supported in that view by the courts themselves. In Reference re Education Act of Ontario and Minority Language Education Rights (1984), 10 D.L.R. (4th) 491 at 547, the Ontario Court of Appeal wrote:

6. The judiciary is not the sole guardian of the constitutional rights of Canadians. Parliament and the provincial Legislatures are equally responsible to ensure that the rights conferred by the Charter are upheld.

7. A similar point was made by Mr. Justice Dickson (as he then was), writing for the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter v. Southam, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145 at 169:

8. [I]t is the Legislature's responsibility to enact legislation that embodies appropriate safeguards to comply with the Constitution's requirements. It should not fall to the courts to fill in the details that will render legislative lacunae constitutional.

9. The Committee accepts this view of our responsibility. At a very minimum, we interpret that responsibility to be to recommend appropriate amendments to legislation where we believe that the legislation as presented would violate the Charter.

10. All of the witnesses before the Committee agreed that abuse of our immigration laws must stop. However, they pointed out that the drastic measures in this bill will not affect only those who would come to abuse our refugee system. For example, any person approaching our borders without proper documents - whether engaged in a fraudulent scheme or fleeing from persecution and danger - would be subject to the same measures. They could be detained without independent review for up to a month. If they had engaged in resistance to the government they had fled, they could be detained longer and classed as a security threat. Canadians assisting anyone arriving without proper documents would be liable to prosecution, including those who pursue the humanitarian refugee work that is a hallmark of Canada's international reputation.

11. Bill C-84 would give significant new powers to the Minister and immigration officials. These will be discussed in turn in this report, and the reasons for the Committee's amendments will be explained. Each and every amendment has been approved by at least a majority of the Committee.

PURPOSES

12. The first amendment is to the purposes clause. In dealing with later sections of the bill, the Committee concluded that the term "smuggling" properly refers to illegal importation of goods, not of persons. The Committee recommends in amendment 1 that the purposes clause be amended to refer to assisting people to come into Canada in a clandestine manner rather than smuggling.

SECURITY CERTIFICATES

13. The Committee is well aware of the need to safeguard Canada against threats to our security. We recognize the need to have a process in our immigration law that will permit us to deport permanent residents and visitors who are found to be security risks.

14. In 1984, the present system was instituted whereby the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) investigates a joint report of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Solicitor General that a permanent resident or a visitor is a security threat to Canada. SIRC makes a recommendation to the Governor in Council and the latter may direct the Minister to issue a security certificate.

15. Bill C-84 would retain the SIRC procedure for permanent residents, but for all others (which would include refugee claimants) it would institute a process whereby the Minister and the Solicitor General jointly file the certificate, which would then be reviewed by the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or a designated judge.

16. Most of the witnesses before the Committee argued that such a change would be unwise because of the expertise in security matters that SIRC as a specialized body has built up. With two different review processes for the same subject matter, inconsistency in approach and decisions may result. It was argued that treating similar cases in two different ways would be unfair and would violate section 7 of the Charter by providing fewer procedural protections to non-permanent residents than to permanent residents. The need for such a change is also somewhat unclear since we understand that SIRC has not been required to investigate a single refugee case as such since it began.

17. On the other hand, we heard the testimony of government officials that the present process is cumbersome and time-consuming. The Committee respects the government's decision in Bill C-84 that oversight regarding security matters for non-permanent residents should be given to the Federal Court. We do, however, propose three amendments to the Federal Court process which we believe are essential to bring it into conformity with the Charter.

18. Bill C-84 provides that the Federal Court judge who would examine the security or criminal intelligence reports upon which the certificate is based must exclude the person concerned from the hearing when the government presents its case, if the Minister or Solicitor General so requests. There would be no test provided for exclusion and no discretion would be left to the judge. Exclusion would leave no opportunity for cross-examination and the subject of the certificate would have less understanding of the case that he or she would have to meet. Both are essential parts of a fair process.

19. To deprive people of the fundamental right to hear the full case against themselves is to violate section 7 of the Charter: "Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice." Violation could only be justified on compelling grounds. The Committee agrees that exclusion from a hearing such as this can be justified where the evidence relates to national security matters or where disclosure of sources could endanger people's lives. But many witnesses argued that a blanket exclusionary power in the hands of either the Minister or the Solicitor General is too broad. The Committee therefore proposes in amendment 2(a) that the right to exclude people from the hearing should reside with the presiding judge, a process comparable to that followed by SIRC at the present time. This change would ensure compliance with section 7 of the Charter.

20. If this amendment is accepted, there would be no need to provide the person with a summary of information of the government's case. That provision clearly foresaw the exclusion of the person from the proceedings but is no longer needed if the person can be present.

21. Bill C-84 would make detention mandatory for all non-permanent residents who would be the subject of a security certificate, regardless of whether or not they are actually a danger to public safety and regardless of their sex, age or physical condition. Currently, detention is governed by section 104 of the Immigration Act, 1976 which permits detention for those who are a danger to the public or would not appear for further proceedings when required. This decision is made by an independent adjudicator and reviewed regularly.

22. Many witnesses pointed out that mandatory detention regardless of circumstances is arbitrary and likely violates section 9 of the Charter which states: "Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned." Even though Bill C-84 would require the Federal Court judge to begin hearing the case within seven days, the time it might take to reach a final decision could be quite unpredictable and would no doubt in some cases be lengthy.

23. On the other hand, the government's position is that the present system is unsatisfactory. Officials explained that in many cases, for security reasons, adjudicators cannot be given sufficient reasons why detention is desired, and people who might pose risks are consequently not detained. However, while we recognize the problem, the Committee would prefer a less extreme approach. The Committee proposes in amendment 2(b) that the judge of the Federal Court who, unlike the adjudicator, is not only permitted but is required to hear all the evidence, should perform a detention review at an early point in the hearing. Because the hearing must commence within seven days, this will mean that the period of mandatory, arbitrary detention will be greatly diminished.

24. Bill C-84 would require the judge to examine the basis for the issuance of a security certificate and to "determine whether the Minister's and the Solicitor General's decision to sign and file the certificate was reasonable on the basis of the information available to them, and, if found not to be reasonable, quash the certificate" (emphasis added). Witnesses pointed out that what might have been reasonable on the basis of information available to the Minister and the Solicitor General when they issued the certificate could be found to be unjustified by the judge after hearing witnesses and listening to the testimony of the person who is the subject of the certificate. It would make no sense to permit the judge to examine all the evidence and then restrict him or her to only part of it in reaching a decision.

25. The Committee concurs with the witnesses on this point and is encouraged in this view by the government officials themselves who agreed that amending the language would not offend the principle. Amendment 3 merely clarifies that the Federal Court would be concerned with the reasonableness of the security certificate itself and not just the reasonableness of the original decision of the Minister and the Solicitor General.

PRECLUDING FROM THE REFUGEE SYSTEM PEOPLE FOUND TO BE SECURITY RISKS

26. Bill C-84 provides that people who are security risks or who have been certified to be a danger to the public in Canada on criminal or war crimes' grounds would not be permitted to make a refugee claim. At the present time, such people are allowed to make a claim and, if their claim is successful, then the decision is made on deportation.

27. Our international commitments do not require that we give protection to all people who are found to be refugees. Article 32 of the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees permits us to deport refugees on grounds of national security or public order. Subsection (3) states that refugees to be expelled should be allowed a reasonable period within which to seek legal admission into another country. There might well be a country willing to accept a Convention refugee under these circumstances, but a person being expelled without a determination that he or she is a Convention refugee has no case to put either to another country or to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), whose representatives advised the Committee that they may assist Convention refugees in these cases, but only following determination of their status.

28. Witnesses before the Committee argued that the decision on the refugee claim should be made before the decision on deportation, as is the case, we understand, in all Western countries except Belgium at the present time. Only in that way can factors relating to the seriousness of the risk to Canada be weighed against the consequences to the person of return to the country of persecution.

29. Constitutionally, there are valid grounds to believe that forced removal to a country where persecution is feared would be a violation of section 12 of the Charter: "Everyone has the right not to be subject to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment." The European Commission on Human Rights has decided such a case in favour of the individual under the wording of Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights: "No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment." A constitutional law expert pointed out that exclusion of such people from the refugee process also violates section 7 of the Charter. Amnesty International asserted that the removal of persons to countries where they risk being tortured would be a clear violation of Article 3 of the U.N. Convention Against Torture, to which Canada is a signatory.

30. The Committee is also concerned that much of the security intelligence that would underlie the exclusion decision might be unreliable and possibly even fabricated because it would originate in the country of the person's origin and might be designed to discredit dissidents. Witnesses argued that sometimes this kind of "evidence" actually helps to prove the person is a bona fide refugee. Moreover, they stated that very few refugees are actually security risks. As previously mentioned, SIRC has not been required to deal with any refugee cases since its creation in 1984.

31. The Chairman of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee (RSAC) also pointed out that some of the security grounds for exclusion are highly subjective and could exclude some surprising people:

32. When we talk about protecting our borders and protecting our citizens, I think most of us are thinking of terrorist attacks or of people who come here to commit acts of violence, criminal attacks against individuals or subversion against the state.

33. However, this clause also includes a category of people in Canada who are working to - as the language says - "engage in or instigate the subversion by force of any government". This is a highly subjective part of the Act. These are people who have not been convicted of any offences and are not necessarily people who are terrorists. This description could include people such as journalists, parliamentarians, social workers or academics. It could include a large number of people who believe that the only way to overcome a tyrannical government is through force. For instance, it certainly would include the members of the ANC; and it would include those who argue in favour of the Contras who are seeking to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua by force. It would exclude from Canada people such as Nelson Mandela, who is in prison because he will not renounce the use of force to overthrow a tyrannical government.
34. As did the UNHCR, the Chairman of RSAC emphasized the importance of attempting to re-locate these people in a third country.
35. For the foregoing reasons, the Committee proposes in amendment 4 that people should not be precluded from the refugee determination system for security reasons. People convicted of serious crimes and war criminals should continue to be excluded.

TURNING SHIPS AROUND

36. Bill C-84 would give the Minister - or someone delegated by the Minister - the power to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canada's waters if the Minister on reasonable grounds believes the vehicle is bringing any person into Canada in violation of the Act or regulations. The Minister is directed to have "due regard to the safety of the vehicle and its passengers and to the Convention."
37. In his appearance before the Committee on December 8, the Minister stated that a ship would only be turned around if the government was absolutely sure that the passengers on board were not refugees, but he stressed that the bill was an important message to the world that Canada would not tolerate abuse. On the other hand, witnesses pointed out that in recent history Canada has only had two boatloads of refugee claimants - fewer than 400 people. The vast majority of abusers of the refugee system in the past few years have been people who arrived by air and, more importantly, who possessed the required documents.
38. Witnesses before the Committee presented a number of arguments why ships should not be turned around. Their reasons centred on logic, on our international obligations and on the Charter. They argued that, from a common sense point of view, turning a ship around would provide little deterrence to those who would organize schemes to bring people to Canada by ship in violation of our law. To such an organizer, turning the ship around would result in a total lack of punishment. Better to ensure that those involved are caught, fined, imprisoned, and suffer the loss of their ship if deterrence is the goal. It was also of concern to witnesses that passengers' lives could be threatened if a captain ordered to leave Canada's waters were to abandon them at sea.

39. From an international perspective, the witnesses argued that it is difficult to imagine how Canada could adhere to its international obligations in such a situation, although Bill C-84 says the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees is to be taken into account. Representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees spoke of what is implied by the reference to the Convention in the bill:

40. The reference to the Convention means that no decision to turn the boat around can be made until there are safeguards in the country of origin so that the person can be allowed to return to that country, its already having been established as a safe country. It is not possible to make a quick decision to say that these boats should be turned around. There should be safeguards so that the boats can go to a country where the people do not fear persecution.

41. They spoke also of the danger of turning a ship around to an unknown destination:

42. The bill, as amended by the House of Commons, gives an instruction to the minister to have regard to the Convention which is binding upon Canada. Internationally interpreted, that means you cannot send to an unknown destination someone who claims to be a refugee. However, you can do so if you find he is not a refugee, but not before that.

43. It is also possible that turning a ship around without allowing due process to any refugee claimants on board violates section 7 of the Charter by depriving them of a hearing. Although departmental witnesses testified that it is their belief that the rights under the Charter apply to people at a port of entry and not at sea, the matter is at present unresolved and the Committee is not persuaded that Charter rights do not apply whenever actions are taken pursuant to Canadian law.

44. In the case of Re Singh and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 177, the Supreme Court of Canada held that the protection of the Charter extends to "every human being who is physically present in Canada and by virtue of such presence amenable to Canadian law" (p. 202). As a result of that decision, refugee claimants can invoke the Charter and, in that context, section 7 requires that they be given an oral hearing before they can be returned to the country in which they claim to fear persecution.

45. Clearly, the issue of a claimant who has not yet landed in Canada but is in Canadian waters was not before the court in the Singh case. Yet the words "amenable to Canadian law" would seem to apply with equal force to the claimant still offshore as soon as the government takes action pursuant to a statute. If this analysis is correct, due process would require a hearing before returning a person to a country where persecution is feared. A hearing might not be required before returning a claimant to a third country but, as departmental witnesses have testified, unless the navy escorts the ship, or a crew is put on board, the Minister cannot be assured that a ship that has been turned around can or will go back to the port from which it came.

46. The Committee has been reminded of the positive example Canada set for the rest of the world in 1979 and 1980 when we urged the countries of Southeast Asia not to turn away boatloads of refugees. More sadly, we have also been reminded of the voyage of the St. Louis in 1939. Canada was not the only country, but was the last, to reject people whose subsequent deaths remain a potent memory in the Canadian consciousness.

47. The Committee has therefore concluded that ships should not be turned around at sea but should be brought to port. Amendment 5 reflects that view. The best deterrence for organizers of irregular boat arrivals is swift and sure punishment. The only appropriate treatment for passengers who claim to be refugees is speedy and just processing according to the laws which apply to all refugee claimants, whether they arrive by air, land or sea. Those rejected by the system should be returned to their country of origin swiftly. Only in that manner will others be deterred.

AIDING AND ABETTING

48. Bill C-84 would create offences with heavy penalties for knowingly organizing, inducing, aiding or abetting people to come into Canada without proper documents. The aiding and abetting sections were severely criticized by witnesses and are clearly of great concern to many Canadian citizens, particularly those working with refugees. Legal experts, church groups and refugee organizations argued that these sections would criminalize humanitarian work. An offence would be committed if a person aided someone to come into Canada without valid documents. Witnesses pointed out that many genuine refugees come to Canada without valid visas, passports or travel documents; on the other hand, many people making unfounded claims have the necessary documents. They stated that in a country where a person is in real danger, the very act of applying for a visa at a Canadian consulate may expose that person to even greater danger. Much of the work of church and refugee groups consists of advising such people how to get to Canada, and how to proceed to make a refugee claim through proper channels when they arrive. By the breadth of its wording, the clause appears to apply to such activities. In order to stay within the law, humanitarian groups would have to cease this work.

49. The question was raised before the Committee whether the aiding and abetting offences would be new or whether they already form part of the Immigration Act, 1976. Government officials asserted that the offences are not new; only the penalties are increased. In the government's view, church and humanitarian groups can be prosecuted now for bringing people into Canada without proper documents through the combined effect of sections 95(m), 99 and subsection 9(1) of the Act. Other witnesses disagreed, maintaining either that no offence presently exists or that the legal situation is unclear.

50. In response to the fears of church groups, the Minister assured them that the bill is not directed at their activities, and that they would not be prosecuted. On December 8, the Minister told the Committee: "Those people who assist undocumented refugees to go through the system are not under more of a threat with this legislation." He also pointed out that when government officials attempted to draft the clause more narrowly, loopholes were created.

51. Lawyers and law professors appearing as witnesses took issue with the Minister's statement that he did not intend to prosecute such groups. In their view, it is important as a principle of law to look at the actual words and the effect of a statute, not at the intention of those who propose the bill and would be charged with its implementation. Some witnesses, believing that the government would not prosecute church groups, argued against passage of a law that would not be enforced. Others argued that the law would have to be targeted much more specifically at the abuses to which the bill is directed.

52. In view of the serious concerns about this part of the bill, the Committee proposes amendment 6 to ensure that two types of activity form the subject matter of this offence. The law should apply to those who encourage people to come to Canada and make refugee claims knowing that the individuals in question have spurious cases. The problem of organizers or consultants who advise claimants to make false or misleading statements in connection with refugee proceedings is already addressed in the bill by the offence of "counselling false statements." That offence, however, does not reach people who encourage entrants to make unfounded claims, but without advising those claimants to lie. In such cases, the person makes a claim but offers no evidence to back it up.

53. The second activity that should be punishable is bringing people into Canada in a surreptitious manner. This is addressed by making it an offence knowingly to aid or abet anyone to come into Canada in a clandestine manner. This formulation, with no reference to smuggling, a term more properly applied to goods than to people, best expresses the essence of the offence. The Committee has previously recommended in amendment 1 that part (c) of the purposes of the bill be changed to refer to clandestine entry rather than smuggling.

54. The Minister, in his appearance on December 8, suggested that a safeguard could be added to reduce fears about prosecution under this section by inserting the requirement that the Attorney General of Canada consent to any such prosecution. Amendment 7 reflects that proposal.

SEARCH, SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE

55. Bill C-84 sets out extensive search, seizure and forfeiture powers and a procedure for return of forfeited goods. These powers would be exercisable by immigration officers or peace officers only in connection with contravention of the new offences of aiding and abetting groups of 10 or more undocumented persons and disembarking people at sea. In these circumstances, immigration officers would be empowered to seize vehicles as forfeit and to seize evidence; the powers would be similar to those granted to customs officers under the Customs Act.

56. Immigration officers currently have powers to arrest, detain or remove people from Canada, but not to search for and seize vehicles or evidence. In response to irregular arrivals and abusive refugee claims, Bill C-84 marks a departure from the present state of the law. In order to enforce new measures against abuse, the government has felt it necessary to extend search, seizure and forfeiture powers to immigration officers.

57. The questions before the Committee were whether such additional powers were necessary and, if so, how extensive such powers should be. Many witnesses called for the deletion of these provisions in their entirety, arguing that the powers of search and seizure in the Customs Act and the Criminal Code are sufficient. Others called for amendments to ensure the provisions would contain at least the minimum procedural safeguards to comply with the Charter. The Committee has concluded that such amendments are possible.

58. The bill as currently drafted would provide that a search warrant could be issued where a justice of the peace was satisfied "that there are reasonable grounds to believe that there may be found" vehicles or evidence relating to contravention of the offences of organizing entry of 10 or more persons and disembarking at sea.

59. This provision appears to be constitutionally defective for failing to meet the minimum standards consistent with section 8 of the Charter: "Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure." These standards were set out in a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Hunter v. Southam, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145. The court stated that there is a problem with a stipulation of a reasonable belief that evidence may be uncovered in a search. Such a formulation would seek to justify intrusions by the state on the basis of the possibility of finding evidence. Mr. Justice Dickson (as he then was) said:

60. This is a very low standard which would validate intrusion on the basis of suspicion, and authorize fishing expeditions of considerable latitude. It would tip the balance strongly in favour of the state and limit the right of the individual to resist, to only the most egregious intrusions. I do not believe that this is a proper standard for securing the right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure.

61. The search and seizure provisions in Bill C-84 are virtually identical to those in the Customs Act. The only significant change seems to be that the latter act requires execution of a search warrant by day unless the justice of the peace specifically authorizes execution by night, whereas Bill C-84 is silent on the point. Because they are essentially identical, issues of constitutionality raised by the search and seizure provisions of C-84 are equally relevant to the provisions of the Customs Act.

62. In this connection, the legislative history of the Customs Act is revealing. Revisions to the Customs Act began as Bill C-6, given first reading on 16 January 1984 under the former government. They were obviously drafted, then, before the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Hunter v. Southam, which was released later in 1984. Bill C-6 was not passed and was reintroduced as Bill C-59 by the present government. The search and seizure provisions were unchanged, except for the addition of the power to execute a warrantless search in exigent circumstances. In dealing with the Customs Act, the issue of the grounds for authorizing a search warrant was not raised, although in the interim Hunter v. Southam had been decided by the Supreme Court.

63. Officials agreed with the Committee that amendments were required to the English text. The Committee recommends in amendment 8 that the power to issue warrants be based on the test "that there are reasonable grounds to believe that there will be found...."

64. The bill would provide for search and seizure without a warrant "if the conditions for obtaining a warrant exist but by reason of exigent circumstances it would not be practical to obtain the warrant." Exigent circumstances would be defined to include circumstances in which the delay necessary to obtain a warrant would result in:

- a) danger to human life or safety, or
- b) the loss or destruction of any thing liable to seizure.

65. In Hunter v. Southam, the Supreme Court stated that the protection in section 8 of the Charter generally requires prior authorization as a precondition for a valid search and seizure. Warrantless searches are prime facie unreasonable. Where the government seeks to justify them, it must prove that obtaining a warrant beforehand is not feasible and that the circumstances are such that the search is reasonable despite the lack of a warrant.

66. Witnesses argued that warrantless searches to prevent loss or destruction of evidence may violate section 8 of the Charter. It was pointed out that nowhere in criminal law is there a power to search without warrant in order to preserve evidence. Other means of acting quickly are available. One option is to adopt the telewarrant procedure found in the Criminal Code, by which warrants can be obtained by telephone where it is impractical for a peace officer to appear personally before a judge.

67. The Committee has concluded that warrantless searches should only be permitted where the delay necessary to obtain a warrant would result in danger to human life or safety and amendment 9 accomplishes this. In all other cases, warrants should be required. Where it is impractical to appear personally before a justice to make an application, the Criminal Code provisions permitting telewarrants should be incorporated into the Bill. Amendment 10 reflects this proposal.

68. The Committee has two further concerns about the search provisions. The powers to "break open any door, window, lock, fastener, floor, wall, ceiling, compartment, plumbing fixture, box, container or any other thing" may well be necessary for customs and narcotics offences, but seem both inappropriate and excessive for immigration offences. The Committee recommends their deletion in amendment 11.

69. The Committee also wishes to introduce one further safeguard to the search provisions by requiring that warrants be executed by day except where there are valid reasons for carrying out the search by night. This safeguard is currently found in the Customs Act and the Criminal Code. Amendment 12 proposes this change.

DETENTION FOR IDENTIFICATION OR SECURITY PURPOSES

70. Bill C-84 would provide for detention of people seeking to come into Canada who were unable to satisfy an immigration officer of their identity or whom the Deputy Minister (or designate) had reason to suspect were security threats. In either of these cases, initial detention would be mandatory. The immigration officer would detain such a person and report to a senior immigration officer who would have the power to continue detention for a total initial period of up to seven days. This period could be extended for another 21 days if the Minister certified in writing during the first seven days that the grounds for detention still existed and that more time was needed to investigate. After the 28-day period (or after seven if there was no certificate) detention would be reviewed weekly by an adjudicator who would have power to release the person, using the standards set out in section 104 of the Immigration Act, 1976.

71. Under existing law, people may be detained if they pose a danger to the public or would not appear for future immigration proceedings. Refugee claimants may currently be detained under this provision if their identity is unknown. However, any such detention must be reviewed within 48 hours by an adjudicator, who reviews the reasons for continued detention and may release the person. Continued detention is reviewed weekly on this basis after the first 48 hours.

72. Witnesses criticized the detention provisions proposed in Bill C-84 both because of the length of detention, and because of the process. The length of detention without independent review - 7, then 21 days - of persons neither accused nor convicted of crimes is unprecedented in Canadian law. Anyone charged with a criminal offence in Canada has the right to a bail hearing before a justice within 24 hours of arrest. The process would vest decision-making power in officials for the entire 28-day period, during which no person exercising power in a judicial manner could review the circumstances of the case unless officials permitted. These measures thus would constitute a lengthy period of executive detention.

73. Legal experts appearing before the Committee stated that this clause appears to violate sections 7, 9 and 10 of the Charter. They doubted that it could be justified under section 1 of the Charter as a reasonable limit in a free and democratic society.

74. Section 7 guarantees that "everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice." Deprivation of liberty for 28 days, without the right to have the reasons for detention and the circumstances of one's case assessed by an independent decision-maker, was said to violate this provision. Section 9 guarantees the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned. Professor Marc Gold said:

75. We start with the proposition that although lawful a detention may still be arbitrary. ...[T]he ministerial decision to seek and extend detention is essentially unreviewable, and this therefore puts into place a system that allows for arbitrariness. This is not to suggest that the Minister might ever act arbitrarily, but the system allows for arbitrariness.

76. Concerns were also expressed about whether individuals in these circumstances would be guaranteed the rights in section 10 of the Charter, particularly subsection 10(b), the right to counsel, and the right to be informed of that right.

77. In assessing whether such limitations of rights could be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, it is necessary to look at the government objectives in proposing these measures. Several witnesses suggested that the measures are so severe that they appear to be intended as a deterrent, and not just a means of establishing the identity of unknown entrants or protecting national security. Government officials, in fact, expressed the hope before the Committee that these detention provisions would act as a deterrent to people coming into the country without documents.

78. The Criminal Lawyers' Association brief was strongly critical of this use of detention:

79. Criminal and quasi-criminal legislation and the penalties provided therefore in our view are the only appropriate deterrent mechanisms in a free and democratic society. A provision akin to pre-trial detention should not be used for deterrent purposes.

80. Rabbi Plaut, author of the government-commissioned study Refugee Determination in Canada, characterized the 28-day detention as excessive and unreasonable. He warned that:

81. ...it endangers bona fide refugees who may not have access to proper documentation, or who can secure it only at great peril. Therefore that section significantly contributes to deterring the arrival of genuine claimants.

82. The Committee questions the use of detention as a deterrent. We note that in the very recent past the Canadian government has indicated in international meetings that it regrets the increasing use of detention of refugees and asylum seekers as an indirect means of deterrence.

83. Recent arrivals - both by sea and by air - have illustrated the difficulty of establishing identity in some cases. Detention while establishing identity and as a means of protecting Canada against security threats may well be necessary in some cases, but these objectives can be achieved by much less drastic measures than those contained in Bill C-84. Although officials suggested that in some cases individuals had been released who should have been detained, there appears to be no strong evidence that the current system is not working.

84. The Criminal Lawyers' Association and Professor David Beatty argued that to justify such a detention provision, the government would need to show that the current exercise of adjudicators' discretion to release has frustrated the purposes of the Immigration Act, 1976 or caused breaches of national security. The Canadian Bar Association recommended that the new detention provisions be deleted entirely or, alternatively, that the adjudicator be granted the power to release a person detained under this provision.

85. In amendment 13, the Committee proposes a series of changes which would provide safeguards for the rights of persons detained. The changes would bring the detention provisions into conformity with existing practice and with the guarantees in sections 7, 9 and 10 of the Charter. Parts (a) to (c) would ensure that an adjudicator would review the reasons for detention within 48 hours as is the current practice. The new grounds for detention proposed in C-84 - unknown identity or potential security risk - would be retained and added to the grounds for detention already in the Act. Any one of these factors, if established by the government, would justify continued detention past the first 48 hours. At that point, detention must be reviewed weekly. A further safeguard is proposed in part (d) which would provide that at those weekly reviews the person could be released if the government was not making reasonable efforts to establish identity or to verify whether a security risk existed. Part (e) of the amendment would clarify the detained person's right to counsel, and require that the person be given a reasonable opportunity to obtain such assistance.

TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES

86. The Committee heard testimony from witnesses from the airline industry. We have no amendments to propose in this regard; we do, however, have a recommendation for amendment which would harmonize Bill C-84 with C-55 and some observations with regard to possible future regulations requiring or authorizing transportation companies to collect the travel documents of their passengers. Our recommendation concerns the fact that transportation companies are held responsible under the Immigration Act, 1976 for the detention costs of people who are detained and then not granted admission to Canada, or who are detained prior to being granted admission unless they arrive with valid visas. The airlines have been concerned about these provisions for some time, and the validity of their concerns was recognized by a provision in Bill C-55 which would limit their costs to the first 72 hours after arrival. Bill C-84, however, creates the possibility that more people will be detained, and for longer periods of time, and should it become law before Bill C-55, the airlines will be exposed to those increased costs. It would be a straightforward, uncontroversial matter for the government to insert the limitation on detention costs into Bill C-84 and the Committee so recommends.

87. The Committee is also concerned about the provision in the bill which enables the Governor in Council to pass regulations requiring or authorizing transportation companies to hold the travel documents of their passengers so that these will be available for examination by an immigration officer at the port of entry.

88. A spokesman for the Air Transport Association of Canada addressed this issue in his testimony before the Committee:

89. Clause 14 would require or authorize airlines to hold passports or travel documents. This gives the airlines grave concerns, because a passport is the property of the issuing country, not the individual; so what are the airlines' liabilities if documents are lost or stolen or claimed to have been lost or stolen?

90. A representative of the International Air Transport Association raised some additional questions and gave some practical examples that airlines would face if regulations required them to collect documents:

91. First, there is the question of extraterritoriality. That arises because Canadian law would be required to be implemented in the port of a foreign state. Second, there is the question of privacy laws. Third, there is the question of liability, which Mr. Giles referred to.

92. Consider the type of operation that we have. You have an airline which starts, say, in Singapore and comes over Bombay, goes to London and then on to Canada. The potential for those passports collected by an airline to disappear en route is tremendous. Purely by accident, papers can be taken off an airline at intermittent stops when garbage is collected. Flight documents can go off at such points also. We know from experience what happens on arrival if we suddenly have 200 or 300 passengers and no passports for them. Should honest citizens - maybe senators - be detained or go to prison while someone sorts out where their passports are? If the passport is handed back to the wrong individual - and some people will, for obvious reasons, claim the wrong passports - where do the innocent passengers go? Where is the liability for the carriers under such circumstances? The liability would be unlimited; we would have no Warsaw Convention protection in this situation.

93. Finally, there is the question of security. For example, if you had a hijacking situation and the airline staff was handing passports over to hijackers who sought out special races or special groups from various religions to start killing those individuals, where would the liability cover be for the carriers under those circumstances? That is a question which causes us great concern.

94. The Committee recognizes that these concerns are valid. We urge the Governor in Council to take them into consideration in deciding on the feasibility of enacting such regulations.

APPENDIX

LIST OF WITNESSES

---

Tuesday, September 22, 1987: (Issue no. 26)

The Honourable Benoît Bouchard, P.C., M.P., Minister of Employment and Immigration.

From the Department of Employment and Immigration:

Mr. M. H. Brush, Legislative Coordinator;
Mr. Raphaël Girard, Coordinator, Refugee Task Force;
Mr. Warren Black, General Counsel.

Wednesday, September 23, 1987: (Issue no. 27)

From the Department of Employment and Immigration:

Mr. Joe Bissett, Executive Director, Immigration;
Mr. John Butt, Project Leader, Legislative Development, Refugee Task Force;
Mr. James Trussler, Project Officer, Refugee Task Force.

Tuesday, September 29, 1987: (Issue no. 28)

From the Canadian Bar Association, Immigration Law Section:

Mr. Carter Hoppe, Chairman;
Ms. Barbara Jackman, Chairman (Ontario).

Thursday, October 1, 1987: (Issue no. 29)

From the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees:

Mr. George Cram, Secretary, Primates' Fund For World Relief and Development, Anglican Church of Canada.

From the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops:

Ms. Nancy Nicholls, Executive Director, Catholic Immigration Bureau (Toronto).

From the Department of Employment and Immigration:

Mr. Raphaël Girard, Coordinator, Refugee Task Force;

Mr. John Butt, Project Leader, Legislative Development, Refugee Task Force.

Tuesday, October 6, 1987: (Issue no. 30)

From the Criminal Lawyers' Association:

Mr. Paul D. Copeland, Vice-President.

Wednesday, October 7, 1987: (Issue no. 31)

From the Coalition for a Just Refugee and Immigration Policy:

Mr. Lorne Waldman.

Thursday, October 8, 1987: (Issue no. 32)

From Osgoode Hall Law School:

Professor James Hathaway;

Professor William H. Angus.

Tuesday, October 13, 1987: (Issue no. 33)

From the University of Toronto:

Professor David Beatty.

From York University:

Professor Marc Gold.

From the University of Manitoba:

Professor Dale Gibson.

From Dalhousie University:

Professor Wayne McKay.

Thursday, October 15, 1987: (Issue no. 34)

From the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees:

Mrs. Fiorella Badiani;
Mr. Job Van der Veen.

Tuesday, October 20, 1987: (Issue no. 35)

From the Canadian Civil Liberties Association:

Mr. Alan Borovoy, General Counsel.

Wednesday, October 21, 1987: (Issue no. 36)

From the International Air Transport Association:

Mr. Rodney Wallis, Director, Facilitation and Security;
Mr. Eric Vincendon, Manager, Facilitation.

From the Air Transport Association of Canada:

Mr. E. David Giles, Vice-President, Airport Operations.

Thursday, October 22, 1987: (Issue no. 37)

From the Refugee Status Advisory Committee:

Mr. J.B. Stern, Chairman;
Mr. Sergio Poggione, Acting Director of Operations;
Mr. James Trottier, Legal Advisor, Liaison Officer, Department of External Affairs.

Tuesday, October 27, 1987: (Issue no. 38)

From the Montreal Coalition:

Ms. Rivka Augenfeld, President, "Table de concertation des organismes de Montréal au service des réfugiés";
Mr. Denis Racicot, Association of Immigration Lawyers;
Reverend Fay Wakeling, Committee to Aid Refugees, United Church of Canada;
Mr. Pierre Gouldberger, Committee to Aid Refugees.

Wednesday, October 28, 1987: (Issue no. 39)

From Holy Blossom Temple:

Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut.

Thursday, October 29, 1987: (Issue no. 40)

From the Canadian Jewish Congress:

Ms. Dorothy Reitman, National President;
Mr. Ian Kagedan, Assistant National Executive Director;
Mr. Herb Abrams, National Executive Director, Jewish Immigrant Aid Services of Canada;
Professor Fred Zemans, Chairman, Law and Social Action Committee.

Tuesday, November 3, 1987: (Issue no. 41)

From Amnesty International:

Mr. Michael Schelew, Spokesperson, Refugee Affairs;
Mr. Michael Bossin, Member, Refugee Co-ordination Group.

Thursday, November 5, 1987: (Issue no. 42)

From B'nai Brith:

Mr. David Matas, Senior Legal Counsel.

Thursday, November 19, 1987: (Issue no. 43)

From the Department of Employment and Immigration:

Mr. Raphaël Girard, Coordinator, Refugee Task Force;
Mr. John Butt, Project Leader, Legislative Development, Refugee Task Force.

Tuesday, December 8, 1987: (Issue no. 44)

The Honourable Benoît Bouchard, P.C., M.P., Minister of Employment and Immigration.

From the Department of Employment and Immigration:

Mr. Raphaël Girard, Coordinator, Refugee Task Force;
Mr. John Butt, Project Leader, Legislative Development, Refugee Task Force.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMITTEE

The Honourable Joan Neiman, Chairman

The Honourable Nathan Nurgitz, Deputy Chairman

and

The Honourable Senators:

Buckwold	Lewis
Doyle	* MacEachen, P.C. (or Frith)
Fairbairn	* Murray, P.C. (or Doody)
Flynn, P.C.	Robertson
Grafstein	Spivak
Hébert	Stanbury

* ex officio Members

Note: The Honourable Senators Bielish, Cochrane, Cogger, Gigantès, Haidasz, P.C., Hays, Hicks, Langlois, MacDonald (Halifax), Marchand, P.C., Marshall, Rossiter, Simard, Stollery, Tremblay and Wood also served on the Committee at various stages.

Research Staff:

From the Research Branch, Library of Parliament:

Ms. Katharine Dunkley, Research Officer, Law and Government Division;

Ms. Margaret Young, Research Officer, Law and Government Division.

Andrew N. Johnson

Clerk of the Committee

---

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 2380)

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND — REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

---

TUESDAY, December 15, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIRST REPORT

1. Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-64, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, 9th December 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following observations:

2. The Committee heard evidence from representatives of the Canadian Insolvency Association, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Bankers' Association and from Department of Finance officials. We also received a submission from the Canadian Construction Association (see Appendices).

3. Bill C-64 will implement amendments to the Income Tax Act contained in the Ways and Means Motion tabled by the Honourable Thomas Hockin on 5th June 1987. The amendments include measures announced in the budget of 18th February 1987, measures announced through press releases on other occasions and measures announced for the first time in the Ways and Means Motion of 5th June. Most of these are technical amendments, intended to clarify existing income tax provisions or to modify their meaning in generally unobjectionable ways. Significant expressions of concern and opposition were caused by two clauses of the Bill: clause 10, providing for the establishment of tax-exempt "international banking centres" (IBCs); and clause 66, vesting the Crown with priority over other claimants for the receivables of a tax debtor.

International Banking Centres

4. Clause 10 of the Bill will amend the Income Tax Act to provide tax-exempt status to profits generated by designated IBCs from activities involving loans to and deposits from non-residents. To qualify for tax exemption, no less than 90 percent of an IBC's revenues from loans must be derived from "eligible loans"

(loans to non-residents or deposits in prescribed financial institutions) in respect of which employees of the IBC "actively participated" in its "solicitation, negotiation, analysis or management." Full exemption would be available if "eligible deposits" (deposits from non-residents or other IBCs) constitute at least 96 percent of outstanding loans every day of the tax year. Where eligible deposits fall short of this amount, the exemption would be reduced by a proportion equal to the ratio of the shortfall to the 96 percent loan level.

5. Any member of the Canadian Payments Association (which in addition to all chartered banks includes most major trust companies and credit union centrals) will be permitted to establish an IBC. However, only the metropolitan areas of Montreal and Vancouver would qualify as eligible locations for such centres. It is this aspect of the proposal that has raised the greatest opposition, particularly from Toronto and other excluded metropolitan regions of Canada.

6. According to the testimony of Finance officials, the reason for undertaking the IBC proposal was to broaden trade and business interests in Europe and the Pacific Rim. Tax incentives are confined to Montreal and Vancouver because these cities are strategically located to do business with these areas and in order to help them enhance their role in international commerce.

7. Within the free world, most countries have developed a single dominant financial centre. In Canada at this time, that centre is Toronto. While not including Toronto within the designated centres in this circumstance could be regarded as unusual, it probably will not materially affect Toronto's interests.

8. The IBC proposal was designed with two principles in mind: to attract activities from offshore through the prospect of tax incentives and to avoid displacing existing activities or employment in Canada. These principles account for the decision to exclude from the proposed IBCs such international banking activities as foreign exchange transactions and letters of credit, which might have resulted in a shift of existing activities from one region of Canada to another.

9. The activities to which IBCs are confined – loans to and deposits from non-residents – do not generate any tax revenues in Canada. Accordingly, Finance expects that the IBCs will generate no revenue losses to the federal treasury. At the same time, however, the direct effects of IBCs on employment and business activity are also expected to be minimal.

Priority of Crown Claims

10. Amendments sought under clause 66 of the Bill will permit the Minister of National Revenue to garnishee the receivables of a tax debtor which have been assigned to a secured creditor. The monies garnisheed will be applied against the debtor's liability for unremitted source deductions for employee income taxes, and unemployment insurance and Canada Pension Plan contributions. In effect, these provisions confer a priority on the Crown over the rights of other claimants that hold assignments of accounts receivable.

11. The provisions under clause 66 are related to amendments to the Income Tax Act enacted through clause 118 of Bill C-84 on 13th February 1986. In response to interventions, clause 118 as initially proposed was amended to stipulate that it would come into effect on proclamation, rather than on Royal Assent. To this day, clause 118 has not been proclaimed.

12. In their appearance before your Committee, representatives of the Canadian Bankers' Association, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Insolvency Association argued that clause 66 seeks to implement the 1986 clause 118 amendments by other means. Indeed, in their view, the clause 66 provisions are more far reaching than the 1986 amendments in at least two respects. First, the 1986 provisions limited the Crown's claim to arrears accrued within a 90 day period, whereas under clause 66 the Crown's claim is unlimited. In addition, clause 66 gives the Crown priority over all security interests, whereas the 1986 amendments preserved the priority of purchase money obligations held by the original seller or lessor.

13. The same witnesses also argued that clause 66 as currently drafted interferes seriously with property rights, because of the way it applies when a secured creditor takes steps to enforce his security. In the words of Mr. Alan Driver, President of the Canadian Insolvency Association: "any secured creditor, in dealing with a security, unless he is taking a mortgage foreclosure, has to sell it. When he sells it, he gives rise to an accounts receivable which falls within the wording of this clause and is subject to garnishment."

14. Finance officials, on the other hand, emphasized that under the proposed amendments garnishment action would be permitted only where, as a result of an assignment of property or other security interest, payments that would be made to a tax debtor are redirected to a secured creditor of the tax debtor. These provisions therefore would not apply in cases where a secured creditor sells the property in order to realize upon his security, because the proceeds from such a sale would not have been payable to the debtor.

15. Finance officials also argued that the proposed amendments under clause 66 are much narrower than the 1986 amendments. Specifically, the recourse powers provided to the Crown under clause 66 are confined to garnishment action, whereas the 1986 amendments vested the Crown with a charge upon all property of the debtor, and that charge was to have priority over all other claims and security interests. Implementation of this provision would have required establishing a registry so that taxpayers would be aware of charges being made by Revenue Canada with respect to unremitted source deductions. It was this supercharge provision, Finance officials claimed, that raised the greatest opposition to the 1986 amendments. Clause 66, in their view, simply seeks to restore the garnishment powers of the Minister of National Revenue to recover funds for secure deductions. Recent court cases have weakened those powers by pushing the claims of Revenue Canada behind those of employees and secured creditors.

16. It is apparent from the foregoing that much of the controversy over clause 66 is the product of diverse interpretations of the provisions being proposed. Interested parties have already brought their concerns to the attention of Finance.

Consultations now under way between these parties and departmental officials should lead to a resolution of these interpretative disputes. If it turns out that the drafting of clause 66 is not consistent with the drafters' intentions, as outlined to us by officials of Finance, we would expect the Government to introduce amendments rectifying the inconsistency at the earliest opportunity.

17. We also note that the issue of Crown priority for unremitted source deductions is an insolvency matter which should properly be addressed within the review of bankruptcy and insolvency legislation currently underway at the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In our report on Bill C-84, dated 4th February 1986, we had questioned whether it is proper to introduce the amendments contained in clause 118 respecting Crown priority while amendments to the Bankruptcy Act are pending. We remain of the same opinion.

APPENDIX A

List of Witnesses

Thursday, December 10, 1987: (Issue 49)

From the Canadian Insolvency Association:

Mr. Alan G. Driver, C.A., President;

Mr. R. Gordon Marantz, Q.C., National Chairman, Canadian Bankers' Association, Insolvency Section; Counsel, Canadian Insolvency Association.

From the Canadian Bar Association:

Mr. R. Gordon Marantz, Q.C., Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt.

From the Canadian Bankers' Association:

Mr. David E. Phillips, Vice-President and Director, Legal Affairs.

From the Department of Finance - Tax Policy and Legislation Branch:

Mr. Len Farber, Director, Tax Policy and Legislation;

Ms. Carol Muirhead, Senior Tax Policy Officer;

Mr. Brian Ernewein, Tax Policy Officer;

Mr. Marc Cuerrier, Senior Counsel, Tax Counsel Division.

APPENDIX B

The Committee received written material (briefs and letters) from the following groups:

Canadian Bankers' Association

Toronto, Ontario

Canadian Construction Association

Ottawa, Ontario

Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt

Toronto, Ontario

Respectfully submitted,

IAN SINCLAIR

Chairman

MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMITTEE

The Honourable Ian Sinclair, Chairman

The Honourable Finlay MacDonald (Halifax), Deputy Chairman

and

The Honourable Senators:

Anderson	* MacEachen, P.C. (or Frith)
Buckwold	* Murray, P.C. (or Doody)
Cogger	Olson, P.C.
Flynn, P.C	Perrault, P.C.
Kelly.	Riel, P.C.
Kirby	Roblin, P.C.

* ex officio Members

Research Staff:

From the Research Branch, Library of Parliament:

Mr. Basil Zafiriou, Senior Analyst;

Mr. Anthony Chapman, Research Officer, Economics Division.

Timothy Ross Wilson

Clerk of the Committee

---

APPENDIX "C"

(See p. 2384)

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1987-88

ESTIMATES TABLED TO DATE FOR 1987-88
SUPPLY TO DATE FOR 1987-88

---

ESTIMATES TABLED TO DATE FOR 1987-88

	TO BE VOTED	STATUTORY (in thousands of dollars)	TOTAL
Main Estimates
Budgetary	$37,826,901	$72,314,176	$110,141,077
Non-Budgetary	59,184	(128,545)	(69,361)
	$37,886,085	$72,185,631	$110,071,716
Supplementary Estimates (A)
Budgetary	$ 700,000	-	$ 700,000
Non-Budgetary	-	-	-
	$ 700,000	-	$ 700,000
Supply to date	$38,586,085*	$72,185,631	$110,771,716
Supplementary Estimates (B)
Budgetary	$ 583,110	-	$ 583,110
Non-Budgetary	110,000	-	110,000
	$ 693,110	-	$ 693,110
Supplementary Estimates (C)
Budgetary	$ 1,871,808	$ 999,557	$ 2,871,365
Non-Budgetary	8,889	14,500	23,389
	$ 1,880,697	$ 1,014,057	$ 2,894,754
TOTAL ESTIMATES TABLED
Budgetary	$40,981,819	$73,313,733	$114,295,552
Non-Budgetary	178,073	(114,045)	64,028
	$41,159,892	$73,199,688	$114,359,580

*Does not agree with "Supply to Date for 1987-88" statement due to rounding.

SUPPLY TO DATE FOR 1987-88

Three Appropriation Acts have been approved in respect of Estimates for 1987-88:

Supply Approved to Date:

Appropriation Act No. 1, 1987-88
which granted Interim Supply for April, May and June including 31 additional proportions, based on the Main Estimates for 1987-88 $10,458,957,258.08

Appropriation Act No. 2, 1987-88

The whole of Supplementary Estimates (A), 1987-88 $ 700,000,000.00

Appropriation Act No. 3, 1987-88

Supply for the balance of Main Estimates for 1987-88 $27,427,132,310.92

$38,586,089,569.00

Awaiting Approval

Supply for the whole of
Supplementary Estimates
(B) for 1987-88. $ 693,110,000.00

Supply for the whole of
Supplementary Estimates
(C) for 1987-88. $ 1,880,696,428.00

TOTAL

$41,159,895,997.00

---

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 16, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF DEBATES

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to raise a point of order. I wanted to check yesterday's record and I am informed that Hansard has not yet been delivered. Is there any reason for that delay?

Senator Argue: That question is for the deputy leader. Perhaps we should adjourn, since we do not have yesterday's Hansard!

Senator Corbin: I suppose that we will again have to wait for an answer from Internal Economy. Thanks for the information.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Was the question addressed to me, honourable senators?

Senator Olson: Yes. Senator Corbin does not have yesterday's Hansard.

Senator Doody: I, too, do not have a copy of yesterday's Hansard. I wished to raise a question concerning what might have been a misprint of something that I am reported to have said yesterday, but unfortunately Hansard is not yet here. I saw the blues this morning and made a correction. Perhaps that is what is holding up Hansard. Perhaps they are trying to correct Hansard to fit my interpretation of what I said yesterday. In any event, I, too, am incommode and I would like to make a complaint to whoever looks after the printing in this place.

Senator Argue: It is the Christmas spirit!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am advised by the officials that there are two reasons for the delay, one being that the Senate sat until 6.30 yesterday evening—which, I agree, is not much of a reason; and the second being that there was a massive tax reform report by the Minister of Finance in the other place which necessitated the use of most of the facilities of the Printing Bureau. This is purely a preliminary answer to Senator Corbin's question.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the point raised by Senator Corbin is an important one as far as the Senate is concerned and one that has arisen before. I believe it is reasonable to ask the question: Is a report of the House of Commons—from the Department of Finance or elsewhere—one that should interfere with the Debates of either house? It seems to me that we had this discussion in the Senate before and it was agreed that the Debates of both houses must take precedence. Are we now faced with the same problem? I realize that Mr. Speaker may not be in a position to answer right now, but I think that insofar as the privileges of this house are concerned it is extremely important that the matter be settled.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have just been told by officials that the delay was not caused by a priority of the House of Commons, but because of the appendices attached to our Debates we overtaxed the facilities. That is a very preliminary report.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, may I add a word? I am delighted that Senator Corbin and Senator Molgat have raised this matter. On the two or three previous occasions this matter was raised on the floor of this place, I took it upon myself to try to find out what was going on and to try to get the problem corrected. Obviously I have been unsuccessful. I am delighted to see that the chamber itself has decided to take this issue on as a priority and as a responsibility. I shall certainly do everything that I can to facilitate the request for equity and justice under the system that runs the two chambers.

Senator Argue: Give it to the Internal Economy Committee.

Senator Frith: It is Mr. Speaker's problem!

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the parties in the grain handler's dispute at Prince Rupert have met yet. If they have not met, when will the first meeting take place?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I regret I have no additional information to that which I furnished the house yesterday. The Minister of Labour has sent a telegram to the parties concerned. My information is that the mediator, Mr. Collins, is presently endeavouring to schedule meeting dates with the parties. I trust that that will be done very shortly.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, is Mr. Collins in Prince Rupert?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know the answer to that question.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I wonder if the minister would look into the question. I will ask a similar question tomorrow, and we will see if there is anything further to report.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall attempt to provide a daily progress report on this matter.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 4, 1987-88

THIRD READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill C-95, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1988.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Duff Roblin moved the third reading of Bill C-64, to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

● (1410)

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

SECOND READING

● (1410)

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), for the second reading of the Bill C-87, An Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Hicks).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, Bill C-87, as its highly-descriptive title informs us, is a bill to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, and to do certain other things in relation thereto or in consequence thereof. As Senator

Robertson, the mover of the second reading of the bill, informed us yesterday, this bill will also incorporate the Customs Tariff and the Duties Relief Act into one statute. Senator Robertson reminded us of the importance of trade to Canada and of the need to update, simplify and make more readily available the data relating to our tariffs and our duties.

There is undoubtedly a desirability of harmonizing our system—or HS, as the technicians have come to refer to it—with that of other countries of the world, especially, of course, with the U.S.A., the European Economic Community and Japan. However, this will also apply to many other countries, some of whom have already signed this international convention. It is hoped eventually to bring into line the practices of some 60 countries, or perhaps even many more. It should bring our customs tariff system into the computer age.

It was stated by the mover of second reading that this bill would provide a simplification and, indeed, that was referred to in the other place when the bill was discussed there. Perhaps it will. In any event, it increases the number of tariff items from approximately 3,500 to 8,000. Whether this effects a simplification or not I do not know, but it is hoped—and indeed so stated by the departmental officials—that most of this increase in tariff items results largely from a subdivision of items and, presumably, makes it easier to identify with precision the particular item concerning which tariff rate is desired to be set or to be discovered by the importer or the exporter, as the case may be.

As I say, it is hoped that this bill will clarify our system and make much more accurate and more readily available our trade data. By putting that data into a computerized system, the statistics relating to trade, tariff, and so on, ought to be much more complete and available more quickly than they have been in the past.

I think that these are all desirable objects. Indeed, all of the objectives of the bill referred to above are laudable and hopefully will improve, even if they do not simplify our tariff system.

Yesterday I intimated that I could see very little difficulty with this bill. I cannot say that I am going to refer to difficulties now, but on reading the bill more carefully, which I did last night, a number of things occurred to me which had not occurred to me when I spoke yesterday. I now have certain reservations about the extent of ministerial and Governor-in-Council authority to make regulations without reference to Parliament, which is provided by many clauses of this bill, and indeed, in some instances—perhaps in many instances—without the necessity of informing Parliament of what has been done. Some of these regulations could actually be used to set tariff levels—to increase or decrease them or to exempt tariff levies without reference to Parliament and, as I have said, without reporting to Parliament. For this reason, honourable senators, I am now somewhat more anxious than I was yesterday to have a chance to question the minister about these clauses.

So that you will have some idea of the clauses that are of concern to me, I shall list them. However, I believe arrangements will be made for us to hear the minister either in a standing Senate committee or in a Committee of the Whole. Therefore, I shall not elaborate now on any of the clauses, but it might be useful if the minister knew which ones concerned me so that he could be prepared to comment on them.

The following clauses are of concern to me. Clause 9, in a rather peculiar way, enables the Governor-in-Council, by proclamation, to restrict the extent of territorial sea or our internal waters. I had to refer to the original Customs Act to try to understand this. I am not sure that I understand it now.

Subclause 12(1) and subclause 12(2) refer to goods that are "produced in Canada in substantial quantities," and give what seems to me to be a very extensive discretion to the Governor-in-Council to determine what the term "substantial quantities" means. This could be very important to a person who is importing goods into this country.

Clauses 23 and 25 give very wide powers to the Governor-in-Council. Clauses 27 and 28 do the same, as do some of the following clauses, especially clauses 43 and 44. However, the powers given by clauses 43 and 44 are due to expire on June 30, 1994, according to a following clause. It makes one think that there is something not precarious but something a little bit more than arbitrary in granting these powers for a limited time to the Governor-in-Council. I shall be pleased to hear the explanation that is given for this. The previous clauses that I have referred to that give this discretion to the Governor-in-Council, sometimes on the recommendation of a minister—usually on the recommendation of a minister—do not require the decisions to be tabled before Parliament. Clauses 59 and 60 do give the same kind of authority to the Governor-in-Council, but in these cases the order must be tabled in Parliament within 15 sitting days. This is provided by clause 61 of the bill.

Clause 95 gives authority to make regulations with no requirement that these regulations must be laid before Parliament. It may very well be that another omnibus statute requires that they have to be, in any event, but in the time which I had to check this I was unable to find this out for certain.

Penultimately, clauses 101 and 102 give the Governor-in-Council and the minister wide discretion in the remission and relief of duties and tariffs. Here again, no report to Parliament is prescribed.

Finally, subclause 133(1) allows the Governor-in-Council to make regulations which have the effect of amending other acts in order to conform to this act. This power is granted to them for a limited period—a period of 18 months—after the coming into force of this act. That means that it may be very difficult for parliamentarians or general users of the legislation to find out exactly what the state of the law is during this 18-month transition period when the Governor-in-Council has such wide powers.

[Senator Hicks.]

Those are some of the points, honourable senators, that I should like the minister's views on before we give final approval to this legislation. On the whole, this legislation is certainly a desirable step to bring Canada's practices into conformity with those of many other countries, including most of the developed countries of the world. On the understanding that this bill will be referred to Committee of the Whole I indicate my support for second reading at this time.

• (1420)

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if Senator Robertson speaks now, her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Robertson:—if no one else wishes to speak on this bill, I shall advise the Senate that arrangements are being made for the minister to appear before the Committee of the Whole tomorrow morning. Senator Hicks will be able to put his questions to the minister at that time. I am sure he will receive favourable responses.

I have nothing further to add. I am sure that the Deputy Leader of the Government will have more to say about the Committee of the Whole later.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Robertson, bill referred to Committee of the Whole at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this might be an appropriate time to bring our colleagues up to date on what we have discussed in terms of the scheduling of business in this place over the next few days.

Because this afternoon has been allocated to Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Accord, we had some concerns about moving government business along. In that light we had talked about the possibility of sitting this evening at 8 o'clock to continue with government business. However, we have found it possible to arrange for the Senate to sit tomorrow morning rather than this evening. I think that will find favour with many senators.

To that end, we have arranged for the Committee of the Whole to hear the minister, the Honourable Tom Hockin, on Bill C-87, and if other ministers are required on other bills that can also be arranged.

I should like to thank honourable senators at this time for their cooperation in this regard, and tell them that with any kind of luck at all we should find a way to handle most of the order paper, at least the government side of the order paper, tomorrow morning. Tomorrow afternoon we can, if necessary, or if we wish, deal with other items that are on the order paper such as Motions and Inquiries and, if all goes well, look forward to Royal Assent some time late tomorrow.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Marsden is our spokesperson on the next order, which is debate at second reading on Bill C-97. She has advised that she does not see any reason for committee study of the bill.

The next order deals with Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited. Senator Molgat may have some questions for the minister responsible for that bill. It might be necessary to refer that bill to Committee of the Whole.

I understand that Senators Hays, Olson and Cochrane have some interventions to make on other subjects. We will enjoy those interventions tomorrow. I support the schedule Senator Doody has outlined.

Senator Doody: If I can crave the indulgence of my colleagues for just one more moment, I omitted to mention, but should have, that there is another Excise Tax bill in transit somewhere that deals with a rebate on fuel taxes for farmers. It is in the other place and should be here this afternoon. If it is the wish of the chamber, we could try to deal with that as well tomorrow. I am not familiar with the exact detail and urgency of the bill, but I would not want senators to think that I will be springing that one on them. We have known of its imminence for some time, but it appears at long last to be in transit. Perhaps we will look at it more closely when we get it.

Senator Frith: Excuse me. You are speaking of rebates of excise tax on fuel for farmers and fishermen?

Senator Doody: The fuel rebate for farmers.

Senator Frith: That is true; we discussed that last week.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with respect to Bill C-97, I take it there would be no objection to having it go through a regular committee procedure—whether it is a standing committee or a Committee of the Whole—because I take the view that that part of the process should be fulfilled, even if it were a brief session.

Senator Doody: There is no problem with that. The minister has been alerted and has agreed to make himself available at our convenience. When we come to that part of our proceedings tomorrow, the minister will be delighted to present himself.

[Translation]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator David, seconded by the Honourable Senator Simard, for the second reading of Bill C-97, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code.—(Honourable Senator Marsden).

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, with the permission of Senator Marsden, I would like to respond to the questions I was asked about this bill yesterday by a number of senators in this house.

The answer to Senator Corbin's question is that the Canada Labour Code covers about 600,000 employees. About 1,000 employees, the vast majority of whom are women, are directly affected by this bill.

The answer to the second question is that total expenditures incurred will amount to about $800,000. I believe that yesterday I mentioned this would be $600,000. I therefore want to correct this figure.

The third question concerned the Senate's unionized employees. They do not come under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code and are therefore not affected by this bill.

Regarding Senator Frith's question about the urgency of this legislation, I am told that employees, most of whom are women, are now paying twice the normal contribution to retain their benefit rights while on sick leave or maternity leave. The present situation is therefore unfair to these people. The situation will cease to exist, however, as soon as the Senate has approved the bill and Royal Assent has been given, which is why, according to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Pierre Cadieux, it is absolutely necessary to pass this legislation as soon as possible, which means today or tomorrow.

I imagine that with their usual gallantry, members of the Senate, especially the male majority, will make haste to rectify a situation that is unfair to the female majority of the employees concerned; hence the social and compassionate grounds for the urgency of this bill.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator David. Did I understand correctly? Did he say that 1,000 women are affected by this bill? You did say 1,000?

Senator David: That is the figure I was given, Senator Corbin.

[English]

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, the case in favour of Bill C-97 seems clear to us.

I regret that I was not in the chamber yesterday to hear the remarks made by Senator David, and in the absence of Hansard I have not been able to read his remarks. It does seem to us that the necessity for workers to build good benefits has been well understood for a long time in this country, and, of course, it requires that contributions be made. What this bill does, as all honourable senators know, is require that employers as well as employees continue contributions to the building of benefits while people are absent on maternity or sick leave. As Senator David has said, for the most part that affects women, who are, of course, the people who are away on maternity leave. This bill therefore restores some justice and equity in this important area.

● (1430)

The bill was universally supported in the other place, and it will be our pleasure to support it in this chamber when it comes forward for third reading.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

[Translation]

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator David: At the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It has to be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Marsden said that it did not require to be sent to Committee of the Whole.

Senator Frith: But you will remember that Senator MacEachen asked that we follow the usual procedure.

[Translation]

Senator David: Does this mean that we are no longer talking about third reading?

[English]

Senator Doody: We can move that it be referred to Committee of the Whole at the next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator David, seconded by the Honourable Senator Simard, that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole at the next sitting of the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Committee of the Whole at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING CO., LIMITED ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of the Bill C-98, to amend an Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Limited.—(Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, first I should like to thank Senator Simard, the sponsor of this bill, for sending me yesterday the notes he had to prepare the debate on this bill. But as honourable senators would know—as I should have known for having been in the Senate for some time—when one asks for information one must be prepared for an avalanche. So much so that I must admit that this morning I got another document, the famous black book containing additional information. I now have all the information I need. Again I thank Senator Simard because I got his notes much sooner.

[Senator Marsden.]

[English]

This bill, which deals with a very important element of industry in Canada, namely, the health and safety of workers—and in this particular case the workers in a mining enterprise which, as we all know, has some major risks—is an important one in its general terms, but it is of particular importance to my province and to that region.

The Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited and the mine at Flin Flon has a rather interesting background. The mine originally opened in 1927, which means that as of this year it has been open for 60 years. In the mining industry it is somewhat of a record for a mine to be open that long. As we all know, normally in the mining business you have a certain number of years of productivity and then the mine runs out. That is inevitable. However, in Flin Flon, through continued research and exploration, they have been constantly able to find additional mines. Regions considered to have been beyond hope and to have been totally explored—in some cases within sight of the head frame itself—and that were thoroughly covered in recent years, have been found to be mineralized regions, and the mine has continued. But it has the odd attribute whereby, although some of the shafts are on the Manitoban side of the border, some of the mines extend beneath the ground into Saskatchewan. As a result, there has been a constant problem with respect to jurisdiction, in terms of which province was responsible. This bill will solve some of the problems with respect to health and safety.

Honourable senators, I think it is rather unusual that we find before us a bill with which no one disagrees. The union is in agreement; the company is in agreement; the workers have, through the unions, expressed their views, but have not expressed any separate views as individuals; the Manitoba government is in agreement; the Saskatchewan government is in agreement; and here we find the federal government in agreement.

Senator Doody: Let's vote against it!

Senator Molgat: I think it is a rather notable occasion, and this bill should easily receive support from the Senate.

It might be wondered, then, why it is that I would request the minister to appear tomorrow to answer some questions. My reason for doing so is the rather broad question of health and safety of workers. We have to recognize that, by and large, Canadian mining companies do not always operate in just one province; they operate in different parts of Canada. Their workers are very mobile and move from one province to another. With this bill I think we ought to go a further step, and that is to have in place a uniform code across the country. If we want to take care of the health and safety of mine workers, we would be far better off to have one uniform code.

That is what I think the minister should discuss with us when he appears tomorrow. As to the bill itself, I have no objections to it and am prepared to proceed with second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Simard, bill referred to Committee of the Whole.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS— CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

● (1440)

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we are ten minutes ahead of our normal schedule. We now await the arrival of the first witness, who I understand is downstairs and will be with us in a moment.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Where are the cameras?

Senator Frith: I don't know, but I thank the honourable senator for asking.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I am now advised that the first witness was driving to his appointment at the Senate, but because of weather is experiencing some delay. He has not yet arrived. Is it the wish of honourable senators that I report progress and ask for leave to sit again?

Senator Flynn: What about the second group of witnesses?

The Chairman: The second group were to be here at 4 p.m. They are not here yet, but we will contact them by telephone to see whether we can move their appearance forward. Is it agreed that I report progress and ask for leave to sit again at 4 p.m.—

Senator Haidasz: Later this day.

The Chairman: —or later this day? Senator MacEachen, would it be your wish that the committee rise, report progress, and ask for leave to sit again later this day?

Senator MacEachen: I so move.

The Chairman: Senator MacEachen has moved that the committee rise, report progress, and ask for leave to sit again later this day. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I am now advised that the witness has arrived. Is it agreed that Senator MacEachen's motion be withdrawn?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

Senator Flynn: You need the agreement of two-thirds of the Senate to change your mind!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think we should take notice of the fact that it is now "later this day."

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Frith a question. I was the only senator on this side of the house who supported the motion in favour of televising these proceedings, and that has caused me some problems with my caucus, who feel that there has been a certain act of disloyalty. Considering the hopes that we had with regard to televising the debate on this important matter, may I ask what has happened? There are no lights, no cameras, no action. Can the honourable senator give us an explanation of why there is this sudden lack of interest in this matter when he and I went to the wall in order to bring the cameras into this chamber?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, not necessarily for the purpose of relieving Senator MacDonald's probably well earned and well deserved trouble with his caucus, I remind honourable senators that we had always made it clear that we agreed to give access to the television cameras—and that was all we were giving, namely, access. I believe some senators accepted the motion and voted for it knowing that we were not insisting that cameras always be here. Therefore, it seems to me that things have unfolded—as the universe often does—as they should, and sometimes we have had cameras here and at times we have not. I am sure we will have them again.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): So you would now say that the views expressed by Senator Corbin with respect to the various ways in which they were going to "shoot" senators in the matter of electronic Hansard were not really realistic?

Senator Corbin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add—and I would wish all honourable senators to note—that there is not a journalist, so far as I can see, anywhere in their assigned gallery.

Senator Argue: That's not new.

Senator Perrault: They are listening on their earphones.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, if we are ready to proceed, our first witness has arrived. He is Professor Blair Williams of the Department of Political Science, Concordia University.

Pursuant to order adopted on June 18, 1987, Professor Blair Williams was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: Dr. Williams has provided us with copies of his brief in both languages, and they were distributed to honourable senators yesterday.

Dr. Williams, is it your intention to read the brief or to summarize it?

Professor Blair Williams, Department of Political Science, Concordia University: Mr. Chairman, my plan is to make a few remarks lasting approximately 15 minutes, to allude briefly to what is in my submission, to add a couple of things to that, and then to hear from honourable senators as to what is right or wrong about my thoughts—if that is satisfactory.

The Chairman: Then we will proceed with your presentation and then have questions. Dr. Williams, I welcome you to the Senate. We are very pleased that you have taken the time to discuss with us your views on this most important Canadian matter. I will now ask you to proceed.

Dr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to be here. I do indeed regard this as a very important and under-discussed issue.

At the outset I wish to say a few things about what my particular perspective is on the Meech Lake Accord. I want to review quickly what is in the submission, which I understand was distributed to honourable senators, to give you the highlights, and then to make a couple of additional points before we discuss whatever is of interest to you in my presentation.

My first concern is with perspective. I have been concerned about the Meech Lake Accord—from the very day that the accord was agreed upon—mainly with the perspective of those people who had brought it to fruition. I am concerned about the short-term perspective in the sense of expediency that surrounded that particular accord, and my concern about the perspective of this accord, the atmosphere, has not abated at all in the intervening weeks and months.

When the accord was agreed to, one saw the Prime Minister and the premiers basically talking about current realities, talking about how this accord sort of adheres to the present political circumstances, to the present political climate. Added to that, of course, were many positive statements about the fact that we had moved from a spirit of confrontation to a spirit of accommodation.

I think that this narrow perspective, this sort of being captured by the present, was also apparent in the joint committee's report and in its deliberations.

It is my view that the Meech Lake Accord was formulated, signed, sealed and delivered very much in an atmosphere that was still dominated by the previous régime, by the Trudeau years; and to too great an extent the Meech Lake Accord is a reaction to that régime, a reaction to the political environment of the previous almost two decades—and, of course, many people, both in the provinces and nationally, found that environment to be offensive.

My problem, therefore, in terms of perspective, of where this accord came from, is that this is the proper perspective, I think, for politicians on the hustings; this is the proper perspective for people who want to change the government; this is the proper perspective for people who want to change the way that things are done. But it is not the perspective of statesmen; it is not the perspective of those who take a long-range view of what our country is and what our country needs—and that has caused me problems with this accord right from the beginning. I have felt that we have been too much imprisoned by the immediate political environment, that it has been written too much by short-term politicians.

My perspective in the document I wrote is somewhat longer-term and tends to look ahead at the long-term consequences. I put this document together in later summer, though I understand that you received it just recently. In the document I put my finger on what I think are two long-term consequences, and I would like to review them briefly with you now. First, I believe that the effect of the accord will render Canada a less tolerant and less accommodating nation in the long term. Second, in the long term I think that this accord will foreclose the possibility of meaningful political reform in this country.

● (1450)

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that the witness is giving us, in effect, the structure of this document rather than the detail, but I wonder if he would let us know at what page in the document the point is made so that we may underline it?

Dr. Williams: If I can, I shall try to give the page number as I go along.

My first point deals with Canadian values. It is my belief that over the long term this accord will erode common values and will contribute to forces of disintegration and intolerance in the country. I make the point that one of the pre-eminent problems—and I think many people would argue that it is their pre-eminent problem—and a flashpoint of considerable conflict and violent activity in the world today involves sectarian violence and ethnic violence within the borders of states. In the document I mention a number of situations—Lebanon, Sri Lanka, Fiji, Northern Ireland, South Africa, and on it goes. The major problem that I foresee in these kinds of situations is a lack of common values, a lack of shared traditions, and a lack of mutual understanding. Therefore, there exists an inability to create an atmosphere of tolerance. I believe that the Meech Lake Accord signals to Canadians that the pursuit of common attitudes and common values, such as biculturalism and bilingualism, is less important than the pursuit of, for example, regional concerns. It seems to be saying that it is okay to look inward on a regional basis, and that we no longer have to pay the price or make the effort, if you like, to share Canadian values. Concerns of parochialism, provincialism and regionalism will tend to override the steady move toward national values.

My argument on this point is that if we are going to develop as a truly civil society in which all segments of this multifarious society can get along and genuinely tolerate each other over time, particularly the French and English segments of society, we must have an inspired and far-reaching Constitution that will allow this to happen. We must have as a Constitution something other than a negotiated deal. We must have a Constitution that does something other than simply capture the present. It must be a Constitution that calls for courage and commitment on the part of Canadians, not simple contentment with their own particular parochial views.

Senator, I am going through these points rather quickly, and it is difficult for me to pick them out in the text.

Senator Frith: That is fine. I am following along.

Dr. Williams: My second point, which I am sure has been stated by many others, involves political reform. I believe that the accord, with its unanimity provision and with its provision for greater powers to the provinces, effectively thwarts meaningful political reform. As a national institution, the House of Commons has come quite a way in recent decades, but, quite honestly, in terms of fulfilling a serious representative role, a serious legislative role, and as a serious check on government, the House of Commons itself has a long way to go. I reckon that this accord will do very little to encourage that kind of reform.

I do not believe that the Senate will be reformed, for reasons I am sure you have heard a hundred times, under this accord. I have read some of the testimony of witnesses from the North, particularly the Yukon, and I know what was said there—that unanimity will prevent reform of the Senate, that we will never see serious reform of the Senate. In my view, what will happen is that eventually there will be sufficient concern, perhaps revulsion and frustration, on the part of the government, and the Senate will end up being abolished, and a great possibility for a serious, legitimate representative institution will be lost. Another reason why I do not think we will have Senate reform under this accord is that Senate reform will steadily be seen by provincial premiers as not being in their best interests. Increasingly, premiers will see that they, more than anyone else, can portray themselves as legitimate articulators and representatives of regional concerns in this country, and they will not want to see that challenged by a truly viable Senate—challenged, incidentally, in ways akin to the fairly admirable fashion that the Senate has been behaving in recent weeks.

The accord further confirms the pre-eminence of provincial politicians over national institutions in its proposal to entrench the third level of government—that is, the First Ministers' conference. I think it is time to take a hard look at what this process means to the Canadian federation. I argue in this paper that executive federalism in this country has gone too far, that this ad hoc process we have developed out of classical federalism and cooperative federalism to what we now call executive federalism, where executives get together and have secret meetings and decide what is good for the country, has gone too far. I argue that we have taken a classic Canadian route here and allowed ourselves to be sort of dragged along by "ad hocery" in our institutional development rather than showing wilful reform and rather than trying to create the kinds of national institutions that do what we assume is being done in First Ministers' conferences—that is, harmonizing the various aspects and needs of the nation.

Taking a long-term perspective, I believe that our steady progress as a nation toward a more viable and avowedly democratic nation is impeded by this accord. We are all democrats. Everybody in this room is a democrat. Those of us who think and talk about politics in the Canadian context are democrats. When we are democrats we believe in certain fundamental tenets. It has something to do with political equality and with democratic individual rights. It is sometimes oversimplified to describe a democracy in terms of government by the people, because we all know that government by the people is impossible, that it never has been possible. So what we strive for in Canada and what we try to achieve in every civil western society is a working representative form of democratic government. Surely that is what we are all striving for. What we forget is that as we move toward a more democratic society, or entrenched, meaningful, wholesome, democratic values in a representative sense, it implies that the population has to be more enlightened, more engaged, more involved and more aware. I reckon this accord works against that effort. I think that our progress toward a more worthy representative democracy is affected by this accord.

I think that this accord—and I know that certain people have argued this point—tends to underline elitist trends in Canadian society. I think it tends to stress certain elements, such as executive government, such as the downplaying of legislative assemblies, and such as decision-making in secret, all of which fundamentally work against the flowering of Canadian democracy. Therefore, in general terms, as we try to move in that direction, I think this accord should be judged very harshly by the Canadian people and by this institution. In those terms I see this accord as a step backward.

• (1500)

As a democrat, then, I believe that the people are losers by this accord, and I find that the spirit and the intent of the accord, in democratic terms, is offensive. Rather than taking a bold step forward that involves the people and that opens up new vistas for Canadian democracy, we have taken a step backward.

That brings me to my final point, Mr. Chairman, which again is somewhat beyond what I had to say in my brief, and it concerns western Canada. Although we will, I think, be poorer as a country and poorer as a democracy, I think in patriotic terms we will be poorer as a nation under this accord. On a more pragmatic level, I believe another result of this accord will be that the far-flung regions of this country—and I am thinking specifically of western Canada, which is the region I know best—will lose out. Many people, including westerners, politicians and academics, have been saying that the West will lose because they will not be able to have a reformed Senate; the West will lose because western aspirations will not be articulated through a new and possibly elected Senate. Many of us know and believe these things, but that is not the only reason why I think the West will lose. I think that what will happen under this accord is that increasingly the region of western Canada will not have a place at the national table; that increasingly far-flung regions—and particularly the West—will not have a leadership role to play. What will happen in this situation is that increasingly the signal of the accord and the specifics of the accord are such that westerners will be encouraged to look inward. They will be encouraged to look at their own concerns. I think they will be encouraged to channel their talents towards their own particular regions and their own particular provinces.

More specifically, I do not think westerners will be encouraged to become full participants in understanding this country. I do not think this accord will encourage the steady emergence, for example, in western Canada of an elite that really understands Quebec. I do not think this accord will encourage the emergence of an elite that will be able to communicate in Quebec or, indeed, communicate with our other founding culture. I believe that this accord will effectively eliminate emerging capable westerners from sitting at the table in major leadership positions.

In my opinion, we have reached a position here in this country where serious leaders in the public sector, in the private sector, in the interest group sector, and so on, who have a sort of pan-national role—an all-Canadian role, if you like—must now be able to accommodate themselves particularly to both of the founding cultures. Under this accord I really do not believe that that will happen in western Canada.

I know a lot of people in western Canada and have spoken to them on this issue. I was there in October and spoke to university students and to a couple of public affairs institutes. First, I find that not many people are talking to them about this matter. I find that not many people are saying to them that under these circumstances there will not any longer be the will—and ultimately, probably, the resources, certainly on the part of provincial governments—to maintain strong programs for student exchanges, for bilingual education, and on and on, which will allow their children and their children's children to be truly part of the national elite in this country and to truly participate in a leadership role in this country. I find that westerners, when they are spoken to about the Meech Lake Accord, really do come to believe that it is not in their interests; that the basics of this accord are not in their fundamental long-term interests as Canadians. When I was there in western Canada, I found that the major objections to what I was saying came from people who believed that, fundamentally, we have already had too much of that anyway; that we have already had a bit too much bilingualism, and have already had a bit too much concern with eastern fish, Quebec problems, and so on and so forth.

My general conclusion, as a westerner born and bred, is that this region will lose under this accord. This region will forever look, perhaps, to the French Canadian elite in Quebec or the English Canadian elite in Quebec or elsewhere for its national leaders if this accord comes to fruition.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this brings me right back to where I started. Fundamentally, I believe that if this country is to thrive, survive and fulfil the role which many of us perceive for it for the twenty-first century it has to build on common values, it has to build a set of shared attitudes, but I believe that everything in this accord points in the opposite direction. Those who would have us turn inward, those who would choose to focus on parochial concerns, in my view, come out the winner with this particular accord.

Mr. Chairman, I will stop there. Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Dr. Williams. I have a number of names on my list. First is Senator Marsden, followed by Senator Le Moine.

Senator Marsden: Thank you, Professor Williams, for your brief, which seems to me to raise a number of questions that we have heard about previously, but which in your brief are posed from a different and very welcome perspective. As a westerner myself, I am in entire agreement with your analysis of the impact this agreement will have on some parts of the community in western Canada.

I would like to ask you one very brief question and then a slightly more substantial one, if I may. On page 6 of your brief, you say:

The Meech Lake Accord says, in effect, that fundamental rights, guaranteed in the Charter, may be overridden by other provisions which grant powers to regional governments.

There is a large community in Canada concerned about the rights of women. I wonder if you would comment on that, since you do not mention women specifically in your brief.

Dr. Williams: No, senator, you are right. I do not mention them specifically. However, when I wrote that—and again, as I say, this was written in August—I was thinking specifically of the concerns of women and aboriginal people, and so on. I think it is a genuine concern. I have chosen not to focus on a specific sort of juridical analysis and not to approach this as something I am not, which is a constitutional authority or a lawyer. However, I picked up on that point and I regard it as a perfectly valid point. I think those people who are arguing that, with respect to this accord, the Charter should be safeguarded above all else with respect to all of the other provisions in the accord are absolutely right. The fact that they have chosen not to do so in a number of areas is a very disturbing thing.

Senator Marsden: I would like to ask you, from your viewpoint as a professor of political science, to expand somewhat on your views on executive federalism, which you quite clearly oppose. You have been in print a very harsh critic of the Senate at times, and of what goes on within the Senate. Under the current conditions of executive federalism as it operated at Meech Lake—and promises to operate forever after if this accord goes through—if it were possible to bring in Senate reform along the lines on which you would like to see it reformed, would you then be in favour of this accord, or is your opposition to this form of constitution-making so profound that you would even object to it if it reformed the Senate?

Dr. Williams: I have a concern about wanting to reform the Senate, which I also apply to the House of Commons in terms of its representative role. I think there is a big problem in the House of Commons to the extent that it is dominated by the government and the mythology of responsible government that exists there. However, I will not get into that now.

My concern about the Senate is that if the Senate could be transformed and given the degree of legitimacy that many of us would like to see—getting around the appointments problem and all of that—that is to say transformed into an institution which really did reflect the aspirations and the hopes and the needs of the various regions, this would seriously devalue, if you like, or cause a serious decline in the need for, the extremes of executive federalism. In a sense, executive federalism has tended to fill a void that has not been filled by our national institutions.

What I am saying is that if, in fact, national institutions could become representative in the sense that I see them being representative, if they could become forums for brokering national concerns and for building coalitions that people look to as being legitimate in their own eyes, that would go a long way to dealing with the problems of executive federalism.

Senator Marsden: We knew what Premier Bourassa was asking for when he went into the first Meech Lake conference. We had no idea what the other premiers asked for or, indeed, what they got in the process of that. Is that what you have in mind when you say that this executive federalism has gone too far, or are there other features of it that you think are worse?

Dr. Williams: Remember what I said about democracy. Executive federalism runs against my grain in pure democratic terms. In the extremes of executive federalism that we have today, I do not see normal democratic dialogue. I do not see anything that approaches a normal debate—a progressive and intelligent debate. I see deals being made behind closed doors, and I see leaders who are entrenched in the regional and national level making their play in front of the cameras. I think that is a large part of that problem.

Senator Marsden: It is not a question of the degree. It is a dislike of executive federalism, period, with respect to constitution making.

Dr. Williams: With respect to constitution making, it is not entirely a question of degree. As I say, a good deal of this could be deflected by more credible national institutions.

Senator Marsden: As a political scientist, how do you explain the lack of an outcry among Canadians at the present time about the accord if it is going to do to our country what you and many other people have said it will do?

Dr. Williams: Senator, it is widely said that constitutions are not something that cause people to be inflamed. I was driving to Ottawa this morning with my wife, and she said that one of the problems is that this issue has been totally overrun with free trade. How on earth is it going to be kept alive? That is a problem.

The greatest problem of all has been an abdication of responsibility on the part of our national leaders. The national leaders are the NDP, the Liberals and the Conservatives. Serious people who are in political life in order to lead opinion and in order to stimulate debate have abdicated their responsibility concerning this particular issue. I am involved in a coalition. I am also involved in a peripheral way with a group who are politically involved in trying to keep this issue alive. As you know, many academics are also involved in it. It is very difficult to keep it alive if it is not part of the normal political dialogue in this country. This has not been part of that normal political debate.

I am sure that those of you who are as concerned as I am about this particular accord despair at what the result may be.

The Chairman: Before I call on Senator Le Moyne, I would like to advise that I have six names on my list. Judging from the normal flow of things, I shall cut the list off at this point. I ask honourable senators to keep within the time limit, if they would. Senator LeMoyne will be followed by Senator MacDonald (Halifax).

[Translation]

Senator Le Moyne: Mr. Williams, it is a pleasure to welcome you and recall earlier days elsewhere.

Senator Flynn: Better days?

Senator Le Moyne: I am assuming that the bill concerning multiculturalism has been adopted. Do you envisage harmful consequences with respect to the Meech Lake Accord?

[English]

Dr. Williams: I am sorry, Senator LeMoyne, I did not hear the first part of your question.

Senator Le Moyne: Let us suppose that the bill on multiculturalism has been adopted and becomes law. If that were to occur, do you see some difficult consequences in the parameters of the accord?

Dr. Williams: Which bill are you referring to in particular? Are you referring to the refugee bill?

Senator Le Moyne: No. I am referring to the bill on multiculturalism.

Dr. Williams: I really do not know how to respond to that. I had not thought of it.

Senator Le Moyne: We may find ourselves with three or four official languages, and this will be a holy mess. That is all that I wanted to say.

Dr. Williams: I had not really thought about that bill vis-à-vis the accord.

Senator Le Moyne: Perhaps my question was premature, but it was a shot in the dark. Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator LeMoyne. Senator MacDonald (Halifax) will be followed by Senator Olson.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Professor Williams, I know of you by reputation. You were a very distinguished national director of the Liberal Party of Canada. Senator Macquarrie has pointed out to me the bane of an academic's existence is having something quoted back to him.

Throughout your entire discourse the word "elitism" comes through. I do not know where it is that you are coming from. I would like to refer to your oral testimony, and not your written document. You referred to the reaction to the political environment of the previous regime, underlying the elitist trend in Canadian government. Are you saying that the elitist trend in Canadian government is good or is bad? I missed the whole thrust of that particular point.

Dr. Williams: Senator MacDonald, basically, from my perspective I am saying that it is bad. I believe—and most political scientists will share this view—that Canada tends to be a very elitist country. We tend to leave things to our elites. We tend to defer to our elites and let them make decisions, whether it is in the private sector, the interest group sector or the public sector. In some respects that has caused some of the problems that I see with Canadian democracy and Canadian development. That kind of elitism—that kind of deference to authority—has exacerbated some of the major problems in this country.

I mentioned previously that I come from western Canada. Following the “quiet revolution” I know what a horrible shock the Province of Quebec had. There was an extension of that revolution in the 1970s. So many westerners really did not know what the problem was. This had never been part of the normal Canadian dialogue.

In fact, so much of the government has been left to elites. This goes back to what I was saying to Senator Marsden. We have not had national institutions which accommodated the gut-wrenching feelings, desires and aspirations of all of the regions. We have preferred, rather, to leave that to governments.

● (1520)

What I am saying here is that this Meech Lake Accord is a further extension of that elitism. Fundamentally, I am a populist. Fundamentally, I would like to see less of that. Fundamentally, I would like to see open assemblies where, as I said, we build coalitions, broker our differences, rebuild alliances, and bring our country together with more common values.

My further point is that as we come to understand ourselves as a nation we have to have people who understand and are comfortable with the two founding cultures of this country at the very highest reaches of Canadian government. This accord further restricts the nature of the national political elite. I do not think there is any way on God's green earth that a John Diefenbaker could become Prime Minister today. I do not think that would happen. What worries me—and this gets back to my western Canadian point—is that the route we are going under Meech Lake, and the route we are going with the parochialization of politics, will mean that areas like western Canada will not create the kinds of people who really can lead this nation and be comfortable with the nation in its entirety. Mr. Trudeau made an excellent point on that. He said that the real brains, those with the real ability, will prefer to look inward at their own regions and at their own provinces.

What I am saying is that elitism has been a problem for me right from the beginning. I do not think we have dealt with it as a country. I do not think we have a strong tradition of consulting the people directly. I think the Meech Lake Accord makes it worse; it further entrenches that kind of trend.

[Senator MacDonald (Halifax).]

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): I believe in April of 1983 you wrote a feature article on the Op-Ed page of the Globe and Mail entitled: “Joe Clark—Eager Victim of Politics.” Do you remember that particular article?

Dr. Williams: Yes, I do.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): In that particular article you made reference to careerism in politics. You said that you were an informal adviser to a group of senior bureaucrats between the ages of 55 and 65 who would not offer themselves for politics because they felt that the public, the media and the political parties would not accept them. You bemoaned that fact. I suppose you can reconcile those views you had with regard to the need for elitist candidates?

Dr. Williams: No, senator. What—

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Improve the quality of the members of the House of Commons. That is what you were advising your group on. You were encouraging them to stand for election because they had something to offer, something above that which was manifested in the elected members of the House of Commons at that time.

Dr. Williams: Yes. I do not think that is at all inconsistent. What I was dealing with then was indeed a group that was far removed from politics. They were somewhat cynical about politics. I do not apologize for that.

One of the things I am sure we all strive to do is encourage able people to go into political life. There is nothing inconsistent in doing that—quite the contrary I would think—and in observing that we tend to have an elitist political culture and that we ought to be working to break down those kinds of barriers. My inclination is to work primarily through national institutions. I do not see anything inconsistent in that.

To say that we want a less elitist society, to say that we want, if you like, a more populist society, is not to say that we do not want to encourage the best and the brightest to go into politics. Surely we do. In fact, I think, if I am right—and I think I am—about the closed nature of Canadian society, about the elitist nature of Canadian society, that that, in itself, is detrimental to that kind of participation.

Political parties, to the extent that they do not encourage people to stand for election, ought to be called to task as well. There are many members of the major parties who are concerned about that and who are trying to do something about that.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): This may jog Senator Frith's memory, because we dealt with this subject recently, but there is a theory that the elitist candidates will not come forward, because the Canadian public have such a low view of politics that they will not allow a candidate, however qualified he or she may be, to enter Canadian politics without going through a mud bath, or some form of a trial by degradation, which tends to scare off the so-called elitist candidates.

Senator Frith: How did I get into this?

Senator Olson: Where did that definition come from?

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Mr. Chairman, I have one final question.

Senator Frith: I think that answers my question!

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): There have been rumours recently to the effect that the Liberal caucus of the Senate had come to an agreement—which they were going to check out with the Leader of the Opposition in the other place—by which they were going to recommend the elimination of a veto for this place to be replaced by a six-month suspensive veto on everything. That would be similar to the 1911 House of Lords custom.

As things stand now, there will be nothing done about Senate reform until after Meech Lake and the First Ministers' conference. Nothing will be done. The best ideas in the world will not come forward.

Suppose that the Liberal caucus in the Senate were to adopt that as a matter of policy, as a modus operandi, what would you think of that idea? What effect would it have on the management of the other place, knowing that anything that was sent to the Senate would, at worst, be passed in six months?

I should say that this was suggested as an interim measure of improvement.

Dr. Williams: Let me back up a little. I would support a reformed Senate, what I will call a more legitimate Senate in the eyes of Canadians, because that would bring about reform of the House of Commons. In fact, I think we need a bicameral system that really works.

This is a roundabout way of getting back to your question, but in all of that we need a system or a method of preventing deadlock, of getting the House of Commons to respond, and we are really not talking about the House of Commons, we are talking about the government.

We are getting off the subject, but I viewed the Senate's kicking up its heels in recent times as being positive. I think the government has been silly in not reacting more positively to some of the things that have taken place here. I can see in the future—and it may not be through this six-month provision you are talking about, I do not know—a reformed Senate having a positive impact on the House of Commons and its procedures. What we may see for the first time in this country is governments actually changing things because of elected politicians, ordinary trench-warfare politicians, wanting things changed. What we will have, in fact, is a House of Commons that, itself, demands that a government soften its position or that the government change its policies as opposed to the way things are done now. Debate does not happen now, as you well know. Effective debate does not happen in the House of Commons. That is a huge shell game. Policy is made outside the House of Commons, and it is made by the government under normal conditions, which is a majority government.

One of the things the Senate will do in the long term, particularly if it is effectively reformed, is cause a great many people to rethink the House of Commons. Whether the proposal you are suggesting, or which you say is around, will actually do that, I do not know, but I will tell you something else—I think that people, particularly government people, ought not to kid themselves about the Senate and the extent to which people are upset about the Senate on recent issues. I do not think that is the case at all. This gets back a little to our argument about elitism. I do not think people feel that they are engaged.

● (1530)

I do not believe they feel that they are involved, nor do I believe, in this day and age of electronic media, and so forth, that they feel there is a realistic debate on many issues going on in this country. In my experience—having travelled recently in the West and teaching a lot of students—that has hit a fairly responsive chord in this country. I would not suggest that any of these kinds of proposals be rejected out of hand, but if this is a short-term tactic, which means that everything will be delayed for six months, that could be silly.

That was probably not an answer to your question; I wandered all over the map. I have not heard about this plan.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): It was a fact in the last election. The pollsters agreed—concerning all parties—that in politics in Canada, as of September 1984, there was no such thing as a matter involving solutions to problems or someone getting up and saying, "Here is the solution to the particular problem," because solutions were things which did not work and the Canadian people were tired of them. The entire emphasis was placed on process. Both major leaders ran on process. That was the entire emphasis on which they fought their campaign, if you remember.

The Chairman: The next questioner is Senator Olson, followed by Senator Stewart.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman, I have to comment at the outset that Senator MacDonald's hypothesis raising what he knows about the rumours of what the Liberal caucus in the Senate's modus operandi might be is really hypothetical. He will have to take responsibility for that, because I have been a member of the caucus for some time and I have never heard of the nonsense that he put forward.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): It was a Financial Times article, and it happened.

Senator Olson: Well, whoever wrote it will have to take the responsibility for it.

Dr. Williams, I would like to refer to page 10 of your written brief. I will not read it all, but down near the centre of the page you say that the Meech Lake Accord will perhaps stand in the way of reform of the Senate to perform with real authority many of the functions that were intended for it from the outset.

I would like to hear you say what you think those are, but I want to say at the outset that there is more to my question than just to articulate what those functions might be, because in your whole brief you have complained—and I agree with you to some extent—about this “executive federalism” which exists. Further down on page 10 you talk about a “cowered House of Commons” and “an eviscerated Senate,” but that the real government and the real policy is set up by the dictates of party discipline in secret and highly personalized executive meetings.

Bearing in mind what you might say concerning the many functions that were intended from the outset for the Senate, would you also give us an indication of how those functions would deal with the problem that you raised concerning party discipline overriding all of these functions?

Dr. Williams: I think there is something to the sober second thought thesis which has survived over the years.

As I recall from my history, the Senate was intended to offset some fears on the part of the Fathers of Confederation about the extremes of a popularly elected assembly. The Senate was seen to have a role representing various sectors of the community beyond that. Particularly, in those days it was intended to represent property sectors—sectors which were successful, and so on—but in addition, regional concerns. I think these things have lived over time.

Senator Olson: I take it that you are not particularly impressed with the way the Senate has carried out those functions?

Dr. Williams: As an institution, that is right. In my view, the Senate—and as someone here has commented, I have written a lot of times about the Senate in a critical way—as an institution has never been able to live up to those expectations or fulfil what I think is the collective potential of the people in it. I am not just saying that because I am sitting here with all of you. I think that everyone in this institution has the capacity to contribute to this country seriously curtailed by the inherent weaknesses in the Senate in its appointment procedure and, therefore, in its legitimacy in the country in the sense of the legitimacy that people accord to this particular institution. So, you are absolutely right; I am one who stands on that side.

In terms of doing what the Senate should be doing for this country, I think the best thing that was done was the joint committee report in the early 1980s, which was co-chaired by Senator Molgat, and made a whole series of recommendations about the Senate. There is barely a thing in there that I would disagree with in terms of putting the Senate where it should be in terms of a functioning bicameral system.

Senator Olson: I have heard your arguments as well as those of several others that this matter of legitimacy and real authority would be enhanced if we were elected. If we are going down this road toward requiring unanimity, say, for constitutional amendment in the future, the possibility of that happening is diminished to some extent. I think you argued that point in your paper.

The point I am getting at is: Do you believe the Senate could do what was contained in that particular set of recommendations and all of the other aspirations? We could do it now if we just had the will to do it, could we not? We do not really need any constitutional reform if we all wanted to correct the problems that you have raised here.

[Senator Olson.]

Dr. Williams: No; but the problem people have put their finger on in terms of doing it now is the right problem, and that is the appointments procedure. That goes to the root of the difficulty of the Senate's actually doing that, and doing it well over time.

Nevertheless, as I said in response to Senator MacDonald, in the last couple of years we have seen more activism out of this institution than we have seen for a long time. I have never seen the Senate so much in the news and, contrary to what Harvie Andre and some other people seem to think, I do not think people are upset about that.

Senator Olson: They support it.

Dr. Williams: In a way, Senator Olson—to get back to where I was before; and this comes around, in a way, to my argument about party discipline—what people are reacting to here is the sudden realization that although the Senate is an appointed body, and may be a sort of authoritarian institution, and may lack democratic legitimacy, and so on, a lot of those attributes can be applied to a government which, after all, does not have to follow the will of the House of Commons.

Let me expand on that point. When we are talking about the Senate, I think that Canadians are not buying the argument right now that this is a contest between an authoritarian, appointed Senate and a populist, elected assembly House of Commons when the Senate does what you are suggesting they could do. I think that Canadians are past that. They no longer see it that way. I think that what they have seen in recent months is a contest between an appointed Senate, which is all those things that they think it is, and a stubborn government, which dominates the House of Commons—a government which is not facilitating very much national debate on such things as the Meech Lake Accord, free trade, and so on and so forth.

● (1540)

I really think that the old argument about the tension and about the Senate's lacking legitimacy in the face of this popular assembly called the House of Commons has come to be questioned by a number of people. That is why I do not think there has been a major rebellion about what has been happening in the Senate lately.

Nonetheless, that does not mean that what you said, in my opinion, is true. I do not think that over the long term the Senate can, through an act of will, become the kind of balanced institution, the kind of offsetting assembly of democratic dialogue, that we would like it to be. You cannot do that just through simple will. There have to be some serious reforms of the way this institution is formulated.

Senator Olson: My problem is that we might have to wait another generation or two if the Meech Lake Accord gets in the way of what you have termed “meaningful Senate reform.” Perhaps the evolution that we witnessed, and that you have just described in the last while—and I think it has been going on for several years—may be second best. Perhaps it is all we can get for a while. It is a case of evolution rather than revolution.

Dr. Williams: You may well be right. I share your view and I have said that here. I do not think we are going to see serious Senate reform under the Meech Lake Accord for all the reasons I mentioned.

I must say—and I assume the people who represent this point of view have met with senators—that there is a view in western Canada, for example, that through what they regard as evolution we may well end up with an elected Senate, which, as you know, is a big issue in western Canada.

I know that when the Meech Lake Accord was first agreed to—and a number of us were trying to get organized to have some sort of a national response to it—I spoke to people like David Elton from Canada West and to colleagues and friends in the West and they said, “Ultimately what we are going to see here—and Don Getty wasn’t really as shellac as everyone thought—is provincial premiers asking that their nominees be elected on a provincial basis. Therefore, we will go the route of the American Senate.” Through evolution and through convention we will end up having people coming to this place who are elected within the provinces.

What we cannot do as an act of wilful reform will be done in that backhanded way. Lo and behold, in October, when I was in Calgary, there in the Calgary Herald was a huge article saying that Ralph Klein, Nick Taylor and Laurence Decore of Alberta were all going to run for the Senate. I do not think that is going to happen. I do not think Robert Bourassa and David Peterson are going to allow that to happen in Quebec and Ontario, but people have these theories, and perhaps stranger things do happen.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman, I have many more questions, but I think I have used up my time.

The Chairman: We have seven minutes and three questioners left, so I ask the questioners to limit themselves, and, Professor Williams, I ask you to limit yourself in your replies.

We will now hear from Senator Stewart, followed by Senator Frith.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Dr. Williams, you have made a general criticism of elitism, and you mentioned the Meech Lake Accord in that context. From that I understand that you are opposed to closed constitutions secretly contrived, and I can understand that, but I am having difficulty when you say that everything in this accord is likely to promote what I will call—and you did not use the term—“western alienation.” Are you saying that the inclusion of the “distinct society” provision in the accord means that bilingualism from coast to coast is likely to be played down, that westerners, and perhaps people from Nova Scotia, will say, “Well, the francophones in Quebec are happy. They can speak French within their own boundaries. We can be happy in Nova Scotia or Alberta speaking English.” Is this what you mean, or is this only part of what you mean?

Dr. Williams: Yes, essentially that is what I mean. Essentially I think that the combination of things that are included in this accord have that effect.

In a way, constitutional documents send out a signal to people. They set a context within which we live. I think the context within which this document has been written and is being discussed and promoted out in the countryside is a context which tends to devalue national values; which tends to depreciate the need for a bilingual education; and which tends to reassure us that we need not make sacrifices to understand, for example, in terms of those of us who are English Canadians, how Quebec really works, and that those people who live in the hinterland of Quebec do not really need to understand the rest of the country. I think that there are a host of things which conspire to do that if the “distinct society” is part of that in the eyes of westerners in particular, and I think it is. I think the general assumption, and the generally agreed upon assumption, that this grants much more power to provincial politicians contributes to that as well.

I think that those segments, those elements, in society which fundamentally think it is time to pull back on these things, that we have had too much centrism, and that we have had too much concern with these kinds of policies, are getting some comfort from this particular document.

I think that those people who believe that we need to go further in certain respects, for example, in education policy—that is, those who really believe that we need a national educational policy—find that in many of its elements this document works against their purposes and that they cannot make any headway.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, although I have other questions, I will stop there.

The Chairman: Senator Frith, followed by Senator Hays.

Senator Frith: I will ask just one question. In your presentation I thought I heard a non sequitur when you said that this rigid amending formula would make Senate reform difficult, probably impossible, but then to say that it would therefore lead to abolition, it seems to me that abolition would be very difficult for the same reasons as reform would be, namely, that the provincial premiers would never unanimously agree to it, especially under the Meech Lake Accord where they have what amounts to appointing powers.

Dr. Williams: What I am thinking of in that regard, Senator Frith, is that politicians are still primarily responsive to rampaging public opinion. My point is that the concern about reforming the Senate and the evident impossibility of doing that will lead to a degree of frustration which will be fanned by a frustrated government, which may be putting up with a Senate that is starting to show the kind of will that Senator Olson was talking about, to the point that it will become clear across the country—as it has become clear in the provinces before in terms of second houses—that they may say, “Let’s be done with it. We cannot agree to reform it.” Provincial politicians will never accept it, because they have got it all going their own way, and there is not the will to fight a national campaign on this. What we will find is—and this is my concern in the long term—that public opinion will support that in virtually every region.

I can see many more reasons why you could achieve unanimity among the premiers to get rid of the Senate rather than to reform it. I guess it would be the accumulated frustration. I think it would be a terrible loss, a lost opportunity.

Senator Frith: Frustration and disillusionment.

Dr. Williams: Yes.

The Chairman: Senator Hays will be the last questioner.

Senator Hays: I will ask only one question. My question is prompted by a comment made last week in Montreal at the Energy Options Conference to the effect that we needed the Free Trade Agreement in its present form to protect western Canada from, in effect, the colonial attitude of central Canada.

As a fellow westerner, I think you will probably appreciate that that feeling is widely held, at least in my province of Alberta. I think that could be addressed by parliamentary reform involving the Senate, which you have talked about, with which I am generally in agreement. Do you see anything short of that? I ask the question because, with the Meech Lake Accord, there is a strong possibility, if not a probability, that this may be what is thrust upon us. Do you see any way of ameliorating that problem, short of parliamentary reform?

• (1550)

I often use as an example earlier times, during King's prime ministership, for example, when that was a reality, but I do not think it was as aggravated then as it now is.

Dr. Williams: In the overall scheme of things, and particularly germane to the Meech Lake Accord, I do not see anything in particular that will ameliorate that. We can obviously elect over time wilful governments and wilful leaders who really take these things into account and deal on a pragmatic basis with some of the problems you have talked about. As I say, however, one of my concerns about the accord is that we are not likely to do that in western Canada—we are not likely to create national leaders to an increasing extent over the generations in western Canada.

The other thing that happens, and is happening now, is that political movements are created. A reform party has been created in western Canada. I must tell senators that I do not know whether it is going to come to very much, but, on some of the issues, I think a lot of westerners will find their position fairly attractive in terms of free trade, Meech Lake, and a number of other things. But these are not long-term kinds of solutions. These are not constitutional solutions. These are not things that, in a sense, offset a basic law which is, I think, fundamentally flawed and which fundamentally works to the detriment of the far-flung regions of the country. I despair at whether those solutions are actually there right now.

The Chairman: Thank you, Dr. Williams. This will conclude our hearing with you this afternoon. On behalf of the committee, I thank you for coming here and sharing your views with us. Of course, I thank you personally because of a long contact with you, indicated by our colleague, Senator MacDonald. I know I will have a difficult time convincing certain senators that your presence here today was absolutely none of my doing. It came strictly through the staff system—

Senator Doody: A likely story!

The Chairman: —but I know I will have difficulty convincing them of that.

Senator Frith: I am convinced.

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, Mr. Ernie Daniels and Ms. Anne Chalmers were escorted to seats in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: Our next witnesses this afternoon are from the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance. Appearing as the interim president of that group is Mr. Ernie Daniels. With him is Anne Chalmers, the Coordinator for the Ottawa office of the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance. On behalf of all honourable senators, I welcome both of them this afternoon. They have supplied us with a brief, which has been distributed to all members of the committee. I understand that it is their intention to read the brief, after which we will proceed to questions. I now turn it over to you, Mr. Daniels. Please proceed.

Mr. Ernie Daniels, Interim President, Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators. I am from Manitoba and was appointed Interim President of the PTNA just recently, so in terms of some of the comments I would like to make later on I am the new kid on the block. I would like to inform the Senate that our main politicians and technicians, who were supposed to be here today, could not make it because of the Air Canada strike. I apologize on behalf of those people. I will try my best to answer any of the senators' questions, and, if I cannot, Anne Chalmers, our coordinator, will take those questions and answer them in written form.

First, as to the background of the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance, it was formed in November 1983 by the chiefs and councils of the 128 bands from the West. I am now talking of the reserves from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and northeast British Columbia.

The Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance represents those peoples who are the direct heirs of the Indian parties to the treaties entered into between their nations and Her Majesty the Queen. Specifically, we represent Indian nations who are adherents to Treaties Nos. 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 10. We are a 128-band alliance of Indian nations from across the prairie provinces and from northeastern British Columbia.

The constitutional position of the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance was tabled on our behalf at the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Constitutional Affairs held earlier this year. The alliance was denied direct access to that forum, even though it was, and is, the only organization mandated to speak jointly on behalf of the Treaty Indian Nations in most of western Canada.

[Dr. Williams.]

As we reminded the First Ministers, the Crown has a history of recognizing and acknowledging our inherent and treaty rights. The Royal Proclamation of 1763 is a primary constitutional document that protects our rights. In it King George III confirmed Indian ownership of Indian lands, and stipulated that these could be acquired only by the Crown, and then only with the consent of the Indian tribes affected. The instruments chosen by the Crown to acquire Indian lands were designated as "treaties" rather than as "contracts" or "agreements." Thereby the Crown recognized the capacity of Indian nations to enter treaties.

Treaty-making based on Indian consent was to be the required and sole procedure for the Crown and its agents in dealing with the Indian nations over land or political matters. This process is itself a right, which was denied to us by the very nature of that constitutional forum which had the capacity to impose its views on us without our consent.

The process of treaty negotiations was, and is, that of mutually recognized sovereign nations coming together to establish an on-going relationship. That process and protocol is bilateral in nature between the Crown and the Indian nations, and must be utilized if treaties are to be affected in any way.

The Crown's responsibilities now lie with the Government of Canada, which has assumed exclusively all obligations contained in the treaty relationship. These cannot be delegated to third parties such as the provinces.

Furthermore, the Government of Canada bears trusteeship obligations towards treaty Indian nations, which obligations the federal government has the task of fulfilling. These include measures to ensure the maintenance and development of our societies, cultures and resources. In the past most of the intended legislative and administrative protections for Indian nations have proven to be impotent in addressing our political status, land claims, land entitlements, resource development, property and territorial jurisdiction, treaty enforcement, and the Crown's trusteeship responsibilities.

Before discussing specific effects of the terms of the proposed accord upon these fundamentals of Crown-treaty Indian relations in Canada, we would like to comment upon the role of constitutions in general and upon the division of powers in Canada.

All societies, if they are to continue to exist and progress, require certain basic rules and laws which are universal and equally applicable to citizens and to all institutions of government. Over time these rules and laws have been formalized into carefully worded documents known as constitutions. One function of a constitution is to ensure and preserve the rights of individuals and groups within the state and, on occasion, from the state.

● (1600)

A second function is to limit the power and authority of governments and their institutions so as to ensure that only those powers granted by the people to their government can be exercised. Limitation of powers also serves as a protective mechanism in the event that a government in power attempts to act in a manner detrimental to the interests of the individual, the collectivity or the state. The Meech Lake Accord stands on its head this concept of the limitation of powers. Instead of ensuring that actions of governments are automatically limited to prevent abuses of power, the accord operates from the principle that people of good will in government will ensure the proper operation of the Constitution.

While it may be that at present we have 11 First Ministers of good will, a constitution should necessarily be designed to operate on a long-term basis. Can the Prime Minister and the ten provincial premiers ensure that the elective process in Canada will, over a period measured in generations, always select persons of good will to hold the reins of power in this country? It is, of course, not possible for anyone to give such an assurance. That is why the Constitution must operate from the principle of limitation of powers.

A second general matter on which the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance has concern is the division of powers in Canada between the federal government, the various provincial governments, and our First Nations governments. The pre-Meech Lake Accord Constitution ensured that federal responsibility for "Indians and lands reserved for the Indians," set out in section 91(24) of the British North America Act, remained intact and in place. The separation of powers in sections 91 and 92 of the Constitution also ensured that the federal government acted in the national interest and had sole jurisdiction to do so.

We are concerned that the accord impairs this ability of the federal government to act in the national interest. The relationship between the Treaty Indian Nations and Canada flow through the federal government, while historically our interests and those of the provinces have been in conflict. Such continues to be the case. Two examples of this are the failure of the constitutional negotiations on inherent and treaty rights, and the lack of progress on matters such as treaty land entitlements in the prairie provinces. A strong federal government is necessary to protect our interests and rights.

The proposed Meech Lake Accord is contrary to these fundamental principles, and we would like to emphasize three points in the present submission: first, the federal government's being the sole repository of the Crown's obligations under treaty and the trust it entails; second, the exclusively bilateral character of any acceptable process dealing with our relations with the Canadian polity; and, third, the need for our free consent to any measures affecting us. We protest that these principles are not adhered to in the accord or in the process which created it.

The federal government denied Treaty Indian and other First Nations the opportunity of taking part in the federal-provincial meeting on constitutional affairs held at Meech Lake on April 30 last. The accord reached there—subsequently refined, and the subject of your hearing—has serious and adverse implications for the inherent and treaty rights of bands in the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance.

Even so, we do appreciate positive aspects of the accord, including its recognition of the rights of distinctive peoples within Canadian federalism and its confirmation of the need for ongoing constitutional discussions.

As did other First Nations in Canada, we called for full participation in this ongoing constitutional process. The request was refused. We therefore appreciate this opportunity to voice in public before this committee our opposition to the major aspects of this closed-door agreement, to the way it has been achieved, and to the long-term negative implications it has for Treaty Indians in Canada.

We would remind you of our past experience of agreements reached in this exclusive way. One example from many is the Natural Resources Transfer Agreements of 1930, which are part of Canada's Constitution. They turned over public lands in the prairie provinces to the provincial governments. There was no Treaty Indian involvement whatsoever in the agreements' creation, enactment or implementation. They have entrenched severe limitations on our treaty rights to wildlife resources and have occasioned extremely serious obstacles to the fulfilment of our treaty land entitlements. Imprecision and ambiguity in the agreements have contributed to the denial to our nations of some 2.5 million acres still owed under treaty. We want no repetition of this kind of federal-provincial decision-making.

This committee is respectfully reminded that Canada's First Nations have gone through four conferences on aboriginal constitutional affairs, beginning in 1983. The interpretation given these events in the report of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord is an unconvincing attempt to whitewash the pitiable performance of the Government of Canada as it tries to blame its incapacity and lack of will on the First Nations themselves. Among other things, we received repeated refusals at those meetings to deal with our rights on the pretext that they are obscure and need definition.

None of this problem with "obscurity" appears to have worried the premiers as they gave speedy assent to constitutional recognition of Quebec's distinctiveness in Canada, or when they spoke of the French- and English-speaking peoples as together comprising "a fundamental characteristic of Canada." Such special pleading and narrowness can only work against Treaty Indian Nations' legal and political rights. It is firmly rejected.

As with much else in the accord, we are dismayed at the conclusions on this matter reached in the special joint committee's report. The document states that:

There is no comparison... between the task set for themselves by Canada's aboriginal peoples—namely, creation of a third order of government—and constitutional recognition in an interpretation clause of Quebec's "distinct society". Among other differences, Quebec already has its governmental powers and jurisdiction spelled out in the Constitution Act, 1867.

Our Nations' governments certainly exercised their powers and jurisdiction at that date, and those were untouched in treaties we made with the Crown. Full documentation was placed before the ministers on this. We place responsibility wholly on the Government of Canada for failing to implement our rights within the political structure of this country.

The Government of Canada has extensive treaty obligations to our Indian Nations, and we are fully conscious that any shift of political or financial power to the provinces brings with it threats to our very existence. The destruction of Indian Nations in the United States through termination of federal responsibilities in the 1950s is a constant reminder to us of the effects of such action and of the irrevocable destruction which it brings.

Along with all of the other attempts to bring us and our land under provincial jurisdiction, we see the accord as being one more stage in the path to assimilation, with implicit denial of our inherent and treaty rights. Those rights must be effectively protected legally and institutionally, otherwise Canada's obligations to us under the Constitution Act, 1982 will be diminished.

In this regard, we are vitally concerned with federal and provincial arrangements in relation to social and economic programs. The federal government used the implementation of medicare to attempt to transfer jurisdiction over Indian services to the provincial governments. Under the present accord, should a province opt out of national programs in areas of its own jurisdiction, there is no guarantee that we would continue to have access to federal programs. That is a major threat to our health, education and other rights.

The Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance is convinced that provincial governments will use this clause to deny programs and services which are guaranteed to us by treaty. Amendments of this character may allow the provinces to expand their jurisdiction into areas of federal or Indian interest. The programs and services are funded by the federal government, although delivery is through the provinces. Arbitrary action by provincial governments will lead to extremely adverse effects on Indian people.

What would prevent provinces from diverting any of the "reasonable compensation" they would receive from Ottawa away from federally-defined goals? Again, there must be adequate protection of our rights, and it is the federal government's responsibility to provide it. Any discussion of federal-provincial roles in relation to federally-funded programs must be preceded by a resolution of the issues of treaty rights to health, education, social services, and economic development. The present federal government has avoided discussion with us of those issues.

We will, however, continue to demand a direct presence at future First Ministers' conferences. The results of the Meech Lake meeting clearly show that such conferences have a direct impact on our inherent and treaty rights, and that only by our full involvement in this process can they be protected in a satisfactory way. However, we are concerned that the accord's provision concerning unanimous consent will make it virtually impossible to pass constitutional amendments to enhance our rights in the Constitution.

• (1610)

In keeping with the bilateral nature of the Canada-First Nations relationship, a meeting must immediately be convened between the Prime Minister and the Treaty Indian Nations to discuss our treaty rights, and their place within the Canadian Constitution, including the Constitutional Amendment, 1987. The objective must be clear constitutional recognition of ourselves as distinct societies with distinct identities in Canada. The Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance affirms that all Treaty Indian Nations must be recognized in this way. They are unique politically, economically, socially and culturally. The Prime Minister called the accord an historic agreement which completed Canada as a nation through the inclusion of Quebec. He conveniently forgot the whole question of inherent and treaty rights. Until our rights are properly recognized and entrenched in the Constitution, and until they are implemented, Canada will be incomplete. The nonderogation clause in section 2(4) of the proposed amendment must be expanded to include the powers, rights and privileges of Treaty Indian governments, and not only those "of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

On the matter of the appointment of Supreme Court judges from lists provided by the provinces, we note that hostile provincial governments will not be able to stack future Supreme Courts with judges who would be inclined to give provincial interests preference over our inherent and treaty rights. Further, our participation must be guaranteed in the annual conferences on the economy and other matters, and in the constitutional conferences. These are of major significance to us. Senate reform and fisheries are on the agenda for the latter conferences. The two topics are particularly important to the First Nations.

The Senate has always had a regional character, and most proposals for reforming it aim at strengthening its role as representative of regions or groups. Prime Minister Diefenbaker appointed the first Indian senator, James Gladstone, because of a concern about the lack of Indian representation in Canada's central institutions. Since that time there has been a conventional practice of having First Nations represented in the Senate, and, as you know, there are currently three First Nations' senators. There have, over the years, been frequent discussions on the idea of special representation for First Nations in the Senate and the House of Commons.

Fisheries is clearly a subject of direct concern to the treaty nations. The western treaties all protect hunting and fishing rights. The Sparrow decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal of December 1986 indicated that certain aboriginal rights to fish remained in existence and were protected by section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982. That decision clearly requires a reform of fisheries management which will involve the First Nations and the federal and provincial governments.

While this amendment regarding annual conferences may allow for future constitutional conferences on inherent and treaty rights, it would be immensely improved were a clause added to require that these conferences be held. We agree with the special joint committee that a timetable and serious work plan should be established "to prepare for a further Constitutional Conference (or conferences) on Aboriginal Self-Government."

The proposed bilateral meeting with the Prime Minister, for which we request your support, must have on its agenda the appointment of a treaty commissioner. This officer would have a mandate to hold hearings and report on the federal government's performance on our inherent and treaty rights, and on what redress should be forthcoming where those rights have not been upheld, whether in constitutional or other areas. This would include a review of the government's claims policies and the development of proposals for their reform in a fair and just fashion. An agreement on such an office would issue from the bilateral treaty process, an existing process to which the federal government should demonstrate its proper commitment. The constitutional amendments of 1982 and 1983 equated "land claims agreements" with treaties, and so explicitly recognized the continuing amenability of our rights to consensual modification or clarification.

The Parliament and Government of Canada, through responding to our submissions, would be recognizing this fact, that the treaty process has never been terminated in Canada. Thank you.

The Chairman: Does Ms. Chalmers have anything to add?

Ms. Anne Chalmers, Co-ordinator, Ottawa Office, Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance: No, thank you.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): As I understand it, a major thrust of your presentation is that matters relating to Indians, such as lands reserved for Indians, and matters which come under the treaty rights of Indians could be eroded. One way this could happen is by what I call an indirect transfer to provincial governments. You refer to this kind of transfer on page 10 of your brief where you talk about health programs, education programs, and the like. I think you make a very good point there. What I would like to know is: Are you fearful that there will be an attempt to make a direct transfer of matters relating to Indians and their lands to provincial governments, and, if so, do you have some evidence that this action is contemplated or planned? Could you give us something specific so that we would know the kind of thing of which you are afraid?

Mr. Daniels: First, let me give you some background. Those people who were around the Senate and the House of Commons in 1969 will know about the white paper on Indian people presented by the then minister to the government. Indian people have fought tooth and nail against that white paper. Under the current government the Honourable Erik Nielsen took on the task of the "buffalo jump," as we call it. We see the buffalo "jumping" by virtue of the fact that some deputy ministers have been meeting with provincial governments—particularly with the Government of Manitoba—to discuss such areas as education, housing, and social services. I do not have any documentation to support this exchange, but we know that it is happening.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): To ask you a more general question, I have heard the argument made that in 1987 Canada is not nearly as strong an economic country as it was 20 or 30 years ago because of changes in the world economic order. If Canada is going to compete effectively in the world of 1988 and 1989, we have to change our ways and our expectations. For example, we have to make a trade arrangement with the United States, and we will have to get rid of a lot of the impedimenta, the weights that make it difficult for us to run fast. One of these weights, for example, that I have heard mentioned is unemployment insurance for fishermen. I am told that another of the weights we would have to abandon is regional economic development, and yet another one is the special requirements on the Canadian government, and therefore on the Canadian taxpayer, with regard to the Indian people.

The argument is made that, one way or another, we have to lighten our runners' load so that they can compete in the world economy. Is that an argument that you have heard, and is it an argument, insofar as it applies to your people, to which you would give any weight at all, or do you simply say, "These are our rights, and we do not care what the long-term application of fulfilling these rights will be for Canada competing in the world of 1987 and 1988"?

● (1620)

Mr. Daniels: Senator, that is a good question. First of all, we do care about Canada. We do care about the people of Canada. However, we have always maintained that in our treaty and inherent rights we never gave up our natural resources. We have also made statements to the Government of Canada in terms of telling the taxpayers of this country to keep their tax dollars. Simply give us our fair share of the revenue emanating from the natural resources of this country. In that way you will recognize our treaty rights. In that way we will not be a burden on the taxpayers of this country.

The Chairman: Before I go to the next questioner, who is Senator Fairbairn, I wonder if I might ask you a question, Mr. Daniels. You indicated that you were fairly new in your position. Were you involved in the aboriginal conference that took place last March with the federal government?

Mr. Daniels: Senator, the answer is no, I was not involved.

The Chairman: Very well, I will not proceed with further questioning in that regard. I will then call upon Senator Fairbairn, who will be followed by Senator Marsden.

Senator Fairbairn: Mr. Daniels, in your brief you make the point that responsibilities for native people cannot be delegated to third parties; that means that that responsibility cannot be delegated to the provinces. In your opinion, does the Meech Lake Accord, with its unanimity provision, in effect, delegate responsibility for native people to provincial authorities, in view of the fact that, as I understand it, from now on, in order to discuss your future there will need to be unanimous consent from all of the provinces and the federal government?

Mr. Daniels: Senator, we have always maintained that the relationship of the Treaty Indian Nations is with the federal government, and that no rights in dealing with us should ever be affected by provincial consent. That is the stand of the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance, and we see the Meech Lake Accord as doing that against our will and without our participation.

Senator Fairbairn: Mr. Daniels, at the very beginning of your brief you note that the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance was not permitted at the table at the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Constitutional Affairs held in March. How does your association deal with the federal government? Do you deal directly with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, or do you deal with the Prime Minister through his office? In other words, how does your communication with the federal government work?

Mr. Daniels: Senator, in 1985 the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance had a meeting with the Prime Minister in which we set out our demands for recognition and, hopefully, implementation of the bilateral process between the Treaty Indian Nations and the Prime Minister. However, as you and I know, the trust obligation, or the trusteeship of the Indian people, rests with the minister's office of the Department of Indian Affairs, and that is who we have mainly been dealing with in communications between the Prime Minister and ourselves to date.

Senator Fairbairn: In other words, you deal through the minister's office.

Mr. Daniels: Yes, and I don't know why, but the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance has been experiencing difficulty. The minister appears to ignore requests for meetings. To date, he has ignored the funding of PTNA. We have been on our own since 1984 with no government funding whatsoever.

Senator Fairbairn: That leads, then, to my next question, which you may have already answered. Has anyone from the government sat down with you or any of the membership of your association to discuss the Meech Lake Accord since it was signed in June? In other words, has anyone communicated with you to explain the accord or discuss it or to make suggestions to you?

Mr. Daniels: Senator, the answer is no. However, that has been the history of the government in the FMC process, and that has also applied on the Meech Lake Accord. Also, I do not think we were consulted on the aspects of the Free Trade Agreement which will affect us.

Senator Fairbairn: I have a final question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Daniels: In terms of future constitutional discussions on aboriginal rights and on aboriginal self-government, we have been told that the federal government is not really interested in further conferences such as those that have been held since 1983 unless it knows in advance that there will be some kind of agreement. There has been a suggestion that that level of discussion, perhaps, is not needed; that there are other ways of talking to the leadership of the native people on these issues. Do you accept that? Do you feel that your march towards understanding and acceptance of some kind of self-government that will be entrenched in the Constitution can be conducted at a lower level than a constitutional forum?

Mr. Daniels: Senator, I cannot speak for the Inuit or the Metis or for AFN. I can only speak for the PTNA. I do not know what has been happening in this regard; I do not know if any progress has been made toward another First Ministers' conference. However, our treaty position has always been that there is a process currently in place, which is a bilateral process, as a result of our treaties with the Crown and with Canada. That is a process in which we believe and a process that we want to follow.

Also, in relation to the issue of self-government, we have always stated that we never gave that up; that it was an inherent right. Therefore, for the government to now entrench the right of Treaty Indian Nations to self-government is superfluous. We already have that. We are saying to the government: "Just give us the recognition and the revenue to go along with it, and we will implement our governments."

Senator Fairbairn: However, as I understand it from you, that bilateral process has not been working too well, if at all.

Mr. Daniels: Senator, that is true.

The Chairman: Senator Marsden?

Senator Marsden: I would like to begin by saying to our witnesses that this is a most interesting brief, and I would like to thank you very much for it. You have raised a great number of new points which we have not heard before, and your brief is very helpful indeed.

I wonder if you would be willing to elaborate on a question which your brief raises in my mind in relation to the more general concerns of Meech Lake. By that I mean not only the concerns which you have as representatives of native people. On page 4 of your brief you talk about constitutions serving the function of ensuring and preserving rights of individuals and groups within the state. On page 7 you say that the positive aspect of the Meech Lake Accord is the recognition of rights of distinctive peoples within Canadian federalism.

I understand both of those points separately one from the other. As you know, a great many people within Canada—women in particular—fear that the "distinct society" clause in the Meech Lake Accord will override their rights as individuals under the Charter. With respect to native people, how do you see the situation? Would you expand on that point?

Mr. Daniels: Thank you for the compliment respecting our brief. We worked many hours in preparing this document for the Senate, because this is the first time that we have addressed this forum.

I would have to take that question back to the more experienced politicians in the association. At this time I cannot intelligently give you an answer.

Senator Marsden: I would be interested in anything you had to say on that, either in writing or by phone.

I would like to ask one final question. You talked about the potential movement of health and education with respect to native people from the federal domain to the provincial domain. Do you have anything to add in terms of the child-care proposals? The new child-care proposals are being negotiated under what some people call the Meech Lake "spirit". I would be interested in your comments on that.

Mr. Daniels: Child care is something that is very close to me. The people from the reserves that the alliance represents have talked about this in one form or another. We had asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Jake Epp, to ensure that native people be recognized. I was very happy to hear from his staff that there is a provision for programming and for dollars in terms of child care. That is the first time that this has happened since I have been involved in politics. This is a significant step towards having native children taken care of by their own people.

The Chairman: The next senator on my list is Senator Watt. Senator Fairbairn has indicated she would like to ask further questions in a second round.

Senator Watt: I would like to welcome you to the Senate. I would like to ask a question that is related to a question that was asked a few minutes ago. My question relates to the passing of the trusteeship of self-government to the aboriginal people. From my reading of the Meech Lake Accord, even the placing of such an item on the agenda of a First Ministers' conference requires provincial input. If the Meech Lake Accord is proclaimed in its present form, the unanimity provision in that accord will apply, and therefore the ten provinces will be involved before any bilateral process begins to take place. Do you not agree that that would endanger the status of the aboriginal people in this country today? In other words, the Government of Canada, through the Meech Lake Accord, has relinquished its responsibility for the aboriginal people. Is this your interpretation, or am I wrong?

Mr. Daniels: Senator Watt, it is a pleasure to meet you today. We have stated in our brief that we are opposed to having the provinces involved in issues that affect our lives politically and culturally. That is why we are making the strong statement urging that the Prime Minister undertake a conference with the Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance in the West to ensure that the bilateral process is alive and well. That is the opinion of the chiefs I represent.

Senator Watt: My next question relates to the fact of aboriginal people being completely left out in this process. In my opinion, that is unjust. I think the government is misleading the general public of Canada, and, as an aboriginal person, I strongly sympathize with you.

The native people were the first people in this country, and it seems as though the government constantly wants to keep pulling the rug out from under their feet. It was perceived by the general public and by the First Ministers that it was very important for Quebec to be brought into Confederation. Are we not in the same predicament today that Quebec was in at that time? At present aboriginal people are left out in the dark and have to be brought into Confederation. Do you agree with that?

Mr. Daniels: Senator, I cannot speak for the Métis or Inuit people of this country. However, I agree that they have been left out. The aboriginal people were at the First Ministers' conferences by invitation only. They have to be given full participation—full voting privileges and veto power—in issues that affect their lives. The Prairie Treaty Nations' Alliance is requesting that the Government of Canada protect and enhance the treaties that were signed by our chiefs and councils in the 1870s. Again, the aboriginal people are outside looking in, as you have stated.

The Chairman: Before I call on Senator Fairbairn, Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour) has some questions.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): I read with considerable interest what you had to say. On page 13 you say that one of the eventual conferences, assuming that the Meech Lake Accord is approved, would be a constitutional conference on fisheries. You say that fisheries and Senate reform are important, but who will advise you on fisheries? The management of the fishery on the prairies, particularly on the northern prairies, is handled by the provinces. There is a delegated arrangement by the federal government, as is the case in northern Ontario and Quebec, which, of course, are important areas for native people. Who will speak for you when the issue of fisheries is discussed, because they will not discuss quotas or sanitation, but jurisdiction? They will not discuss delegated jurisdiction, I assume, but permanent jurisdiction. Who will speak for you in that case?

● (1640)

Mr. Daniels: That is a good question. If I were a lawyer I could answer that question. I will have to take that question to my elders and my chiefs. I will get back to the Senate on that.

I would say that the responsibility for the trust relationship was given to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on our behalf. I hope he would speak on our behalf. If not, we will speak for ourselves in whatever forum, but we will not have the provinces speaking on our behalf in that area.

The Chairman: Senator Fairbairn on a second round.

Senator Fairbairn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me a second round, because I left out a question regarding a very important part of the brief.

At page 14 you talk about the appointment of a treaty commissioner being part of any ongoing bilateral discussions with the Prime Minister. That is an interesting thought. Is this a new concept, or has this been discussed in the past? Is this something that will be on the agenda if you do get invited to a meeting?

Mr. Daniels: That is a very good question. It has been part of our discussions for a number of years. We asked the Prime Minister to consider the proposal. He had instructed the [Senator Watt.]

Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Justice at that time—which was in 1985—to get on with that work, but no follow up has been done by the other side. In that regard, I am talking about the government of the day.

Senator Fairbairn: There has been no response to that proposal over the past two years.

Mr. Daniels: Right.

Senator Fairbairn: I should like to make one observation. Many of us in this chamber have been discussing over the past year and a half—and we will try to follow up those discussions with action—setting up a committee of the Senate that would deal exclusively with native issues. I hope that can be moved ahead in the near future.

Mr. Daniels: Thank you, senator. We have been told by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs that a special committee should be set up to monitor Indian issues in this country. Your opinion will be received positively by the people I work for.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Fairbairn. I have no other names on the list of questioners. I thank Mr. Daniels and Ms. Chalmers for appearing before the committee.

I note that in your introduction, Mr. Daniels, you properly pointed out that you are from Manitoba. I wish you a special welcome in that regard. I am sure my colleagues would agree.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Honourable senators, while awaiting the next group of witnesses, I have an announcement to make. The Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration will meet tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, not 8 o'clock. A notice will be circulated, but for those honourable senators who are concerned about that meeting this gives some advance notice.

Senator Doody: I did not think we were allowed to conduct Senate business during Committee of the Whole.

The Chairman: That is not Senate business, simply—

Senator Doody: It was an unpaid commercial!

The Chairman:—a casual notice at no charge.

Senator Frith: And a filler!

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, Mr. M. Gordon and Mr. S. Silverstone were escorted to seats in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: The next witness this afternoon is Mr. Mark Gordon, President, Makivik Corporation. I welcome Mr. Gordon to the Senate. Mr. Gordon has kindly submitted a brief in both official languages. We have had that brief distributed to all senators.

In view of the length of the brief, I presume you intend to summarize it so that we will have time for questions. We have one hour at our disposal for this portion of the meeting.

I notice that you have someone accompanying you. Would you mind introducing your colleague, please.

Mr. Mark Gordon, President, Makivik Corporation: Mr. Chairman, accompanying me this afternoon is Mr. Sam Silverstone, the attorney for Makivik Corporation.

The Chairman: Would you please proceed, Mr. Gordon?

Mr. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators. I am not going to go through the brief in detail, because I believe it stands on its own. I will highlight some areas of the brief and simply summarize it. I will also try to explain for the benefit of the Senate what sense of urgency the native people have over the Meech Lake Accord, and also explain to honourable senators that our issues are not being adequately dealt with at the present.

First of all, I should like to make some general comments about the development of human rights. Human rights, up to now, have been based primarily on the protection of individual rights.

Senator Frith: Would the witness please tell us again who he is and whom he represents?

Mr. Gordon: My name is Mark Gordon, and I am from the northern Quebec region. I represent the Inuit of northern Quebec.

Senator Frith: What is the Makivik Corporation?

Mr. Gordon: That is an entity that was established to administer the heritage funds we gained through the James Bay Agreement. This corporation has the dual role of being the caretaker of the heritage fund and being legally responsible for the protection of the rights of our membership.

Senator Frith: Do you represent one group? Do you represent the Cree?

Mr. Gordon: I represent all of the Inuit of northern Quebec.

Senator Frith: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

• (1650)

The Chairman: And none of the Inuit groups in northern Quebec is outside of your group. You represent all of them.

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

Senator Frith: All of the ones who were involved in the James Bay settlement?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

The human rights development has been based primarily on the protection of individual rights. Canada has been one of the leaders in that development in the world, along with some other major western countries.

We believe that there is a natural extension of the development of human rights beyond merely protecting individuals—which is an important element. Protection of human rights must lead to the next logical step of protecting the rights of small minorities, of which we are one. The area of human rights has to evolve to a point where it protects the rights of small minorities in larger collectivities. This development is going on not only in Canada but also elsewhere in the world. Conferences have been convened in Geneva by the United Nations to deal with this issue, and in Canada there has been some development of aboriginal rights, which is a part of this process, where small societies would receive protection in larger countries through constitutional and other means. Canada could be an important leader in this development in other areas of the world as it was with the protection of individual rights.

When we talk more precisely about the Meech Lake Accord, the native people not being placed on the agenda, and the fact that the government presently has put us low on their list of priorities of issues that have to be dealt with, I would like to point out to senators that we have been put into a sort of legal twilight zone when we are dealing with our basic rights. I would like to cite a few examples of this.

Because the constitutional process stopped without resolving these issues we are left in a twilight zone when it deals with some of the basic legal rights of individuals within our societies. Some areas are being left open to interpretation, or with absolutely no legal protection for our rights. First is the area of family law. In this area many of our normal practices in family law are considered to be nothing more than customs, and do not have the full protection of the law. There are now instances where native people in the area of customary adoptions are running into legal snags, because we have not been dealt with in the laws of this country merely because of the different cultural context that our customs come from.

In the area of adoption, we often do pre-arranged adoptions within the extended family. In one instance a person was taking a child from one of his relatives in Labrador to Quebec. Because our customs are not protected under law, the poor gentleman who was transporting this child on behalf of some relatives—he was bringing the child to another group of relatives in Quebec—was stopped at the airport by the police, who asked him where he was taking this child, and why he was taking the child out of the province, when it was perfectly accepted by both families that this child was to be given to the other family, according to our customs. The customary practice is accepted in Newfoundland, Labrador and northern Quebec, but the mere fact that he crossed the provincial boundary left him stranded and open to be questioned by the police as to what he was doing with that child. It took some time for that incident to be settled.

Other areas that are left in ambiguity are such things as property law. Under native rights as they are now accepted, much of the land is held collectively. In the case of the Indian people, it is held in reserve by the federal government. But the notion of collective rights is strong—even the way the federal government administers it. In the case of the Inuit from northern Quebec, we hold those lands collectively through a village corporation which administers those lands for the collectivity.

Here is the problem with that. Now that we have the protected right of collective ownership to land in the Constitution, what happens to the individual who happens to build a cottage or a small building on that property? Does the community have the right to expropriate the property of that individual with no compensation? As the law now stands the individual would not have any right to compensation, because the lands are held collectively by the village. So, even within our own society we are left with many ambiguities such as this, which will create many incidences of injustice in the future as well as those that are beginning to happen now.

In the area of criminal law, in many instances our culture is forced to export its community problems to have them solved by another society. By having this situation people are no longer accountable to the elders in their own community as they should traditionally be. They do not feel that they are being punished for their crime in their own communities. The questions of whether someone committed a crime and what kind of punishment would fit that crime are determined externally from the community entirely. Native people do not feel that they are being allowed to be responsible for their actions in the community. This extends to areas of civil law and at the municipal level, but I also believe that this principle should be extended to areas of criminal law. This area has not been dealt with in any fashion whatsoever at this point.

In culture, education and language we are left at the mercy of the provinces and the federal government. Even though the vast majority of the people in my area are unilingual Inuit—and today we can conduct most of our business activities entirely in our own language; we have computer programs that are also in our own language—we have no rights to exercise our language. This is the case even in communities where over 95 per cent of the population is Inuit, and well over half of them are unilingual Inuit. Under the laws put forward in this country we are forced to conduct our business, in many instances, in languages other than our own. Therefore, the leaders of our communities—who are the elders in most instances—have no way of being a part of it. Only those who have attended the white schools and had some education, such as myself, have an opportunity to participate in this country at the local, regional and municipal level. This situation has improved somewhat in the last few years—especially in northern Quebec since the James Bay Agreement. However, we need to be able to regulate, control and make laws in those areas that are vital to our survival as a distinct group in this country. Those areas are in culture, education, and language rights.

I was part of the constitutional process from the beginning, until it ended recently. First, we started to talk about the idea of a charter of aboriginal rights. "Aboriginal rights" did not mean one right, the right to self-government. That was one very important right on a list of many other important rights.

● (1700)

Even if we were given the right to self-government, we would need constitutional protection for the individuals within our own society in the Constitution. You cannot simply apply the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and say, "There, the individuals in your society are protected." We have to develop a charter that will protect not only collectivity in the Constitution but also individuals within those collectivities, with their own particular nuances and those that are particular to our culture.

Those are the many areas where we are left in what I would call a legal twilight zone, because we no longer have a process to deal with them. We no longer have a way to begin to deal with the governments and to clearly articulate what our rights are.

If tomorrow someone were to sue the Band Council, because their private property that their family had built two generations ago was to be expropriated, they would have no right to legal recourse. They would be expropriated without compensation.

These are some of the rights that are not dealt with. These issues will very quickly arise within the native community of Canada. We need a process to help us articulate these concerns and to have them recognized in law. Some rights can be achieved through legislative means, but we will always be left with the problem of having to take our ideas to another government and hope that they accept them. We have to be given the right to legislate in some of these areas.

Other areas must be beyond legislative authority of even our own self-governments, because they will also deal with the protection of the individual or small collectivities within our own society. Those protections could also be clearly entrenched in the Constitution in the same way as individual rights have been entrenched in the Constitution to protect the rights of individuals from governments. We require the same kind of protections from our governments in aboriginal communities. We need a process which deals with these two levels.

In terms of non-constitutional items, we need a forum where we can begin discussing the laws and regulations that we need, and to clearly articulate what rights we need to have protected in the Constitution.

The Chairman: Thank you very much. So far one senator has indicated that he wishes to put questions to the witness, Senator Stewart.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My question is one which seeks to clarify your legal or constitutional position. As I understand it, you are Inuit who live within the boundaries of the province of Quebec; that is to say, the boundaries which Quebec has had since 1912. We know that under section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867 there is a specific provision which says that Indians and lands reserved for Indians come under the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. Will you tell us what constitutional provision applies in the case of the members of your group?

Mr. Gordon: As I understand it, this issue, in particular in Quebec, was settled in 1939 between the federal and provincial governments. Sometime before 1939 the Inuit in northern Quebec were starving and dying off in great numbers. The Hudson's Bay Company, which was the only entity around at that time, gave food to the Inuit people in northern Quebec, and because of that they went back to the governments and said, "Who is going to pay this bill?" I think it was a little over $2,000. Because the two governments could not agree as to who should pay, they went to court. The court finally came out with a judgment in 1939, which is referred to as "Re Eskimo." This judgment stated that we were not Indians, but, for the purposes of the Constitution, we were Indians and that we were clearly covered under section 91.24 of the Constitution Act, and therefore we would fall under the fold of the federal trusteeship.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Are there clearly defined territories or lands which are reserved for your people and which, consequently, would come under section 91 of the Constitution Act?

Mr. Gordon: The Inuit would like to think that any place that is too cold for anybody else is ours, but, having said that, what we identified in northern Quebec, through the James Bay Agreement, were areas that are clearly marked out. They have been selected, they have been the subject of legislation, and they have been set aside for ownership by the Inuit. Each village owns a block of 243 square miles plus an additional amount of land on which they have exclusive hunting rights.

We opted for provincial jurisdiction over the land so long as those lands could not be sold, alienated or expropriated, except to the province if they were to be sold, alienated or expropriated.

We do have land, but we do not have the reserve system which Indians have. We own the lands ourselves through the corporate entity that represents the entire community.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): If I have understood you correctly, then the situation is a mixed one. On the one hand, as a consequence of the Re Eskimo case, the people come under section 91 of the Constitution Act and, thus, under federal jurisdiction, and, on the other hand, the land, according to what you have said just now, comes under provincial jurisdiction except insofar as that is modified by the terms of the agreement to which you now referred, is that correct?

Mr. Gordon: Yes. The James Bay Agreement made it clear that the lands would come under provincial jurisdiction. We had the option of negotiating for lands under federal jurisdiction or lands under provincial jurisdiction. We negotiated for extra protection for that land and opted for provincial jurisdiction, because the province could give us more square miles.

If we had opted for federal lands, they would have given us a smaller piece of land. We ensured that we were given the same kinds of protection that are given to federal reserve lands, but we put a provincial label on it so that we could get more real estate.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): The previous witnesses, who represented a group of Indians, are concerned that certain matters such as education, health care, and housing, which are now dealt with strictly by the Government of Canada, may, under the Meech Lake Accord, gradually be passed over to provincial jurisdiction. Does that kind of concern arise in your case? If not, why not?

• (1710)

Mr. Gordon: In our case the James Bay Agreement settled many of these areas of concern dealing with basic services such as health, education, housing, and other services in northern Quebec. This predated the constitutional amendments dealing with aboriginal rights. We ended up with an education system which is, for the most part, under the provincial government, but which is funded at the rate of 25 per cent by the federal government. We have a health system which is almost entirely under the provincial government, but to which I understand the federal government contributes a substantial amount by payments to the province anyway. I believe that the housing system is one under which a 25 per cent share is paid by the federal government and a 75 per cent share is paid by the provincial government. All of this is administered through a regional government and other boards that have been established through the James Bay Agreement, which gave us autonomy.

The other Indian and native groups would be very nervous, because they have not been given the opportunity to establish administrative structures by which to exercise autonomy. The federal government has not given them autonomy, and is now planning to give control over their lives to another government entity, which they will have to spend the next 50 years educating. Our case was quite different. We got the local control and the regional control—not quite to the extent to which we wanted it, but we did get some control. Because we got that it was much easier for us to accept the notion of having those services provided by the provincial government. When it came to the point of delivering them at our level we had control over it.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Thank you. I have another question or two, Mr. Chairman, but I will yield the floor to another senator.

Senator Doody: My question is more for clarification. Earlier on the witness indicated that his group represented the Inuit of northern Quebec. Subsequently Labrador entered into the question. Does your group represent the Inuit of Labrador as well, or is that a separate group?

Mr. Gordon: No, senator, we do not represent those people. The Inuit of Labrador have their own associations and are presently negotiating land claims with their own provincial government.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Mr. Chairman, one of the joys of listening to briefs and to witnesses is the discovery that we can learn a great deal about our own country and how it works. I have a number of questions, one of which is very simple. I apologize for asking it, but do your people pay the normal provincial taxes to the Government of Quebec?

Mr. Gordon: Do we ever! We pay taxes to both governments, like any other Canadian citizen.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): That brings me to my second question. I read the debate that took place in the provincial legislature, the National Assembly, as it is called. I saw that according to Mr. Remillard, Mr. Bourassa and others, the claim of the Province of Quebec to a distinct society was based on history, culture, language—very heavily on language—et cetera. I have listened to your presentation and to the arguments you have made, and what surprises me is that you seem not to be given the distinctness that your differences would certainly justify. I add to that the example that you provided of the child adoption customs of your people. Even in the distinct society that Quebec claims for itself the adoption laws are generally those that are in force in most provinces of Canada. For that reason I want to express some surprise that you are not given the approval and tolerance for your distinctness that that province is claiming for itself from the rest of the country.

Mr. Gordon: I have often wondered about that myself, senator. That may be because the difference is so minor that you have to write it down to assure yourself that there is a difference. That is the only reason I can see why anyone would say that the French and English were that distinct one from another. To my eyes, they are the same. The French and the English are of European origin. In fact, over the last 500 or so years that they have been at war with one another, and conquering each other, the languages have blended a tremendous amount. The cultures are almost indistinguishable from one another.

There are slight differences in the cultural milieu of the French and the English. As to the language, yes, there is a bigger difference in that regard, but the base of the languages is the same, and there are similar words in both languages. In my view, these two societies are of one basic stock. Their differences are less than those differences between the Inuit and the Cree. Our cultural differences are more distinct, as groups. I am not even referring to the distinctness between the Inuit and those people who came to this country later on, the French and the English. Our differences are very big, like night and day.

We believe that our distinctness should be recognized. We have very distinct languages, customs and traditions—these are completely and entirely different from those of people of European origin. Those differences must be articulated so that our societies do not keep bumping into each other in the dark, as it were. When you make your laws dealing with our particular problems in this society, they are often applied to us with no modifications so that we end up with a negative impact of the good intention you had down here.

A classic example of that, I would like to point out, is dealing, again, with adoptions. In our society it is a rule that is followed, it is a custom that a child who is going to be adopted, or is adopted, will, as soon as he can conceive of the notion, be told who his real parents are so that as he grows older he will not have problems about the fact that he was adopted. Under the white man's law it is entirely the opposite. It is illegal to tell that child who its natural parents are, and this is done with the same intention—so that the child will not have problems as it grows up about the fact that it was adopted. These are entirely opposite solutions for the same problem. I would not hesitate to say that our adoption system and customs are working far better than those of the adoption centres you have down here, which are looking desperately for parents. No child is unwanted in the North. If there is a child to be adopted, it is adopted into its family, into its larger family.

The notion of our distinctness must be recognized. We talk of this country as a cultural mosaic. This mosaic, in our view, has too much white in it. We have to put some more colour into it.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): You mentioned at one point that you opted for more real estate that is of provincial jurisdiction. Do you think that your distinctness might have been better protected with less real estate but with federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Gordon: Not necessarily. The Inuit are not only in the province of Quebec but are also in the Northwest Territories and in Newfoundland, in the case of the Labrador Inuit. Not only that, the Inuit are present in four countries: Canada, Alaska or the United States, Greenland, and the Soviet Union.

• (1720)

I will deal only with the question of the Inuit in Canada. Even though we may opt for provincial jurisdiction for land, there are certain cultural rights, certain protections, which could be better served and better dealt with at the federal level—because they must be able to transcend provincial boundaries. Land, real estate, in my view, could be done under provincial jurisdiction—it is possible. However, such things as traditions, customs, and language must be able to transcend the boundaries of the provinces and the territories, and therefore would be better served under federal jurisdiction. It is not impossible under the existing provisions of the Constitution. We could use section 91(24) and the new section 35 to accomplish those things.

The Chairman: We now have Senator Marsden, followed by Senator Fairbairn.

Senator Marsden: Mr. Gordon, I would like to come back to the comments you were making in reply to Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour) in which you pointed out—very well, I must say—that there is less dissimilarity between French and English in Canada than there is, for example, between the Inuit and Cree people. But of course the phrase “distinct society” is not about French-English differences, because, after all, there are French people all over Canada, and what we are talking about is really a distinct state, is it not? In effect, “distinct society” is a land claim.

Mr. Gordon: First, there have been so many different interpretations of the term “distinct society” that I am not even sure about it. If you take a certain set of interpretations you can come out with different arguments. If the notion of the province of Quebec being the homeland of the French is a theory that we are accepting, then, fine, the Inuit have a very distinctive geographical area which we could easily declare as being the Inuit homeland and an area where we could be a “distinct society.” If the theory of a “distinct society” is that it is a distinct state, and that it is not necessarily a cultural thing, then that distinctiveness is applicable to us. Not only the cultural distinctiveness but also the geographical and state distinctiveness could apply equally to us. There is a government in the Northwest Territories which is primarily native. The Inuit in that area are talking about dividing off and creating a new territory. I believe it is possible to have a distinctiveness recognized through that.

Senator Marsden: Perhaps I could go on to another question. You put those differences so well that it raises these issues. In your main presentation this afternoon you described the great complexity of individual and collective rights and how they operate in the concerns which you are specifically addressing, and also in connection with majority and minority rights. Would you comment on the concern about those rights—both majority and minority, and also individual and collective rights—from the point of view of women. As you know, a great many women's groups have raised objections to the current accord, because it is feared that collective rights of a "distinct society" will take precedence over the individual rights won by women in the Charter.

Mr. Gordon: I find some difficulty in dealing with this question, because, to use the Inuit as an example, in terms of women's rights, the Inuit, in practice, have demonstrated quite clearly that it is not really that much of an issue to us. For instance, my predecessor, the president for the region, was a woman; and we now have one ministerial council in our villages which is comprised entirely of women. I am sorry, there is a token male on that council. That is the practice in our communities; but, yes, it is theoretically possible, in my view, that through the existing provisions an aboriginal society could discriminate against women. It is possible, but there are new provisions that could provide protection against that. But because section 35 is over and above the Charter, I believe there is the possibility of that coming; but there were some amendments which attempted to correct that.

Senator Marsden: I understand that. So are you telling us—please correct me if I am wrong—that you do not believe that the Charter should have precedence over the "distinct society" clause?

Mr. Gordon: The Charter should have precedence over a "distinct society" clause, in my view.

Senator Marsden: Thank you very much; you have been very helpful.

Senator Fairbairn: Mr. Gordon, in your brief you state that you feel that the Inuit in northern Quebec may have their rights and interests severely compromised by restrictions on the federal spending power that flow from the Meech Lake Accord. You mention the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. Do you fear that provisions of the Meech Lake Accord in this area could affect that agreement as it currently stands, or affect programs that may evolve in the future?

Mr. Gordon: Both. When we signed the James Bay Agreement, the only degree of protection that we could gain at that time—because the Canadian Constitution had not been patriated—was to have concurring legislation between the federal and provincial governments. We felt that that would at least give us a certain degree of protection. After we had the James Bay Agreement, what we fought long and hard for was constitutional protection of those kinds of rights, because we felt that concurring legislation was not adequate protection, that we needed protection that was higher than that—the Constitution of the country.

The Meech Lake Accord will mean that in certain areas we would end up dealing with all of the provinces in connection with any changes that were in contradiction of the Meech Lake Accord. If governments were to begin bargaining back and forth with programs, then those guarantees that we have achieved through the James Bay Agreement, through the new constitutional arrangement could be eroded, because there are certain things that we have been assured that we would get from either the provincial or federal governments. If they were applying national standards, some of the benefits that we were supposed to get could easily be eroded, because they would no longer apply to us the actual program to which we were entitled through the James Bay Agreement, directly from the federal government. We want to have access to the federal programs.

To give you a concrete example, in the area of secondary education, under the James Bay Agreement we were given the right to be able to attend schools anywhere in the country at the expense of the federal government; and, according to the James Bay Agreement, that was to continue—and the James Bay Agreement is protected by section 35. However, if national standards are being applied, the money that we could receive directly from the federal government to administer that program would now have to go through the province, and we would be denied access outside of the province, because we would be conforming to the national standards but applied by the province, which would allow us to go only to schools within the province.

In our society we are just beginning to get into the education system, and we need to have access to some of the best schools in this country in order to get caught up with the rest of Canada.

Senator Fairbairn: In terms of future national programs—in which, for instance, Quebec might wish to go on its own and receive so-called reasonable compensation—can you envisage that that might impinge on your programs, and that such compensation might be directed elsewhere rather than to your communities in northern Quebec?

● (1730)

Mr. Gordon: Yes, that could happen. There are also certain programs we may want to establish with the rest of the Inuit in Canada, but we would be cut off from them. We would end up having to deal with the province, and not being able to work on central programs for all Inuit in Canada. I refer to such programs as developing a curriculum for our schools, centralizing health services to concentrate trained personnel who can speak our language, and special training programs. These programs would be denied us, because we would no longer have direct access to federal funds to conduct them. Rather, we would have to go through a province, which would require that we split from the rest of the Inuit. Because the number of Inuit in Canada is so limited, it makes a great deal of sense to make things central for all Inuit in Canada. So, potentially, such a change could have a negative effect. The Inuit people of northern Quebec see themselves as being torn apart more and more from other Inuit in Canada. That is our biggest fear, that we would no longer be allowed to develop our society amongst ourselves, and would have to go through a series of intermediaries such as federal governments, provincial governments and territorial governments to accomplish anything.

Senator Fairbairn: You have acknowledged that although the constitutional process on aboriginal issues set up in 1983 did not reach a satisfactory conclusion in March of this year, nonetheless, a great amount of progress, both in dealing with other levels of government and also in public education, was achieved. In the end, it was not lack of agreement on principle but rather on definitions of terms that sank the potential agreement in March. Now that there is no longer a constitutional process for aboriginal people, do you see these outstanding issues coming to successful solutions in discussions that will take place in fora other than the constitutional forum?

Mr. Gordon: First, there were some differences in principle in the discussions you mentioned, particularly with provincial governments, on constitutional issues. There is no forum now to deal with these very urgent problems. The constitutional forum sprouted many roots which enabled the native people to deal with their provincial governments or with other areas of the federal government. With the loss of the constitutional process for aboriginal people there is no longer a need or an immediacy for the government to deal with these matters. Also as a result of the constitutional process, native peoples were given funds to formulate and to articulate their ideas. All this is gone, because there is no longer the constitutional process.

So, even if leadership in northern Canada is thinking of ways to solve their problems, there is no means of getting together to present to the government proposed solutions to our problems. We are not trying to lay our problems out for you to solve them. We are asking for a means to solve our problems. It is important that there be a process, and this process must operate at two levels. You need the constitutional process and you need a process which deals with more mundane things that could be handled at the legislative level. These two processes must run in tandem if we are going to begin to solve some of the real issues in the native community.

We could deal with many of the social problems ourselves. We will need extra help from the government on economic problems for some time yet. This opportunity to appear before the Senate is the last chance we have to make our views known. There is no other place where we can go and say, "Hey, we have a good idea of how to solve this problem with family law or with education." The fora have gone. We now only have the Department of Indian Affairs and provincial governments, whose priorities seem to be elsewhere. The Department of Indian Affairs is more involved in the delivery of services to the reserves, such as erecting houses, constructing roads, and so on. The department does not deal with the real social issues of the communities, and it does not have the means to even begin to deal with the economic needs of the communities. So, we need fora to deal with issues, and we also need resources so that we can formulate our solutions and present them to government.

However, because we could not come to agreement in only four short years I do not think it is reasonable to say, "Since you guys couldn't agree, let's forget it." It took over a hundred years to bring the Constitution to Canada, and the dialogue was between two societies that understood each other relatively well.

Senator Fairbairn: Our Meech Lake task force travelled to various communities in the North, including Iqaluit, where we spoke to Inuit leaders. They indicated that perhaps the Inuit felt more cut off by the ending of this constitutional process than other aboriginal peoples, because they do not have the same direct networks with government that other aboriginal peoples have. I believe it was John Amagoalik who said that if the government wanted to find out what the Inuit people were thinking, it would have to go to the tundra, because there is no way the Inuit could get back into the centre of discussion in Ottawa.

Mr. Gordon: I would agree with John Amagoalik on that point. The Inuit have revered Canada, and they very much want to be part of this country. We are desperately trying to get in the door, but it is continuously slammed in our face. We want to be an active party to this country and to contribute to it, but it seems that every time that we begin to make progress the door is slammed and we are not allowed in, that it is an exclusive club for Americans, not for aboriginal people.

Our contact with the Canadian government is very recent. It was not until after World War II that many of us learned that we were part of Canada. The Inuit people identify strongly with Canada, because the Canadian government helped them out when they were starving and when times were tough. So we have a strong sense of attachment and commitment to Canada. With the loss of the constitutional forum we feel that we are being shut out, and I think that this will begin to taint the way the Inuit feel about this country. The history between the people of Canada and other native populations has been a long and sordid one. The history of the past 100 years is made up largely of war and confrontation. Such is not the case with the Inuit, and this is why the Inuit strongly supported Canada in the areas of Arctic sovereignty, patriation of the Constitution, and other similar issues. Also, the dialogue between the rest of Canada and the Inuit has been cut off, and we need those channels in order to really become an active part of this country.

• (1740)

The Chairman: The last name on my list is Senator Watt. I see Senator Adams also putting up his hand. I have no objection, except I must make this proviso: At 6 o'clock we must rise, which means that we have 11 minutes left. Therefore, perhaps we could keep within that timeframe.

Senator Watt: Mr. Gordon, first, I would like to welcome you to the Senate. I am quite familiar with your face since we see each other practically every day, and since you succeeded me as president of the Makivik Corporation.

Mr. Gordon, I know you have participated in many different processes dealing with aboriginal people. In fact, your participation goes back a good 15 years. In your earlier remarks you were saying that you did achieve some rights under the convention, which is the James Bay Northern Quebec Agreement. However, there were certain rights under the James Bay Agreement which were clearly also entrenched under section 35.

Although there are certain rights that you can exercise at the community level, and also at the regional level, there are certain other rights that you have based on subsistence use. By "subsistence use" I mean something that can only be used internally. Can you tell me what is the point of having rights that you cannot exercise or rights that you cannot market? How do you feel about not being able to fully exercise those rights in order to gain some economic advantage? I wonder if you could enlighten us on that.

Mr. Gordon: With respect to the notion of being given rights, what is usually meant by "rights" are hunting rights and the right to resources as have been guaranteed by the James Bay Agreement. However, one of the things that we lack is the right to manage ourselves. What, in fact, happens is that we only have the right of access at the pleasure of the provincial government, which is really what it boils down to. Even though theoretically we have the right of access and the right to go out and hunt, we are not even given the powers to regulate that hunt ourselves. Therefore, we need more than simple right of access to resources. What we need is the right to manage those resources, and that is not included in the James Bay Agreement.

Senator Watt: Then it is quite clear why it is so important to have self-government entrenched in the Constitution, so that you would be able to begin to exercise the rights that you have acquired through the negotiations.

Mr. Gordon: I think the important principle is this: If we have the right to be different, we should have the right to govern our difference and also to protect that difference, and we should be given the means and the tools to administer it. Our society is growing, it is moving forward, and we need to have those rights of self-government; we need to be able to govern ourselves and to govern that difference. We cannot have another society guessing at what those differences are and trying to apply their ideas to our affairs.

The Chairman: Senator Adams.

Senator Adams: Mr. Gordon, the answer you gave to Senator Watt's question relates also to my question. I have lived away from the land for many years, but the Inuit used to have their own hunting area in the Northwest Territories and even into northern Quebec. Now I think those people have started losing their rights, and it looks as though in the future we will grow to be like farmers, where you buy a piece of property and then own your own property.

Since I lived in the North the James Bay Agreement has been signed. I know that before that the Inuit had their own land on which they lived, hunting and enjoying their family life. You were telling us some of the stories about people having cottages on their land, but I do not think we will be talking about cottages in the future. Nowadays people usually own their own homes.

Has it been your experience that the people in the North are beginning to realize that they do not own the property in the areas in which they live? Even my own experience in the North has been that sometimes when I want to go hunting, I am a little afraid to go hunting, because, after so many years of using those lands for hunting, the people in those areas have started to lose their rights to that land. Do you agree with me?

Mr. Gordon: We are guaranteed, in theory, the right of access all over that territory that has been handed over through the James Bay Agreement. That is how it is in theory. In reality, family groups generally have areas and, even though one has the right of access and can go and hunt there, it is generally recognized that that territory belongs to that particular family. This is still the practice today.

However, what I was worried about is that even though that family has occupied that area for the past two or three generations, the larger community can decide that that would be a great place to have a tourist camp, and that family can be moved out without being compensated for anything. The government can say that this land belongs to the community and you have no rights as an individual to that area, no matter how long you or your family have been there.

Therefore, this type of problem will come up more and more frequently. The traditional area where my grandfather used to place his nets is the same area that I use for the same purpose every summer. The community could decide that that particular area is a very good place to put a bridge. I cannot do anything about it; I have no right to compensation, and I have no recourse. Therefore, that is one of the problems.

Another problem that we have is because of the way in which the land claims are now structured. You can become a member of the northern Quebec Inuk, but if you were from the Northwest Territories and you moved to northern Quebec, you have no rights as an Inuk in Quebec. By the same token, if I moved to the Northwest Territories, under their land claim settlements I have no rights as an Inuk. I want to remind the government that my culture, my being, does not end at a provincial boundary. I am still an Inuk when I move from Quebec to Labrador to Newfoundland. However, the way the system is being set up under the present land claims policies means that we will end up with the same terrible problem that overtook the Indians: that of being non-status Inuit. This is something that the Inuit have been trying to fight for years, but we have not been able to address that. That is why we would like to have the matter under federal jurisdiction or, better yet, under constitutionally-protected provisions that I, as an Inuk, have the right to move anywhere in the Inuit homeland and remain an Inuk. I am not asking for the right to be an Inuk in Ottawa. If I live in Ottawa, I will be like any other citizen in Ottawa. However, on the homeland, whether it is in Quebec, the Northwest Territories, or wherever, I should have the right to hunt, to practice my traditional customs, and not lose my status as an Inuk because I cross a boundary. We can be denied these rights under the present system. Because there is no system for us to correct this problem, I will no longer be an Inuk if I should move into the Northwest Territories after their land claims, the same way an Inuk from the Northwest Territories moving to Quebec would be denied rights as an Inuk in Quebec.

Senator Adams: I have a few more questions, but that is all the time we have. Thank you very much, Mr. Gordon.

The Chairman: Senator Adams, thank you for keeping within the time limit. Mr. Gordon, thank you for sharing your views with us this afternoon. This is very important to the process.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee adjourn, report progress, and ask for leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake Accord and texts agreed to were referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, on January 20, 1988?

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, would it be in order to say at the next Wednesday sitting of the Senate?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hicks, that the committee have leave to sit again on the next Wednesday that the Senate will be sitting. Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, on a point of order, might we agree by motion that the clock is not in effect?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): In other words, that the clock be ignored.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Does everyone agree?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, December 17, 1987, at 10.30 o'clock in the forenoon.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-101, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask that all remaining orders, inquiries and motions stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10.30 a.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 17, 1987

The Senate met at 10.30 a.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Reports of Committees:

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have three reports to present to the Senate today, the first of which is not quite ready. I ask permission to proceed with the second and third and to revert to Reports of Committees to deal with the first report at a later time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 17, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

EIGHTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-88, An Act to amend the Judges Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, December 15, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Michel Cogger, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985 BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 17, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SEVENTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-94, An Act to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, December 10, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay, Joint Vice Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 18, 1987

FIFTH REPORT

Pursuant to its Orders of Reference from the Senate and the House of Commons, both dated 15 April 1986, your Committee has become concerned about the disregard for the spirit of the language provisions in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Official Languages Act shown in the failure to make provision for Canada-wide French-language television coverage of an event as important as the Calgary Olympic Winter Games. Following intervention by the Committee, compromise solutions were recently achieved. The Committee wishes to ensure that such a situation will not recur.

For this reason your Committee recommends:

That the Government adopt a policy and issue specific directives to ensure that any popular event of national significance funded with federal contributions shall reflect Canada's linguistic duality in all its aspects, in particular its organization, its administration, its sign-age, its publicity and its broadcasting.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH-PHILIPPE GUAY
Joint Vice Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, I move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Guay a question?

I have heard that the city of Ottawa, the capital, is divided into two cable TV zones. West of the dividing line the proceedings of the House are broadcast in English and east of the line in French.

Does the committee think this is fair?

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, your question and many questions of a similar nature were given thorough consideration in committee, with Senator Tremblay and others attending these discussions. I can assure you that all these points were considered. The Minister of Communications, the Honourable Flora MacDonald, has given us the assurance that a service would be in place to deal satisfactorily with this problem.

Senator Le Moyne: That is more or less the best we can hope for.

Senator Guay: More or less.

Senator Le Moyne: Thank you.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, it is all very well to move to have this report considered at the next sitting of the Senate. I wonder, however, when that next sitting will be. Would it be before, during or after the Olympic Games?

The Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, whose report Senator Guay has just presented, has drawn to our attention a question that is of some urgency. What good would it do to consider this question during or after the games?

If I correctly understood the report of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages as transmitted by Senator Guay, we are being asked, with some urgency, to consider this question in order to put pressure on the authorities, either the government, the CBC or the responsible authorities to provide a service in French across Canada.

[Senator Guay.]

I know that in some parts of my home province of New Brunswick we can get Télémétropole, and there Francophones will be able to watch the Games on a French network. That is not the case, however, for all French-Canadians in this country.

I thought I detected a note of urgency in the report submitted by Senator Guay. I cannot imagine why we should postpone consideration of this question, because if we do, it will probably be too late to reach a decision and get the kind of support that is desirable in this kind of situation. Thank you.

Senator Guay: I appreciate Senator Corbin's remarks. It should be understood that I am presenting this report on behalf of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages. This is not what I personally would like to do. By the way, perhaps I should inform you that a telegram has already been sent to the Calgary Olympic Games to inform the authorities of our position. Further discussions have taken place, but I am not in a position to give you a full report at this time.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Guay another question? Has the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages been given the assurance that this problem will be dealt with before the Olympic Games take place? Have they given you the assurance that they will do everything they can to televise the games in both official languages across Canada?

Senator Guay: Senator Corbin, that is the assurance we were given, and that is about all I can tell you at this time.

On motion of Senator Guay, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

● (1040)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Murray is not with us this morning. At this moment he is on government business elsewhere, but he has indicated that he will be here later in the morning. If it is the wish of honourable senators, we can defer Question Period and revert to it later. Alternatively, I can take any questions as notice, if senators so wish. We are at the disposal of the house.

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, we might defer Question Period, from my point of view, until Senator Murray arrives. However, he indicated to me yesterday that he would have a further report on the grain handlers' strike situation in Prince Rupert. I would very much like to get that information from him.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have no delayed answers to oral questions.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, to defer Question Period until later today?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Later:]

Hon Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government said that he had no delayed answers to questions. Senator Murray is not in the chamber today, and I intended to raise that matter with him. The Leader of the Government promised me some time ago to make available the list of all of the projects, programs, joint agreements, and so on, that were announced in the province of New Brunswick during the last provincial election. He made a commitment to that effect in response to a question I had put to him.

Since this may well be the last day before the Christmas recess, I had intended to refresh his memory about my request and his commitment. Can the Deputy Leader of the Government look into the matter and report back to me at an early date before the end of the year?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, as I indicated, Senator Murray will be with us later today. In the meantime, if I have an opportunity I will make an inquiry this morning on behalf of Senator Corbin, and if I can obtain the information for him I will certainly make it available.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

AUDITOR GENERAL

BUDGET FOR PAST TEN YEARS

Question No. 36 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall.

3rd November 1987—What was the budget of the Auditor General for the past ten years?

Reply by the Minister of Finance:

The budget for the Office of the Auditor General of Canada for each of the past ten years was:

1978-79:	$25,616,000
1979-80:	$25,820,000
1980-81:	$28,805,000
1981-82:	$31,886,000
1982-83:	$35,263,000
1983-84:	$38,463,000
1984-85:	$40,604,000
1985-86:	$42,968,000
1986-87:	$44,543,000
1987-88:	$46,686,000

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first order of the day is a motion to resolve the Senate into a Committee of the Whole to study Bill C-87. We also have before us Bill C-101, which has to do with a government excise tax, for which we have leave to introduce second reading today.

If it is convenient to honourable senators, I would like to deal with Bill C-101 first, because the minister who is responsible for that bill is the minister responsible for Bill C-87, who is now waiting in my office to answer any questions senators might have in committee. If we can deal with Bills C-101 and C-87 in Committee of the Whole, obviously it would be a great deal more convenient for the minister, who, like all ministers, has other items on his agenda today.

So, with leave of the Senate, I would ask that we proceed to second reading of Bill C-101, the fourth Order of the Day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed that we proceed to deal with Bill C-101?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-101, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the one cent per litre increase in the excise taxes on motive fuels was part of a limited number of tax increases announced in the February budget to maintain an acceptable rate of progress toward the government's medium-term deficit reduction goals. The tax applies to gasoline, diesel fuel, aviation gasoline, and jet fuel. The increase, which is effective from February 19, 1987, is intended to yield approximately $450 million in the fiscal year 1987-88.

The purpose of the bill is to extend for a further two years the program which was introduced at that time to give some relief to primary producers. This bill, in effect, extends the fuel tax rebate program for primary producers for two years, to December 31, 1989. It also implements proposals announced by the Minister of Finance in his February budget. They include the one cent per litre increase in the excise tax and an equivalent increase in the fuel tax rebates payable to primary producers.

So, the fuel tax rebates to farmers and other primary producers are being increased by an equivalent amount—that is, one cent per litre—to ensure that this tax increase does not increase the cost of production fuels used by primary producers.

Apparently it is necessary to include the excise tax increase in this bill in order to increase the rebates payable to farmers and other primary producers. The rebates to farmers are currently approximately equal to the taxes imposed.

It would be inappropriate to propose any further increase in the level of the rebates without implementing the tax increases on which the higher rebates are based.

The Fuel Tax Rebate Program was introduced in the fall of 1984 in response to financial difficulties being experienced by primary producers. In April 1986 the Prime Minister announced that the amount of the rebate to farmers would be increased to provide additional assistance to farmers, and in particular to grain growers who were under severe price pressure from world competition. The program was also extended at that time to December 31, 1987, for all primary producers. The rebate payable to farmers was increased by an additional one cent per litre when the excise taxes on motive fuels were increased on January 1, 1987. This increase ensured that farmers continued to be fully reimbursed in respect of all taxes on production fuels.

● (1050)

The rebate program is administered by the Minister of National Revenue under the Excise Tax Act. The act authorizes the minister to pay a fuel tax rebate to primary producers in respect of motive fuels purchased by them for off-highway production purposes. Farmers receive full rebates of all federal sales and excise taxes on such fuels. Other primary producers, including fishermen, loggers, miners, hunters and trappers, receive a rebate of the federal sales tax. All primary producers are also entitled to an excise tax refund of 1.5 cents per litre in respect of gasoline purchased for commercial use.

Primary producers may obtain the rebates through a reduction in the price when they buy fuels from a manufacturer who is required to pay tax under the act, or from a registered vendor who recovers the amount of the rebate directly from the government. In other cases primary producers obtain their rebates by filing a claim with the Minister of National Revenue.

The Fuel Tax Rebate Program is a temporary program that was designed to provide short term assistance to primary producers. As I said before, it is scheduled to expire this December 31. The economic situation has improved for many of our primary producers since this program was introduced. However, many farmers, particularly those in the grains and oil seeds sectors, continue to experience very serious difficulty. The devastating effects of the international subsidy war make additional assistance imperative.

The Prime Minister announced a number of measures at the Agricultural Outlook Conference this week to respond to this need in our agricultural community. Included in this package is extension of the Fuel Tax Rebate Program for two years, to December 31, 1989. The program is an expenditure program. Payments cannot be made to farmers and other primary producers in respect of fuels purchased after the end of this year until this legislation receives Royal Assent. I am sure that all honourable senators will agree that it is important that this bill be given early consideration in order to ensure that rebates can continue to be paid to farmers and other primary producers in respect of fuels purchased after December 31, 1987.

[Senator MacDonald]

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, we on this side of the house welcome this measure. As the Honourable Senator MacDonald has said, farmers, and particularly grain farmers, are in continuing difficult circumstances, and this extension of the removal of excise taxes on farm fuels is welcomed.

I think one can read too much into the total package that was announced by the Prime Minister the other day at the Outlook Conference. A deficiency payment of $1.1 billion, up from $1 billion last year, was announced. It is an increase of $100 million. However, the drop in the initial price alone constitutes, I believe, something like a loss of $700 million. So the position of grain producers in Canada, even after the announcements made at the Outlook Conference, is that they are worse off today by a considerable amount than they were one year ago. This, of course, adds to the urgency of continuing this measure.

The steps taken by the government with regard to the western farm situation are not adequate. They do not address in any way the problem of the exodus of farmers from their farms. In no way does this measure slow down or modify the powers that financial institutions have to foreclose on and take possession of farms. The whole situation of eroding and falling land values is still with us.

However, having said that, we are nonetheless pleased that this measure is before the house, and we are pleased to support it. It does extend the current situation whereby grain producers and other producers are not charged federal taxes on farm fuel. Under this bill that situation will be continued for another two years.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be permitted to ask Senator MacDonald a couple of questions. The reason is that we now have what is called a program fact sheet that was distributed by the Minister of Agriculture respecting the Farm Fuel Tax Rebate Program. What I want to clarify are the effective dates for some of the things that Senator MacDonald mentioned. For example, there was an increase in the excise tax early in 1987, and from his explanation I think the increase in the rebate is sufficient to take care of that increase to the primary producers, in this particular case agriculture.

However, this fact sheet also goes on to say, by way of background information, that:

Initially the program provided for rebates of 4.5¢ per litre for gasoline and 3¢ per litre for diesel fuel.

Then, in the next portion of the fact sheet, it says:

In line with increasing excise and sales taxes the rebate has been increased to 9¢ per litre for gasoline and 7.5¢ per litre for diesel fuel.

I hasten to say that I fully support this program. I am not criticizing it, but I do not quite understand, and perhaps there is another fact sheet in existence that does give precise information as to whether the effective date called for in Bill C-101 as it relates to the rebate authority corresponds with the date mentioned for the imposition of the additional tax. That is really what I wanted to know. I am reasonably satisfied that it does provide for that circumstance, but I wondered if there were any gaps between the date of the imposition of the authority to increase the collection of the tax and the authority being asked now to rebate it.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I do not have the fact sheet to which Senator Olson referred. Even if I did, I would find it difficult to answer your question. However, I believe that Senator Doody has indicated that the minister is available and will be with us in a few moments. Perhaps you could put the question to him.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is quite correct, Senator MacDonald. Mr. Hockin, the Minister of State for Finance, accompanied by Mr. Brian Willis, an officer of the Tax Policy Branch, will be with us shortly, and possibly they could give the senator the information he requires.

Senator Olson: That will be satisfactory.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to Committee of the Whole later this day.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

On the order:

The Senate in Committee of the Whole on the Bill C-87, An Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the rules of the Senate, the Honourable Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance), was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, may I introduce to you the Honourable Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance), and his officials, Mr. Fraser Laschinger, Chief, Tariffs Division, Department of Finance, and Mr. Joe Loomer, Special Adviser, Department of Finance.

The Chairman: I welcome the witnesses to the Senate. Honourable senators, is it your wish that the minister make an opening statement?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance): Honourable senators, I came here last night at 8 o'clock, because I thought there was a committee meeting in progress. There were three members of the cleaning staff here and they said that they would listen to me.

Senator Frith: How did it go?

Mr. Hockin: It went fine. There were also four secretaries who were beautifully dressed because they were going to a Christmas party. They also listened to what I had to say. However, it is very nice to actually have a chance to address the Committee of the Whole.

Senator Frith: Did they at least pass the title of the bill so we do not have to deal with that?

Mr. Hockin: I think they did.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Senator Robertson, who spoke to this bill on a previous day. I understand that she has taken a great interest in this bill. In fact, this is a very important step internationally. I am happy to be able to address several points on this occasion concerning the timing of this bill. I will not repeat what Senator Robertson has said, but I will deal with several points concerning the timing of the legislation and, something that concerns all of us, the state of readiness of the private sector to adapt itself to a brand new tariff system.

As you know, our tariff system has been somewhat anomalous internationally. We have classified things somewhat differently from the way it is done in other countries, so this is a major change for us. I feel it is important that there be no misunderstanding of the situation concerning the degree to which the government has consulted with the public on these new tariff provisions. The government has never hidden the fact that under the new Customs Tariff there will be changes in rates of duty on some imported goods. There is not just a change in wording, but there are changes in rates. We have attempted to draw this fact to the attention of all concerned in all of our public communications. We have urged importers and businesses to inform themselves of these changes. We recognize that these changes can have an impact on businesses, and we have made every effort to inform commercial interests through trade and industry associations, through seminars which have been sponsored by the Department of National Revenue, through direct mailings, and through the Tariff Board, which has been working with the public on tariff legislation since 1984.

I think it is fair to say that the large companies and importers which transact many importations over the course of a year have taken the necessary steps to be ready for January 1. I have spoken to one, I think the biggest in Canada, which is headquartered in my riding, Livingston, and they are very interested in having this begin and are ready for it. That is just a typical example.

Senator Frith: Is that the auto parts company?

Mr. Hockin: No, that is a freight forwarding and customs broker operation.

These large companies and importers have made representations to the Tariff Board where they have seen that the proposed changes may not be in their interests. They have attended the seminars put on by the Department of National Revenue and the workshops which have been held in regions across Canada. I think it goes without saying, however, that not every importer or business in this country will have informed itself of the changes being proposed in this legislation, despite the efforts made by the government to inform the public. We think almost everybody will be ready, but not everybody. It would be extraordinary if it were otherwise.

First, many importers use brokers. In fact, over 75 per cent of import transactions in this country are handled by brokers. I think we can assume that many importers will probably leave it to their brokers to acquaint themselves with the changes which will come into effect on January 1, 1988.

Other importers may import only infrequently and may have disregarded notices sent to them about the pending tariff changes, and others may not have gotten around to doing anything, thinking that they have ample time to react. So we recognize, therefore, that on January 1 some people will be caught unprepared when trade begins to flow under the new system. In anticipation of this the government is taking steps to ensure that importers or businesses faced with an unexpected tariff change, where there exists valid grounds for reviewing the situation, will have recourse for obtaining adjustments.

My colleague, Elmer MacKay, and I have agreed on new procedures to be established for a limited period which will speed up the decision-making process for reviewing these cases. Once the Department of National Revenue has established that the goods in question are correctly classified, a review committee, chaired by the Department of Finance, will examine the merits of making adjustments. The legislation has the flexibility to make such amendments, and I can assure honourable senators that I will be responsive to legitimate complaints when and if they arise.

There has been a suggestion that the government will not have the necessary regulations required to implement many of the provisions of the tariff ready for January 1, 1988. I want to assure honourable senators that that is not the case. Those regulations are, in fact, in the final stages of preparation. The officials can speak to that. Draft versions of the regulations will be released to the public by the Department of National Revenue in the form of interim administrative guidelines over the next few weeks.

To conclude, then, the Canadian business community, including importers and exporters, is counting on this legislation—they want it. They are not resisting it, they want it. As well, our major trading partners, who are also adopting tariffs based on the harmonized system, are looking to Canada to provide leadership in this important step forward to a more rational and enhanced international trading environment.

[Mr. Hockin.]

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators.

• (1110)

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I wish to inform you that before starting with Senator Hicks, the first questioner, I will acknowledge other senators as they raise their hands. Senator Hicks.

Senator Hicks: Thank you, Mr. Minister, for your concise explanation of the objects of this bill, of which I, for one—and I think my colleagues are in the same category—have no criticism at all. Indeed, it is eminently sensible that we should adopt the harmonized system and put ourselves on line with most of the major developed countries of the world, and a good many other countries as well. I welcome this bill as an improvement in our tariff system in making it possible for us to move more fully into the computer age, in the improvement that it will make on the compilation of statistics, and, generally, the assistance it will give to the ease of understanding the situation relating to our customs and duties.

However, I have a number of questions, which I will try to group together, about some clauses of the bill.

First, would you or one of your assistants explain to me exactly the implication of clause 9? I referred to the Customs Act, but was still unable to understand exactly what clause 9 of the bill was trying to accomplish.

Mr. Hockin: Clause 9, the Territorial Sea and Internal Waters section?

Senator Hicks: Yes.

Mr. Hockin: This clause provides that any temporary restrictions by the Governor in Council, under the Customs Act, on the extent of the territorial sea or internal waters apply also to this bill. Any restrictions will also apply to this bill.

Senator Hicks: This bill is on all fours, then, with the Customs Act.

Mr. Hockin: That is right.

Senator Hicks: Could you make it easier for us to understand by giving us an example of what the effect of this would be either under the Customs Act or the Tariff Act? I referred to section 2(2) of the Customs Act, but I am not sure what this means, except there is a statement there somewhere that the involuntary dumping or unloading of a ship because of shallow draft, and so on, shall not be regarded as an illegal entry of goods into Canada.

Mr. Hockin: There is a two-part answer that I should deliver in response to that question.

First, I am not capable of responding to your specific example, but that may be looked after within the department when the Minister of National Revenue puts together the necessary provisions under the Customs Act. Perhaps that point will be spoken to at that time. I cannot define what the answer to the dilemma that you put to me would be from just the reading of the act.

Senator Hicks: I do not regard that as having satisfied my inquiry about the legislation, but I do not want to stay on this one point unduly, because I have a more important category of questions that I want to ask.

The next clause that my attention was drawn to was clause 12, which gives to the Governor in Council the authority to make certain regulations about goods produced in Canada in "substantial quantities." Subclause (2) of that clause gives the Governor in Council the right to determine what are substantial quantities. This seems to be a wide discretion, and I do not know how an importer of goods will be able to forecast what the ruling will be. Perhaps by practice in the department you already know what rule of thumb is used in determining that goods are or are not manufactured in Canada in "substantial quantities."

Mr. Hockin: This clause provides the authority for the Governor in Council, as you correctly state, to fix the percentage of the Canadian consumption of goods produced in Canada in order for such goods to be considered of a class or kind that are made here. The figure has been set at 10 per cent by order, and will remain the same under the new tariff.

At one time there were numerous tariff items which contained the words "class or kind made" or "class or kind not made," with higher rates for the former category. However, while there are now relatively few such items, the authority delegated to the Governor in Council is still considered to be necessary in order for the government to provide tariff protection quickly for Canadian manufacturers who have an interest in the few remaining tariff items with a "class or kind" proviso. Action is taken only as a result of representations from Canadian manufacturers.

Senator Hicks: You are telling us, then, Mr. Minister, that the present order strikes a figure of 10 per cent, and that unless this is varied this would apply to all categories of goods.

Mr. Hockin: That is right. Of course, that 10 per cent understanding has been in place for many years.

Senator Hicks: I did not know that.

I will try to phrase the rest of my questions all in one item.

When I first became a member of the Nova Scotia legislature 42 years ago, we had an authoritative, arbitrary and highly-intelligent and aggressive man there as Attorney General. He did not like to be circumvented in his departmental administration by the Legislature of Nova Scotia, and was fond of putting into bills phrases such as "the minister may, in his absolute and uncontrollable discretion, do" so and so. I am not suggesting that anything in this bill, Mr. Minister, goes as far as that, but for over 40 years I have been resisting this kind of arbitrary provision in our legislation.

I want to point out to honourable senators that in clauses 23, 25, 27, 28, and some following clauses, this bill gives wide powers to the Governor in Council, and does not provide that there need be any report to Parliament about the exercise of these powers. Clauses 43 and 44 also give the same wide powers, but there is a provision in clause 45 that these powers will expire on June 30, 1994, which I infer to be a kind of admission that the powers are somewhat arbitrary and are only in effect for a temporary period.

In clauses 59 and 60 the same thing is given to the Governor in Council and the minister, but in this case it is provided that the rules must be tabled in Parliament within a stipulated time, or within 15 sitting days.

In clause 95 there is no requirement that the regulations made under that section be laid before Parliament at all. And in clauses 101 and 102, which deal with remissions and relief, there is wide ministerial and Governor-in-Council discretion, and no report to Parliament prescribed.

● (1120)

Finally, honourable senators and Mr. Minister, subclause 133(1) enables the Governor in Council to substitute and amend, by order, other acts. This authority, which is given to amend other acts to bring them into conformity with this act, must be exercised within a period of 18 months from the coming into force of this act. Then, I suppose, this authority in the Governor in Council expires.

Having cited these examples, Mr. Minister, I would like to hear your comments on the necessity for what seems to me to be somewhat arbitrary authority given to the Governor in Council, or to the minister, or to the Governor in Council usually on the advice of the minister, without very careful provisions that such orders must be laid before Parliament within a stipulated time.

Mr. Hockin: These questions do not surprise me, because there is a fair amount of such authority given to the Governor in Council in the bill. Having been someone who was concerned about this sort of thing myself before I was elected, I can see why you ask the question.

In this particular bill, however, all of these provisions, with the exception of one, are in previous legislation dealing with these matters, so there is nothing new about this in this particular bill.

What is new is the provision we have put in place for the transition period, the 18-month period. Clause 133 gives wide power to amend any other acts of Parliament. The reason that was done is that although it has been possible to identify a number of other statutes which will require consequential amendment due to the implementation of this harmonized system, it is not excluded that certain statutes may have been missed. Clause 133 of this bill will allow the government to effect expeditiously these required changes to other legislation during a transition period of up to 18 months.

In my comments at the beginning of my appearance here today I made the point that we have to have that flexibility during the transition period. It is vital that we have it, and that is what clause 133 provides flexibility for.

There is nothing new in the other delegations to Governor in Council. It is the same as has existed for decades, so we have not added to that.

Senator Hicks: I know this practice operates not only in this Parliament but in legislatures in the provinces of Canada, and I still do not think it is good. I still think in relation to the Governor-in-Council authority which is given in this legislation there ought to be a more careful requirement that Governor-in-Council orders be laid before Parliament within a reasonable time. Certainly in clause 133, where, in effect, you are allowing the Governor in Council to legislate by order in council rather than by going to Parliament, there ought to be a most careful provision so that whatever legislative orders, or orders of a legislative nature, are made under clause 133 must be communicated to Parliament at the earliest possible time.

It may be, Mr. Minister, that I am missing the provisions of some omnibus act which requires regulations of this kind or orders of this kind to be laid before Parliament in any event, but I cannot find the requirement in this bill.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, there are two very important points covered by clause 133. First, other statutes are changed only to bring them into conformity with this, and not for other purposes. It is very important that we recognize that limitation.

Second, in terms of the 18-month provision, one is dealing here entirely with situations where one is moving the rates of duty down in order to facilitate a manufacturer or an importer. Therefore, it is difficult to understand how exercise of that authority will be controversial or will be resisted by anyone.

Senator Hicks: Not really, Mr. Minister. You may say that it will mostly be exercised to bring rates down, but it could be exercised to move them up. Even if it is exercised to move them down, it surely leaves the minister open to the criticism that he is moving them down in some cases for reasons which are not covered in the legislation while refraining from moving them down in others.

I agree that you have to have a certain flexibility, and I agree that you ought not to be required to go back to Parliament for every minor change in items like this, but at least there ought to be a definite requirement that reports be made to Parliament within a reasonable time of the administrative action that is taken.

Mr. Hockin: The fact is that in the very infrequent cases when rates are raised there will be publication.

The other point I would make is that the authority given to the Governor in Council with regard to this particular matter is, once again, not any different now from what it will be after the harmonized system. It is still the same. Your concern, Senator Hicks, is that we have not improved on the present system in terms of delegation.

Senator Hicks: You could put it that way. That is the best construction you can put on it. Very well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Frith: I have very little to add in terms of specific questions to those posed by Senator Hicks.

However, I do want to say that while I support the scheme of this legislation—I read some time ago material put out by the Department of National Revenue explaining its purpose and scheme—I want you to understand this is not the kind of bill, if there is such a thing, that we like to deal with in what can only be a superficial way, and I urge you to plan your scheduling to give the Senate the opportunity to perform its function, that is, to conduct a much more detailed study of legislation.

Here, for example, I would have been tempted to propose amendments on the subjects raised by Senator Hicks and to have those amendments studied in committee and debated here, because I do not feel that the fact that the executive has had, in effect, legislative powers in previous bills is an answer to why it should have those powers in this bill. Rather, it seems to me an appropriate treatment for this bill for the Senate to put a stop to the practice expressed in previous bills, and to take the opportunity to limit legislative functions given to the executive branch.

I did not want you, Mr. Minister, to be—and I hope you have not been—encouraged by the fact that we have taken a bill of this importance and of such technical complexity and dealt with it in this superficial way as a reason to ask us to do so again.

• (1130)

Mr. Hockin: Senator Frith, I would like to respond to your comments. First, if we had taken this through days of committee meetings and had examined the entire question of the delegation of authority, I feel that parliamentarians would have been driven to the conclusion to which I was reluctantly driven, that in order to have flexibility within the operation of the tariff system in Canada we need the level of authority given to the Governor in Council. But that is an assumption on my part.

In terms of timing, this particular bill was tied up in the House of Commons for a number of weeks by some parliamentarians who really wanted to debate something else. They did not seem to have any objections to the bill, per se, but they were using that debate to make some points about something else. That is the impediment to your getting the bill a few weeks ago. I felt confident that if senators had received it weeks ago, they would not have taken days and days with this legislation, because it is not a highly partisan bill; it should not be viewed that way. There is a great international understanding about the system put forward in this bill. It is something that I thought would be dealt with with dispatch, but that did not turn out to be the case. That, unfortunately, deprives senators of the time that I think they would have liked to have.

Senator Frith: I understand, and I know you understand, that what takes place in the House of Commons, either by way of delay or, at the other extreme, by way of a speedy passage through the House, should not affect our duty to give sober second thought and careful study to these bills. I know that you, your officials and your colleagues in cabinet are going to be tempted again. I was about to say “we,” but I am sure you know what I mean; a previous government did the same sort of thing, so there is nothing partisan about this observation. You may be tempted to do it again at Easter, and certainly will be tempted to do it again in June. I simply want you to take note of that and to tell your colleagues that they ought not to take for granted that this kind of bill can be expected to be passed this speedily again.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-87, respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Honourable senators, shall discussion on the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, there are 141 clauses in this bill.

Senator Roblin: Move the bill, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Frith: Yes, all clauses shall carry.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the short title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, on your behalf I should like to thank the minister and his officials for their presentation this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Belisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-87, respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

On the Order:

The Senate in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-101, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on Bill C-101, to amend the Excise Tax Act, the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the rules of the Senate, the Honourable Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance), was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we have before us once again the Honourable Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance).

Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-101, to amend the Excise Tax Act. Shall the discussion of the title be postponed until we hear from the minister?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Honourable Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance): I would like to thank honourable senators for this opportunity to speak on Bill C-101. As Senator MacDonald (Halifax) has already provided a fairly eloquent introduction and background on this bill—

Senator Frith: By his standards it was very eloquent!

Mr. Hockin: —I will not take up your valuable time repeating those same facts.

I would, however, like to address a matter raised by Senator Olson in Question Period yesterday. I heard a comment earlier today that perhaps I could address as well. The senator was concerned about differences between the provincial and federal administration of fuel tax rebates for farmers. Senator Olson suggested that the federal and provincial governments should get together so that farmers who were complying with one set of rules were not in violation of the laws of the other level of government. The example he gave us was Alberta.

● (1140)

There are a number of points that I would like to make in this regard. First, this bill does not change the system that is currently in place. It simply extends the system that has been around since 1984 so that farmers and other primary producers can continue to benefit from the substantial assistance provided.

Second, as senators may be aware, differences often exist between federal and provincial programs. For that matter, there are differences among provinces. Fuel tax exemptions for various users are available in most provinces. For example, some allow farmers to use tax exempt fuels in farm trucks; others limit the exemption very strictly to off-highway production users; and some provinces require exempt fuels to be coloured, to have a colour additive put in.

Given those differences in provincial programs, it simply was not possible to implement a federal program that would provide identical relief in every province. There was too much variation from province to province.

The federal program does not provide relief for fuels used in on-highway vehicles because of the difficulty in providing such assistance in an equitable manner. One could simply say, "Why can't we do that? Find a way to do it." But it is extremely difficult to do it in a fair way.

For example, if the relief were limited to vehicles owned and operated by farmers, you would find, with respect to suppliers of trucking services to farmers on a contract basis, that those farmers who chose to use such trucking services on a contract basis would not receive the same benefit.

Conversely, if all fuels used in the transportation of farm inputs and products were eligible for the rebate, transportation companies which provide services to farmers would have to segregate the fuels used for farm transportation purposes from fuels used in their businesses for other purposes. Such a system would be administratively complex and would likely create many inequities.

We believe that the program established by the federal government is fair and equitable, and while it may not be the same as that used in every province, it is administratively simple and does not, in my view, conflict with the various provincial programs. Perhaps it speaks to the genius of federalism that we can have this variation at the provincial level but still have a fair and equitable program at the federal level.

A comment was made with regard to trying to match up the taxes. With the government's excise tax refund and the fuel tax rebate—the fuel tax rebates and refunds to farmers for gasoline—and I will read this into the record—they are as follows: The federal sales tax rebate is 3.5 cents per litre; the excise tax rebate is another 4 cents per litre; and the excise tax refund is 1.5 cents per litre. That adds up to 9 cents per litre. In fact, the taxes that we are levying amount to a little less than that, to 8.86 cents. So I hope that will clarify the question that was asked this morning.

On diesel fuel, the federal sales tax rebate is 3.5 cents and the excise tax rebate is 4 cents, which total 7.5 cents per litre.

Those rebates are sufficient to ensure that farmers receive a full rebate of all federal taxes—and a little bit more—on gasoline and diesel fuel for production purposes; and farmers have received full rebates of all of those taxes on gasoline and diesel fuel since May 1, 1986. There has been no gap; it has been a full rebate.

I am glad to share this with you. I am sorry if the documentation did not make that as clear as it should have.

The Chairman: Senator Olson will start the questioning.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for that clarification. I read the bill very carefully—it is not very long; it comprises only three pages—but to try to sort out all of the qualifications and references is nearly impossible. I had asked Senator MacDonald a question, to make sure that there were no gaps when the rebate was applicable. I am now satisfied with the explanation of the minister. Perhaps he will give me the sheet of figures to which he referred so that we can have it incorporated in the record.

The list follows:

Fuel Tax Rebates and Refunds to Farmers

	Cents per litre
Gasoline
Federal Sales Tax Rebate	3.5
Excise Tax Rebate	4
Excise Tax Refund	1.5
TOTAL	9
Diesel Fuel:
Federal Sales Tax Rebate	3.5
Excise Tax Rebate	4
TOTAL	7.5

Senator Olson: I want now to go back to what is defined as "off-road operations." Quite honestly, I can appreciate the difficulty which the federal authority would have with the variations in the provincial rules respecting tax rebate on fuels used for production, particularly this off-road factor.

I want the minister to know that he puts farmers in the impossible position of complying with the law in both jurisdictions, because in Alberta—and I believe it is true also in Saskatchewan—it is quite legal to use dyed gasoline or diesel fuel in one's truck while it is being driven on the highway. There is no doubt about that. One is not in violation of the provincial law, which says that dyed gasoline is for farm purposes. That happened approximately 20 or 25 years ago in Alberta, and has applied for a somewhat lesser period in Saskatchewan. Purple dye is put in the gasoline or diesel fuel so that a police officer can identify it as tax-free fuel. If it is found in a vehicle other than one's farm truck, one is in violation and is charged with using it illegally.

Senator Argue: I thought you had no gasoline tax in Alberta.

Senator Olson: We don't, but that is for farm fuel. They don't have it for others. But the fact of the matter is that it is legal to use that dyed gasoline in one's farm truck while it is on the highway. Ordinarily a farmer will apply for a rebate from the federal government for exactly the same amount of fuel that he bought, but on which he did not pay tax to the provincial authority. But if he drives his truck on the highway he is in violation of the federal law, unless he drains out the tank or keeps track of it.

Senator Argue: They have to pull it over the road.

Senator Olson: I hope that the minister realizes the impossible position in which farmers find themselves. I do not know if there is a simple solution to the problem. Perhaps there is not; but I hope that there will be some administration of the law that will take into account the impossible position in which a farmer who suddenly comes to the highway finds himself. If he drives his truck on to the highway with fuel on which he has claimed a rebate, he is in violation of the federal law—yet, he complies completely with the provincial law. Perhaps we have to live with this kind of thing, but it is difficult.

Mr. Hockin: I think it is important that I clarify the situation. In fact, farmers have been able to live with this perfectly well, and I will tell you why. There is an administrative system now in place at the federal level—we do not have to invent one—which allows farmers not to be caught in this “Catch 22” situation suggested by the honourable senator. Farmers can claim 80 per cent of their farm fuel purchases to be designated for off-highway farm use, and the 20 per cent that is missing is the 20 per cent that allows them to drive on the highway. They will not be able to deduct that. Therefore, there is the presumption that they are following the law when they are on the highway, because they are not receiving that 20 per cent of the deduction. If they wish to get more than 80 per cent, they must keep records.

● (1150)

Senator Olson: So they can get more than 80 per cent?

Mr. Hockin: That is right. I think it is pretty well known in the farm community that to get more than 80 per cent back you must keep a record. It is not necessary to keep records if you want to claim just 80 per cent. That is how the program is handled administratively.

However, in terms of a policeman stopping somebody on the highway and saying, “You have purple gas”—

Senator Olson: The police have a suction device that pumps the gas out, and if it is purple you are arrested.

Mr. Hockin: That is not a violation of a federal act, because I have just given an explanation of how we at the federal level merely wish the farmer well, and have no complaints. We do not care what colour the gas is. The farmer is stopped under provincial jurisdiction to determine the colour of the gas he is using. If the provinces want to do that, it is within their jurisdiction. But we at the federal level have been accommodating to make sure there is not a contradiction as far as we are concerned.

Senator Olson: The minister has described the current procedure. It is not new. I was not aware that a farmer could get more than 80 per cent back if he kept a record. I would be interested to know what kind of records are required.

Senator Argue: It would not be worth it.

Senator Olson: No, it would not be worth it. For example, if a farmer does not have any highway vehicle such as a truck that burns diesel fuel, and he only uses it in his tractor, combine, and so on, then he could not collect over 80 per cent of the rebate without producing some records. That is a bit unfair, because many farmers do not have highway vehicles that burn diesel fuel.

Senator Argue: I think the procedure as described here is more complicated than it is back home.

Senator Olson: In any event, I merely want the minister to know that I know what is being done, but I hope that a lot of farmers are not prosecuted.

Mr. Hockin: In practice, the system seems to be working very well. As a matter of fact, large operators are keeping records and are claiming more than 80 per cent. They do not find it difficult to comply.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, in the minister's comments during the introduction of this bill yesterday in the other place he referred to the amount of tax being rebated to farmers. Again, this morning Senator MacDonald in his eloquent explanation referred to the same figures.

Senator Doody: Four times.

Senator Phillips: I believe it was only three. Canada has two coasts, and a very large percentage of our population is involved in the fishing industry. May we have the figures on rebates to fishermen?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, there is a difference for those who fish in international waters and those who fish in Canadian waters. The fishermen who fish in international waters receive a full rebate. Those who do not fish in international waters receive rebates of 3 cents on federal sales tax and 1 cent on excise tax and a refund of 1.5 cents on the gasoline excise tax. That adds up to 5.5 cents. It is not as much as a farmer receives, but we must remember that the smaller rebate is for fishermen who do not fish in international waters.

Senator Phillips: You have given the figures for gasoline. What are the figures for diesel fuel?

Mr. Hockin: For diesel fuel there is a 3-cent rebate on federal sales tax and a 1-cent rebate on excise tax.

Senator Phillips: What does that add up to per annum for fishermen?

Mr. Hockin: I do not have a breakdown on fishermen, but primary producers other than farmers benefit to the extent of $50 million as a result of these rebates and refunds.

Senator Phillips: Would it be possible at some future time for you to supply me with a breakdown on fishermen?

Mr. Hockin: I do not have it with me today.

Senator Phillips: Sometime in the future would be fine.

Mr. Hockin: Yes.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for Mr. Hockin, the answer to which I think is fairly obvious, but I would like it on the record. It is clear that the measure before us contains no additional help for farmers and others, that it is a continuation of the existing measure for a period of two years. Is there anything new or additional in this measure?

Mr. Hockin: There is nothing new and nothing additional, except the rebates are, as Senator Phillips was perhaps alluding to, full and complete for farmers. That is not the case for other primary producers. However, we recognize that the farm community is in tougher straits than some other primary producers.

Senator Argue: My question is: Will the situation on January 2 be precisely what it is today? In other words, Parliament is extending the provisions of this measure for rebates for an additional two-year period.

Mr. Hockin: That is right, but the cost to the government—

Senator Argue: I understand that, and I am not quibbling about it. But the farmer cannot say, "My fuel will go down 1 cent a litre on January 2, because there is an additional rebate." In other words, it is the continuation of a policy currently in effect for another two years. That is my understanding, but I may be unclear in my thinking. So there is nothing new or nothing additional. Perhaps one could say that there is an addition in the sense that the measure will last for another two years.

Mr. Hockin: That is right. Therefore, there is an ongoing and additional charge to the treasury.

Senator Argue: I realize that you could not give out these rebates without losing something.

I have a question which relates to the administration of this measure. Let me explain how I understand it, and perhaps you can tell me whether or not I am correct. I am from Saskatchewan. We used to have purple gas, but we no longer have dyed fuels. We put in whatever colour of fuel we get from the dealer. In any event, as I understand it, a company in a given community which sells fuel directly to farmers is able to make an arrangement whereby the farmer is not charged, and therefore he does not have to apply for a rebate. This procedure makes things clean and clear, and the administration costs from a farmer's point of view are zero. Is that possible?

• (1200)

Mr. Hockin: It is important to distinguish the three different ways in which primary producers may obtain their rebate. First of all, they can receive it through a reduction in the price where fuel is purchased from a manufacturer who is required to pay tax under the act. That is the first method.

The second way you can get the rebate is through a reduction in price where fuel is purchased from a registered vendor who recovers the amount of the rebate directly from the government.

Senator Argue: Therefore the farmer does not have to pay if the dealer recovers it. Very well.

Mr. Hockin: The third method is where the farmer would have to recover it himself by filing a rebate claim with the Minister of National Revenue.

Senator Argue: Then I would be questioning you about the middle category. In other words, about the dealer who is registered, and who does not charge the farmer but applies for the rebate. Anyway, that is what I think you have said.

Mr. Hockin: Yes.

Senator Argue: How does that 80 per cent factor occur in that situation? If the farmer does not pay the tax in the first place, then where does the 80 per cent factor come in?

Mr. Hockin: I gather the way this works is that the farmer declares to the vendor when he is purchasing the fuel. That is one way.

Senator Argue: Declares what?

[Senator Argue.]

Mr. Hockin: Declares what he is using it for.

Senator Argue: I am sorry, I am not trying to trip you up or anything like that. I am just curious as to how it works. The farmer, then, does not have to indicate that it is 80 per cent use, or the dealer does not have to indicate—is that what you are saying?

Mr. Hockin: As long as the farmer keeps his total purchases at the 80 per cent level, he is all right. Otherwise he will have to keep records.

Senator Argue: I am merely asking you these questions in order to tell the neighbourhood farmers. Let us say, for the sake of example, that a farmer buys all of his farm fuel from a given dealer and therefore does not pay any tax at that point. Supposing also that this farmer—as most farmers do—travels around the province and stops every once in a while at a fuel pump and puts some fuel in his vehicle. I am just asking what the rule is. Is the rule that out of the total amount of fuel that the farmer consumes in a given year he should be getting no more than 80 per cent of it from the dealer where he pays no tax? In other words, the idea is that he gets 80 per cent tax free, and then he has to say to himself: "I am buying 20 per cent away from this dealer who provides me with the fuel at no tax." I am just asking these questions for clarification.

Mr. Hockin: The other way in which it would work—and this is fairly frequent, I gather—is that he buys 80 per cent of his purchases from that particular dealer, and that is all for farm use. He then buys the other 20 per cent at an ordinary gas station, or stations, and that is what he would have to say. Then, if he moved it up to 90/10, he would have to keep records.

Senator Argue: I cannot criticize that system. I think it is pretty practical if it runs as you say it is running, and I do not have any additional information to the contrary.

Mr. Hockin: To be absolutely clear with you, I think it is important for us to note that most large western producers do claim more than 80 per cent, and do keep records.

Senator Argue: I think the 80 per cent is quite reasonable.

The Chairman: Senator Petten.

Senator Petten: Mr. Minister, if I understood you correctly, you said that the deep-water fishermen operating in international waters with trawlers offshore, et cetera, get a full rebate on fuel, the same as the farmers do, at 9 per cent. My home province is Newfoundland. We do not have a large farming community, but we are pretty well dependent on the fishery, particularly on the inshore fishery.

On the northeast coast of Newfoundland, this past two or three years, as we would say at home, it has been a blank; it has been a very bad fishery. I would like to ask for clarification, if you are telling us that these fishermen, who need the benefit of every cent and dollar that they can get, only get 5 per cent compared to the 9 per cent for the other fishermen. Did I understand you correctly?

Mr. Hockin: That is right.

Senator Petten: Can I ask the question: Why?

Mr. Hockin: It seems that I have overstated the dark side here. The fact is that there is a study going on with regard to this matter right now, because, with respect to the inshore fishery, if I could use that term, we do not know how much of their catch is exported. In fact, the reason they have the full rebate in international waters is on the supposition that this material is for export, and we do not want to disadvantage ourselves when it comes to export. Therefore, it is not clear with respect to the inshore fishery how much of the rebate is available.

What happens is that these fuels are often purchased exempt from tax. The inshore fishermen, as well as the deep sea fishermen, purchase these fuels exempt from tax. Therefore, in fact, if they all get the full exemption, the supposition is that it is all being exported. What we are studying is the extent to which that supposition is correct. Therefore, it is not quite as dark a picture as I previously painted.

Senator Petten: Therefore there is really no 4 per cent difference there at all. In other words, the difference between the 9 and the 5 is not really there.

Mr. Hockin: Yes. There is a study now being conducted on the extent to which that inshore industry should be designated export, and therefore would qualify for the full deduction.

Senator Petten: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Perhaps at another time we can go into it more fully.

The Chairman: Senator Bielish.

Senator Bielish: I did not intend to ask a question. I merely wanted to take another look at the farm problem. Farmers live with this system. They know exactly how to operate it, and they are thankful for what they get. When they fill up their tanks it is usually in bulk, and they fill up approximately once a month, depending on how much work they do. Therefore, the accounts are there. The dealers furnish you with receipts that are just the same as those required by the tax department, and so there is no problem as far as figuring out what is used for the farm and what is used elsewhere.

The people who get into trouble actually are those who put purple gas into their car.

Mr. Hockin: This is a report from the real world rather than the hypothetical world.

Senator Argue: That is the Alberta world. We got rid of that coloured gas in Saskatchewan. I suppose we have a different breed of Conservatives in Saskatchewan than they have in Alberta.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might be allowed to ask a question even though I am not sitting in my regular seat.

I was very much interested in the minister's answer on the matter of percentages, exports, et cetera. I would be even more interested in receiving a report when the analysis is done, if it is a public document, and of reading what the criteria were. For instance, if you are using the criterion of the offshore as being exported, I think you must look at National Sea's production, which in fact is sold under the category of prepared meals, namely, their "Highliner" product, which is, to their credit, probably the most successful consumer product packaged in Canada. On the other hand, most small fish plants using the inshore fishery turn their produce into cod blocks, which are, in turn, also exported. I would very much like to hear what the officials are using as the criteria and the measuring stick on this issue.

Mr. Hockin: I understand your misunderstanding of what I have said. The fuel, and not the fish, is being exported. Let me explain that. The use of fuel for fishing in international waters is viewed as fuel for international export purposes. An inshore fisherman who ventures into certain sectors will also be considered to be exporting his fuel and therefore will get the full rebate.

Some suggested sectors that the inshore fishermen might move into are the Bay of Fundy and inland lakes. These are two areas where the lower rate of rebate applies. However, there are other areas where the higher rebate level applies.

The system is calculated on where the fuel is consumed rather than on where the product goes. The study deals with the fuel, not the fish.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): I know that the Department of Finance is the depository of all knowledge, but I hope that at some point they might consult with officials in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. They may find that the definitions of "offshore" and "regions" used by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans may not correspond to their own.

I would like to ask a theoretical question. Once the waters around St. Pierre and Miquelon are no longer disputed, at what point do they become international and offshore? That is an issue that will be settled by the courts.

Mr. Hockin: I am not very interested in talking about that.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): The fishermen would be quite interested in knowing what the regulations will eventually be.

Mr. Hockin: Yes, I take your point, senator.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-101, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Shall discussion on the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the minister for his attendance here today. We hope to see him back from time to time.

Senator Frith: But not at the end of a session or sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-101, to amend the Excise Tax Act, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Finlay MacDonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

On the Order:

The Senate in Committee of the Whole on the Bill C-97, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the rules of the Senate, the Honourable Pierre H. Cadieux, Minister of Labour, was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I wish to welcome the Honourable Pierre Cadieux. May I ask him whether he wants to make a statement?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Thank you.
[English]

It is a pleasure to be here for the fourth time, but perhaps for the first time to deal with a non-controversial bill or bills.

Senator Frith: Famous last words!

Senator Argue: Tell us about the progress at Prince Rupert.

Mr. Cadieux: If you wish, I could answer that. However, if you do not mind, I will complete my introductory remarks. I will then be at your disposal.

I am here to answer as many questions as possible. I would like to concentrate on this important legislation, but if you have a question with regard to the grain handlers' strike at Prince Rupert I would be pleased to answer it.

Senator Argue: If my colleagues would forgive me, I would ask the minister if he would mind giving us the answer.

Senator Doody: Can we start with the bill?

Senator Argue: Whatever you say. I am not in charge.

Mr. Cadieux: As soon as both bills are completed, I will answer your question, senator.

Senator Frith: That is a matter of timing, not a condition.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-97, to amend the Canada Labour Code.

Shall discussion on the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Who would like to begin with questions? Shall clause 1 carry?

Senator Frith: Is the minister not going to give us a statement?

The Chairman: Senator Marsden.

Senator Marsden: I would like to ask some questions of the minister. They relate to several clauses of the bill, and not specifically to clause 1. May I ask them now?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Marsden: The minister probably knows that we think this bill fills a gap. There has been a loophole that needed to be closed, and we are glad you are closing it. We are in favour of this bill.

Could you tell us whether there are further loopholes of this nature, on which you intend to move in the near future, affecting employees under the Canada Labour Code?

Mr. Cadieux: As you know, senator, there were some amendments that were brought forward in 1984 which came into effect in 1985. To my knowledge, the only loophole that existed is the one that we are dealing with right now. We are very pleased to move on this particular amendment in order to close that loophole, because that was not the intent of the legislation at the time. We were informed of the loophole. We thought it was unfair, and we have moved as swiftly as possible.

As you know, this bill was passed without difficulty in the other place with the support and recommendations of the other parties. Obviously some unions were consulted in the process of drafting this amendment.

Senator Marsden: You understand, of course, that there is unanimous support, and we are part of that support. However, there are still difficulties for employees who are on maternity leave or who are absent under the provisions of this bill. For example, employees do not receive their full pay in most conditions when they are on such leave. Yet, they have to continue paying benefits or paying their portion of benefits.

Do you have any intention of moving on the pay side of this question so that it is not such a burden for employees after coming back from maternity leave?

Mr. Cadieux: Of course, when we pass legislation of this sort we usually look at the trends in collective bargaining. The legislation is now up to par with the trends in collective bargaining, or what is included in the various collective bargaining contracts.

• (1220)

Therefore, I think it would be premature to follow that now. Through the consultation process that we maintain with the unions and the employers we are keeping the Canada Labour Code as up to date as possible. Obviously, if there are variations, we will look into them, and, if necessary, we will bring forward further amendments.

Senator Marsden: I would be happier if you said that the government wanted to be a model employer and a leader in this, because, as we all know, the collective bargaining process, while good in many respects, does not necessarily mean that employees, especially women employees, make gains. If women had made gains, they would not be earning 60 per cent of the wages earned by men. That is the proportion that most women now earn in the federal domain. So I would urge you to lead rather than follow in that respect.

But let me ask you another question which goes somewhat outside of—

Mr. Cadieux: If I may just add to that, senator. We believe that since we have been in office we have led in many domains. Of course, we have a lot of catching up to do, because we were not around for many years. Nevertheless, senator, I take due notice of that.

Senator Marsden: Thank you, Mr. Cadieux. Perhaps I could ask you another question, which does not come precisely under the provisions of the bill but which deals with a matter of leadership.

If a female worker in your office is pregnant, the provisions of this bill will not apply to her, will they? As I understand it, as an employer you do not pay the contributions of an employee who might be off on maternity leave. Is that correct?

Mr. Cadieux: I am informed that the Canada Labour Code would not apply, or would not affect that particular employee. Nonetheless, Treasury Board has similar regulations. I am informed that that particular employee would receive similar benefits under Treasury Board regulations.

Senator Marsden: That is very interesting. Are you telling us that the Treasury Board, with respect to Parliament Hill employees, is ahead of Labour Canada in bringing in that provision, or will the provision be brought in simultaneously?

Mr. Cadieux: Perhaps there were no loopholes in the Treasury Board regulations, senator. We are dealing with a loophole right now. We are trying to block that loophole.

Senator Marsden: So Treasury Board has always paid the employee's part of the contribution?

Mr. Cadieux: That is what I am told.

Senator Marsden: That is good news.

Senator Frith: Mr. Cadieux, I take it everyone supports this legislation. Why did we not get it sooner?

Mr. Cadieux: I think I touched on that earlier. The amendments which brought about the loophole were passed in June of 1984 and came into effect in March of 1985. Consequently, those provisions have been in force for approximately two years.

We were informed of this particular abuse about four months ago, when a question was raised by the CLC in particular, and subsequently again raised in the House. Immediately after that we looked into the situation and went through the consultation process, which we believe in, in order to find the appropriate wording so we would not create another loophole.

The last meeting I personally had with representatives of the unions was about two weeks ago. The final drafting was completed and the legislation went before the House of Commons last Monday. It is now Thursday, and here we are.

Senator Frith: It received first reading in the House on Monday—

Mr. Cadieux: Yes, and went through all stages.

Senator Frith: It went through all stages on Monday?

Mr. Cadieux: Yes.

Senator Frith: You do understand that because a bill receives all three readings in one day in the House of Commons does not mean that that will happen here, but that does not change the fact that your other explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. Cadieux: I would certainly not want to impose what goes on in the other House on this house, senator, or vice versa.

Senator Frith: That is a good way of holding your popularity in this place.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-97, to amend the Canada Labour Code, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Paul D. David, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING CO., LIMITED ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

On the Order:

The Senate in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-98, to amend an act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the rules of the Senate, the Honourable Pierre H. Cadieux, Minister of Labour, was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we are now meeting in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-98. I think we should hear from the minister. Does the minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Chairman. The same comments I made on the other bill apply to this bill. The bill passed all stages in the House on Monday with the full support of the opposition parties. These amendments are brought forward with the full support of a tripartite consultation between the unions involved, the management involved, and the provinces involved, which are Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

● (1230)

These amendments are necessary. They have been a long time in the works. We now have agreement from all parties. I believe this is a great step forward in ensuring good health and safety regulations in the mines in Flin Flon, which obviously, as honourable senators are aware, are dangerous work places. I believe that this is a good piece of legislation.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Cadieux. I now call upon Senator Molgat.

[Translation]

Senator Molgat: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Minister, we are delighted to have you here once again. As a matter of fact, you are one of our more regular distinguished visitors. You may be soon considered one of us. The only problem is that you would have to ask the Province of Quebec to appoint you to the Senate.

[Senator Bélisle.]

Mr. Cadieux: If I may interrupt, Senator Molgat. I do not want to reveal any secret, but the last time I was here, Senator Frith volunteered to suggest my appointment.

Senator Molgat: Unfortunately, the Meech Lake Accord will eliminate that possibility.

But let us go back to the bill. First, I would like to congratulate you on introducing a bill which met with astounding unanimous approval.

How are things done right now? Who takes care of inspections in Flin Flon? Is it the federal government under the 1947 act or the Province of Manitoba?

Mr. Cadieux: The Province of Manitoba, senator.

Senator Molgat: How come? In 1947, a bill was introduced and passed to make clear that the federal government would have jurisdiction.

Mr. Cadieux: As you know, the federal government had to get involved in 1947 because the mine was on both sides of the border. Strictly speaking, it was a federal jurisdiction.

Since then, there have been discussions, if I may use that word to describe what went on, among three governments, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and the federal government as to who should do what specifically. This situation gave rise to difficult problems.

For that reason there have been, during the last few years, talks about ways to improve compliance with health and safety regulations.

I have been told that most of the work, at the present time, is being done on the Manitoba side, rather than the Saskatchewan side, even though there is still some activity on this side which might continue for another two years.

I believe this is the reason why the Province of Saskatchewan agreed specifically with the Province of Manitoba that health and safety regulations from that latter province should apply to the whole area.

The use of provincial legislation in areas of federal jurisdiction is not new. In effect, we find the same thing in uranium mines, where provincial regulations apply. We will have the same here where Manitoba regulations will be used.

Senator Molgat: Were inspectors ever sent by the federal government following passage of the act of 1947? Did we have federal inspections?

Mr. Cadieux: Since 1947, inspections have been performed by both the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Senator Molgat: Despite the federal legislation?

Mr. Cadieux: Despite the federal legislation, from what I have been told.

Senator Molgat: In other words, that legislation was never enforced?

Mr. Cadieux: The federal legislation says that federal jurisdiction comes from the fact that the two mines overlap.

That might be called a tacit agreement providing at least the acknowledgment of a de facto situation whereby both provinces applied their own regulations in their jurisdiction, which obviously did not make things any easier.

Senator Molgat: Consequently, we could simply have abrogated the 1947 act?

Mr. Cadieux: Respectfully, no, Senator Molgat. Because the mine overlaps the two provinces, it is under federal jurisdiction.

Senator Molgat: But it was not enforced.

Mr. Cadieux: We did not enforce it in practice, if you wish, insofar as federal inspectors were supposed to make the inspections but, in fact, the provincial inspectors made them.

That has indeed caused a problem when, in 1976, the courts determined that Manitoba did not have jurisdiction in a death case on the mine site, and neither did it have then jurisdiction over the implementation of regulations.

Considering thus this overlapping, there was no other solution in order to standardize the regulations applying to the mine, as much for the Manitoba workers as for those from Saskatchewan. Even though they live in Manitoba and normally work in that province, they can find themselves underground in Saskatchewan, and vice versa.

So federal jurisdiction will ensure uniformity with the provincial agreement, and by reference, if you wish, it will apply provincial health regulations at the workplace.

You will note, by the way, Senator Molgat, that Manitoba has recently amended its health and security regulations at the workplace and has now fully adequate ones. Moreover these regulations have the unanimous approval of the trade unions, the employers, the provinces and the federal government.

Senator Molgat: Then, there are no federal inspectors and, consequently, none will be laid off as a result of this bill?

Mr. Cadieux: No, not as far as I know, senator.

Senator Molgat: Now, about the miners themselves—

Mr. Cadieux: Well, if you will permit me, the federal government, I think, will save money.

Senator Molgat: And if we did not have inspections, no money would be saved.

Mr. Cadieux: No, if this bill was not passed, inspections would perhaps be necessary, however, and we might have to hire people to do them.

Senator Molgat: But we do not have inspectors in the mine now and we have had none since 1947?

Mr. Cadieux: Not to my knowledge, Senator Molgat.

Senator Molgat: About the miners, now. Do provincial regulations in Manitoba differ much from those of the federal government? Will miners not be as well protected under the provincial legislation as they would be under federal law?

Mr. Cadieux: Under federal jurisdiction, there are now no specific regulations dealing with professional health and safety in hard rock mining.

But the consensus of Saskatchewan and Manitoba unions, employers as well as the federal government is that the Manitoba regulations that have been developed are adequate considering that specific type of work in hard rock mining.

Senator Molgat: So there are no federal regulations?

Mr. Cadieux: For hard rock mining, no.

Senator Molgat: Are there other circumstances in other provinces or areas of Canada where the same problem as in Flin Flon exists?

Mr. Cadieux: As I said earlier about uranium mines, we also apply the regulations by reference in provinces where those uranium mines are.

Senator Molgat: Each province has the right to have its own regulations in that regard. Considering the problem we have had in Flin Flon—

Mr. Cadieux: If I may interrupt at this point, 90 per cent of all the jurisdiction over mines is strictly provincial. In circumstances such as these where there is overlapping, by definition, federal jurisdiction applies, as it does when we are dealing with uranium mines that come under the Atomic Energy Control Board.

Senator Molgat: This is why we do not have any regulations in the field of hard rock mining.

● (1240)

In the case of large mining corporations, like Inco that operates a mine in Sudbury and another in Thompson, Manitoba — and there are many others — the miners themselves go from mine to mine and from province to province. Did the federal government ever try to make regulations or to reach an agreement applying to all provinces? After all, miners who work in Nova Scotia have the same right to be protected as those who work in Flin Flon. I think the federal government should try to work out some kind of general agreement. It would ensure that miners are protected and that everyone understands the regulations. I often feel that what happens in the mines is not due to any lack of goodwill but simply to a lack of understanding of the rules. People are not fully aware of the danger involved. Had there been regulations applying all over the country, there would be no reason for concern when a miner travels to another region and there would be no concern that a company trains its workers differently.

Mr. Cadieux: Philosophically, Senator Molgat, I think you are absolutely right. It would often be ideal or extremely practical to have uniform regulations applying all over Canada. However, various factors must be considered. One of them, of course, is that provinces are often very sensitive, and rightly so, about their jurisdiction. The kind of field we have to deal with must also be taken into consideration. I am told — unfortunately I am not an expert in the field of mining exploration — that general regulations governing all Canadian mining operations could often be difficult to apply. They may not be bad per se, but they could be impractical. You sometimes have to adapt certain conditions depending on the type of mine you are dealing with, hard rock versus uranium, for example, and depending also on the site. So it may be easier and simpler than having regulations which are tailor-made for the specific locality involved. This is more or less what happened in the case of Flin Flon where after consultation, maybe since 1947 or a little later, they finally accepted the Manitoba regulations because, in present circumstances, it turns out that these regulations were made to apply to that operation.

Let us get back to the application of general or coast-to-coast regulations, if you will. As I see it, employees must be treated in Victoria just as they would be in Newfoundland.

I want to give you an example of a system we set up recently, WHMIS, which stands for Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System. After four years of consultation between all provincial, territorial and federal governments, the industry and the unions, we did manage to pass legislation where all information dealing with dangerous materials in Canada will be the same everywhere so that a worker, be he in Newfoundland, in Montreal or in Saskatchewan, will have the same kind of protection and be entitled to the same kind of information concerning hazardous products which he may have to handle in Ottawa today and maybe in Toronto tomorrow, if the product has been transported from one locality to another or from one province to another.

In certain cases it may be the ideal solution but in others, unfortunately, it may not be just as practical as we would wish. Perhaps we might be well advised to review the matter, Senator Molgat. I would point out that in this case this option was discarded because of the particular circumstances and because of the special interest of Manitoba in this locality, especially to draft appropriate regulations.

Senator Molgat: Thank you.

Senator Frith: I have only one question for the minister. When answering the questions asked by Senator Molgat, I believe you said twice that, by definition, the existence of mines in both provinces automatically means that federal jurisdiction is involved.

Do you mean that this change in jurisdiction occurs without a declaration under the constitutional provisions regarding the declaratory power? Just in passing, can the mine operate mechanically in a single province? Would it be possible for a part of the mine located in Manitoba, for instance, to operate without machinery exclusively in Manitoba?

Mr. Cadieux: I am certainly not an expert in mining operations, Senator Frith. Unfortunately, I have never even visited a mine. I therefore have no idea whether or not in this specific case the mine could operate in Manitoba without using the Saskatchewan machinery, or vice versa. However, I am told that, maybe in two years, the Saskatchewan operation will come to an end. It therefore seems that, in two years, the entire operation will be in Manitoba.

To come back to your question, and I thank you for asking it as it will allow me to clarify an ambiguity which I may have created, in 1947 there was confusion about who had jurisdiction over a mine which overlapped provincial boundaries. It was decided to put an end to the confusion.

Senator Frith: This was one of the issues which were unclear at the time, and this is why I asked the question.

Mr. Cadieux: It was unclear at the time whether the mine came under strict provincial jurisdiction in one province or the other, or whether it came under federal jurisdiction because there was an overlapping. I believe that an official declaration that it came under federal jurisdiction was made in recognition of the fact that it had to come under federal jurisdiction because there was overlapping and because there was ambiguity.

Senator Frith: It was a declaration under the declaratory power.

Mr. Cadieux: It was generally in the interests of Canada.

Senator Frith: Exactly, this is why I asked the question. Otherwise, I am not convinced that such an overlapping alone would create an area of federal jurisdiction, but if it was a declaration, it is quite clear.

Mr. Cadieux: Following the overlapping.

Senator Frith: Yes, agreed.

Mr. Cadieux: Something like in the case of interprovincial transport.

Senator Frith: Quite. It was this situation which provided the basis for the declaration, was it not?

Mr. Cadieux: Yes, senator.

Senator Frith: Thank you, Mr. Cadieux.

[English]

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, before reporting our progress on this bill to His Honour the Speaker, may I say to all of you how much I have appreciated the honour and pleasure of presiding over your sittings, especially today when the spirit of the Christmas message has already filled your hearts—peace on earth to all men and women of goodwill. May I say to all of you, Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Senator Argue: Mr. Chairman, before you leave the Chair, I wonder if you would pardon me if I asked the Minister of Labour whether he could report to us on the present situation in the grain handlers' strike in Prince Rupert. Is any progress likely to be made? Can you see a settlement of the strike?

Mr. Cadieux: I will start with the last part of your question. I hope that the end is close by. In fact, I hope that the end will be today. Of course, for some little while that will be in the hands of the parties who, I am informed, will meet tomorrow in Vancouver with mediator Collins, who has already been in touch with the parties since I instructed him to do so and to reconvene the meetings. The last information I have is that they will be meeting tomorrow in Vancouver at 2 p.m. Vancouver time.

Senator Argue: Is Mr. Collins a new person in this situation, or has he been involved in this particular dispute in some other capacity at a previous time?

Mr. Cadieux: If my memory serves me correctly, Mr. Collins was appointed mediator in this particular dispute on March 20, 1986.

The reason, perhaps, why we find ourselves more than a year later with the reactivation of the mediator in this particular case is because the parties—and I do not want to identify either one—have been involved in many court challenges, “court” including the CLRB and, of course, the Federal Court of Canada, which have, unfortunately, delayed the process, which is normally faster, and in many cases much more practical and successful. It is needless to remind you that the Air Canada settlement, which occurred yesterday, came about with the help of a mediator.

● (1250)

Senator Argue: I have one or two other short questions. Does Mr. Collins play the same kind of role within the department as does Bill Kelly? In other words, is he one of the people who are available from time to time, on the instruction of the minister, to endeavour to mediate a situation like the one on the west coast?

Mr. Cadieux: I would not want to say that Mr. Collins occupies the same role as Mr. Kelly, or vice versa, Mr. Kelly being the Associate Deputy Minister of Labour. But Mr. Collins is also an employee of the Department of Labour. He is in our regional office in Vancouver and is called upon by the minister of the day to serve in various capacities.

Senator Argue: To make my question clearer—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh!

Senator Argue: No, honourable senators, I will not be long-winded.

I know that the two men have a different status, and that Bill Kelly is numero uno when it comes to these kinds of things, but do they play the same kind of role? They are there, are they not, for the same purpose? While the names are different for different disputes, they are there to try to bring the parties together, to try to hammer out a settlement, to try to be fair to both sides, and to achieve some success?

Mr. Cadieux: Senator, that is absolutely in accordance with the definition I would give of the mediation process.

Senator Argue: I thank the minister for his comments. Before he rises, I would like to say that the settlement of this dispute is very critical to the industry. Out on the west coast we not only ship a large part of our grain but this commodity commands a premium price. Therefore, for every bushel of grain not moving there at a given time we not only lose the income at that moment—and I am not one to say that because there was a strike for a week or two we will necessarily lose sales; that is another question—but it carries a premium price. So, while any dispute is important, this one is even more important, because the premium price is lost.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, order. This, Senator Argue, has nothing to do with the question we are dealing with.

Senator Argue: But the minister agreed to answer my questions. I think we are doing this by unanimous consent of the Senate. If we are not, we will stop.

Mr. Cadieux: With the permission of honourable senators—

Senator Corbin: Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the minister, who is an excellent witness, but I think this goes beyond what is just between Senator Argue and the minister. This procedure concerns all of us. How long is it going to continue? Can Senator Doody tell me when we can expect the house to resume today? Are we expected to come back on an empty stomach? What is going on?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I will try to assuage your hunger pains as quickly as I can. My sense of the situation is that we are reaching a climax and that we are just about ready to go.

Mr. Cadieux: With the permission of honourable senators, as Minister of Labour I personally consider all of the disputes in which I have become involved to be important. I do appreciate the particular importance of and the negative effect that a strike in that specific domain can cause to the economy of Canada in general. I can assure Senator Argue that we are following this process very closely. It is our hope that the parties will also realize the potential damage they can cause to the economy of Canada in general, and to themselves in particular, especially at this time of year.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Honourable senators, shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-98, to amend an act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 2 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker, informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

RIDEAU HALL

17 December 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 17th day of December, 1987, at 4:00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth

Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate

Ottawa

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

THIRTY-SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the thirty-second report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration dealing with the Senate estimates for the fiscal year 1988-89. The estimates are attached in duplicate in both English and French.

[Senator Bélisle.]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Frith, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period:

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMMITTEE STUDY OF CONCERNS OF MILITARY FAMILIES— STATUS OF REPORT AND NATURE OF RECOMMENDATIONS— REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning whether the Minister of National Defence is planning to bring to Parliament the report on military families, which he has had in his hands since September.

I had asked whether it would be available before the end of the year. The fact that there is no answer in itself answers my question, namely, that it will not be available for the beginning of next year. I wonder whether the Leader of the Government will then take my question as going forward into the next year; in other words, how soon in 1988 will we get this report, and will it be brought to this chamber?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will take my honourable friend's question as a representation and I will convey it to my colleague, the Honourable Perrin Beatty.

MIDDLE EAST

GAZA STRIP—RECENT INCIDENTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government whether the federal government has made any representations to the Government of Israel with respect to the recent incidents which have occurred on the Gaza Strip, and whether the Canadian government has urged the Israeli authorities to exercise restraint in the situation?

● (1410)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the answer to that question is yes, it has been done.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, earlier today Senator Argue indicated that he had some questions regarding the Prince Rupert situation. Since during Committee of the Whole the honourable senator discussed the matter with the minister, perhaps he will consider the information that he received to be as up-to-date as any information that could possibly be had at this point.

Also, earlier Senator Corbin inquired about an answer that he had been promised in reply to a question concerning economic development in New Brunswick, the fate of federal government projects announced during the provincial election campaign.

I have an answer to Senator Corbin's question, and delayed answers to several others. I will be glad to read the answers to the questions if it is the wish of honourable senators; otherwise I suggest that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT COMPENSATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked on October 6, by Senator Grafstein, regarding redress for Canadians of Japanese origin—government compensation.

(The answer follows:)

In an effort to find a satisfactory solution, the government has held extensive consultations with the Japanese Canadian community and its largest representative group, the National Association of Japanese Canadians (NAJC).

The first requisite of the NAJC was for an official acknowledgement of the injustices suffered by Japanese Canadians. The Secretary of State, the Hon. D. Crombie, met this demand by promising that the House of Commons would, indeed, offer such an acknowledgement.

The Association also demanded assurances that incidents of this nature would never recur. On June 26, the Minister of National Defence, the Hon. P. Beatty, introduced Bill C-76 in the House of Commons. This legislation, when enacted, will replace the War Measures Act with better options for handling national emergencies.

In addition, the government has offered to establish a $12 million community fund that would be controlled by representatives of the various Japanese Canadian communities across the country. The NAJC has rejected this offer and demanded individual payments to people, regardless of loss or need. Collectively, this would exceed $400 million. The government does not consider this to be an equitable solution, for reasons that have been fully explained to the organization.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AIDS—AVAILABILITY IN CANADA OF DRUG AZT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on November 19 a question was asked by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz regarding Health and Welfare—AIDS—Availability in Canada of the Drug AZT

(The answer follows:)

The drug AZT has been available in Canada for the treatment of patients with AIDS and severely depressed T-4 cell counts since November 4, 1986. This arrangement was facilitated by the federal government, and particularly by the provision of over $1 million for clinical trials of the drug. The federal government is also sharing the cost of AZT, some $12,000 per patient per year, with the provinces, under the terms of federal-provincial health and social service funding arrangements.

AZT may not be licensed for unrestricted use. AZT also has serious side effects, and careful patient monitoring is essential. This is best achieved by maintaining the drug in experimental status.

AIR CANADA

LABOUR DISPUTE—CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on December 8 a question was asked by the Honourable Hazen Argue regarding the dispute between Air Canada and the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.

(The answer follows:)

Telexes sent by the Minister of Labour on December 7 to Air Canada and the union, urging a resumption of negotiations, were sent on the Minister's initiative without prior discussion with either party. The telexes were sent to the parties within minutes of each other. In the case of the union, their telex was sent Special Delivery as they do not have their own telex machine. However, a copy of the telex was immediately transmitted to the union by facsimile. Any delay in the receipt of the Minister's message would appear to be due to the delivery process.

FISHERIES

MUSSEL INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on December 8 a question was asked by the Honourable Senator Bonnell regarding Fisheries—Mussel Industry—Government Assistance.

(The answer follows:)

The Government is extremely concerned about the economic well-being of those producers in Atlantic Canada affected by the removal of all live Atlantic clams, mussels, oysters and quahaugs from the Canadian retail market. Nevertheless, the health of Canadians remains the government's first priority. Suspect products have now been removed from the marketplace. A new supply of products will re-enter the marketplace within days as Inspection Services are able to ensure that they fully meet health and safety requirements.

Government officials are currently exploring the impact of the removal of these products from the marketplace and are continuing to make every effort to identify the nature and extent of the toxicity problem. It is, therefore, too early at this point to speculate on the question of compensation.

THE ENVIRONMENT

POLLUTION OF GREAT LAKES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on December 9 a question was asked by the Honourable Senator Haidasz regarding the Environment—Pollution of Great Lakes—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

The federal government places a high priority on the preservation and improvement of water quality in the Great Lakes.

On November 18, 1987, new provisions to the 1978 Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement were signed by the Minister of the Environment and by the Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Lee Thomas, in Toledo, Ohio.

The new provisions are aimed at addressing all sources of pollution to the lakes including: contaminated ground-water, contaminated sediments, and airborne toxic substances.

In addition, new requirements for improved implementation were agreed to whereby the parties will meet twice a year to coordinate work plans and review progress.

Under the 1987 amendments to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, Ontario and Environment Canada are developing remedial action to address the 17 areas of concern in the Canadian portion of the Great Lakes Basin.

Environment Canada is also providing support to the Ontario Ministry of the Environment's Municipal and Industrial Strategy for Abatement (MISA) Program which will establish stringent pollution abatement requirements for municipalities and all major industrial point source discharges.

In February 1987, Environment Canada, the Province of Ontario, New York State and the U.S. federal government signed the Declaration of Intent relating to the Niagara River Toxics Management Plan. Under the Management Plan, the four jurisdictions committed themselves to achieve a 50 per cent reduction in toxic chemical loadings from sources along the river over the coming decade.

Several federal and provincial government agencies responsible for fisheries, natural resources, health, agriculture, transportation and public works are also involved in studies and programs for Great Lakes water quality protection and enhancement.

Environment Canada will continue working with Ontario, and U.S. federal and state authorities in addressing problems in the Niagara River, Upper Great Lakes Connecting Channels and Lake Ontario.

HEALTH

TAINTED MUSSELS—DATE OF AVAILABILITY OF EVIDENCE AND DATE OF WARNING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on December 10 a question was asked by the Honourable Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough) regarding Health—Tainted Mussels—Date of Availability of Evidence and Date of Warning.

(The answer follows:)

November 29, 1987

The Health Protection Branch, National Health and Welfare, advised two major mussel distributors on Prince Edward Island to cease further distribution of mussels.

December 1, 1987

A joint news release by the Ministers of National Health and Welfare and Fisheries and Oceans was issued to alert the public against consumption of Prince Edward Island mussels.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

NEW BRUNSWICK—FATE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PROJECTS ANNOUNCED DURING PROVINCIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on October 14 last, by the Honourable Eymard Corbin, regarding Economic Development—New Brunswick—Fate of Federal Government Projects Announced During Provincial Election Campaign.

(The answer follows:)

Listed below are announcements made in New Brunswick that involved the federal government from August 2 to October 13, 1987.

August 30—Approval of construction of New Brunswick Botanical Garden in Saint-Jacques, Madawaska County.

August 31—Expansion of the Hanshaus Bavarian Brewery in the Dieppe Industrial Park, Dieppe.

September 20—New federal program for the creation of community radio stations in official language communities.

September 25—Upgrade of the water distribution system that serves the Sussex Industrial Park, Sussex.

September 25—Expansion of the Grandview Industrial park plant of NovaStran (1986) Ltd., Saint John.

October 5—Contribution towards the project "Carrefour de la Mer" to be built in Caraquet, Gloucester County.

October 6—Contribution towards the restoration of the Lefebvre Monument, Memramcook.

October 9—Contribution towards the establishment of an incubation centre in Fredericton.

October 9—Grant to establish a Wood Sciences and Technology Centre (WATC) at the University of New Brunswick, Fredericton.

October 9—Contribution towards the modernization of Lantic Sugar Ltd., Saint John.

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I notice that in the list of delayed answers given by the Deputy Leader of the Government he did not include an answer to my question concerning the participants in the several consortia invited to deal with the proposal for a fixed crossing in Northumberland Strait.

Senator Murray, earlier, gave us the names of the consortia, but he did not give us the breakdown of the participants which I had sought in my question. It was not included in the answer I was given the other day. If I could be given that information privately, it would be helpful. It could then be placed on the record when we return.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, that information has not yet come to my attention. When it does, I will communicate it to the honourable senator whether or not the Senate is then sitting.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, in connection with the delayed answers given by the Deputy Leader of the Government, may I ask him whether he can provide an answer to my question concerning the repaving of the road system on Parliament Hill?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret to inform my honourable friend that despite the urgency of that particular question, it did not find its way into the list of answers that I brought to the house today. I will certainly try to get it as quickly as possible. In the meantime, I would ask my honourable friend to observe very great caution as he makes his way through the impediments in the area.

[Translation]

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ASKED ON SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, Senator Thériault asked me two questions requesting information during consideration of Bill C-100. I obtained the answers yesterday.

The first question asked for the number of persons receiving benefits provided for in the bill. The answer to that question is as follows: About 380 persons.

The second question asked for the amounts required to enforce the legislation. The answer is as follows: About $3 million over the next five years.

[English]

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 26, 1988, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH CARE

SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I adjourned the debate on Senator Argue's motion two days ago for a number of reasons, which I do not feel I ought to expand upon in detail this afternoon except to say that I still feel that a committee of 12 senators will, I suspect, impose a burden on the time available to them and other honourable senators to do their work properly. Most of us, if not all of us, are members of at least one committee, if not two and sometimes three. For that reason I had thought that adding another committee would really be excruciating in terms of members available to sit on committees generally. When Senator Haidasz rose last Thursday to propose the creation of still another committee, I said at that time that I felt that an existing committee could very well look after the concerns he wished to explore by his additional committee. In some respects I still have the same reservation for the creation of this committee. That is one of the reasons why I was rather lukewarm to the idea. However, I shall not go against what seems to be considerable support for the establishment of this committee.

Other concerns were expressed and identified not only by myself but by some colleagues from my own party, and by some senators from the other party as well, with respect to the scope of the inquiry upon which the new committee would embark. I, for one, feel that while a few senators are professionally equipped to deal with some of the matters this committee will be expected to examine, we do not have in this house sufficient resources and expertise to embark upon the broad examination suggested by Senator Argue in his motion, which is "to examine Canada's health care system." That is a pretty broad mandate. It covers just about the entire sphere of health. So unless we retain the professional services of dozens of people, I do not think the Senate has the capacity to do a proper job on such a far-ranging subject. Therefore, I would like to propose an amendment. I am looking around for a seconder. May I call upon Senator Olson to consider seconding my motion?

Hon. H.A. Olson: I have not seen the amendment.

Senator Corbin: I did him a similar service before without hearing his motion beforehand. So, if he would pay attention, perhaps he could see his way to supporting this amendment.

Therefore, I move, seconded conditionally by the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C.:

That the motion be amended in the first paragraph by striking out, immediately after the word "examine", in line 2 the words "Canada's health care system"; and by replacing the words "such an improved health care system", in lines 7 and 8, by the words "preventative medicine and other preventative measures".

If Senator Olson will indicate his support, we can proceed with the motion.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I second the motion.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, are there copies of the motion?

Senator Corbin: I am sorry, I meant to give the honourable senator a copy this morning.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the effect of the amendment is to concentrate the committee's attention on preventive health care and alternative health care systems and ways of improving Canada's health care system accordingly. I believe that many honourable senators were concerned about the words that have been removed; namely, a study of "Canada's health care system", and felt that they made the scope of the study broader than necessary. I believe there was a good deal of support for the essence of Senator Argue's proposition, that is, the study of alternative health care systems and preventive medicine. For that reason I am supporting the amendment.

● (1420)

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, upon looking at the amendment some of us continue to have reservations. I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Senator Doody: Is it the wish of this chamber that Senator Robertson not be allowed to participate in this debate?

Senator Frith: No, but we would like her to participate right now.

Senator Doody: You want her to do it right now; in other words, she does not have any time to prepare?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): On that point, honourable senators, it was my understanding that members of the Senate were prepared to deal with this matter today. Indeed, it was stated last week, and affirmed earlier this week, that the Senate would deal with this matter before the Christmas break. I believe that Senator Doody himself, earlier in the week, had given that assurance to Senator Argue.

In an effort to accommodate the concerns that had been expressed by a number of senators, including Senator Robertson, Senator Argue has agreed to amend his motion—or support the amendment—and the amendment is a substantial one and is intended to meet certain concerns. I regret that I did not have an opportunity to discuss the matter with Senator Robertson, although I did discuss it with Senator Flynn and with Senator David, Senator Le Moine, Senator Corbin and others. I assumed that we had removed the main objection.

Now I find myself in a somewhat uncomfortable situation in refusing the adjournment to Senator Robertson. However, I think that discomfort must be weighed against the reality that if we adjourn the debate today, the matter will be put off until January 26 or later, and the necessary preparations for the organization of the committee will not take place.

Senator Argue was assured that this matter would be dealt with. In fact, he has patiently agreed to stand a decision from one day to the next. Therefore, I wonder if there is some way in which Senator Robertson could accommodate the Senate, or whether we could accommodate her by coming back to this order later in the day when she has had an opportunity to look at the amendment, and then we can come to a decision. I would not want to deprive her of the opportunity of speaking. It is the question of having a decision today that I think is somewhat urgent.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have no desire to inconvenience Senator Argue or anyone else in this regard. I was very much impressed with the list of names that Senator MacEachen gave us of the people who had been told about the amendment and what was being done. Since my name was mentioned as one who had committed himself to moving this matter along, I was just a little bit surprised that I was not one of the people who were told that an amendment was coming forth, or what the gist of it was. Therefore to me this is a whole new situation, even though I am being told that I was committed to moving it ahead in the absence of any information to that effect.

Therefore I must really mildly—as is my manner—protest the situation in which I find myself, and, at the same time, defend Senator Robertson's right to examine this matter and to think about when and where she wishes to speak.

As to the argument that Senator Argue will not have time to move his committee along, today we will adjourn until January 26. If it is his intention to meet during the Christmas period, then he can do all of the logistics that are necessary to demonstrate the actuality of that situation, and that might put a different complexion on things. However, it is my understanding that this place will be pretty well vacated during the next several weeks. Therefore, the urgency is more apparent than real in that respect.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is a matter of a conflict that we all have in accommodating two of our colleagues. It is a fact that for some weeks now Senator Argue has been asking that this matter be dealt with in its original form, and he has received undertakings from us that it would be disposed of this week. Therefore, if we are to fulfill our undertaking to him we should put the motion in its original form, without the amendment, and then vote on it, because that is the undertaking that we gave him.

What has happened is that he has said: "I will take into account some concerns and, in effect, reduce the scope of the motion that you have agreed you would dispose of this week." Then we have the problem of accommodating Senator Robertson. It is very unusual for us to refuse the adjournment. There also is a rather esoteric provision in some of the material in my possession that if a senator's motion to adjourn is refused, that senator loses the right to speak on the motion, and we certainly do not want that to happen to Senator Robertson.

However, that is the position we are in. It seems to me that Senator Argue would be justified in saying: "If you do not like the smaller scope of my motion, and you say I have introduced a brand new ballgame, then fulfill the undertaking that you gave me and vote on the motion in its original form." I do not think that that original motion represents the consensus in the chamber. That is why I think the best solution is to have the matter stand until later in the day, and let Senator Robertson, and any others who wish to do so, speak to the amendment at that time. We have the time.

Senator Doody: Just to embellish the point that I thought I had made earlier, the principle of at least informing the government leadership—or what purports to be the government leadership—of the plans of the mover, the seconder, or the amender, on this matter is not so esoteric. I think it is a pretty well recognized convention. I even had to ask for a copy, which my friend so graciously and kindly brought across and presented to me with full yuletide greetings, and I will never forget that; it was a very nice gesture.

Nevertheless, the situation remains that this is a very different kettle of fish from what we started to deal with two days ago.

Senator Frith: That is why I say let us not deal with it now.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I know perfectly well I am not going to add anything to the discussion, but it will give me some satisfaction, and I trust I may be allowed to express my opinion, because I was not one of the senators whose names were presented to the Senate as being authorities for the proposal that is before us now. Nor indeed was I one of those who were consulted in any way. However, I would like to say that I think it is a bad thing if we purport to limit the discussion in the Senate on a matter of this nature, particularly when we are dealing with a new proposition.

I am not aware of the arrangements made with Senator Argue. I certainly did not make any arrangements with him. In my opinion, it is probably not very suitable that private arrangements of this kind should be presented to us as something to which we should lend our support. I take the view that—

Senator Argue: No private arrangements were made with me.

Senator Roblin: I am glad to hear it.

Senator Argue: What Senator Doody has said is on the record of the Senate, that is all.

Senator Roblin: All I know is what Senator Doody put on the record right now. There was certainly no public arrangement made insofar as he was concerned. However, I am simply saying that we should not deprive Senator Robertson of the right to adjourn the debate at this particular moment on this subject for the simple reason that it is a new motion that we have before us now. This is not the original proposition; it is a new proposition. None of us, as far as I know—except those who concocted it—knew what was in it, although we heard it read to us just a few minutes ago. Therefore, to say now that the senator should not be allowed to adjourn this debate and to speak upon it at a later date seems to me to be quite wrong.

Honourable senators, in practical terms, what are we doing? Are we depriving Senator Argue of having his motion dealt with at an early date? We are not.

Senator Olson: Yes, we are.

Senator Roblin: We are not. If the motion is dealt with right now, everyone knows that we are adjourning until January 26. There is nothing that the committee will be doing in the interval. It is not as if time is being lost or the issue itself is one in which time is of the essence. It is not. It is a matter that will be discussed by members of the Senate over the months that are to come. Apart from meeting the obvious desire of Senator Argue to get on with his particular idea, I really cannot see what the urgency is that we should be asked to deal with it now in such a way as to prevent a senator from adjourning the debate and discussing what is essentially a new proposition at a later date. If we get into this habit we will be making a mistake.

Senator Robertson: Without jeopardizing my position to speak, I must say, in defence of Senator Corbin, that he did give me a copy of his amendment. Some of us discussed this amendment at length. We decided among ourselves that we wanted to have a little more time, and in that spirit I moved the adjournment of the debate. The future of the motion is at your mercy, I suppose, but I assumed that it was a normal procedure. I certainly did not intend to cause a ruckus, but I still stand by my motion. Kill it or do whatever you want to do with it.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, on a point of order, if I may refer to the mechanics of the wheeling and dealing that went on this morning, some of it informally outside the house and some of it formally inside the house, I must say that I had been in contact with my leader, with Senator Argue, and with some of the members who sit on the government side. I do not want to name anybody, because that is beside the point in any case. However, I do want to respond to the remark that Senator Doody made, and that was that he had not been informed of the motion when I rose to speak this afternoon.

For the information particularly of Senator Doody, I wish to tell him that of course I have been speaking with members of his party. I have been speaking with one member in particular who said, "Well, discuss it with other members." All the time I assumed that you yourself, Senator Doody, would be informed by your own members. I hope that you are not tagging me with the responsibility of having to inform you. After all, who am I to approach your august person and tell you what is going on with your own party?

Senator Doody: I understand.

Senator Corbin: I hope we are clear that you are not blaming me for this imbroglio.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am the type of person who usually tries to be agreeable and reasonable. I think I have been reasonable.

This motion was first moved in June of this year. That is now more than six months ago. In all the sitting days since that time this motion was on the order paper. Senator Robertson, or any other senator, had an opportunity to speak to this motion and make their views known. There were then certain objections made—mainly, but not exclusively, from the other side of the house—that the scope of this motion was far too large, that it would take $6 million to look into this, and it would go on forever. I did not feel that way. I felt that there should be a broad basis of authority for the committee.

There seemed to be a substantial opinion that the terms of reference be narrowed. Senator Corbin felt that. My leader tried to accommodate others who had that point of view by coming forward with a compromise, shall we say, or with a suggested amendment. While everyone was not brought in on the discussion, a number of senators did discuss this question.

Now I do feel—and I feel this very sincerely and very honestly—that this is a time for decision. It is true to say that we are going into a recess and the question could be asked, "What is to be lost by waiting?" However, the difference between a decision today and waiting is that the decision will not be made. There is no assurance when a decision will be made. I am not trying to create difficulties, but Senator Doody some days ago seemed very amenable and said that we should make a decision on Tuesday of this week. That did not happen.

We on this side of the house have been very cooperative today. The government wanted a number of bills passed through the Senate—

Senator MacEachen: With virtually no notice.

Senator Argue: —in three stages so there could be Royal Assent today, and, as my leader says, with virtually no notice.

We have fully cooperated on this side of the house, and I think it is reasonable to ask for reciprocation, not in the same way and not to the same extent. We have accommodated the government on a number of motions. I think it is fair to say that a decision should be made on this motion today, and I hope that the question of the amendment and the question of the main motion could be put soon and put today.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition about the urgency of proceeding with the formation of a committee have caused me to suggest to him that it is impossible to proceed with the work of the committee, because a selection committee has to meet. That committee cannot meet until the Senate returns. However, if the matter is so urgent, I point out to honourable senators that the motion for adjournment is subject to recall, and the Senate could be recalled during the adjournment to deal with the matter. I am sure that Senator Argue would come back for that.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will just say a word or two while you try to get your act together. What is serious about the attempt to postpone this is that you are not keeping your word.

Senator Doody: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that honourable gentleman pointed across the floor to me. Can you sit down, please?

This is an entirely different situation from the situation that we discussed on Tuesday. An amendment has been brought in. We have had little chance or opportunity to study it, and that is the point I am making. We are now forced to debate and enter into a brand new arrangement of which we, as a group, had no prior knowledge. Individuals were informed. We, as a group, were not informed.

This has absolutely nothing to do with the commitment I made last Tuesday, and I deeply resent the implication that I am breaking my word in this case.

Senator Olson: If that is a point of order, honourable senators, there is a new interpretation being put on it. I believe that you gave a commitment that you are ready to pass this motion today.

Senator Doody: You are wrong.

Senator Olson: Am I? Now you are not living up to your commitment, and you are finding some tricky little way of getting around it by saying that it is a new motion. It is a more restricted motion than it was before. I will not go on with this, but I am just telling you what I think.

An Hon. Senator: Let us get on with the vote.

Senator Olson: So you want to get on with the vote. I think there is a new pattern that will come out of this that may not be so satisfactory to the government and their supporters in the future. But if you want to get on with it, look back to page 2370 as to what was agreed to. It says:

Senator Doody: It is already agreed.

Do not tell us what you did not agree to.

Senator Doody: I know what I agreed to.

Senator Olson: You are treading on pretty dangerous ground if you give an undertaking to a member such as Senator Argue and then welsh on it.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I do not know how we can make this point clear, but what we have before us right now is not what we had before us on Tuesday. No stretch of the vivid imagination of my honourable friend opposite can convince the world that black is white and round is square and this is the same thing that I made a commitment to on Tuesday.

● (1440)

Senator Frith: This is less than what you made a commitment to.

Senator Doody: But it is not the same, is it? Have we had a chance to look at it?

Senator Frith: Apparently you have.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, yesterday we had complaints that the Senate should not proceed without seeing Hansard for the previous day. Today honourable senators opposite want to vote on a motion which has not been distributed. All honourable senators have not seen the motion. I find it a strange coincidence that it is necessary to see Hansard before proceeding and not necessary to see a motion that is before the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: Ask Senator Doody for it. He has my copy. Let's have the vote!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, I presume that what we have been doing for the past few minutes was holding a discussion on the relative points of order, and there have been a number of them. The question before the house is the amendment proposed by Senator Corbin—

An Hon. Senator: No, the adjournment!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I put the question on the adjournment and it was refused. I asked for yeas and nays, and the nays had it, so the adjournment was refused.

The motion now before the Senate is the amendment proposed by the Honourable Senator Corbin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Olson. Is it the wish of the Senate that I put the question?

Senator MacEachen: Question!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Those in favour of the amendment—

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, I think the amendment is debatable, is it not?

An Hon. Senator: Of course it is.

Senator Barootes: May I speak on the amendment proposed by my friend, Senator Corbin?

Senator Olson: Of course.

Senator Le Moyne: D'accord.

Senator Barootes: Thank you. Honourable senators, I have looked at this and have tried to figure out just how it will work. I know very little about procedure, but I will read the amendment:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services—

It says "a wider range of health services", not just "preventative measures".

It goes on to say:

—can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care.

The areas that concern me are the words "the provision of a wider range of health services". It does not say "beyond preventative measures." The other area that gives me a great deal of concern—and I say that because I have sat on such committees—is how these provisions "might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care."

Honourable senators, from my experience in these matters—and that goes back to 1955—such an examination is an enormous undertaking. It takes a number of economists to explain just the cost of health services. Then one must think of the varieties that exist in Canada and the variety of ways in which Canadians are paying for health services. It is a dog's breakfast and would take a Solomon to bring this together.

But if we are also going to go into the wider range of health services, not just the preventive area—which was never explained to my satisfaction—we are talking about many, many other modalities and many other professional classes of health services.

Only one of these classes of health services has been studied recently, and that is the provision of midwifery in Ontario. That study took over a year. That report just came down. I believe it took around 18 months to prepare that report, and that dealt with only one element of another health service that could be studied.

If honourable senators think that we can handle this in 12 months, with a budget from the Internal Economy Committee, I warn them that that is impossible, that this is a far, far greater job than we are anticipating.

I ask honourable senators to consider circumscribing this more definitively so we know exactly what the committee will be doing, and to consider where the Senate can find all of the people who can tie all of these various facets and elements of health care together. Those people are needed to undertake such a study.

I beg honourable senators to take a little time to think about this, to talk to one or two of their friends in the health services area, be they chiropractors or whatever, and then come back and say, "Yes, we can do this," or "No, we cannot do that." I think we should take a little time and let this sink in and do a little research over the holidays and ask health professionals about this. We should consider what we are getting into before we jump into this big pool.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, is it the desire of the Senate to vote on this now or later this day?

Senator Frith: Later this day, if there is no other senator who wishes to speak to it today.

Senator Doody: Does Senator Robertson wish to speak later this day, or is Senator Robertson prepared to go ahead now?

Senator Robertson: No.

Senator Doody: Then, we might as well have the vote now and get it over with.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Corbin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Olson:

That the motion be amended in the first paragraph by striking out, immediately after the word "examine", in line 2 the words "Canada's health care system"; and by replacing the words "such an improved health care system", in lines 7 and 8, by the words "preventative medicine and other preventative measures".

[Senator Barootes.]

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

● (1500)

Amendment carried on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	LeBlanc
Anderson	( Beauséjour )
Argue	Lefebvre
Barrow	MacEachen
Bonnell	Marchand
Bosa	Marsden
Corbin	Molgat
Cottreau	Neiman
Denis	Olson
Fairbairn	Perrault
Frith	Petten
Guay	Robichaud
Haidasz	Rousseau
Hays	Stanbury
Hébert	Stewart
Hicks	( Antigonish-
Langlois	Guysborough )—32.
Leblanc
( Saurel )

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Atkins	Macdonald
Balfour	( Cape Breton )
Barootes	Macquarrie
Bélisle	Murray
Bielish	Phillips
Cochrane	Robertson
Cogger	Roblin
David	Rossiter
Doody	Simard
Doyle	Spivak
Flynn	Tremblay
Kenny	Walker—24.
MacDonald
( Halifax )

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATOR

Le Moyne—1.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the main motion, as amended?

● (1510)

Senator Frith: The motion, as amended, has been carried. The amendment carries the motion. It is only if the amendment is defeated, Your Honour, that we have to put the motion again.

Senator Roblin: No, I do not think that is right at all. I think that is wrong.

Senator Frith: We go through this every time.

Senator Roblin: You had better get it right, then. The main motion, as amended, has to be put again.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I am sorry, but I think I have to put the main motion, as amended.

It is moved by the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.—

An Hon. Senator: Dispense!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the main motion, as amended?

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, have you ruled that you have to proceed to put another motion?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: My ruling is that I have to put the main motion, as amended, before the house.

Senator MacEachen: Have you dealt with the point of order raised by Senator Frith? I would like to hear the ruling based upon some authority.

Senator Frith: The motion is not whether the motion should be amended. That is not what we voted on. What we voted on was the amended motion.

Some Hon. Senators: No!

Senator Frith: Do senators mean to tell me that they are going to vote on it all over again? Are we going to vote on this twice? That is just the wrong procedure. We have been through this before. The amendment carries the motion.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: The obvious argument would be that if anyone wanted to move another amendment the question would have to be put on the new amendment.

Senator Frith: If there were such an amendment, yes.

Senator Flynn: We voted only on the amendment. Now the question is on the motion, as amended.

Senator Frith: Well, let us do it all over again.

Senator Flynn: It is not necessarily the same question.

Senator Frith: I hope that we just do it twice, not three times.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I cannot understand the proposition of Senator Frith. I, for example, felt that the motion was improved by the amendment. Therefore, I voted in favour of the amendment. That does not mean that I think it is a good motion. That does not mean that we would not be free to move another amendment on which we could vote, and we must then vote on the motion, as amended, once, twice or three times. Therefore, the Speaker is absolutely correct in now ruling that he must put the question to vote on the motion, as amended.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, this is what I have decided: I have to put the main motion, as amended, again before the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the main motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion, as amended, agreed to, on division.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED, PRINTED AS APPENDIX AND ADOPTED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 17, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SIXTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-55, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, on November 3, 1987, respectfully requests that it be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada for the purpose of its examination of the said Bill.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the revised supplementary budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

(For full text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 2511.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Neiman: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators will recall that Bill C-55 was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs early last month. We have not had an opportunity to deal with it in any detail as yet, but hope to do so as soon as Parliament reconvenes after the Christmas recess. We had planned, in response to innumerable requests from various individuals, agencies and organizations, to travel in the West to hear briefs and representations with respect to Bill C-55. For that purpose we have asked for what I think would be a modest increase in our budget for the year.

If honourable senators look at the material before them they will see that the committee's budget for the past four years has been relatively small. The committee has rarely expended more than approximately 10 per cent or 15 per cent of its budget, and the same remains true for this year. Originally our budget was approved at $44,140. For the purpose of the anticipated trip out West the committee is asking for an increase of $35,572.

● (1520)

An Hon. Senator: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Neiman: I gather that honourable senators will allow the committee this increase in its budget. Your generosity is very much appreciated.

Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, I had the impression that Senator Macquarrie wanted to ask questions concerning the previous report. May I have leave of the house to ask Senator Neiman a question about the report she has just presented?

Honourable senators, if I understood correctly, the committee chaired by Senator Neiman would like to travel to western Canada. I should like to know why she wants to go to western Canada rather than eastern Canada. In terms of this legislation, would there be more problems in the west than in the east? That is the only question I want to ask you.

[English]

Senator Neiman: I thank the honourable senator. We have set aside a sum of money in our budget to cover the possibility of a trip to the East. We have planned a trip to the west, because we have received many requests from various people and organizations in that area. We have received requests from some of the eastern cities, including some in Newfoundland, but we are holding those in reserve.

Senator Doody: I thought you would rush out there immediately.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

TWELFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED, PRINTED AS APPENDIX AND ADOPTED

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its twelfth report respecting power to incur special expenses pursuant to the procedural guidelines for the financial operation of Senate committees.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "B", p. 2514.)

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators will note that the document was laid on their desks about an hour ago.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

PRIVATE BILL

COOPERANTS, MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-14, to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the Province of Quebec, and acquainting the Senate they had passed the bill without amendment.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Gigantès calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès).

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I would like to address the Senate on the inquiry calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, which stands in the name of Senator Gigantès. My purpose is to call attention to a specific area covered by the Free Trade Agreement, namely, the consequences of the agreement on energy. My remarks will not be brief, I am sorry to say, but I think they are important in view of the fact that this matter is now being discussed in the other place.

Canada has reached a watershed in energy policymaking in the recent era of oil price shocks and an embargo. Canadian policy has been one of extremes, from the comprehensive regulation of the former government's National Energy Program to this government's laissez-faire approach of the Western Accord.

I am concerned with the effect that these extreme policy swings have had, and will continue to have, on Canadian energy development. I am concerned with the direction that our energy policymakers may take us in the future. Part of that concern lies in my reservations about the energy component of the Free Trade Agreement.

I wish to share with honourable senators my reasons for this apprehension. I will direct my remarks primarily to the petroleum sector, because crude oil and natural gas together satisfy two-thirds of Canadian energy demand, and I will suggest some characteristics of what I believe should constitute our future energy policy.

The context within which I make my remarks is important; so let me begin with a brief review of Canada's energy affairs in the post-war period.

At the close of World War II coal was Canada's principal energy commodity, providing more than half of our energy supply. Crude oil and natural gas together then accounted for less than 25 per cent of Canadian primary energy demand. Between 1945 and 1960 the Canadian energy system underwent a remarkable evolution. In just 15 years oil and gas expanded their joint share of the energy mix from under 25 per cent to almost 70 per cent. In 1973, at the time of the Arab oil embargo, that share was 79 per cent.

Today, despite the oil price shocks and the lingering influence of the embargo, oil and gas still handle more than two-thirds of our domestic energy demand, with coal responsible for only 15 per cent. Moreover, the net export of Canadian crude oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids to the United States earned more than $7 billion in 1986, down from the record level of $12 billion in 1985 due to sharply lower oil and gas prices. Canada has had a positive trade balance in energy with the United States since 1969.

Why did crude oil in particular, and natural gas to a lesser degree, make this spectacular advance in satisfying our energy requirements?

The transport of oil is comparatively safe and cheap. It is a liquid with a high energy content. Prior to the price shocks of 1973-74 and 1979-80 it was an inexpensive energy commodity. Crude oil is more environmentally benign than coal, the fuel which it largely replaced; and with its complex hydrocarbon chemistry, oil can be refined into a broad range of highly specialized fuels and petrochemicals.

Natural gas shares a number of these attributes, and, in fact, is a premier fuel when one considers its environmental impact.

Wood, coal and crude oil have each, in turn, dominated energy use in the industrialized world, a progression which we have seen take place in Canada within the twentieth century. Today, however, society is entering an age of multi-fuel dependence. Our increasing demand for energy, coupled with the turmoil of recent years in world oil markets, has made evident the dangers of relying too heavily on a single energy commodity. Those countries with a range of energy options, such as Canada, are well placed to meet the energy requirements of the future.

Canada has not only been favoured with extensive resources of conventional crude oil, natural gas, coal, uranium, and hydro-electricity but also with the lion's share of the world's bitumen resource, contained in the oilsands of Alberta. Beyond those so-called conventional sources of energy, Canadians can call upon renewable sources of energy—biomass, the Fundy tides, wind, solar radiation, and geothermal energy—and we are far from having exploited the opportunities offered in one of our best energy options, namely, conservation.

Why, then, has Canada experienced such problems in the energy sector? Why do we face the future with uncertainty? Our difficulties have arisen principally because of the manner in which we have managed our energy resources, not because of shortages in those resources, with the one exception of conventional light crude oil.

Domestic energy development has been plagued with inconsistency, instability and regional unfairness in policymaking. A trend toward energy regulation in the 1960s and 1970s culminated in the highly interventionist National Energy Program introduced in October of 1980. That policy set the domestic price of oil and linked the price of natural gas to it. The NEP erred, particularly, first, in assuming that the international price of crude oil would continue to rise for at least a decade into the future; second, by maintaining a domestic oil price substantially below the world price on a protracted basis rather than allowing a limited period of adjustment to higher prices, and, third, in redirecting exploration activity outside the western provinces, where conventional oil and gas resources had in the past been exploited to the benefit of all Canadians.

● (1530)

In 1985 the Conservative government swung to the other extreme with its view that Canada's energy needs would be adequately met if only we could deregulate the energy system. Market forces were to be the proxy for federal energy policy. Relying solely on the market to determine the energy future of Canadians is as misguided, however, as the former attempt to control all aspects of domestic oil and gas marketing. The government has implicitly acknowledged this in creating the Canadian Exploration and Drilling Incentive Program and launching the energy options policy-making process, which is scheduled to report its views on energy policy to the minister by March 31, 1988. The Conservative government has belatedly recognized that energy in general and oil in particular is not just an economic commodity. It is also a strategically important commodity, whose management demands special policy attention. Regrettably, the slowness of the government to realize this means that the energy options process will only result in a new policy proposal in the fourth year of the government's mandate. Beyond that the period of uncertainty in Canada's policy will continue until the fate of the Free Trade Agreement is resolved. Another question also triggered by the agreement involves the right of energy exporting provinces to continue to favour their interprovincial markets on a supply or price basis.

Compounding the problem is the manner in which the Free Trade Agreement circumscribes the energy options policy-making process. We can no longer craft a Canadian energy policy. Our energy policy in future will have a continental aspect, influenced by a dominant partner. How enlightened will Americans be in their input to this bilateral energy arrangement?

The United States is very much concerned with its energy security, and we can expect the United States policy-makers to act accordingly in their dealings with us. Those policy-makers are, to a greater degree than ours, under pressure to respond to parochial concerns. As an example, consider the action launched earlier this month in the United States under section 232, commonly known as the national security clause of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. This action seeks relief from imports of crude oil and petroleum products into the United States, including those from Canada, which are claimed to impair national security. The petitioner is the National Energy Security Committee, which represents a diverse group of associations, companies and individuals in the petroleum industry who account for roughly one third of total U.S. oil production. Two quotations from the petition illustrate the reasoning of this group. The first one reads:

For the oil industry and for other industries as well, imports are the vehicle by which the effects of relatively lower world prices are transmitted to the U.S. Faced with an increasing supply of lower-priced foreign oil at the beginning of 1986 in amounts exceeding demand requirements, U.S. producers had no choice but to lower their prices as well if they wished to compete. In the world market, U.S. companies are price takers (that is, they must price at the prevailing world price, and have no ability to set prices themselves. Because of the higher costs attributable to much of the U.S. production, however, many companies could not at those lower prices transmitted to the domestic market through imports earn revenues sufficient to cover production costs. Hence the decline in production, business failures, the severe cutback in activity in the industry, and resultant high unemployment among oil workers.

The second quotation I would like to leave with you indicates the concern of the petitioner regarding the impact that rising imports of oil are having on U.S. national security. It reads:

In their recent book, Oil and War, authors Goralski and Freeburg observed that oil and war are more inextricably linked today than in World War II. The problems experienced by the U.S. in that conflict . . . were nothing compared to those being experienced today . . .

Wars have indeed been fought over natural resources. The presence of American and other naval forces in the Persian Gulf today attests to the seriousness with which some nations view the threat to international oil trading.

The United States today is importing approximately 40 per cent of all the oil it consumes, a dependence exceeding that of 1973 when the Arab oil embargo had such a devastating effect on the western world. American energy analysts fear that this dependence could rise to 60 per cent or more by the turn of the century. As Canada and the North Sea recede in importance as suppliers to this huge market, the United States will inevitably see its reliance on OPEC oil, especially Middle East oil, rise once again.

Americans, free enterprisers that they may be, have not always been non-interventionist. Increasingly they are showing signs that they do not believe that the market alone will resolve their growing energy difficulties. Indeed, the Free Trade Agreement, like the U.S. strategic petroleum reserve with its 540 million barrels of oil already in storage, is a deliberate step by American policy-makers to reduce their vulnerability to unfavourable energy developments in politically unstable regions of the world. They have stated that the energy component of the trade agreement is one of its most important features, with its guarantee of proportional access to Canadian energy supplies.

Let me then address the question: Why is the market alone an inadequate guarantor of our future energy security? Is there a role for the Canadian government to assume in guiding the nation's energy development?

Market forces operate with a limited time horizon, because private enterprise, quite rightly, expects a reward for its efforts returned within a reasonable period of time. But a complex energy system such as Canada's changes its character over longer periods of time. Large power plants may take a decade to construct and have useful lives of 30 to 40 years. Energy-consuming devices such as appliances and automobiles last a decade or more. Buildings may stand for half a century; a frontier oil deposit such as Hibernia or Amauligak may see 15 years elapse between discovery and the arrival of that oil in the marketplace.

In short, decisions being made today regarding energy development are determining the character of Canada's energy system until well into the next century. Conversely, being in a position to exploit various energy options in the future means laying the groundwork for those options—through energy research and development, for example—years or even decades in advance of their need.

To illustrate, the attempt to commercialize fusion power is being driven around the world by huge amounts of government spending in research and development programs whose length is measured in decades and cost in billion of dollars. We can predict a similar effort to exploit the promise of superconductivity and to introduce hydrogen broadly as a fuel in our energy system. The private sector, with the exception of a few corporations as rich and powerful as many governments, cannot be expected to invest such large sums in an endeavour whose financial return lies a quarter-century or more in the future.

Since oil and gas are depleting resources, society must consider future users as well as today's consumers. But who speaks for the energy user of the future? In effect, promoting energy conservation and requiring the petroleum industry to follow good production practices in extracting the oil and gas resources of our nation are examples of policies which act in the interests of future generations of Canadians.

In this context, I must also refer to a serious problem which we have allowed to develop in Canada—the distrust and alienation felt by many western Canadians toward the federal government and towards central Canada.

Alberta accounts for two thirds of Canada's primary energy production; Ontario accounts for about 35 per cent of Canada's net energy consumption. The result has been disagreement about energy pricing between the producing and consuming regions of the country. Federal policy caused oil to be sold within Canada at substantially less than world prices from 1974 to 1984. The restraint of domestic oil and gas prices represented a huge transfer of wealth from the petroleum-producing regions of Canada to the petroleum-consuming regions—by one recent estimate, a transfer of approximately $58 billion.

This has fostered the view by westerners that central Canadians regard western Canada as a resource hinterland, analogous to the colonies of the nineteenth century powers, to be exploited in a similar fashion. Canadian energy policy should never again blatantly exploit one region of the nation for the benefit of another.

● (1540)

I have criticized the former National Energy Program in my remarks, but let me now speak favourably about certain aspects of that policy.

The Government of Canada, through the NEP, spearheaded initiatives in fuel substitution and energy conservation which have been to the benefit of both current and future energy consumers. With a modest investment of federal funds, and using the leverage of the second oil-price shock, Canada achieved within the five-year period 1980-1984 a reduction in oil's share of our primary energy demand from 51 per cent to 42 per cent. That represents an impressive 17 per cent drop in relative use.

In Canada today, however, there is a critical lack of the federal presence to protect the public interest. The new government in its haste to dismantle the National Energy Program jettisoned the good elements of the program along with the bad. It accepted as an article of faith the premise that market forces are adequate in themselves to assure the future energy security of Canadians.

The market is important. It should indeed be the principal determinant of the manner and rate at which our energy resources are exploited, and it should govern the day-to-day workings of our energy system in normal circumstances. But by its very nature it cannot be the sole arbiter of the public interest.

I am reminded of an earlier day in the field of environmental pollution when private enterprise made the entrepreneurially sound, but socially irresponsible, decision to externalize pollution costs; that is, to pass on to the public the cost of dealing with environmental degradation. Governments were compelled to introduce environmental legislation to protect the public, because the dictates of the market alone were not adequate to protect our present or future interests.

So it is with market forces in the energy field. Petroleum companies want to maximize oil and gas production. Shut-in capacity is said to be economically wasteful. Governments, however, must be concerned with the strategic aspects of energy supply and demand. It was not acceptable to be forced to tanker Alberta oil through the Panama Canal to Atlantic Canada during the Arab oil embargo. Consequently, the federal government subsidized the extension of the interprovincial pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal, because it judged that to be in the public interest at the time. A policy which simply relies on the market forces of the day will not always suffice to deal with an emergency, even when such an emergency is anticipated. The dangers of complacency should be apparent after three oil-price shocks and an embargo. Further disturbances in the world oil market are almost certain to occur.

Since World War II there have been six major disruptions in world oil supply, all of which have originated in the Middle East: (1) the 1951-1953 Iranian boycott; (2) the 1956-1957 Suez Crisis; (3) the 1967 Six-Day War; (4) the 1973 Yom Kippur War; (5) the 1979 Iranian Revolution, and, (6) the 1980 invasion of Iran by Iraq. The last three events have had an enormous impact on world affairs. For example, since 1973 there has been a transfer of more than $2 trillion U.S. from oil-importing nations to OPEC nations. This transfer has contributed substantially to the monumental indebtedness of the Third World and to sustaining the Iran-Iraq conflict, despite heavy casualties and the continuing loss of expensive military equipment.

It is not surprising that governments have considered it necessary to assume a more direct role in national energy affairs. Nor should it surprise anyone that governments, including that of the United States, will do so in the future if they judge that circumstances warrant intervention.

Today the international oil market is functioning reasonably well only because the majority of the members of OPEC are willing to shut in capacity, and because Saudi Arabia has resumed its former role as swing producer. This shut-in capacity amounts to approximately ten million barrels of output per day. To compare, Canada consumes a little over one million barrels per day. Of this ten million, two thirds lies in the Persian Gulf region and the remaining third in other parts of OPEC. The rest of the world, including the Communist bloc, is producing at or very near installed capacity.

The oil price collapse of 1986 resulted in a global slump in petroleum exploration and development. Nowhere was that slump more pronounced than in North America, with its large numbers of low-production-rate wells and high average cost of establishing new reserves. This drop in activity will be reflected in lower petroleum output in future years, further strengthening OPEC's position.

In the industrialized world energy markets are becoming progressively more interrelated as industrial and utility users expand their dual-fuelling capacity. The artificiality in world oil pricing and the ripple effect on all energy prices when oil prices rise or fall should not be ignored by policymakers.

Nothing has changed sufficiently in the geopolitical environment to justify the complacency that the Conservative government has brought to energy policy-making. Granted, the National Energy Program was an extreme response in a situation where existing energy policy was lacking to handle a perceived crisis. In turn, the laissez-faire approach of the new government is an equally misguided reaction to the previous policy. These policy swings are injurious to energy development.

I hope that energy options do indeed reflect a willingness on the part of this government to bring a more open mind to energy policy development, and I look forward to the policy recommendations which this exercise will provide in the spring of next year. I deplore the fact, however, that this type of thinking was not done earlier, as part of the Conservative government's initial reactions to develop new energy policy. Three years have been lost, and with the appearance of the Free Trade Agreement some of the latitude to set policy has been lost.

On the regulatory side, we have also made changes to the benefit of the energy industry. It is less evident that these changes ultimately benefit Canadian energy consumers.

Traditionally the National Energy Board has applied various tests before licences to export crude oil, natural gas, and electricity were granted. We have had supply and price tests to protect the interests of Canadian consumers. Today the petroleum industry has seemingly won the government to its point of view that the sale of oil and gas to the U.S. should be largely unrestricted, and that it is ill-advised to leave petroleum in the ground beyond the dictates of good oil field practices.

Producing our petroleum reserves at the maximum efficient rate means that there is no appreciable surge capacity in output. Despite the fact that OPEC holds almost all of the world's shut-in oil capacity, it frequently raises the issue of resource conservation. In Canada we have husbanded our oil and gas resources in the past to the advantage, perhaps, of U.S. consumers today. Past and continuing subsidies to encourage the development of our domestic petroleum industry—of which the Petroleum Incentives Program was the most costly and obvious of many—now stand to be transmitted in substantial part to U.S. buyers, given the nature of the Free Trade Agreement and current federal policy.

In this context, it is interesting to note that the final text of the agreement states: "Both parties have agreed to allow existing or future incentives for oil and gas exploration, development and related activities in order to maintain the reserve base for these energy resources." Given that the trans-boundary flow of oil and gas is almost entirely from Canada to the U.S., it is not surprising that the Americans found this provision to be acceptable.

This is not a representative time in the Canadian export of oil. In recent months we have re-emerged as the largest single supplier of crude oil and products to the United States, a position we held briefly in 1973. Why have we again become the foremost supplier to the U.S. when the ratio of Canadian oil reserves to current annual production is only about 12? OPEC had a year-end 1986 reserves-to-production ratio of 73, with Saudi Arabia standing at 97 and Kuwait at 210. Yet, at this time of falling Canadian output and rising imports of conventional light crude oil we find ourselves on the threshold of a Free Trade Agreement with the U.S.A. Canada already has a huge positive trade balance in energy commodities with the United States; why is an argument about ensuring access to the American energy markets considered to be so compelling?

Apart from uranium, where Canadian concern about U.S. protectionism is well-founded, the United States will soon want to take larger amounts of Canadian oil, gas, and electricity. It was not necessary to guarantee Americans proportional access to Canadian energy supplies to see rising energy exports in the 1990s.

Over the last decade oil reserve additions in the U.S. exceeded production in only one year; gas reserve additions have exceeded gas output in only two of those years. This, despite the fact that the decade included the highest prices ever seen for oil and gas. New England will soon experience a significant shortfall in electrical generating capacity.

Yet, the federal government portrays the Free Trade Agreement to the public as essential to securing access to U.S. energy markets. The preamble to the energy chapter of the agreement states that view explicitly: "This chapter . . . will secure Canada's access to the United States market for energy goods."

It seems more likely that the U.S. wanted this part of the agreement, knowing that its energy situation is deteriorating and wanting to bind Canada as an energy supplier. In a recent talk one of Canada's trade negotiators observed that "what we have done is simply enshrine the government's energy policy in an international agreement."

What government energy policy? Did Canadians know that Americans would be guaranteed proportional access to Canadian energy supplies? If this agreement simply enshrines existing federal policy, why is energy minister Masse engaged in a year-long exercise, scouring the country for input to federal energy policy, after the fact?

Does the Free Trade Agreement improve Canada's energy security? We have given up some of our freedom to allocate energy supplies internally in time of a shortfall. The final text observes that a restriction on energy exports can be introduced only if (1) "the restriction does not reduce the proportion of the total export shipments...", measured against the most recent 36-month reporting period; (2) "the party does not impose a higher price for exports of an energy good... than the price charged... when consumed domestically"; and, (3) "the restriction does not require the disruption of normal channels of supply to the other party or normal proportions among specific energy goods supplied to the other party...".

The implications of these provisions are troubling.

The Free Trade Agreement does provide the United States with a greater measure of energy security by enshrining continentalism in energy marketing, but because the U.S. is becoming deficient in the nonrenewable energy forms apart from coal, I do not see that it provides anything in concrete terms for Canadian security. And it is debatable whether it guarantees a better market for Canadian energy commodities than we now have.

We will continue to be a swing supplier of energy at such times and in such amounts as Americans decide to purchase in times of normal markets. And if for some reason energy accessibility is constrained, the United States will still be assured of proportional access to our energy supplies. It is evident that the Free Trade Agreement promises greater benefits to the United States in the field of energy than it does to Canada.

In earlier actions this government had reduced its support of energy research and development, to our future detriment. We no longer have the energy division at the National Research Council, which served as the lead Canadian agency for research into renewable forms of energy development. Atomic Energy of Canada is losing $100 million annually in funding for nuclear research and development.

Federal leadership on energy conservation and fuel substitution has been blunted, with the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canada Oil Substitution Program having been phased out early, and with the Natural Gas Laterals Program indefinitely deferred. Canada does not operate an oil stockpiling scheme, a measure which would provide short-term security in the event of another disruption in world oil supply, and which was recommended by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources in its recent report "Oil: Scarcity or Security?"

From a Canadian perspective, the six-month notice period for terminating the agreement is too short. It does not impose the discipline on both parties of having to live with the agreement for an extended period if differences arise.

Canada is not likely to terminate the agreement because of its comprehensive nature and the broad range of opportunities available to the United States to retaliate against such action. It is much more likely that notice of termination would be initiated by the United States in response to political pressures. A longer notice of termination might allow a government to withstand a transient political attack on the Free Trade Agreement.

Within Canada we will see the market act to realign energy supply patterns north-south rather than east-west, because this is generally a less expensive and more efficient transportation arrangement. This has to some degree already occurred, with the Sarnia-to-Montreal extension of the interprovincial oil pipeline operating today at just one third of its capacity. Only the pattern of existing facilities provides some resistance to this shift. This ignores the political reality that we are our own best market, and, if we are not, we should be.

Previous governments, with the support of Canadians, were willing to pay a premium to extend our oil and gas transmission systems along the west-east axis of the country. Those initiatives were taken in the name of national energy security and were deemed by most to be wise investments.

As more of western Canada's crude oil output is directed south into the United States, eastern Canada imports progressively larger amounts of foreign oil. In the event of a future disruption in international oil supplies, we can only redirect domestic crude oil supplies to the extent that we share the shortfall with the United States. Natural gas poses a potentially more serious problem.

An argument advanced in favour of the Free Trade Agreement is that it prevents the Government of Canada from misusing its powers in the future to benefit a politically dominant region of the country, whether characterized as energy producer versus energy consumer or East versus West.

I don't think the agreement will work in this way. For one reason, the agreement does not bear on federal taxation of the petroleum industry, the means used to implement the most undesirable aspects of the National Energy Program.

A disturbing aspect of this argument is the implication that western Canadians should be comfortable with an American-driven energy policy. Referring again to the petition in the United States to restrict oil imports under the national security clause, I quote:

A policy of letting the market decide may seem to work when supplies are ample, and prices are falling, as they have indeed in recent years. But a change in the scenario—our rapidly growing dependence on oil imports—underscores the fallacy of continuing to look to the free market to make decisions for us, when there is no free market at work.

Bear in mind that this is from an American petition of oil producers.

Also, there are proposals in the United States to increase taxes on gasoline and to introduce an oil import fee. It is becoming increasingly apparent that Congress and the new administration, which will take office in a year's time, will be under pressure to intervene in the growing American dependence on foreign supplies of energy. In my opinion, Canada will have a limited say in the nature of future U.S. policy initiatives which bear on Canadian energy affairs, notwithstanding Chapter 18 of the Free Trade Agreement on institutional provisions and the attempt in the agreement to interlock the two countries in a coordinated energy policy stance.

Canada and the United States are facing different energy problems, and both countries need the flexibility to pursue differing solutions. The Free Trade Agreement seriously limits Canada's ability to pursue its own policy path. It is a lesser constraint on the United States. A U.S.-driven policy that Canadians do not like would be very hard to change—much harder, I submit, than it was for us to change the National Energy Program.

It has been asserted that the energy component of the Free Trade Agreement is little more than an extension of our energy-sharing commitment as a member of the International Energy Agency. This is misleading on two counts. First, the IEA commitment applies only to sharing oil in the event of a curtailment in supply; the Free Trade Agreement covers all energy commodities traded between Canada and the United States. Second, a country's obligations under the IEA agreement can change as its oil import/export situation evolves. The Free Trade Agreement binds Canada to a proportional sharing of its energy supplies, regardless of future domestic circumstances. Article 908 of the Free Trade Agreement provides that the IEA's 1974 agreement on an international energy program shall take precedence in the event of an inconsistency between the two.

Let me now turn to the last part of my remarks and address the question: What alternatives are there to the energy policy path which the federal government is following today?

I believe that future Canadian energy policy must be grounded in five elements, which I present in no particular order.

First, conservation must become a centrepiece of Canadian energy policy, with the federal government providing the leadership. Experience has shown that conservation initiatives are often economically advantageous when compared with the cost of developing new energy supplies. To the extent that we continue to reduce the relative importance of oil in the domestic energy mix, Canadians benefit in a strategic sense through lessened exposure to unexpected events in the world oil market. Using less energy per unit of gross domestic product also strengthens Canada's competitive position in international trade.

[Senator Hays.]

Second, greater efforts to exploit our extensive resources of bitumen and heavy oil—primarily, but not exclusively, for domestic use—should be made to offset our declining production of conventional light crude oil. The decision to proceed with the Lloydminster heavy oil upgrader is one example of this, as is the incremental approach to developing the oil sands. As a companion measure, enhanced oil recovery should be actively promoted to ensure the most efficient exploitation of Canada's remaining resources of conventional crude oil.

Third, federal energy policy must be fair and equitable in a regional context. Producers of energy commodities and the provinces in which these resources reside must not be exploited by an inequitable transfer of wealth to other segments of Canadian society. Support for the development of renewable energy forms should be expanded: all regions of Canada have access to renewable energy resources whereas Canada's resources of the fossil fuels—oil, gas, and coal—are much more limited in their occurrence. Federal energy policy should act to reduce today's marked imbalances in regional energy supply. Here the sequence of research, development, demonstration, and deployment can be fostered through the federal policy process.

● (1600)

Fourth, Canadian policy must anticipate future disruptions in the supply of oil or their equivalent in price shocks. Canada must control the degree to which it allows its energy transmission systems to become re-oriented to supply the U.S. market. At the same time, Canadian policy must still assure the United States of a measure of security of supply consistent with our own security interests.

Fifth, market forces should determine day-to-day energy dealings in normal circumstances. The role of the federal government is to oversee Canada's energy development in a strategic or long-term planning sense.

I began my remarks by referring to the pivotal stage that we have reached in Canadian energy policy-making. I am confident that our country has the capacity in its natural and human resources to ensure a prosperous and secure energy future. We have yet to be assured that our political leaders are up to the task.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order had stood in the name of Senator Gigantès. Honourable senators will remember that he had adjourned his own motion and was to continue with a second and third instalment. So I suggest that the debate be adjourned in the name of Senator Gigantès.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE

NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE FINANCIAL SUPPORT PROGRAM FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Hon. H.A. Olson rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, December 15, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the need for a comprehensive financial support program for agricultural producers, especially cereal grain producers, to compensate for the drastic lowering of cereal grain market prices.

He said: Honourable senators, I raised this question about a farm financing package a few days ago, because when the announcement was made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture, I was unable to obtain any background information, and I mentioned that at that time. Since then I have received a package from the Minister of Agriculture that contains not only in some detail the particular parts of the financial program that was being offered to Canadian agriculture but, indeed, some reasonably good background information sheets on each. If the package had been provided to senators—and I do not blame the leadership in the Senate, because I asked the leader before we came into the Senate that day if he could help me, and he, too, claimed, properly so, that he did not have the package either—we would not be spending time on this matter today.

Honourable senators, I do not want to spend a lot of time today complaining, but this government, for whatever reason, does not seem to think that senators have a right to background information. This is the most severe experience I have had in attempting to get background information. I had to go to one of my colleagues in the Liberal Party and obtain his information kit and get it photocopied. Although I was told that these background information kits were being distributed in the Centre Block, none was distributed to senators' offices that day or even the next day. I hope that in the future we will not have to raise this problem again.

In any event, honourable senators, there are three subjects I need further information on. I understand that Senator Barootes is ready, willing and able to provide that. The first relates to the Special Grains Program. It says in this background information that that will be extended to the 1987 crop year. The package goes on to explain that the amount will be $1.1 billion for the 1987 crop year.

That is welcome news. I might say that while it is not as much as the premiers asked for at the meeting in Humboldt, Saskatchewan, or at several other meetings, it is welcome and it is a fairly significant amount. It is not enough to completely substitute for the reduction in the price of grain, and perhaps it could be argued that it is not as much as European farmers are receiving from their governments by way of subsidies, but I do want to acknowledge that it is a significant amount.

Perhaps Senator Barootes could tell us if farmers can look forward to this program being extended into subsequent years, as long as the subsidy war between the United States and Europe continues to keep international prices depressed.

It is very clear in the background papers that that is the reason the government advances for extending the program into the 1987 crop year, and I accept that. But I also realize that the possibility of these depressed prices, particularly for cereal grains, is likely to continue into 1988 also. Perhaps Senator Barootes could tell us whether the government is, in fact, giving a commitment that it will stand by the farmers and continue with this financial support package as long as other governments cause depressed international prices because of subsidy wars.

When the Minister of State (Finance) appeared before the Senate in the Committee of the Whole this morning on Bill C-101, he explained in great detail what they are doing with the farm fuel rebates, and I appreciated that. Therefore, I will not raise that matter now.

I now get down to my third concern, and that relates to the Farm Debt Review Boards. It says that they will also be "extended from August 1988 to 1991." It then states:

The extension represents a federal commitment of about $40 million.

Can Senator Barootes tell us what the $40 million will be used for? I do not know.

Senator Barootes: Would you repeat that?

Senator Olson: The third point in the Summary of Initiatives states:

Farm Debt Review Boards will be extended from August 1988 to 1991.

Further down it states:

The extension represents a federal commitment of about $40 million.

I do not know what the federal government is going to use the $40 million for. I assume it will be to help people who are having difficulty with their debts. I know that the Farm Debt Review Boards look at individual applications for assistance, but how they will apply and use $40 million is not explained.

So we leave it at that, but then the next point says:

—the Farm Credit Corporation was provided with special funding of $30 million.

It says that this will be used in conjunction or in connection with the FDRB. Is it $70 million, or is the $30 million there for some other reason? I need an explanation on that.

Then it says:

The FCC's Commodity Based Loans Program will receive funding to offer additional loans until 1991 totalling $450 million at interest rates as low as six per cent.

I want to know how that will be administered, how it will be applied for, and who qualifies for it. That is not explained in the background information package. If that is a shortfall in the information package provided to us, that is fine. I do not know of any loans now at 6 per cent, but perhaps Senator Barootes has been able to find that out.

Honourable senators, there is an innocuous sentence that says:

Amendments to the act will be introduced to increase the producer levy rate.

I think they pay 2 per cent of their gross receipts now. I have heard it said that that might be increased to 5 per cent. That little sentence is stuffed in the middle. That is a 150 per cent increase if it does go to 5 per cent, and that is a lot of money. I wonder if that is what the government is doing. Why did they not put the amount in? They did not say they were increasing it to 3 or 4 per cent. If it is about 3 per cent, I think that is justified; but if it gets up to around 5 per cent, then it is probably more than is justified.

● (1610)

Last, I want to give credit to the review board, or maybe even the Minister of Agriculture. Someone has listened carefully to the representations that we made last year, where there were some unfair provisions in the formula for paying. One was that they excluded a crop like mustard—I see that this year it is included—because the basis for making the payment is the seeded acreage. In western Canada they have added one-third of the summer fallow, but they left out a lot of crops, including mustard, which troubled me some, because a lot of producers in southern Alberta produce mustard.

If there was a little more time, or if I were to take a little more time, honourable senators, I would ask a few more questions, but these are the things that I need to know now, if I can, because during the next four or five weeks I intend to do what a good senator does—that is, that he goes about the parts of the country that he represents here and explains government programs to people. In this case I believe that the government has come forward with a program that will be helpful. It is welcome, and will certainly relieve a good deal of anxiety for some people who are apprehensive about their wellbeing after the government announced a significant decline in the initial price of grains back in April.

So while it is several months late, it is still welcome. I hope that we can have much further detail so that we can answer these questions during the recess.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, I am pleased to try to answer those questions which Senator Olson has, but first let me take this opportunity to extend my good wishes and congratulations to him on the commendable way in which he has presented his points of view. We particularly appreciate this from Senator Olson, because we have learned to have respect for his judgment, respect for him because of the breadth of experience—

Senator Frith: Put your hockey helmet on and put your shoulder pads on!

Senator Barootes: —and knowledge that he has in the field of which he speaks. I thank him very much.

Insofar as the views that he has expressed commending the government's programs extend to the rest of his confrères on his side of the chamber, I wish to thank him doubly, and wish them all a happy holiday.

With respect to the questions, if I am remiss in not getting all the answers that he wants exactly as he wants them, please forgive me, because my information has just been arriving today as well, although I was able to obtain some of it last night. In respect to the extension of these things, let me quote some of the things that have been said by our Prime Minister and repeated since then by our Minister of Agriculture.

[Senator Olson.]

Regarding the commitment of the government to future extension, he has said:

This government believes that agriculture is a cornerstone of our economy and the lifeblood of many rural communities.

That is why we are committed to building a strong and stable future for Canadian agriculture.

This government will stand by farmers and their families when they are hurting.

When farmers are hurting, this nation is hurting.

I will give Senator Olson one or two other statements which may alleviate his anxiety about future extension of programs. This comment was made by the Prime Minister in respect to the international crisis that has occurred in prices, trading and marketing on December 15, 1987. He said:

I can assure you that Canada will continue to play a lead role until international reform is achieved. In the meantime, farmers can have confidence in our priority commitments to building a stronger, more competitive agriculture industry in this country. The path on this is clear—

Pending international solution, we must continue to cushion farmers from the hurt caused by international subsidy practices; continue to maintain our agricultural markets, and aggressively pursue new ones.

In this respect let me say that in the last two years our percentage of the export market, as pursued by the Canadian Wheat Board—that fine and diligent organization—has gone from 17 per cent of the world export market to 24 per cent. I doubt if it will hold there, but also in the matter of volumes traded we have reached a new high of 31 million tonnes of export this year. So we are not losing markets, but the price is killing us, as Senator Olson pointed out.

He also asked some questions in respect of mustard. May I ask if mustard and mustard seed are the same thing?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Barootes: I can alleviate your anxiety, concern and crocodile tears for the mustard growers in your area.

Senator Olson: My prayers have been answered!

Senator Barootes: They are included in the new expanded 12 commodities which will go under the Western Grains Stabilization Plan.

Senator Olson: I thank you for that.

Senator Barootes: I wish to hear your applause for that, sir.

Senator Olson: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes: Next, I will speak about the levy. I think I have something on the levy that might be of some help to you.

If the levy is presently 1 per cent of the revenue of a farmer delivering grains which are covered under the stabilization plan—

Senator Olson: A little more than that.

Senator Barootes: The government's contribution to that fund is 2 per cent higher than the producer's level. Presently it is about one in three.

As you know, because the seven lean years were far leaner than the seven fat years that we had before, that fund has gone into deficit. It has expended its insurance money and has gone into deficit to the extent of $1.5 billion. The present levy collections—both the government and the producer levies together—do not even cover the interest costs on that deficit of $1.5 billion.

As a consequence, the government has agreed to write off, forgive, pay for half of that deficit, and bring it down to $750 million this year, and perhaps consider in concert with the government and the producers and the institutions of agriculture what might be done next year. The reason for that is because many producers have dropped out of the stabilization plan. If you were to bring them in now, with that enormous debt which they might have to exonerate with their levies, the levy rate would be so high and so onerous that it would prohibit virtually anyone from joining a plan. So those who are coming back into the plan are to be forgiven the 10 per cent extra nomination that is necessary, and the levy will likely not rise as high as otherwise might be necessary.

Now you asked about the date for this. The changes in the levy rate will be made following consultation with the advisory council, who are producers in the West, and whatever rate struck between them which is reasonable and sensible, it will still be 2 per cent more by the government than is advanced by the producers from their revenue.

Senator Olson: It will be retroactive?

Senator Barootes: It will be retroactive to August 1, 1987. Is that adequate?

Senator Olson: A little adequate.

Senator Barootes: I am not sure that I can answer this quite to your satisfaction, but there were some questions about the Farm Debt Review Board and the $30 million and $40 million. A grant of more than $30 million has already been given to the Farm Debt Review Board this year, and another $40 million is to be added to the area of advanced commodity loans.

● (1620)

When the Farm Debt Review Board with a farmer sits down with the farmer's creditors and attempts to mediate these matters, it may come to conclusions which, after mediation, can result in the loan being lessened, payments being lessened, or the interest being lessened, and that costs money. When that settlement is arrived at after the board has mediated between a creditor and the farmer-owner, who is the debtor, some costs are involved, and that is what that $30 million and $40 million is for.

The $40 million specifically applies to the advanced commodity loans which are made through the FCC, and if an acceptable arrangement is made it will reduce the loan rate to 6 per cent from whatever the existing rate is. In addition, it applies to any further loans advanced to that client-farmer in the future through the FCC. That is what some of those advances are for.

I should add that the FCC is also getting $103 million deferred debt this year, and $100 million in cash will be injected into it to enable it to continue its work, because, as you know, it is—and the blunt words are—"broke" or "bankrupt."

I hope, honourable senators, that I have, in part, answered these questions. I do wish to take this opportunity to thank my learned friend for the questions that he advanced, and I hope that my answers are of some assistance to him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the answers my honourable friend gave will be most helpful, and I thank him very much for them.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered debated.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Royal Assent is almost ready to get under way. The Deputy Governor General is on the premises, as is the minister, and I suggest that we adjourn during pleasure, but await their arrival in the chamber.

Before I leave, honourable senators, I want to take this opportunity to wish all my colleagues here, on both sides of the house, the best possible Christmas season and a good break. I want to thank them particularly for the cooperation that we have received during the past few days, especially in terms of our legislative agenda.

I also want to thank the staff of the Senate who, as always, have been so cooperative and helpful during the past year. In particular, I should like to single out the pages. I was just thinking today that the faces change from time to time, but it seems to me that their cheerfulness, courtesy and cooperation never seem to diminish. I am very pleased indeed to wish them, as well as the rest of the staff, the season's greetings and best wishes.

Having said these few words, I move that the Senate adjourn to await the arrival of the deputy to Her Excellency.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1630)

At 4.45 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor

General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act (Bill C-46, Chapter 43, 1987).

An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (Bill C-90, Chapter 44, 1987).

An Act to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, to repeal the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act and to amend another Act in relation thereto (Bill C-100, Chapter 45, 1987).

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (Bill C-64, Chapter 46, 1987).

An Act to amend the Judges Act (Bill C-88, Chapter 47, 1987).

An Act to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985 (Bill C-94, Chapter 48, 1987).

An Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-87, Chapter 49, 1987).

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act (Bill C-101, Chapter 50, 1987).

An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (Bill C-97, Chapter 51, 1987).

An Act to amend An Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited (Bill C-98, Chapter 52, 1987).

An Act to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence) (Bill C-254, Chapter 53, 1987).

An Act to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the Province of Quebec (Bill S-14).

The Honourable Marcel Danis, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988 (Bill C-95, Chapter 54, 1987).

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

---

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, January 26, 1988, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 2499)

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND — REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

THURSDAY, December 17, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SIXTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-55,
An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, on November 3, 1987, respectfully requests that it be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada for the purpose of its examination of the said Bill.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the revised supplementary budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

APPENDIX (A) TO THE REPORT

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

REVISED APPLICATION FOR SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET
AUTHORIZATION FOR THE PERIOD
1st APRIL 1987 TO 31st MARCH 1988

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Tuesday, November 25, 1986:

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Nurgitz moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rossiter:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject-matter of bills and estimates as are referred to it:

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Tuesday, November 3, 1987:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator
Macquarrie, for the second reading of the Bill C-55,
An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

After debate and--
The question being put on the motion, it was --
Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Doody moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

After debate and--
The question being put on the motion, it was --
Resolved in the affirmative.

CHARLES A. LUSSIER,
Clerk of the Senate

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs of Tuesday, November 17, 1987:

The Honourable Senator Frith moved, - That the Chairman, by means of a report of Committee, seek authority from the Senate to adjourn from place to place within Canada for the purpose of hearing testimony on Bill C-55.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs of Tuesday, December 8, 1987.

The Honourable Senator Fairbairn moved, - That subject to the authority being granted by the Senate, a group of up to 6 members of the Committee, plus staff be authorized to travel to cities in Canada, in order to hold hearings with interested groups and individuals with respect to Bill C-55.

ANDREW N. JOHNSON,
Clerk of the Committee

ORIGINAL BUDGET ADOPTED BY THE SENATE ON JUNE 18, 1987

Professional and Other Services (including salaries)	$ 29,200
Transportation and Communications	13,440
All Other Expenditures	1,500
TOTAL	$ 44,140

REQUEST FOR REVISED SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET

Professional and Other Services (including salaries)	$ 11,800
Transportation and Communications	66,612
All Other Expenditures	1,300
TOTAL	$ 79,712

DIFFERENCE

Professional and Other Services (including salaries)	- $ 17,400
Transportation and Communications	+ 53,172
All Other Expenditures	- 200
TOTAL	+ $ 35,572

Therefore $35,572.00 is requested in new funds.

The original budget was approved by the Committee on the 2nd day of April 1987.

The revised budget was approved by the Committee on the 8th day of December, 1987.

The undersigned or an alternate will be in attendance on the date that this budget is being considered.

Joan Neiman
Chairman, Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs

Date: December 8, 1987

Approved by:

Guy Charbonneau
Chairman, Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Date: December 15, 1987

For information purpose only

Budget authorized for the period October 1st, 1985 to March 31st, 1986	$ 52,750
Budget authorized for the period April 1st, 1986 to March 31st, 1987	$ 61,700
Budget authorized for the period October 1st, 1986 to March 31st, 1987	$ 34,940
Original Budget authorized for the period April 1st, 1987 to March 31st, 1988	$ 44,140

EXPLANATION OF COST ELEMENTS

Professional and Other Services (including salaries);

- Professional services
Legal Consultant @ $800 per day
6 days @ $800 $ 4,800

NOTE: Counsels would be hired by contract according to Legislation referred to the Committee.

- Honorariums 2,000

NOTE: Expert witnesses invited by the Committee have, in the past, requested to be reimbursed honorariums (2 individuals x $1,000). This amount is an average based on past requests.

- Public Relations - Humphreys Press Communications, interviews etc. for C-55 trip. 5,000 $11,800

Transportation and Communications:

- Participation at Special Conferences Seminars and/or speaking engagements by Committee members and/or staff to be determined at a later date. $ 7,500

NOTE: This amount is an estimate based on two (2) participants at five (5) conferences to be held in Canada at a cost of $1,500 per conference ($750 per participant). The amount was calculated by taking the average cost of past conferences:

a) Registration fees	$ 150
b) Hotel accommodations, per diem and ground transportation	$ 250
c) Air Transportation	$ 350

2. Travel for Bill C-55 $57,672

Variable costs per person for 6 senators and 10 staff: *

a) Air Travel: regular economy fare without advance reservation:

Ottawa/Winnipeg	$ 307
Winnipeg/Regina	$ 148
Regina/Edmonton	$ 166
Edmonton/Vancouver	$ 197
Vancouver/Ottawa	$ 552

Total $ 1,370

b) Hotel:
7 nights @ $ 80 $ 560

c) Per diem:
8 days @ $ 40 $ 320

d) Ground Transportation
$ 60 / city (taxi) $ 240

- Total variable cost per participant: $ 2,940

- Total variable costs for 16 participants: $39,840

Fixed Costs

- Rental of meeting rooms:
6 days @ $ 300

- Sound Equipment: rental contract with ISTS for sound amplification:

Winnipeg:	$ 3,400
Regina:	$ 2,932
Edmonton:	$ 4,000
Vancouver:	$ 4,200

- Photocopy, supplies, $ 500 coffee, refreshments etc.

- Other $ 1,000

Total fixed costs $17,832

3. Telephones and telegrams $ 1,000

4. Postage, freight and courier services $ 440

$66,612

Other expenses:

1. Purchasing of stationery, books and periodicals $ 300

2. Other expenses $ 1,000 $ 1,300

Total $79,712

*NOTE: The staff consists of: one clerk, one researcher, three interpreters, three stenographers, one public relations agent and one messenger.

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 2500)

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, December 17, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on November 5, 1987 to examine and report upon elements of a Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, tabled in the Senate on October 6, 1987 (Sessional Paper No. 332-589), and texts subsequently agreed to, respectfully requests that it be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

HEATH MACQUARRIE
Deputy Chairman

APPENDIX (A) TO THE REPORT

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
FOREIGN AFFAIRS

APPLICATION FOR SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET
AUTHORIZATION FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1988

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Thursday, 5th November 1987:

"With leave of the Senate,
The Honourable Senator Doody moved, seconded
by the Honourable Senator Phillips:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon elements of a Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, tabled in the Senate on October 6, 1987 (Sessional Paper No. 332-589), and texts subsequently agreed to; and

That the Committee present its report no later than March 29, 1988.

After debate and--

The question being put on the motion, it was --
Resolved in the affirmative."

CHARLES A. LUSSIER,
Clerk of the Senate

SUMMARY

Professional and Other Services	$ 102,891
Transportation and Communications	3,250
All Other Expenditures	13,105
TOTAL	$ 119,246

The foregoing budget was approved by the Committee on the 8th day of December, 1987.

The undersigned or an alternate will be in attendance on the date that this budget is being considered.

George C. van Roggen
Chairman, Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs

Date: December 9, 1987

Approved by:

Guy Charbonneau
Chairman, Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Date: December 17, 1987

EXPLANATION OF COST ELEMENTS*Professional and Other Services1. 1 Advisor

147 hrs. at $107 per hr.                      $ 15,729.00
(7 hrs/week x 21 weeks @ $107./hr)

1 Advisor

630 hrs. at $55.00 per hr.                      $ 34,650.00
(30 hrs/week x 21 weeks @ $55./hr)

1 Research Assistant

273 hrs. at $24. per hr.                      $ 6,552.00
(13 hrs/week x 21 weeks @ $24./hr)

3 Specialists

315 hrs. at $75. per hr.                      $ 23,625.00      $ 80,556.00
5 hrs/week x 21 weeks @ $75./hr

2. Commissioned Research                      $ 10,000.00

3. Expenses of witnesses                      $ 12,335.00

Transportation and Communications

1. Travel Expenses

a) Anticipated expenses of Senators responding to invitations to speak on the work of the Committee                      $ 2,000.00

2. Telegrams and Telephones                      $ 250.00

3. Postage and Freight                      $ 1,000.00      $ 3,250.00

All Other Expenditures1. Purchase of Stationery, Books and Periodicals

$ 250.00

2. Cost of reprinting three Reports of the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs respecting Canada - U.S. Relations:
English - Vol. I (250 copies);
Vol. II (250 copies);
Vol. III (1000 copies)                      $ 8,590.00
French - Vol. III (250 copies)                      $ 3,265.00

3. Other expenditures                      $ 1,000.00      $ 13,105.00

TOTAL

$119,246.00

For information purposes:

The following is an estimate of the balance of the budget, still available to the Committee for the fiscal year ending 31 March 1988:

A) With respect to its examination of the expenditures set out in External Affairs Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, L35, L40, 45, 50 and 55 and National Defence Votes 1, 5 and 10 of the Estimates for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1988 as authorized by the Senate on March 11, 1987.

Allotment

Professional and Other Services                      $ 71,453.00

Transportation and Communications                      4,500.00

All Other Expenditures                      1,250.00

Total                      $ 77,203.00

Expended

Professional and Other Services                      $ 19,003.50

Transportation and Communications                      72.43

All Other Expenditures                      0

Total                      $ 19,075.93

Balance

Professional and Other Services                      $ 52,449.50

Transportation and Communications                      4,427.65

All Other Expenditures                      1,250.00

Total                      $ 58,127.15

B) With respect to its examination of the desirability and advantages of the Turks and Caicos Islands becoming a part of Canada, as authorized by the Senate on March 17, 1987.

Allotment

Professional and Other Services                      $ 8,105.00

Transportation and Communications                      1,500.00

All Other Expenditures                      250.00

Total                      $ 9,855.00

Expended
Professional and Other Services	$	0
Transportation and Communications		0
All Other Expenditures		0
Total	$	0

the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to examine and report upon elements of a Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, as authorized by the Senate on November 5, 1987. The said supplementary budget is as follows:

Balance
Professional and Other Services	$	8,105.00
Transportation and Communications		1,500.00
All Other Expenditures		250.00
Total	$	9,855.00

Professional and Other Services	$ 102,891
Transportation and Communications	3,250
All Other Expenditures	13,105
	$ 119,246

APPENDIX (B) TO THE REPORT

THURSDAY, December 17, 1987

ATTEST:

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and approved the supplementary budget presented to it by

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

